Re:Zero

Starting Life in Another World

Fan Translation Omnibus

Foreword

This is a compilation of the entire translated web novel, as well as all translated side content, organized by volume!

As for the chapters themselves, I've tried to change as little as possible in each translation, only fixing obvious grammar mistakes and standardizing the formatting.

If you find any mistakes, please let me know in my discord.

That's it for now,

Eminent

Arc 1:
The Tumultuous First Day

Volume 1

Chapters 1-END

Prologue: Waste Heat of the Beginning

This is really bad.

He felt the hard floor against his cheek, and realized that he had collapsed onto his face.

His strength was completely gone, and he had already lost sensation in his fingers.

The heat from his core was so excruciating it made him want to tear his throat out.

Hot, hot, hot, hot, hot, hot, hot.

The moment he opened his mouth to scream, what spilled forth was no shriek, it was a clump of blood.

He vomited up large quantities of his lifeblood as he coughed. Frothy blood started foaming up at the corners of his mouth as he gurgled. Within his dim field of view, the ground had been dyed red.

Aah, this is all, my blood?

There was enough to soak his fallen body. Blood comprises about 8% of the human body, and it is said that losing about a third of that would be life-threatening, but—It seemed to him that he'd already lost just about all of it.

He had stopped vomiting blood, but the 'heat' that felt as though it would incinerate him still persisted. He moved his hand toward his abdomen with great difficulty, and having felt an impossible sensation there, he understood.

My stomach's been torn open, huh.

It was no wonder he felt so hot. It seemed his brain had confused 'pain' for 'heat'.

He was almost torn in half, only a bit of skin at his back held him together.

In short, it seemed that this was ‘checkmate’ for him.

The moment he realized this, his consciousness started fading.

Even the heat, which was making him writhe in agony had disappeared, Even the unpleasant feeling of blood and the sensation in the hand he’d used to feel his organs, it was all fading away along with his consciousness.

All that was left was his body, which would not be able to accompany his soul.

This body used the last of its disappearing consciousness to move just a little. It turned its head upward.

Black shoes formed ripples in the pool of blood before his eyes. There was someone there. And that someone was most likely the one who killed him.

Strangely, he didn’t feel like looking at their face. This person was the one who took his life, and yet he still decided to simply remain a spectator to his own demise. He had no clue who they were, but right now he didn’t really care about that.

He only wished for the girl’s safety.

“—Baru?”

He felt like he heard a voice like the chime of a bell.

He was beyond the point where he could even differentiate his senses, so he probably just imagined it.

Despite that, even supposing it wasn’t real, he found it extremely comforting.

So—

“—!”

A short scream, and then the carpet of blood welcomed yet another person.

She had fallen right next to him, exactly where his arm was.

Her fair hand dropped powerlessly, and intertwined with his.

—Probably just a coincidence.

He felt her fingers move slightly, as if squeezing his hand.

“…ait”

He forced his disappearing consciousness to return for a moment. The pain and the heat, everything had faded away. It was a meaningless effort, nothing but a loser wasting time.

But even so…

“I will, definitely—”

Save you.

At that moment, Natsuki Subaru lost his life.

Chapter 1:
Unusable Ridged 10

1

—This is really bad.

Lost and penniless, those few words were all he could think of.

Well, penniless wasn't quite right. He did have his wallet in his pocket, and setting aside the fact that he had an abundance of small change and very few notes, it couldn't be denied that he had his assets on him.

More than enough to go to the nearest mall to do some shopping and eat some lunch. Even so, he could only be called penniless.

"Looks like the currency around here is completely different after all…"

Flipping the rare ridged 10 yen coin he was holding, the youth sighed deeply.

He was an unremarkable youth bearing short black hair and average stature. He had some muscularity which combined with his cheap jersey gave off the air of an athlete.

His sharp eyes were his only noteworthy feature, and now even they drooped helplessly.

The banality of his appearance was such that one could instantly lose him in a crowd, however the gazes directed at him were those of wonder and incomprehension, as though they were looking at something strange.

Obviously, there wasn't a single person sporting black hair or a jersey among those looking at him. Their hair varied extensively, blonde, white, brown, green, blue and so on. Furthermore their outfits were armor, dancers' clothes, monotone robes and more which possessed a certain vibe.

The youth could only cross his arms in comprehension as their brazen gazes washed over him.

“So basically, it’s like that, huh.”

Snapping his fingers, he pointed at those who were staring at him.

“Seems I’ve been summoned to another world.”

Before his eyes was a carriage drawn by a massive lizard-like being.

2

Natsuki Subaru was born in Heisei-era Japan’s pressure-free education system.

He had lived seventeen years, and to describe his life would take seventeen years in itself.

Setting that aside, his present situation could be simply described as “High school third year, shut-in.”

Or in more detailed terms, “A piece of trash who disregards everything, even his parents, to shut himself in his shell even with his entrance exams right around the corner.”

There was no particular reason for his solitude.

On typical weekdays, he would occasionally think “Getting up now would be a pain”, and that became an impetus to cut school.

With his absences steadily increasing, before he realized it he’d become an exemplary shut-in who brought tears to his parents.

He spent his days in sloth, plunging ever deeper into the net with minimal communication.

“The result being a summons to another world, huh… I don’t really get it myself.”

Reconfirming his surroundings yet again, he heaved his umpteenth sigh.

He had moved from the street he was on, and was presently sitting in a somewhat dim alley.

The ground was paved. A rough job compared to modern Japan, but it wasn't bad.

"Supposing this is a parallel world fantasy, I guess this must be the standard medieval civilization. I didn't see any machinery, and they build with stone and wood…"

He thought back to the sights he'd seen on his way to the alley and organized the information in his head. He would frequently let his imagination run wild, as a result he was more than prepared for his present situation.

First, calmly analyze that time period's culture and its differences with Japan. Ascertain any differences in the laws of physics, and possibility of contact with humanoid organisms. These were his priorities.

"Alright, let's do this. I'm not imagining you guys, and I'm fairly certain about the level of civilization. It seems like my money won't be of any use, but I took the opportunity to speak to a shopkeeper and we had no problem communicating."

Upon realizing he'd been summoned, the first thing Subaru did was attempt to negotiate with a "Grocer?" Having attempted to purchase the "Apples?" with his Japanese Yen, he was promptly denied. It seemed that this world used gold, silver and copper coins as its currency. The inherent value of currency in this world was easy to understand, certainly befitting a parallel world fantasy.

"Well, I suppose there would be mixed-metal fakes. Something like a 500-won coin would probably degrade, though."

'Probably heavy to carry around', he thought as another lizard-drawn carriage passed through the street. This produced a giant cloud of dust and yet the townsfolk paid it no mind, as though they were completely used to this.

“Even so, they don’t seem nearly as common as cars were… Come to think of it, I haven’t seen any dogs or cats around here.”

The lizards drawing the carriages appeared considerably larger than horses. Their body mass seemed constant relative to their proportions, but it was certainly worrying to see reptiles of that size.

“They’re commonplace, huh… Both lizards and humanoids.”

Then the final piece he had to confirm, the unique looks of this world’s humans.

They possessed very colorful hair, but one could easily obtain any hair color with dye. For a parallel world fantasy, that was nothing extraordinary. Instead, Subaru focused on their “animal ears.”

At a cursory glance he spotted dog ears, cat ears, perhaps even bunny ears and he may have even caught sight of a lizardman-like being. There were also those who looked no different from Subaru which led him to conclude-

“The genre is parallel world fantasy. The culture is that of your typical medieval civilization. Demi-humans are common, so battle and adventure might be common as well. The animals show some minor changes but they basically serve their functions. Is that how it is?”

Having deduced that, Subaru exhaled a long breath that wasn’t quite a sigh.

Having spoken of the circumstances he’d ended up in, he knit his brows at this seemingly convenient development. If things proceeded according to his fantasies, he’d freely use his modern knowledge to obtain incredible power, however this world was slightly different from what he’d planned for.

“I’d run perfect simulations of the Sengoku era… If I’d ended up there, I’d have seized the country from Nobunaga.”

When it came to parallel world fantasy, at best his knowledge amounted to gunpowder production. And even that was meaningless considering this world’s technological level Parallel world fantasy generally came with magic, if that were the case it would probably make gunpowder little more than fireworks.

“Well, there’s also cliches where magic isn’t the end all be all. If I ever get the opportunity to contribute to the advancement of science, I’ll do my best to… First, my current problem.”

He had no clue how or why he’d been summoned here.

He clearly remembered what he was doing prior to the summoning. He had just gone out for the first time in a long while to buy some cup ramen at the convenience store and was about to return home. He didn’t want to use his bicycle so he went on foot

Midway, he looked up at the night sky and thought “It’s almost a full moon tonight, huh.” And then as he looked down and blinked, it was noon.

Night to noon in an instant. He immediately realized something was off, but that was it. He’d calmed down now, but immediately after the summoning his panic was such that it could be told of for generations to come.

“Considering I being an only son have gone missing, those generations might not exist.”

As he muttered this, he once again checked his belongings. In a parallel world fantasy, starting gear was even more important than he’d imagined. He’d need everything he had, however little.

First, his cell phone (with a dying battery), his wallet (containing many video rental membership cards), the ramen he bought at the convenience store (Shoyu Tonkotsu), some snacks (corn potage flavored), his beloved gray jersey (unwashed), worn out sneakers (of two years) and more.

“That’s that, huh… Why didn’t I at least carry a pistol? What do I do now?”

It seemed only his snacks would prove useful, and only to fill his belly.

“The situation is hopeless. And of course I don’t know the source, I don’t even have any memories of passing through a mirror or hopping in a pond. Most importantly, where’s the beauty who summoned me?”

The heroine’s absence, by 2D standards, was an act of inconceivable negligence. To summon him and just leave him like that, it was as though he was simply thrown away.

In truth, Subaru could no longer escape reality now that he’d assessed his situation and he could only hang his head in despair.

“Oh, give me a break already. What on earth am I supposed to do here?”

Subaru was already at his limit as he muttered complaints. He earnestly wanted to go back, fantasy was best left in the realm of fantasy. It was fun to imagine arriving in another world to obtain incredible power, but to actually end up in such a situation, what could he really do?

“For now, what’s important is survival, but… Will my level 1 communication ability be enough?”

Aside from his family, he only really spoke to store clerks. He’d lived this lifestyle for almost a year now and had long forgotten how to navigate social interactions.

“Even though I can type at speaking speed in online chats…”

Subaru moved his fingers nervously as he contemplated his future in despair. However, his expression changed when he heard the sound of footsteps echoing through the alley. He looked up to see three men blocking the exit.

Chapter 2:
“Don’t get carried away,” Said God.

The men gazed at him with scorn and contempt as Subaru appraised them. They appeared to be in their mid-twenties. Their clothes were filthy and it was as though their inner evil had manifested on their faces. They weren’t subhuman, but they couldn’t be called decent humans either.

“Damn, a compulsory event.”

Facing the grinning men, Subaru wiped his face and stood up in a panic. They were clearly bandits, and considering the state of the world they might even take his life. Mission 1: “Repel the bandits” had begun. The clear condition was eliminating them, and the failure condition was probably his death.

Subaru smacked his cheeks and ignored the chill running up his spine. He had to get serious, hesitation could cost him his life. He at least had confidence in his decisiveness.

“Furthermore, this is another world. Considering the typical pattern I might be super strong here. Something like the gravity being a tenth of what it was or… Come to think of it, my body feels light! Maybe I can win!”

“He’s murmuring something.”

“Maybe he doesn’t get what’s going on. Should we teach him?”

Unlike Subaru, the men remained fairly calm. However, Subaru continued to face them without backing down. “Woah there, you guys won’t be so calm for long. Let me warn you, guys like me fantasize about this sort of thing all the time. I’ll beat the crap out of you and turn you into XP!”

“I have no clue what you’re saying, but you’re going to die for mocking us.”

“That’s…my line!”

With that declaration, Subaru launched his preemptive attack before they could react. He flew into one of them with a full bodied right straight. He landed a direct hit on the leader’s face with such force that his front tooth cut Subaru’s hand.

He’d hit someone for the first time! And it was much more painful than expected!

This was all he’d tried in his simulations, but it was his first time actually doing it, the man he hit fell to the ground and stopped moving. Driven by emotion, Subaru immediately lunged at another man who was still in shock.

“Eat this! A high kick forged by after-bath stretches!”

“Guh!”

His foot drew an arc right into the man’s temple and slammed him into the wall. Having knocked a second person out, Subaru started to believe he was invincible due to his unexpectedly competent performance.

“Looks like this world is set to raise my power after all! With all this adrenaline I can definitely win!”

Filled with courage, Subaru turned to the last man as he prepared to take him out. However, the glint of the knife in his hand caused Subaru to prostrate himself on the spot.

“I’m sorry, it was all my fault! Please forgive me, spare—!” He surrendered on his knees, the greatest and lowest representation of Japanese spirit.

His earlier excitement had completely disappeared. Subaru felt his blood run cold as he tried his very best to beg for mercy, with his head on the ground.

After all, he had no chance against a blade. If he were cut, he’d be finished. Skill didn’t matter when it came to a knife-wielding opponent.

He then realized the two who were supposed to be down were also getting back up. They nursed their bleeding noses and shook their heads dizzily, but otherwise seemed fine.

“Huh?! How come my peerless attacks failed?! Where’s the power I’m supposed to have?!”

“What sort of crap are you spouting?! How dare you do that to us?!”

They stomped his head into the ground, causing his forehead to bleed as it scraped against the road. Subaru desperately curled up as they continued to pile on blow after blow.

—This is bad, it hurts like hell. I might actually die, for real.

They showed no mercy whatsoever, and unlike his old world there was no guarantee they’d spare his life, there was a strong possibility that he’d be tortured to death like this.

Perhaps he should have fought, prepared to die an honorable death. But that was no longer a possibility considering his injuries. Even so, he couldn’t just die like that.

“Don’t move, fool!”

“Owowowow! Hurtshurtshurts!”

The moment he tried to get up, they crushed his hands underfoot and he could only scream in agony. The man turned red with rage and sent spit flying as he yelled, he then held the knife in an underhand grip.

“We’ll kill you and take everything you have. That’s what you get for messing with us.”

“If it’s valuables you’re after, it’s useless. You see, I’m completely broke!”

“Your strange clothes and shoes will do then, we’ll turn you into Giant Rat feed.”

—Ah, there's rats in this world too. Sounds like a bottom-tier monster.

His mind started drifting in an attempt to escape reality as he looked at the knife which could tear into him at any moment. He wasn't seeing any lights, nor did the world slow down. His life would simply end just like that.

"Hey, move move move! You're in my way!"

An exasperated voice rang out as someone ran into the alley. The startled men looked up at the intruder, and Subaru attempted to do so as well though he couldn't move.

A beautiful girl crossed his field of view.

Her frame was small, and she possessed shoulder-length blonde hair which fluttered in the wind. Her eyes suggested a strong will and her fang-like canine protruded mischievously. She looked rather cheeky, but it could be said that she was cute considering her age.

The shabbily dressed girl had just come across the scene of a genuine mugging.

The seemingly deliberate timing caused hope to well up within Subaru. This was it, the development he was waiting for. Following the typical pattern, this kind girl would gallantly save Subaru who was on the verge of death, and then-

"Man, this is crazy. But I'm busy, gotta get outta here! Live strong!"

"Eh? What?! Seriously?!"

However, that fleeting hope was crushed.

Their eyes met momentarily and she raised her hand apologetically as she continued to run past them into what seemed to be a dead end.

She then proceeded to leap off a leaning board and rapidly disappeared up the wall.

With the girl gone, the alley naturally went silent. She'd gone by like a typhoon leaving them dumbfounded, but Subaru's circumstances hadn't changed one bit.

"Now that the mood's been lightened, I don't suppose you might let me go?!"

"On the contrary, we're even angrier. You're not going to die a peaceful death, you know?"

The man with the knife looked serious. Subaru realized that he was finished for sure this time, his hands were still trapped under their heels, it was too late to attempt to get up. Ultimately, despair conquered his heart.

—It's… Over? Just like that, in a place like this? It's true I haven't lived very virtuously. Even so, a death like this is just too cruel. If I were to ask what I did, the reply would be that I did nothing at all, a completely idle demise.

Pain… Wasn't it. There was something else causing him to tear up. It wasn't something like the fear of the end. He just couldn't bear having lived such an empty, meaningless life.

"—That's enough, villains."

A clear voice rang through the alley overpowering the noise of violence, the men's vulgar jeers, and even Subaru's own ragged breaths.

Chapter 3:
First Encounter with Magic

‘Time itself stopped’, a phrase reserved for moments like this. At the entrance to the alley stood a single girl.

She was a beautiful girl.

She had tied up her long silver hair which reached her hips, her piercing gaze was brimming with intelligence, her soft features were both seductive and youthful and she exuded an air of nobility that was dangerously charming.

She stood about 160 centimeters tall, her royal blue-toned garments weren’t particularly flashy, and yet their simplicity emphasized her presence even further. The one conspicuous feature was the emblem on her coat, a bird resembling a hawk, and even its magnificence was nothing more than a supplement to her sublime beauty.

“I won’t let you run amok like that. Stop at once.”

She spoke once again, her voice so exciting it could send tremors through one’s body.

Her voice was like a silver bell, it was pleasant to the ears and her speech held such power it could shake one’s heart.

Subaru was overwhelmed, to the extent that he’d completely forgotten his predicament. He could only think of her.

The bandits were no different, faced with her animosity their earlier vigor vanished. Even the man holding the knife turned pale as they retreated into the alley.

“Waitwaitwait! Please wait! We don’t really get it, but we’ll let him go! So please forgive us…”

“It was our bad… Eh? What we stole?”

“Please. It’s really important. I’d let go of anything else, but not that. —If you return it now, I’ll spare your lives.”

Though her words were only that of an entreaty, the last few were clearly filled with anger.

Her gaze was sharp, and the hand she’d extended as though reaching out was empty. However, there was something hard to put into words gathering in her palm, something everyone there could feel.

“W-Wait! … Um, perhaps there’s been some kind of mistake?”

“…What?”

They pointed to Subaru who was still under their boots.

“Uhh, you’re not here to save this guy, right?”

“…What strange clothes he’s wearing. Perhaps there’s been some internal strife among you? I can’t say I approve of you ganging up on him like that, but if you were to ask whether or not I have any sort of connection to him, I’d have to say I don’t.”

Perhaps thinking they were trying to distract her, her tone was one of irritation. Seeming flustered by this, the men started talking in a hurry.

“Woa-W-Wait! If you don’t want this guy, we have nothing to do with each other! About whatever was stolen from you, it was probably that girl from earlier!”

“A-Ah, right! The girl from earlier, she ran up the wall onto the roof!”

“Yeah, over there! She’s probably three streets away by now!”

As they gave their rapid-fire explanations, her eyes met Subaru’s.

Her eyes seemed to ask if they were telling the truth and Subaru nodded instinctively, unable to lie.

Having seen this, the girl reluctantly nodded in understanding.

“It looks like you weren’t lying. So she went that way…? I’ll have to hurry.”

She turned her back on them, prepared to leave.

The men were blatantly relieved, and Subaru cursed his own foolishness for getting wrapped up in the atmosphere and squandering his only chance. However…

“Be that as it may, I can’t overlook what’s going on here.”

She turned around with her palm facing them—and aimed the ‘rock’ in her palm at the stock-still men as she fired.

Its speed would fit right in at the major league, and its course was that of a bean ball.

The sound of a regulation ball striking flesh rang out thrice, and the men were blown away as they screamed in pain.

Having scored direct hits on the men, there was a high-pitched din as lumps of ice fell by Subaru. Lumps of ice the size of a fist—Their existence defied any sense of season and even physics itself, and they dispersed as if consumed by the atmosphere once they’d served their purpose.

“—Magic.”

The word most suited to explain this phenomenon immediately spilled out of his mouth. He didn’t hear her chant or anything, but that ice just now was definitely formed in and fired from her palm.

Having seen this actually occur before him, he realized something.

“This isn’t nearly as fantastic as I thought… It feels disappointingly real.”

He’d imagined light scattering around or energy flowing wildly, but in reality it was just some lumps of ice rapidly coming into existence and disappearing just as quickly. There wasn’t even the slightest hint of atmosphere to it.

“You’ve… Really gone and done it now.”

Setting aside Subaru’s impressions, the men who had been hit by that disappointingly real attack had sustained serious damage. Two of them could barely keep their footing steady as they stood back up and the third may have been hit in a bad spot, because he was out cold. Despite their bleeding, the two who were still standing appeared ready to fight. Even the man beside the guy with the knife was holding an object resembling a rusty nata as he prepared for battle.

“I don’t give a damn whether you’re a mage or whatever. The two of us together are going to kill you… You think you can win against both of us?”

The man with the knife raised his voice in anger as he pressed down on his broken nose with his other hand, but the girl showed no signs of faltering.

“I suppose two on one might be unfair.”

“Then two on two should be okay, right?”

Yet another voice filled the alley, androgynous and high-pitched, as though speaking for the girl.

Subaru started looking around in surprise and the men shared his reaction. They couldn’t find anyone who might have spoken those words, not at the entrance and of course not within the alley.

The three of them were confused and bewildered, and as if to show off, the girl held out her hand.

Her palm faced upward, and ‘it’ floated above her white fingertips.

It said as it bashfully groomed its face. ‘It’ being a cat small enough to fit in a palm, standing upright.

Its coat was gray and its ears were floppy, to Subaru it looked very much like an American Shorthair. Well, setting aside its pink nose and the length of its tail. The sight of this bizarre cat-like being caused the man with the knife to tremble as he screamed.

"—A spirit user!"

"Correct. If you withdraw right now, I won't pursue you. Think fast, I don't have time for this."

The men clicked their tongues at her words and started to carry their fallen friend out of the alley. As they passed by Subaru and approached the exit, they glanced back at the girl and—

"Just you wait, you damned brat. You'd best be careful the next time you decide to wander around here."

"If you lay a finger on her, you'll be tormented until the end of time. You'll be in the afterlife well before that, though."

They desperately tried to make threats, but the reply was dismissive in tone although its contents were rather severe.

The cat in her palm behaved rather frivolously, but their faces turned paler than ever before as they silently fled out of the alley.

Now that they were gone, only Subaru remained before her.

"—Don't move."

Forgetting the pain coursing through him, Subaru had tried to get up to thank her.

But she stopped him in his tracks, her ice cold voice devoid of any sentiment.

Her eyes were filled with caution. Even having understood Subaru wasn't with them, she clearly didn't think of him as a good person.

Despite this, he was enthralled by the beauty of her amethyst eyes.

He wasn’t used to dealing with beautiful women, so that alone caused him to turn red and avert his eyes. Seeing this, the girl smiled boldly as she maintained her cautious gaze.

“Your guilty conscience made you avert your eyes. Looks like my judgement was spot on.”

“I wonder. I didn’t sense malice whatsoever, that was probably just an instinctive male reaction.”

“You be quiet, Puck. —You, you probably know who stole my insignia, right?”

The girl silenced the cat as she tossed a question Subaru’s way. She seemed rather proud of herself, but,

“Sorry to disappoint, but I have no clue.”

“No way?!”

Her prideful front crumbled, allowing her usual expression to come through for a moment. Her imposing attitude had also vanished as she turned to the cat in her palm in a panic.

“Wh-What now? Did we really just waste our time…?”

“You’re wasting time as we speak, you really should hurry. The culprit definitely has the divine protection of wind considering how fast they ran.”

“Why are you treating it like someone else’s problem?”

“You were the one who told me to stay out of it, though. Besides, what are you going to do about this guy?”

Subaru smiled bitterly when he once again became the topic of conversation. The girl seemed as though she’d just now realized that he was still there. Subaru put on a brave face for her and stood up,

—I’ll help you out if you so desire, how about it?

He’d planned to say this while his fingers combed through his hair and his teeth sparkled, however,

"Huh?"

"Ah, you'd better not try to sta—, too late."

His head felt heavy and his body was wobbly. He tried to support himself against a wall, but his hand only grasped air. In the end, he had a reunion with the ground he was just recently laying on. He fell completely undefended right onto his nose, the sharp pain making his consciousness drift.

"—Well, what now?"

"Well, it's not like we know him. He won't die, so let's leave him be."

As his consciousness faded away, he could make out bits of their conversation. This was parallel world fantasy alright, harsh even when it came to kindness.

He was going to be abandoned in some alley, a negative viewpoint.

Well, he was about to die so merely being alive was a blessing in itself, a positive viewpoint.

These half-hearted thoughts floated across his mind as his consciousness slowly—

"Really?"

"Really!"

On the verge of losing consciousness, he caught sight of the girl turning around, her face red.

"—I definitely, definitely won't stick around to help him."

—So cute even when she's angry, a true parallel world fantasy.

Those were his last thoughts before he blacked out.

Chapter 4:
Compensation For a Lap Pillow

To Subaru, the feeling of waking up was rather similar to the sensation of raising his head out of water. Rays of sunshine assailed his pupils the moment his eyelids parted, causing him to grimace as he rubbed his eyes. He was rather good at waking up, once his eyes opened his consciousness would soon follow.

"Ah, you're awake?"

A voice directly overhead. As Subaru turned to face it, his body still on the ground, he realized that his head was resting on something rather soft.

"Don't try to move just yet. Your head was hurt, so it's not safe."

The voice worrying about him was gentle, and the sensation under his head was one of supreme bliss. Subaru thought back to what had happened before he lost consciousness and concluded that he was currently experiencing one of the greatest boons a man could receive.

—Holy crap, that beauty's giving me a lap pillow?!

Taking advantage of this divine blessing, Subaru started to toss and turn, enjoying the feel of her thighs to his heart's content.

His circular motions brought delightful sensations to his cheeks, his face wrapped in a fluffy—

—Man, pretty girls are a lot hairier than I thought.

"Like hell—!"

"Glad to see you're up. (Falsetto)"

Subaru played the straight man as he looked up, now fully lucid, he could properly see what was before him. In his inverted line of sight was the face of an absurdly huge cat. Its expression was excessively ingratiating as it formed what seemed to be a smile.

“I decided to be considerate and offer you some comfort until you woke up. (Falsetto)”

“First of all, quit doing that terrible falsetto.”

Having ended up in the absurd situation of receiving a lap pillow from a human-sized cat, that was Subaru’s only request. He then went back to enjoying the furry sensation since it was so generously provided.

“Fluffy… So fluffy. Just what in the world have you gone and created, God?”

“Oh dear, it seems it was well worth it for me to change size if it brings you that much joy. Right?”

The giant cat shyly scratched its head and winked as if seeking agreement. In the direction of its gaze, at the entrance to the alley, a girl stood with her arms crossed in displeasure. She was the girl who had been burned into his eyes and memory before he lost consciousness.

“So basically, you’re that tiny kitty from before?”

“Fufufu, its freely changing size makes it great for transport. It also brightens your day with humorous chitchat. A cat for everyone, goes great with your lifestyle! For more details please contact the spirit association.”

It nimbly snapped its fingers and started a sales pitch. The contents weren’t really relevant, but Subaru understood that was probably how it acted.

“So you ended up staying here until I woke up…”

“Don’t get it twisted. I had some questions for you, so I had no choice but to stay. If that weren’t the case, I would have just left you here. Definitely. Just so we’re clear on that.”

When it was emphasized that much, even Subaru couldn’t really say much in response. She spoke in a fierce tone, as if pressing him. Considering his level 1 communication ability that was even worse when it came to the opposite sex, all Subaru could do was nod.

“And that goes for me healing you and letting you enjoy Puck’s lap too. All of it was for my own benefit, so I’ll have you repay me now.”

“You’re putting on quite the act, but it ultimately wraps around to being a regular request, doesn’t it?”

What goes around comes around, taken to the extreme. But in response to his answer, the girl shook her head with a stern expression.

“That’s not it, I’m making a demand here. —Now, you probably know who stole my insignia, right?”

Subaru nervously accepted her condition, and she for some reason lowered her voice and asked him this.

Subaru couldn’t help but tilt his head at this. He had a really strong feeling that he’d heard this exact question before he lost consciousness.

“Did I hit my head really hard while I was very briefly unconscious?”

“You were out for at least five minutes, but as far as I know nothing of the sort happened.”

“Then could it be deja vu? Maybe I’ve awakened some hidden power that lets me experience the immediate future?”

Perhaps he should call his ability “Come back yesterday.”

It could be rather useful to come up with the right answer to a question. Perhaps it’d even be possible to prepare for tough questions on tests. His dream started spiraling out of control.

“Ah, I was a shut-in!”

"Quit ignoring me and calm down already, would you? Now, answer me."

"Uhh… I have to say… I don't really know."

The so-called insignia was probably something like those badges people like lawyers, prosecutors, members of the defense force etc. had to prove their identity.

Unfortunately, Subaru had no memory whatsoever of seeing such a thing in the hour or so he was here.

Back home, he had a veritable mountain of toy badges he'd collected as a child. But he didn't know how to return there, and he'd probably get smashed by her ice if he tried offering her one.

Consequently, his answer couldn't possibly meet her expectations. But the girl simply nodded, not disappointed in the slightest.

"I see. That's that, then. But I did learn that you don't know anything, so that shall suffice as compensation for healing you."

Her logic regarding her total loss would have shocked the sleaziest swindler. Leaving a dumbfounded Subaru behind, she loudly clapped her hands together as if she'd completely gotten over it.

"I'll be going then. Sorry, but I'm in a hurry. Your injuries are almost gone, and those guys probably won't come after you again considering how scared they were, but wandering into deserted alleys alone at a time like this is basically suicide. Ah, I'm not worried or anything, I'm just warning you. I won't have a reason to save you if this happens again, so you'd better not expect anything."

Her mouth moved rapidly as she spoke at length, and perhaps interpreting Subaru's silence as agreement, she seemed satisfied as she turned away.

Her long, silver hair swayed with her movements and even in that gloomy alley it had a fairy tale-like luster to it.

Subaru's support suddenly disappeared and he hastily stopped his fall. When he turned around, the cat's giant body was nowhere to be found, having returned to the palm-sized form he'd originally seen. Floating through the air like a balloon, it turned toward the girl.

“Sorry about that. She just can't be upfront about such things, this daughter of mine. Don't think her strange for it.”

Saying this in a jovial tone, the cat gently landed on her shoulder. She patted its back as if to confirm this, after which it disappeared into her hair.

Subaru's eyes followed her dashing form as she walked away, and he thought intently about what the cat had said to him.

—The real motivation behind her words and actions.

It seemed she had been robbed of something really important to her, and she was pursuing the culprit. She then saw a stranger being assaulted, and stopped to help him despite this.

On top of that, she even wasted her time healing him and watched over him until he woke up, and then repeated her earlier question and deemed that sufficient compensation so he wouldn't feel indebted to her.

It was far beyond the level where you could say she wasn't upfront about things. It was the first time in his life he'd seen someone so absurdly considerate.

From her perspective, there was absolutely nothing to gain from interacting with him. On top of losing her target, she spent precious time healing him. Considering this, it could be said that she'd actually sustained a great loss here. She had every right to criticize him, and he would accept all of it.

But in the end, she didn't do that, nor did she ask for an apology. Why? According to her, it was because saving him was all part of her self-serving plan.

“Living like that, you're going to lose everything.”

He stood up with those words and patted his dirt-covered jersey.

The filth made his well-used jersey stand out, but it had sustained no real damage. And most importantly, all the pain from his beating was completely gone. He rotated his shoulders and stretched his legs as he confirmed his condition, once again realizing just how absurd magic was.

And also how abnormal the girl was, having done this much for him and demanding next to nothing in return.

“—Hey, wait up!”

As she looked around at the spot where the alley connected to the main street, a voice called out from behind her. Smoothing down her hair with her hand, she seemed annoyed as she turned around.

“What? We’ve already said everything we needed to say, so we no longer have anything to do with each other. We’re merely strangers whose paths intersected for a moment.”

“Don’t say such heart-rending things! And even if you intended to end things, I think it’s far from over.”

Her eyes were cold as he approached as if clinging to her. Some part of him thought this scene was very much like a boy pursuing a girl who’d given him the cold shoulder, but he pressed on, spreading his arms to block her path.

“That thing’s important to you, right? Let me help you find it.”

“But you don’t…”

“It’s true that I haven’t a clue as to the culprit’s name, background or fetishes, but I at least know what she looks like! A pretty girl with a snaggletooth and striking blonde hair! She was shorter than you and flatter too, and maybe two or three years younger, but I was like really—?!”

It was a bad habit of his to become tense and speak at extreme speed when he was at his wits’ end, a habit that was clearly on display at this very moment. Frankly, even he himself was repulsed by this.

—There was too much unnecessary crap like chests and fetishes. And using words like ‘pretty girl’ and ‘really’, just who am I supposed to be? I gave up on English in my first year of middle school.

In his first year of middle school, he’d gotten rid of his English textbook in the middle of summer break and he’d sworn off using loan words ever since, enacting a personal policy of national isolation.

So how on Earth could he just litter his speech with English—

It seemed as though Subaru was about to embark on a journey of self-reflection, full of strain and regret. His back was soaked with cold sweat. His arms were in a dreadful state due to the sweat from his palms and armpits. He was besieged by heart palpitations, breathlessness, dizziness, anemia, nasal congestion and migraines as he stood there.

He’d driven himself into a corner, and what saved him was,

“—You’re a strange guy.”

The girl’s voice, her finger on her lip as she slightly tilted her head, as though looking at some exotic animal. She stared at him as if appraising him and then,

“Let me just say this, I can’t offer you anything in return. I’m completely broke.”

“It was all stolen, you see.”

“Relax, I’m basically broke as well.”

Consciously ignoring the intermittent interjections, Subaru vigorously struck his chest.

“And I don’t need a reward or anything. I just want to thank you.”

“I haven’t done anything to deserve your thanks, you already repaid me for the healing.”

She remained stubborn to the very end.

Her obstinate attitude made Subaru smile bitterly as he continued, “If so,”

“I’m helping you for my own sake too. My objective is, yeah, that. I wanna do some good deeds!”

“Good deeds?”

“That’s right, if you do a whole lot of them, you get to go to heaven when you die. It’s basically my dream life, lazing about all you want, living as self-indulgently as you please, and it’s like it’s just waiting for me. That’s why you have to let me help you.”

He didn’t really understand what he was saying himself, but he said what he wanted to. He looked as though he’d just accomplished some great task, but the girl seemed rather pensive. However, the cat on her shoulder started poking her cheek with its paw.

“I’m not sensing any malice, wouldn’t it be best to take him up on his offer? You don’t have any leads, and you can hardly search the whole capital.”

“But… I”

“Your stubbornness is definitely cute, but it’d be foolish to lose sight of your objective because of it. I don’t want to think of my own daughter as a fool.”

The cat shrugged its shoulders as it provoked her, causing her to raise her eyebrow. The next several seconds were filled with strangely erotic ‘Ahh’s, ‘Uhn’s and ‘But’s, but in the end,

“—I really can’t give you anything, you know.”

Saying this, she took his outstretched hand.

Chapter 5:
Your Name

His first friendly interaction in this world.

About thirty minutes after he offered to help her in that heartwarming exchange,

"—What exactly is this?"

Their investigation had led nowhere.

The girl's eyes were cold as she asked this, her dissatisfied gaze directed at Subaru who had just discovered something. Namely—

"That cold gaze is actually kind of exciting… Wait. No, it can't be. I, I… Was an M all along…?"

"I don't know about this 'em' or whatever, but it's clear to me that you're talking compleeete nonsense."

Making no effort to hide her exasperation, she crossed her arms and sighed.

Her criticism was scathing, but it was probably appropriate considering what Subaru had managed to accomplish over these past thirty minutes.

Subaru himself had offered to help her search for her missing item, but there were a number of problems that made their search extremely difficult.

To begin with, he had no idea where he was.

As far that was concerned, it couldn't really be helped considering he was just summoned from another world, but it was a major hurdle considering the girl was also unfamiliar with the area.

They had both assumed the other person knew the way, and ended up wasting almost ten minutes wandering around the back alleys. A funny story to tell at this point, but they couldn't really laugh at it.

Secondly, he couldn't read their language.

He'd neglected this since conversation wasn't a problem, but upon examining his surroundings again he noticed what seemed to be hand-written hieroglyphics all over the place.

He didn't realize this at first, but considering they were even written on signs and the like, unless mystic runes had become all the rage around here, they were probably this world's alphabet. As a result he couldn't differentiate shops by their signs, and he couldn't rely on signposts to navigate either.

In summary, the typical cliche of "Why do they speak and write the same language?!" had only delivered on the former it seemed. But if one considered that he'd probably be dead in some ditch if he didn't at least have that, it could be said that his situation wasn't that bad.

"Even if that were the case, this explosion in difficulty is absurd…"

Far from the kind of story where the hero comes in with unbeatable cheats, it was more like he didn't even have the minimum level of preparation. And most importantly, the crucial problem that had earned the girl's ire—

"You've just been hiding behind me this entire time, you haven't been helpful in the slightest."

"I mean, it's kinda scary talking to people you've just met…"

"You're not some kid…"

Her well-shaped eyebrows scowled as though she was having a headache, and she spoke in a rather pitying voice.

Just as Subaru feared, the hurdle of obtaining information from strangers proved to be too much for him. His communication ability had dropped precipitously over the past year. He merely clung to her silently, like a shy boy following his mother.

He certainly wanted to say something in response to her disappointment, but his cowardliness ran deep and the words wouldn't come out. Thus, the cat on her shoulder who had been silent thus far started waving its tail and,

"Relax… At least he has no ill intent."

"That's even worse. It'd be easier to believe he's sabotaging me, honestly. To be so utterly useless with good intentions, it's honestly harder to deal with than enmity."

"Sure is enlightening, huh?"

The cat's uncaring attitude made the girl sigh. She then looked at the street yet again and continued, "But even so,"

"This really is tough."

A small complaint left her mouth. Having moved from the alley they were in earlier, and even from the street connecting to it, they were now far from the hustle and bustle of civilization as they entered the slums. Though discouraged, they continued their investigation and ultimately ended up here.

"They said that stolen goods were usually handled in the slums…"

"We know the location and the culprit's appearance, so why not leave the rest to the poli… I mean, the guards? We'd find it right away if we had a lot of people working on it."

A shopkeeper about two streets away had told them about a narrow alley connecting to the slums. It was true that the sun was going down, but despite being right next to the street, the place was gloomy for reasons other than the light source. The depressing atmosphere and foul smell caused Subaru's face to scrunch up reflexively.

"The atmosphere, mood, and probably even the inhabitants' personalities are all bad It'd be best to call someone."

"No way."

He wasn't merely nervous or afraid, he'd suggested this after carefully considering his ability and the girl's safety, but he was turned down on the spot. Subaru was bewildered by this declaration and the girl seemed somewhat apologetic.

“I'm sorry. But that's no good. I don't think the guards will come running over a little theft like this… And also, I can't rely on them due to personal circumstances.”

Sealing her lips, she looked at him as if to say, “I can't say why, though. Having understood she probably didn't want to be questioned, Subaru raised his hand in compliance. To begin with, he wasn't so boorish as to pry into others' affairs, and getting too involved with others was a pain anyway. If he were interested in interpersonal relationships, he wouldn't have become a shut-in.

“Alright, what do we do then?”

Even having heard nothing of her circumstances, Subaru asked about her next course of action.

Not seeking the reason and deciding whether or not to stop helping her were entirely different matters. He may not have known her circumstances, but he didn't want to be an ingrate.

Perhaps sure that Subaru would leave her, the girl's eyebrows rose in surprise at this. The cat started doing a little dance on her shoulder,

“I told you, didn't I? Not a hint of ill will.”

Fooling around as usual, it seemed terribly cheerful as it pointed at Subaru. However, its expression suddenly became serious.

“But you'd better decide carefully. —It's almost nightfall, so I won't be able to help you. A few hoodlums wouldn't be a problem, but… Be careful.”

“Yeah, you're right… Okay, I'll think about it. I'll think about it, but”

Her answer was indecisive. As she seemed to struggle with her response, Subaru suddenly became curious and asked the cat, “What were you just talking about? You can’t be around at night?”

“To put it more precisely, despite my cute looks I’m actually a spirit, you see. Manifestation alone consumes a great deal of mana, so at night I fully return to my Yorishiro and focus on building up mana. I’d say on average a nine to five schedule would be ideal.”

“Nine to five, you sound like a civil servant… Spirits’ terms of employment are unexpectedly severe.”

Unusual terms like spirit or Yorishiro were flying around as though it were natural, but a modern otaku corrupted by games and anime wouldn’t have a hard time understanding them.

Anyhow, the cat before him—Or rather, Puck’s contract did not include a night shift. He didn’t look reliable at all, but considering how terrified those thugs from the alley were, setting aside Puck himself the beings known as ‘Spirits’ did seem to possess power befitting them.

A being who inspired far more fear than the girl who could magically create ice. Contrary to his unusually idyllic atmosphere, his true nature might have been that of a maneater that craved blood.

“Thinking of it that way, you’re unexpectedly terrifying. Let me just say this, I’m really sinewy so I probably taste really bad!”

“I can kind of read your mind to some extent so… You really are a nut, huh?”

It felt like he intended to say that in a roundabout fashion, but completely failed to do so. Puck’s fluffy forehead then moved in a gesture similar to a frown,

“Come to think of it, I don’t even know your name. I don’t believe we ever introduced ourselves.”

“Ah, I guess so. Then let’s start with me.”

Subaru cleared his throat and then spun on the spot, striking a pose as he thrust his finger into the sky.

“My name is Natsuki Subaru! I’m utterly lost and completely broke! Nice to meet you!”

“Sounds like you’re in a real tough spot, huh. Alright then, I’m Puck. Nice to meet you.”

Subaru had extended his hand in a gesture of goodwill, and Puck flew right into it, a dynamic handshake with his whole body. From an outsider’s perspective, it looked like Subaru was crushing him.

Puck was just as fluffy as he was in his giant form, once he’d had his fill of the sensation Subaru turned to the girl next to him. Her gaze was sour as she watched this exchange between man and animal.

“Why can’t you ever set that overly familiar attitude aside for a moment? It’s unnecessary.”

“I was at my wits’ end and found a thread I could cling to! Damn it, I’m never letting this go, this encounter… My life itself depends on it…!”

“Your determination is compleeeetely pointless… Say, do you even remember under what pretense you joined us?”

“Of course. You’re now searching for a person rather than an object, and I’m the only the one who knows what they look like… You think I’ll let you get rid of me just like that, I’ll never leak my secrets…!”

“Although I do recall you murmuring “Blonde hair… And her teeth… Ah, never mind” and the like as you hid behind me while we questioned people, so you’ve leaked quite a bit.”

“Curse my own foolishness!!”

He grabbed his head and bent over on the spot. It was like he was playing poker while showing his opponent his hand. Attempting to negotiate like that was simply laughable. Even though she was his first friendly contact in this world, it seemed like she was about to slip away from him and that made him terribly anxious. Puck smiled wryly as he watched Subaru struggle.

“Well, you’ve both got your own problems to deal with. Let’s hear you out later and prioritize the issue at hand. Be that as it may, that’s an unusual name. Has a nice ring to it.”

“I guess so, it’s not a name you hear around here. Speaking of which, your hair and eye color, and even your clothes are all rather unique… Where are you from?”

“According to the template, a small nation to the east, probably.”

A well-worn pattern when it came to parallel world stories. An isolated land in the far east, akin to Zipangu.

A magical cliche where you could just say you were from some other country and most people would simply accept it, since in such worlds international relations were generally very lacking. However,

“Lugunica is the easternmost country on our continental map… There’s nothing to the east of here.”

“No way, seriously?! This is as far east as it goes?! Then what about the well-beloved Zipangu?!”

“You have no clue where you are, you’re penniless and you can’t talk to others because you’re scared… Your future doesn’t look very promising, in a number of ways.”

The girl seemed restless, her eyes somewhat worried as she looked at Subaru’s panicked state. Despite her attempts to hide it, her extremely helpful nature seemed to be overflowing. His completely helpless state was probably making her very uneasy. Puck watched over them with a smile as they agonized over this. He then started plucking at his whiskers,

“Well, just suck it up for now. Right now we should head… I have less than an hour left. Make a decision.”

“—I’ll go. I don’t intend to let her get away, it’ll be too late if she manages to take it somewhere we can’t reach.”

That was her reply to Puck, she then turned to Subaru.

“I’m going to head in now, but… The path ahead will be a lot more dangerous. When night falls, there will probably be some hoodlums up to no good, and to begin with this is a place where battle-hardened people live. If it’s scary, you can wait here, or follow behind me like you were doing before.”

“How much of a chicken would I have to be to decide to stay behind! I’m going! I’ll stick right behind you the whole time!”

“There isn’t the option of heading out front, huh… Well, that works for me too since I won’t have to worry as much.”

She’d sighed so many times now he’d lost count. Subaru reflected on how he only ever made her expression worsen. Thinking back, he hadn’t seen her smile even once. She looked like that when angry, so her smile was probably the cutest thing in the world.

“Can a match box? No, but a tin can!”

“…What’s this all of a sudden?”

“Strange. No effect, but why… Ah! Damn it! Does this world not have tin cans! Uh. um…Is your refrigerator running… No refrigerators either?!”

“This abnormality in his speech and mannerisms… It’s not a curse or something of the sort, is it?”

“No, that was completely voluntary. He put his heart and soul into it too. For an utterly meaningless pursuit.”

Perhaps having guessed the reason for Subaru’s incredible struggle, Puck explained things relatively favorably. On the other hand, it only resulted in the seed of doubt being planted in the girl to whom it looked like Subaru had suddenly started malfunctioning.

Regretting that his terrible puns only worked in his original world, Subaru desperately shook his head. Focusing too hard on what was in front of him and losing sight of the bigger picture, this too was one of his flaws.

“What’s the difference between snowmen and snowwomen?

Snowballs!”

He’d finally found one that didn’t rely on modern knowledge, but the girl’s reaction wasn’t favorable in the slightest. She coldly turned away.

Her eyes were on the alley, probably indicating that she wouldn’t play along any further.

His momentary desire to see her smile had completely backfired.

“—Are you satisfied, Subaru?”

The girl called to Subaru, whose self-hatred was currently maxed out due to his terrible attempt and the equally terrible outcome.

The fact that she’d said his name for the first time, and also the idea of a member of the opposite sex using his name so casually made him just a little nervous.

“Y, yeeah. T-Totally chill. Completely cool. I feel great, I can win!”

“Why are you trembling like that… I get that you’re scared, but we haven’t even entered yet. You really would be better off waiting out here if you’re that terrified.”

With this misdirected worry, she let out a small sigh and turned her attention away for real.

As he watched her walk into the alley, Subaru suddenly realized she did not intend to leave him even if she was successful.

By telling him to wait here, she was signaling that she would come back for him upon finding it. In the less than the hour they’d known each other, her strange inability to deceive for personal gain had become apparent.

“This sucks, I’m so uncool.”

Despite having offered to help, he was absolutely useless to her, and on top of that he was even making her worry about him. He was far beyond the point of being a deadbeat.

Striking his cheeks, he used the pain to force himself to focus and advanced forward. He still had a mountain of complaints. Anyone would be helpless if they were suddenly forced into such a harsh world. He didn't think badly of himself for this. However,

"Relying on her for absolutely everything would be pathetic. I should at least have her back."

Though dependent, he'd have to stand on his own two legs. —But despite having focused, he ended up zeroing in on the small stuff.

"Come to think of it, there's one more thing."

When he called out from behind her, he saw her glance at him through a gap in her silver hair. Even this sidelong glance was dauntingly attractive, but Subaru managed to get his question out.

"So I've heard your cat's name, but I never caught yours."

This somewhat playful question caused her to look ahead and fall silent for a bit. This caused Subaru to panic, wondering if he screwed up. Perhaps her earlier silence was to indicate that she didn't want to tell him her name. His communication disorder that rendered him unable to read others' hearts, much less a woman's, could it still—

"—Satella."

"Oh?"

As he agonized over this, her sudden whisper surprised him. She didn't even turn to look at him, and she repeated without any emotion,

"You can call me Satella."

As she gave her name, her attitude suggested that he definitely shouldn't call her that. Subaru had wanted to learn her surname if possible, he couldn't call her name just like that so he ended up falling silent. For now he would just refer to her in the second person, a rather pathetic compromise. Behind the scenes of this exchange, Puck muttered from within her hair,

“—That’s in terrible taste.”

These words did not reach either of them.

Chapter 6:
The End of the Beginning

Their investigation had them entering the slums, and as usual they were faced with signs of terrible—Or rather, contrary to expectations, an unexpected development resulted in Subaru proving useful.

“This place is super gentle for some reason. What is this… Could it be that my popular period has suddenly arrived?! For the first time since kindergarten!”

Subaru had very lovely features as a child, and his hair was long as well which caused him to be mistaken for a girl rather frequently. —On the other hand, he’d ended up like this over 10 years later, so it wasn’t really a laughing matter.

“Well, this is just a guess, but…”

“Let’s hear it! If there’s a scientific… Wait, since this is fantasy wouldn’t it be magical? If there’s a magical basis for this, I want to hear it.”

“This probably isn’t the answer you’re hoping for, but it’s probably because of your appearance. You’re kind of filthy and you’ve got traces of blood on you, the people here seem to be struggling too so they probably find you relatable.”

“I understand completely, damn it all!”

It now seemed obvious why they were all so friendly. Among them was an old lady who offered him a small dry fruit, saying “Eat this and live strong.” When he nervously tried putting it in his mouth, he felt a slight sweetness under its hard surface. And then a terrible odor violently flowed out. The feeling of his nose being destroyed from the inside caused him to pass out.

“Damn it all! I thought she was being considerate but she poisoned me! That was poison! It’s like my whole body is burning! I might seriously end up dying here! Or I might strip and end up dead from a social perspective!"

"Looks like you received a Bocco fruit. It stimulates the mana within you when you eat it, and accelerates healing and stuff. The effect varies by person, for most it's rather soothing…"

Satella put a finger to her lip and went "Umm," as she watched Subaru heat up and sweat as he breathed ragged breaths.

"It seems to me that your body circulates mana very well. If you overdosed, you might die."

"Tell me that before I eat it! What do I doooo?!"

"Yeah… Puck."

Responding to her call, Puck emerged from within her hair. His movements were dull and his earlier liveliness had vanished. To put it simply, he was extremely sleepy.

It seemed like he wasn't even listening to most of their conversation, he rubbed his large eyes as he said,

"Whaaat? I'm at my limit, you know…"

"You'd better fill up before going to bed then. There's a feast for you right here."

As he felt a bit of bite to her words, Subaru realized Puck was now looking at him, his sleepy eyes sparkling like he was looking at a delicacy.

"Can I really?"

"B-Be gentle."

Despite being a little worried that he was going to be chomped up, Subaru replied playfully. Puck gave a vague response and then stretched his tiny body on Satella's shoulder,

"Alright, let's eat."

Immediately after, Subaru felt whatever had been rampaging around inside him start to drain out in large quantities. It was hard to say from where exactly. If he had to say, it was like it was being drained out of every pore on his body, rather uncomfortable.

“That was quite the treat.”

Puck joined his hands in thanks. Subaru wanted to reply with something along the lines of, “You’re more than welcome,” but he suddenly felt a terrible chill throughout his body.

The heat had directly transitioned into cold. And no ordinary cold either, he could feel it from his very core.

He instinctively grabbed his shoulders, the sight of this causing Satella to glare at Puck in reproach.

“Puck.”

“Sorry, sorry, it’s been a while so I couldn’t quite control it. But his gate does feel strange. It doesn’t seem like it’s seen much use, but it pours mana right out, that’s why I ended up going a bit too far.”

Teehee, he laughed bashfully as he tapped his head, but to Subaru this was no laughing matter.

Yet again there were unfamiliar words being used, like ‘gate’ or mana.

“Probably something like MP, huh… And I’m in this state because it’s been drained.”

His gamer brain once again displayed its ability to immediately grasp such concepts.

The problem then was just how important MP was in this world. If MP Restores were extremely expensive, it could be said that this was a very troublesome act.

“I apologize. We’ll talk about this later.”

“I’m reflecting on my actions. I don’t regret it, though, that was delicious.”

Puck’s attitude resembled that of the protagonist of a certain manga, and Satella hadn’t scolded him very severely. Judging by this, it probably wasn’t a huge issue. If that were the case, it’d be uncool for him to get hung up on this.

“Relax, at least I don’t feel like I’m going to burn to death now. More importantly, let’s keep pursuing the culprit, whose location was determined thanks to my efforts. Thanks to my hard work we were able to-”

“I understand that you’re happy to have been useful, but saying it twice reeeally isn’t cool.”

He’d wanted to change the topic, but ended up sounding like a bragging kid. Satella looked like she regretted raising her opinion of him, and Subaru simply forced a smile. It was about time they decided to go further into the slums.

“Sorry, I’m out of time.”

Saying this, Puck who was still on Satella’s shoulder feebly leaned against her neck. His gray coat was tinged with bits of light, lightly wavering as though he could disappear at any moment.

“It kinda looks like he’s about to die, huh.”

“It’s because I really pushed myself. I use mana to manifest, so it disperses when I disappear. —My crystal, please.”

“Got it. Sorry to push you so hard, Puck. Take it easy.”

Satella retrieved a green palm-sized crystal from her bosom. It felt somewhat different from what one would call a gem, as far as Subaru knew he could only say it seemed crystalline.

Puck walked down Satella’s arm to reach the crystal, and then he turned to her as his small body embraced it.

“I’m sure you know this, but you mustn’t go too far. If the situation looks desperate, use your Od to force me out.”

“I understand. I’m not a kid, I can handle myself.”

“I wonder. I can’t say I trust my daughter very much in that regard. I’m counting on you, Subaru.”

Puck’s smile was full of compassion as he looked away from a displeased Satella and toward Subaru.

Subaru thought their interactions were very much like that of a parent and child as he watched them, he then struck his chest when he was called to,

“Aaalright, leave her to me. You can expect great things from my jitter sensor, if my danger alert goes off we’ll retreat immediately!”

“I don’t understand half of what you said, but I’m trusting you. — Alright then, good night, Puck. Take care.”

Puck looked at her one last time before he vanished from the world. Just as he said, his form started scattering into particles of light. This sight wouldn’t have been possible in Subaru’s old world, and it sent shivers through his whole body.

Once Puck was gone, Satella started stroking the crystal as if it were terribly precious to her, and then put it back in her chest.

Following the typical flow of things, Puck’s essence was probably stored in there in an ethereal form.

“We’re alone now, but… You’d better not try anything strange. I can use magic.”

Not knowing what he was thinking, perhaps she thought he was just staring at her breasts. In response to her words of caution, Subaru instinctively put his hands up and started shaking his head,

“No way! I haven’t been alone with a girl since elementary. I couldn’t possibly try anything, you’ve seen my people skills, haven’t you?”

“That’s soooo nonsensical and yet also reeeally convincing… Alright, let’s go. But we don’t have Puck looking out for us, so we’ll have to be more careful.”

Perhaps dumbfounded by Subaru puffing his chest out with pride, Satella tightened her robe and moved ahead of him. She then turned her head toward him without moving from her spot,

“I’ll be the vanguard and you’ll look out from behind. If something happens, call to me immediately. Don’t try to do anything on your own. I don’t want to hurt your feelings, but… You’re weak.”

“Prefacing it like that, I really can’t dislike you…”

If she wanted to preserve her cold image, she should have omitted the part before “You’re weak” and said it more harshly.

It showed her kindness that she just couldn’t hide, she really was sweet to the core. Enchantingly so.

Satella looked like she wanted to complain as he urged her onward, their two member search had begun.

Having said that, their task hadn’t really changed. Find some inhabitants, describe the culprit’s features, and ask if they know anyone like that. Rinse and repeat.

Subaru was in charge of this, and he became more and more used to it the more he did it.

“Maybe it could be Felt. A tricky little blonde, right?”

This useful piece of information came from the fourteenth man they’d asked. He was another person Subaru had called to in an over-familiar fashion such as “Yo, brother. How goes it?”

He looked at Subaru’s dirtied appearance with sympathy and,

“If it’s Felt, your lost item’s probably in the loot house right now. Stolen goods are tagged and stored there, and the owner gathers them up to sell elsewhere.”

“What a strange system… What if this owner just ran off with the goods?”

"He's the owner because they trust that he won't do that. But well, even if you tell him you had something stolen from you, it's not like he'll return it just like that. You'll have to negotiate for it."

Because the theft was on the victim for being careless, such was the logic of the slums, and he forced it on them with a laugh despite his favorable attitude.

They'd managed to obtain the loot house's location from him, and it seemed like she would very soon be reunited with her stolen item.

However, a different problem had manifested. The problem being that they were both totally broke.

"He told us to buy it back, but what now? On top of our shortcomings in this regard, this seems like the kind of event where we get overcharged or something."

"I'm just retrieving what was stolen from me, why must I pay to do so I wonder…"

Once the problem had become one of funds, Satella's expression suddenly clouded over. Her spontaneous mutter was certainly correct, but it was also true that their opponent wasn't the sort to be swayed by that. To settle things peacefully, and moreover reliably, it would be best to take the man's advice.

Nonetheless,

"Does this stolen insignia look expensive? Even if they overcharge us, without knowing the market value, it would be…"

"…It has a small jewel in the middle. I don't know its monetary value either, but it definitely isn't cheap."

"A jewel, huh… That's troublesome."

Any buffoon could immediately recognize it was valuable at a glance, that was the sort of convenient effect jewels had. It didn't look like this world had the technology to create imitations, so it seemed certain that almost everything that appeared to be a jewel would be the real thing. If that were the case, their inherent value would be obvious.

He understood that they had nothing to be relieved about, but there was also something else about her statement that bothered him. She said she didn't know how much her insignia was worth.

It was certainly possible that it was given to her, but he still felt somewhat uneasy.

"Anyway, let's try going there first and then think about it. I might be able to negotiate a decent price depending on how I go about it…"

Worst case scenario, Subaru had a method that could prove disastrous for him.

His vague wording made Satella frown, but Subaru waved his hand in response to her doubt.

They had walked for about ten minutes, agonizing over their financial situation and coming up with no solutions.

—Having arrived at the so-called loot house, the two looked at each other.

"It's bigger than we thought, huh."

"Shows why they call it that… If everything in there is stolen as the name implies, there's really no helping it."

Of course, since they were periodically selling things off, it probably wasn't filled to the brim with loot.

Subaru thought this as he looked at the loot house, its appearance not quite fitting its coarse name as it beckoned to them.

By Subaru's estimate, it was probably around the size of a convenience store. Parking lot included.

It only had one floor, but it was large enough to fit twenty cars with ease. Their surroundings had changed too, the various ruins and hovels were nowhere to be seen, and behind the loot house was a giant wall. It was quite literally in the deepest part of the slums.

“That tall wall thing…”

“Probably the capital’s border wall. Looks like we came to the very edge without realizing it.”

Her statement caused Subaru to idly imagine what a map of the capital might look like.

It was probably square-shaped, guarded by these walls on all sides. Within those walls, perhaps in the center or the northernmost area there would be a castle, and far away from there one could find these slums.

He felt like it had been two or three hours since they started their search, so he had an idea as to the capital’s size. But then, if he compared it to Japan which didn’t have such clear divisions, its size wasn’t really comparable.

“Well then, if the rumors are true the owner of the place should be in there, but… Considering our position, how do we approach this?”

“I’ll be upfront about it. I had something stolen, so return it if it’s in here, that sort of thing.”

Subaru insisted that this wouldn’t work any number of times, but she refused to listen.

She was virtuous to her core. She couldn’t bring herself to consider using twisted means so easily.

But it was precisely because she was that kind of girl that she stopped to help Subaru even though it brought her no benefit.

“Ahh—, got it. Then, leave this to me.”

There was a high possibility that things would go south, so Subaru reluctantly offered to go himself.

His last resort—This was too hasty so it didn’t really feel like a trump card, but it would also be a problem to lose the timing entirely. Subaru wouldn't hesitate when it came to such matters.

Meanwhile, Satella seemed puzzled by this suggestion. His newfound confidence made her look at him with suspicion.

“Alright, I'm counting on you.”

“I get that you can't agree just like that. After all, I myself understand that I haven't done anything to win your trust. But I do have an idea, so try to believe in… Ehhh?!”

“Wh-Why are you so surprised?”

“I mean, this is completely different from the typical pattern, isn't it?! “Leave it to a good for nothing like you, who can barely even talk to others? Don't make me laugh, even a dog would be better,” I was prepared to hear something like that!”

“As if I'd say something so terrible.”

His paranoia had offended her. However, she cleared her throat and fixed her amethyst eyes on him,

“It's true that you haven't been particularly useful thus far, and you haven't done or said anything to inspire any sort of confidence, but…”

“What kind of appraisal is that? I can't refute it, though!”

“But I believe you think things through, and I don't think you're a liar.”

She stopped his self-deprecation in its tracks, and then took a breath and continued,

“I'll try believing in you… It'd be a great stroke of luck if you actually succeeded.”

“Instead of that last part, something like “Do your best for my sake” would really get me motivated, you know?”

"I can't be that demanding. But, do your best."

A girl who could not lie, in every sense of the phrase.

Subaru responded with a broad smile and turned toward the entrance.

This definitely wasn't easy on him, but he felt like her expectations and that little bit of trust were giving him the push he needed. If he came back without accomplishing anything, he really would be completely useless.

As he walked, Subaru looked at the plastic bag in his hand, which had never once become the topic of conversation thus far.

Within it were the items he'd brought with him from the other world. As far as Subaru was concerned, they were all that he had in this world. He might be able to barter with them.

He didn't know how much this insignia was worth, but surely it couldn't be more than his cell phone, which would be the only one of its kind in this world.

This would be a great loss for him, but negotiation should be possible if he used them to trade.

That was the last resort he'd kept secret from her. Of course, he also had a bunch of cards that would be useless in this world. If he had the chance to use them, he should do so.

"Umm, is anyone home?"

Standing before the wooden door, he tried knocking on it. The sound was deeper than he expected, but there was no response from within.

He hesitantly reached for the handle, and the door readily opened as if there were no lock on it.

The interior had no lighting, it was so dark that one could only fumble around. It was supposed to be a place where stolen goods were stored, and yet for some reason there was no one standing guard.

“Maybe they’re in the toilet or something… Uhh, anybody there?”

Subaru poked his head in to look around, but not even the moonlight reached the room, leaving it pitch black. As he was welcomed by stale air and an unpleasant odor, Subaru built up his resolve and took a step forward.

But first, he turned to Satella,

“If the two of us walk in just like that, we might look like burglars. How about you stay out here?”

“Are you sure? Perhaps I ought to be the one…”

“I’ve already called out a bunch, so I probably won’t be cut down just like that. It’d be dangerous if the owner were to misunderstand, so please leave it to me.”

Subaru bowed his head to her as she contemplated this. She then reached into her robe and pulled out a white crystal which she held out toward him.

“You should at least have some light. Whether or not someone’s there, call out to me.”

“I understand. Carefully, huh… How do I turn this thing on?”

“You don’t even know how to use lagmite? You really are ignorant, huh?”

She said in a tone that was both amused and surprised as she lightly struck the lagmite against the wall, causing it to produce a pale white glow. It was very dim, barely illuminating a few meters at most, but it would be enough to discern imminent danger.

“These days most people use mana-based lights instead, but this is a lot simpler and I quite like it. If it goes out, just do that again and it’ll light up.”

“I see… Seems pretty convenient. Alright, I’ll head in for a bit.”

Lagmite in hand, Subaru timidly walked in. “Don’t force yourself,” Satella said from behind him, and he responded by raising his hand.

When Subaru passed the entrance, a small counter entered his dim field of view. Perhaps this place was originally a tavern or something. On the other side were some broken boxes, one might guess that the owner or someone else had been sitting there.

The counter also seemed to play the role of a reception desk, and had various items on it. —Small boxes, jars, and all sorts of blades were carelessly strewn about.

He was in the dark in both the physical sense and the intellectual sense so he couldn’t hazard a guess as to their worth, but to the untrained eye they definitely didn’t look very valuable.

“I suppose it’s obvious, the valuables must be further inward.”

The stolen items also had wooden tags attached, it seemed like characters had been carved into these with something sharp. According to what the man from before had said, these were probably the names of the thieves who had stolen them. It seemed like they could catch all of these guys in one shot if they just gathered these up and handed them over to the guards.

“Well, there’s also the possibility that they’re using fake names. And in a situation like this, there’s plotlines where the country has a dark side that’s in cahoots with the criminals…”

There was also the question of just where these stolen goods were going.

He could just skim ahead if this were a novel or manga, such were his detestable thoughts as he walked further inward.

There were still no signs of life, but even with his dim light he could make out that the goods were increasing in size and value as he went deeper.

An insignia with a jewel embedded in it would surely be all the way in the back, then. As he thought this, his footsteps unintentionally quickened—And then,

"Hm?"

Subaru stopped when he suddenly felt something strange under his shoes.

It wasn't the discomfort of stepping on something hard. On the contrary, whatever he had stepped on had some give—It felt like he'd stepped on something sticky.

When he raised his leg and felt the sole of his sneaker, he noticed a thick liquid sticking to it. When his finger felt its strange stiffness, he felt a primal fear surge from within.

"What… is this"

He brought his finger to his nose to smell it, but the stale air prevented him from realizing exactly what it was. Even so, he simply didn't have the courage to bring it to his mouth for a taste.

He rubbed it off on the wall, and pointed his light forward as if prompted by his unease. At his destination was the source.

"…Ah?"

His voice leaked out when he finally saw 'it.'

Under the dim light, what he first saw was an arm sloppily lying on the ground. Its fingers were open as if reaching for something, and strangely, there was nothing above the elbow.

He raised his light as if to look for the rest of it, and there he found a leg. Perhaps it was fortunate that the leg was still attached to the torso, and the body had most of the parts it was supposed to have.

—With a torn up neck and a missing arm, what lay before him was the corpse of a large old man.

"Hie"

Once he realized this, his mouth produced a meaningless noise. What filled his mind right now was not fear, despair or shock. His mind was overwhelmingly blank, all thought had completely ceased.

Even the options to ‘run’ or ‘stay’ did not exist in his brain. The blankness simply had him stand stock still until his brain fully absorbed the sight before him. This would ultimately decide his fate.

“—Aah, you saw it. I have no choice then. Yes, no choice at all.”

A woman’s voice, he thought.

Low and cold, and somehow enjoying herself, he felt.

“Guah—!”

He didn’t even have time to turn around. The instant he decided to turn toward the voice, he was blown away by a colossal impact.

His back slammed against the wall, knocking the lagmite out of his hand which left him in complete darkness.

But that wasn’t what Subaru was focused on, his entire consciousness was devoted to,

“Gu…Ah, hot,”

—He felt a terrible ‘heat’ coursing through his entire body.

—This is really bad.

He felt the hard floor against his cheek, and realized that he had collapsed onto his face.

His strength was completely gone, and he had already lost sensation in his fingers.

The heat from his core was so excruciating it made him want to tear his throat out.

—Hot, hot, hot, hot, hot, hot, hot.

The moment he opened his mouth to scream, what spilled forth was no shriek, it was a clump of blood.

He vomited up large quantities of his lifeblood as he coughed. Frothy blood started foaming up at the corners of his mouth as he gurgled. Within his dim field of view, the ground had been dyed red.

—Aah, this is all, my blood?

There was enough to soak his fallen body. Blood comprises about 8% of the human body, and it is said that losing about a third of that would be life-threatening, but—It seemed to him that he'd already lost just about all of it.

He had stopped vomiting blood, but the 'heat' that felt as though it would incinerate him still persisted. He moved his hand toward his abdomen with great difficulty, and having felt an impossible sensation there, he understood.

—My stomach's been torn open, huh.

It was no wonder he felt so hot. It seemed his brain had confused 'pain' for 'heat.

He was almost torn in half, only a bit of skin at his back held him together.

In short, it seemed that this was 'checkmate' for him.

The moment he realized this, his consciousness started fading.

Even the heat, which was making him writhe in agony had disappeared, Even the unpleasant feeling of blood and the sensation in the hand he'd used to feel his organs, it was all fading away along with his consciousness.

All that was left was his body, which would not be able to accompany his soul.

This body used the last of its disappearing consciousness to move just a little. It turned its head upward.

Black shoes formed ripples in the pool of blood before his eyes. There was someone there. And that someone was most likely the one who killed him.

Strangely, he didn’t feel like looking at their face. This person was the one who took his life, and yet he still decided to simply remain a spectator to his own demise. He had no clue who they were, but right now he didn’t really care about that.

He only wished for the girl’s safety.

“—Baru?”

He felt like he heard a voice like the chime of a bell.

He was beyond the point where he could even differentiate his senses, so he probably just imagined it.

Despite that, even supposing it wasn’t real, he found it extremely comforting.

So—

“—!”

A short scream, and then the carpet of blood welcomed yet another person.

She had fallen right next to him, exactly where his arm was.

Her fair hand dropped powerlessly, and intertwined with his.

—Probably just a coincidence.

He felt her fingers move slightly, as if squeezing his hand.

“…ait”

He forced his disappearing consciousness to return for a moment. The pain and the heat, everything had faded away. It was a meaningless effort, nothing but a loser wasting time.

But even so—

“I will, definitely—”

—Save you.

At that moment, Natsuki Subaru lost his life.

Chapter 7:
An Incomprehensible Reunion

1

“—What’s the matter? Why’d you suddenly space out?”

“Hah—?”

A middle-aged man with stern features called out to him, and he absentmindedly responded as such. This response caused the man’s already creased brow to wrinkle up even further as he scowled.

“I’m asking a question here! Are you going to buy the appa or not?”

“Hah—?”

“The appa! You wanna eat it, right? You came here saying that and then your eyes suddenly went blank which was quite the shock. Anyway, how about it?”

He was very muscular and had a scarred face, but in his palm was a lovely red fruit. He mentally compared the man’s face with the apple-like fruit he was holding out,

“Ah, you see, I’m completely broke.”

“…Seriously, you’re just browsing? Get outta here! I’m running a business here, I don’t have time for window shoppers.”

The man shooed him away and he obediently left.

He—Natsuki Subaru examined his surroundings and,

“Eh? Eh? —What’s going on here?”

In his confusion, all he could do was toss out that question directed at no one in particular.

2

The main street was crowded as usual, except for the occasional passage of a lizard-drawn carriage, the road was filled to the brim with pedestrians.

The sun was still high. The temperature wasn't quite what he'd call hot, but looking at the humanoid wolf walking by—Should he call it a werewolf? Looking at its fur, thoughts such as "Sure must be hot, huh?" floated across his mind. They did, but,

"This ain't the time to be acting like some sightseeing country bumpkin. Umm, what is this?!"

He grabbed his head and twisted his waist. As he performed this full-bodied pose displaying his distress, a number of curious gazes were directed at him.

These gazes felt extremely familiar to him. Just a few hours ago, there were several people staring at him in much the same way—Or rather, in the exact same way.

"Right, several hours ago… It should have been."

As he said this he looked around again, and then up at the sky after which he tilted his head.

The sun was still high. As far as Subaru remembered, the sun had just been setting.

This feeling wasn't unfamiliar to him either.

When he first came to this world, he saw night turn to day. So that much wasn't new, but there was one clear difference this time.

"My wound… Is gone."

He whispered as he rolled up his jersey and confirmed his abdomen's condition.

He had been torn up by what he assumed was a huge blade, spraying blood and viscera all over the place, and yet there were no signs of this having happened to him. Since he had no scars, there were obviously no traces of blood on his jersey either.

In fact, his well-used jersey didn't even have any dust or dirt stains. The convenience store bag in his hand was in good condition, and his pocket still had his phone and wallet. He was back at square one, in every sense.

—It felt like he was going crazy.

"Just being summoned here was already too much for me, what's going on now…"

As far as his missing wound was concerned, he'd already seen what Satella was capable of so he wasn't confused on that front.

However, he'd clearly sustained a fatal wound in the loot house. It was so bad he was sure he had died when he lost consciousness.

If even an injury like that could be healed, it seemed to him that this world's magic could even revive the dead.

"Guess the value of life drops quite a bit then… Wait, who was that back then?"

Realizing that he could see something in his hazy memories. Subaru fervently tried to remember what had happened right before he lost consciousness.

Right, he was dying with his gut split open. There was a woman's voice, he thought.

He'd come across a corpse in the loot house, and then he was attacked by the presumed killer. And as he was on the verge of death—

"That's right, Satella!"

The silver haired girl had ended up entering the loot house to check on him.

Having remembered what he'd done, Subaru was filled with regret. She had clearly warned him not to try anything on his own, that he should immediately call to her if anything happened.

Those words weren't merely out of worry for him. They surely also meant that he should inform her if the situation seemed dangerous.

And yet when it came down to it, Subaru failed to even raise his voice. As a result, not only did he fail to escape himself, even Satella got wrapped up in the tragedy.

As he drowned in his own blood in that darkness, he definitely saw the assailant cut her down.

She collapsed into that sea of blood the same as him, and stopped moving before he did—

"Damn it… Didn't he say he was leaving her to me?!"

He remembered the words Puck said to him right before he disappeared.

Those weren't words spoken lightly. Subaru himself didn't take them seriously enough, and as a result things went exactly the way Puck had feared.

Despite all the warnings, Subaru had completely failed to notice anything and missed his chance.

His present situation was the end result of this.

Tossed out onto the streets totally unaware of what was going on, he didn't even know if they were safe. He was now at a complete loss.

"Am I some kind of moron… No, I'm definitely a moron. I don't have time to hang around sulking. For now, I'd better look for them…"

The two might even be dead—Subaru shook his head to rid himself of this terrible thought.

He was completely useless, with not even a single redeeming feature. He'd even say he was nothing more than a waste that simply converted oxygen into carbon dioxide, and yet he'd survived.

That being the case, he couldn't imagine that that magic using super kind, super helpful, not quite upfront about her feelings and yet so virtuous beauty and that aloof and mysterious oddball of a spirit had died.

Or rather, he didn't want to imagine it.

"Anyway, for now I'll…"

—Head to the loot house, Subaru decided.

Since that was where he'd lost consciousness, he might be able to find some hints there.

Once he put his mind to something he'd immediately start doing it. Here too the speed of his decision-making shined. "I'm not going to school anymore" was usually the sort of decision he was making in his old world, but right now it would prove useful for him to move quickly and without doubt.

However, his determination was—

"Yo, kiddo. Let's have some fun."

Three men blocked his way out of the alley, clearly intending to give him a hard time.

3

"Hey, what's with that dumb look on your face?"

"He probably doesn't understand what's going on here. What say we go ahead and teach him?"

Witnessing his lack of reaction to their threats, the men's lips warped as if sneering at him. To Subaru, this was almost like watching a comedy.

There were three of them. One couldn't say they were well dressed even as flattery, and their poor upbringing and vulgar character were clearly evident on their faces, they were basically walking stereotypes.

Their scars seemed to show their combat experience, and their general disposition was evidently inclined to violence.

Subaru clearly remembered all of this. After all, these guys were,

“You lot… Perhaps you’ve gone and hit your heads somewhere?”

The reason he was able to meet Satella and Puck just a few hours ago.

These guys were basically your typical mobs, but since this was a 3D world he doubted it was reusing characters. So maybe they were different people with the same appearance,

“Could there really be three other guys with the same looks running around playing bandit?”

Maybe if it was just one, but there were three of them. It was absurd to think that they’d even party up the same way. In other words, they had to be the same guys he remembered.

“You’ve hit your heads or… Perhaps this is revenge for your instant defeat? Guess that sort of thing doesn’t change even in another world. You didn’t bring your pals, you want a fair rematch or something?”

In the real world, when you took someone down they’d bring their buddies to exact their revenge. In the end, you’d have to face wave after wave of enemies no matter how many you beat and would ultimately die to an absurdly strong foe, getting a game over. This sort of thing happened very frequently.

Considering the chain of suffering this pattern creates, perhaps these fellows ought to be commended for relying on their own strength instead of calling others.

Either way, he couldn’t help but think they were barking up the wrong tree if they were targeting him.

“Well, I understand you’d want to go for the weak one, so I can’t criticize you for it. But right now isn’t convenient for me, or should I say…”

“What’s this guy talking about? Maybe he’s lost it?”

The men mocked Subaru as he looked for a way to amicably resolve things through discussion.

Naturally, this irritated Subaru. The only reason he was trying to settle things peacefully was because he was in a hurry, in truth he was rather short-tempered under ordinary circumstances.

But even so, considering how serious the situation was, he was prepared to deal with a little scorn, but,

“Alright, kiddo. Hand over everything you’ve got and maybe we’ll let you go.”

“Yeah, sure sure. Everything I’ve got, right? I’m in a hurry, so let’s leave it at that.”

“Now act like a dog! Crawl around on all fours and beg for help.”

“Don’t get carried away, you bastards!”

They started getting too cocky, and Subaru’s patience ran out.

The men were shaken by his sudden burst of rage. As they stood there dumbfounded, Subaru targeted the one in the middle.

He was the man with the knife who had successfully stopped Subaru last time. Naturally, he would probably be just as quick to draw the knife as before. Therefore,

“I’ll start with you! I hate bastards who don’t value life! Die!!”

He put his entire body weight behind his palm as it crashed into the man’s jaw. He then immediately drove his left arm into the man’s undefended torso, slamming him against the wall and knocking him out instantly.

It was the work of an instant and the other men were slow to react, Subaru then knocked one of them down with a leg sweep. He then took advantage of this opening to target the final man, and dove into him.

Having tackled him, Subaru lifted him and threw him against the wall with all his strength. The man groaned at the impact as Subaru finished him off with a kick, but when turned around the man started getting back up.

“Tch… You bastard.”

“Come on, it’s one on one now. I’ve already taken down the guys with the knife and the nata, what are you going to do?”

The adrenaline pumping through Subaru’s veins gave him confidence, this seemed to overwhelm the man and his expression changed. In truth, he was the guy who had been knocked out by Satella in their previous confrontation. He was the only one whose weaponry Subaru wasn’t able to confirm, but judging by that reaction just now he didn’t have anything lethal on him.

“If it’s a fist fight you want, I’m not about to just kneel for you, you know.”

“Don’t screw around, you bastard. Aah! Don’t look down on me, brat!!”

Subaru provoked him by beckoning with his hand, and the man responded by rushing at him with spittle flying out of his mouth.

As the man attempted to grab him, Subaru welcomed his approach with his fist. His aim was true, and his fist sunk into the man’s chest, but the man wildly charged him and forced him against the wall. However,

“Behold!”

Subaru grabbed the man’s wrists and forced him to let go by exerting force even greater than his. Seeing the shock evident in the man’s expression, Subaru’s evil-eyed face warped into a fiendish smile.

“Don’t underestimate me just because I’m a shut-in. I swung a wooden sword every day for no reason and as a result my grip strength is over 70 kilos. I can bench 80 too.”

He had once ruined the atmosphere at a family gathering by crushing an apple with his bare hand, an incident from his dark past. His life as a shut-in consisted of daily training that he never neglected. His strength was such that if he were facing an opponent of similar size, he would only lose under exceptional circumstances.

The man howled as his wrists were crushed, and the moment his grip loosened Subaru's knee flew into him. The impact on his abdomen caused the man to crumple into a < shape. Subaru then quickly got behind him,

"Don't blame me if you die. I've always wanted to try this, an overhead throw onto hard ground!"

He wrapped his arms around the man's waist and violently threw him overhead as he leaned back. It was similar to a suplex in pro wrestling, but he'd maliciously let go midway. The man was helpless as his head collided with the wall, and he went completely still when his body collapsed to the ground.

Confirming the two men were down, Subaru went to the man he took down first, the man with the knife.

The man hadn't taken much damage and though he seemed to be fainting with agony, he suddenly tried to pull his knife on Subaru when he approached. Subaru mercilessly stomped on his face when he tried this, knocking him out instantly.

"Hmph, that was easy! In this world, evil never wins!"

Striking a triumphant pose, Natsuki Subaru celebrated his victory all by himself. He was relieved to know that all his aimless training wasn't a waste. Anyway,

"The situation hasn't changed at all. I got held up a bit, but I'd better hurry to the loot cellar."

Once he'd confirmed that the men weren't dead, Subaru left the alley.

A number of pedestrians seemed rather surprised to see him emerge unharmed, Subaru noticed them gasping as if they'd expected another outcome. Made him want to yell that if they saw what was going on, they should have reported it.

Of course, shy as he was, Subaru couldn’t do anything of the sort and he ended up jogging away from the area.

Chapter 8:
The Taste of Bitter Alcohol

1

Having finished up the revenge match in the alley, Subaru had reached the deepest part of the slums. —He was standing before the imposing loot house. The sun had already declined quite a bit and it was now evening.

“F-Finally found it… That took way too long, damn it.”

Now that he’d finally arrived, he sunk down to the ground as he used his sleeve to wipe the sweat off his forehead.

He had spent almost two hours running around until he finally found the place. He was at least able to confirm the passage of time with the phone in his pocket. Definitely two hours.

“I figured it wouldn’t be that hard since I came here just recently…”

Indeed, being unable to read any sort of signage had proven to be quite the obstacle for him.

The capital had very similar looking streets, and Subaru who was unfamiliar with the area could not even rely on the names of shops or places to guide him.

In the end, he had no choice but to brute force it while referring to his memories.

“I spoke with Satella and Puck in a number of places, so I’ve got a vague recollection of the path as well.”

This was especially true after he’d entered the slums.

Unlike a few hours ago, since someone had thoroughly cleaned his jersey, the reaction he’d received from the slum dwellers was cold and they were extremely uncooperative.

Subaru's social skill wasn't at the level where he could deal with this atmosphere of exclusion, so he ended up struggling alone here too.

As a result, he wanted to commend himself for managing to make it here. He decided to give himself a reward for his hard work.

"I'm finally opening you, corn potage flavor. To begin with, it was because I wanted to eat this that I went to the convenience store. It'd be no exaggeration to say this was the reason I was summoned to this world."

As he made various excuses, Subaru opened the bag.

His nostrils brought him bliss as it gently released a sweet smell. He tossed some onto his tongue with trembling fingers. —Supreme bliss overwhelmed his sense of taste.

"Delicious… Super delicious…! Come to think of it, I hadn't eaten anything. Amazingly delicious."

He shoveled down more and more as he thought back to all that he'd been through.

His stomach had been empty ever since he'd been denied that apple-like fruit. He had been bearing it for about six hours now.

Though he'd distracted his empty stomach, Subaru realized that he couldn't do the same to his mind.

His heart was throbbing violently, its pulse abnormally high. He could feel blood coursing throughout his entire body, this was at an entirely different level from that incident in the alley.

His limbs felt heavy and his mouth was dry for reasons unrelated to his snack. He was repeatedly tormented by a sharp pain as though he had been hit in the head, and this was accompanied by shrill ringing in his ears.

—The answer he had been seeking lay within the loot house.

He instinctively gulped as the scene he didn't want to remember floated across his mind.

A room turned into a sea of blood, an old man missing his arm. His stomach torn up as he lay there on the verge of death, and Satella's limp hand. It was his fault she'd ended up in that situation.

"Don't freak out, don't freak out, don't freak out, damn it. Am I an idiot? … No, I'm definitely an idiot. As if I'd come this far and then head back without looking."

Not like he even had anywhere to head back to.

He resolved himself and faced forward, when he attempted to advance he realized that his knees were shaking.

He couldn't control his trembling lower body. He forcibly stopped the shaking by striking his kneecaps, and then he took a deep breath as he advanced.

Bathed in orange sunlight, it was as if the door to the loot house was rejecting him.

Suppressing such delusions brought about by his nervousness, Subaru reached the door and raised his hand,

"Is anyone in there?"

He thought it was an extremely faint hope, but he still tried knocking lightly.

That unexpectedly dull sound should have reverberated both inside and outside. However, he received no response, only unbearable silence.

Subaru found this silence extremely terrifying, and started banging on the door even though he knew it was hopeless.

"Someone… Someone's in there, right?! Please, respond… Please."

He didn't want to think that they'd died in there.

Denying reality, Subaru pounded the door so hard it began to creak.

Unable to bear his fury, the door slowly started to give in as its old hinges deformed.

"—Shut up!! You don't even know the signal or password, you wanna bust the door down?!"

The door opened with great force, and Subaru who had been leaning on it was sent flying.

Subaru tumbled onto the ground in an unsightly fashion, almost five meters away. He then raised his head, bewildered.

His eyes were wide with surprise, and reflected in them was a red-faced old man glaring at him from the doorway.

He was bald and had a large build.

Perhaps his garments had once been white, but dust and many years of sweat and the like had turned it brown, a very unsanitary sight. Could be the source of the unpleasant smell wafting through the air.

Under his clothes was a very muscular body. Contrary to his aged appearance, he didn't seem frail in the slightest, he clearly had some toughness to him.

In summary, a huge bald old man in exceptional health was standing before him.

"Who're you?! That's not a face I remember, why are you here?! How'd you find out about this place, and how'd you get here?! Who told you?!"

The old man closed the distance between them with amazing speed and grabbed Subaru with his giant hand. As he felt his feet leave the ground, Subaru realized that he'd gotten carried away and returned to reality. What had happened earlier was an exception. He was just a mediocre, banal, commonplace guy at the end of the day.

Even if his strength was such that he would only lose under exceptional circumstances, almost all of his opponents would fall into this category.

As the almost two-meter tall giant hoisted him up, his will to resist was completely gone.

“—Please have this, a sign of my goodwill.”

He turned to the man’s rage-filled face—And tossed a corn potage flavored snack at him.

2

Shortly after that violent meeting that probably gave them both poor first impressions, Subaru was invited into the loot house.

There were some guest chairs by the counter right past the entrance. Sitting in one, Subaru adjusted the position of his behind which was rather uncomfortable.

The seat was splintered which caused Subaru to feel various stinging sensations all over his bottom. If his bowels were at their limit, he would no doubt be discharging right about now..

“Why’re you fidgeting around like that… Your balls chafing or something?”

“That’s hardly the case. Wait, give that back. I didn’t say you could have all of it!”

The old man was stood on the other side of the counter, where one would expect the owner to be.

Compared to his colossal body, the bag he was holding looked so small one might wonder if their sense of perspective had malfunctioned.

“How stingy. You’ll go to hell if you try to keep something this delicious to yourself.”

“And where do you think you’re going, eating others’ stuff like that? Boomers, I swear. Always criticizing others while ignoring their own faults.”

“There you go with those weird words again. This is why you young… Mm, tasty.”

“Stop eating already!”

Subaru leaned forward and extended his arm, somehow managing to snatch the bag out of the old man’s hands. However, most of the bag’s contents were already in his stomach.

Subaru’s shoulders dropped when he saw that there were only a few left.

“Aah… My precious corn potage. I might never be able to taste you again.”

“What, it was that rare? Well, it is true that I’ve never seen anything of the sort. Then how about using duplication magic on the rest?”

“Duplication magic?”

“Magic that turns one of something into two. It can only replicate the appearance of a living organism, but it should be possible to reproduce something like food.”

The man said this as he rubbed his round head, and Subaru realized anew how convenient magic was.

It really can do anything, huh, Subaru thought with admiration as he nonchalantly looked around the interior.

The loot house at dusk—There were no signs of the tragedy Subaru had experienced there.

There were still various items scattered all over the place, easily covering the place’s massive interior.

Perhaps having noticed Subaru’s eyes wandering, the old man’s eyes narrowed.

“What’s the matter, boy? Interested in my goods?”

With these words, he got to the heart of the matter.

The giant old man, who had introduced himself as Rom (he'd said Subaru could call him Old Man Rom). Negotiations with him had become unexpectedly smooth when in response to his rage, Subaru offered him a snack (Seriously, this was actually how it happened).

Once Subaru tossed it into his mouth, he became obsessed with the newfound flavor and immediately put Subaru down safely.

After that, Subaru convinced him that he had come here because there was something he had to do, and that he'd heard about the place from a middle-aged man in the slums, and in the end the two ended up at the counter like so.

On the other side of the counter, Rom used his huge arms to fill a somewhat dirty glass with alcohol, he had a slight smile on his face as he did this.

"Well, those who come here have one of two objectives. They're bringing me stolen goods, or they want said goods—One of those two."

"Certainly, that's part of why I'm here."

"Part, huh. Then you've got some other business too?"

Rom raised an eyebrow at Subaru's conditional agreement. Subaru nodded, and then he hesitantly asked his question, prepared to be mocked for it,

"This is pretty stupid, but… Old man, have you died recently?"

With your neck and right arm chopped up.

He decided not to include those words. As far as he could see, there were no signs of such a thing on his arm or his neck.

As he received Subaru's question and his gaze, Rom's gray-tinged eyes widened for a moment, and then his face suddenly broadened into a smile as if time had just started flowing again.

"Gahahaha, I was wondering what you were going to say. It's true that I'm an old man at death's door, but I'm sorry to say it hasn't happened yet. I don't imagine it's far off at this age, though."

Rom laughed as if he'd heard a terrific joke as he pushed a glass toward Subaru, "want a drink?"

Subaru turned him down with a wave of his hand, the smell of the alcohol irritating his nose, and briefly apologized for what he'd just said.

He'd apologized, but the unease within him continued to grow.

He was talking to Rom right now, but—Subaru had seen his corpse.

Right here, in the darkness, his arm and throat had been ripped apart by a blade, and he'd died an unspeakably gruesome death.

However, as if to deny the sight that had been scorched into his eyes, Rom's huge body was right before him, stuffed into that counter in a manner that seemed somewhat uncomfortable.

Rom's face was red as he emptied his glass, there was clearly blood flowing through him, he was nothing like the pale corpse that had lost a great deal of blood.

Old Man Rom was definitely alive. And the same went for Subaru as well.

Thinking back, Subaru too had sustained a grievous injury. But despite this, he was here with no traces of this having happened.

Subaru was no longer confident in his own perception as he started to wonder if he was merely daydreaming.

"Don't tell me all of that was a dream…? If so, how much was a dream and why am I in this world?"

His complaints briefly let him forget about his uneasiness, but now that he was in a place where he could sit and calm down, they once again plagued him.

The feeling of guilt, the scorching pain of that fatal wound, the warmth from the girl's ever so slight touch, if all of that was supposed to be a dream, then why was he here?

If that were the case, it'd make more sense if everything since his summoning was all a dream.

He found that much easier to accept than the idea that he'd suddenly started dreaming after arriving in another world.

"Old man, have you seen a silver-haired girl around?"

"Silver hair…? No, I can't say I have. I wouldn't forget something that conspicuous. No matter how old I might be getting."

Rom boldly laughed it off, but Subaru's expression clouded over.

Perhaps having perceived Subaru's sincerity from his attitude, Rom suddenly stopped laughing.

"Drink."

Without hesitation, he once again pushed the glass toward Subaru.

He tilted his bottle into the glass, and an amber liquid filled it to the brim. Subaru watched this silently, and Rom once again repeated, "Drink."

"Sorry, but I'm not in the mood. And I'm not so much of a brat that I'd drink to look tough."

"You stupid? Drinking and acting tough is what being a kid's all about. Gulp it down and feel the burn in your belly. Whatever's bothering you won't be able to bear the heat and you'll cough it right up."

"So drink," he said yet again, nudging the glass toward Subaru.

Subaru accepted the glass as if overwhelmed by Rom's stubbornness, and brought the amber liquid to this nose. The thick smell of alcohol assailed his nose and he almost ended up choking which caused his expression to go sour.

But despite this stance of refusal, part of him still wanted to follow through with Rom's advice.

Subaru thought that relying on alcohol was the mark of an uncool adult, but even so,

"Ah… .To hell with it!"

Tilting the glass, he downed it all in one gulp.

He didn't know how strong the stuff was, but immediately after he'd done this he felt as though his body had ignited.

The alcohol seemed to burn its way down his throat, causing him to scream and slam the glass onto the table.

"Pha! Gah! Terrible! Hot! Horrible! Nnaa, this sucks!"

"That's enough already! Guys who don't get the taste of alcohol are fools who miss out on half the fun in life, you know.

As Subaru coughed up the heat welling up inside him, Rom yelled at him and took another swig.

He splendidly overturned the whole bottle and drank right out of it.

Having downed an amount that was well over three times what Subaru drank, he belched crudely and smiled.

"Shtill, yuu hanjled jat well! Doncha feelike yer gunna throwep?"

"…Yeah! Just a little! Old man, let's move on to my other objective."

Turning his face away from the smiling old man, he started wiping the spilled alcohol with his sleeve as he pointed deeper into the interior. Unlike the crap strewn about here, the stuff in there should be valuable.

Rom's expression turned serious. Seeing this, Subaru directly announced his objective. "I'm searching for an insignia with a jewel embedded in it—I want you to give it to me."

His original goal—Aside from confirming Satella's safety, the reason he came here.

The jeweled insignia that had been stolen from Satella. She hadn't told him the reason, but she was willing to confront any danger to retrieve it, that's how important it was to her.

If it had been brought into the slums, it definitely had to be in here, or so he was told.

If the insignia at least existed, Subaru would know for sure he wasn't dreaming.

"An insignia with a jewel embedded in it… Sorry, but there's nothing like that around here."

"…Are you sure? Try to remember, maybe you're going senile?"

"I'm in peak condition when I've got booze in me. If I can't recall it now, I can only say I don't know about it."

As it seemed like Subaru's final hope had been ripped away, Rom smiled meaningfully. "I head there's supposed to be a large haul coming in today—it could very well be this insignia you speak of."

"The one bringing it in… Perhaps a girl named Felt?"

"What, you even know who stole it?"

Rom seemed to think this was anticlimactic, but Subaru couldn't help but strike a triumphant pose. The string of hope he thought for sure had snapped still held strong. He had just confirmed that Felt existed. If the girl who stole the insignia was real, then Satella, from whom it was stolen, should also be real.

"I was wondering if my love for silver-haired heroines was making me see things, it freaked me out…"

"Sorry to rain on your parade, but whether or not you'll be able to buy it once she brings it here is a different matter. A jeweled insignia would have a price befitting it, no?"

“Ha! It’s no use trying to size me up, I’m flat broke!”

“There’s nothing to talk about then!” Perhaps having wanted to start negotiations early, Rom seemed disappointed as he yelled.

However, Subaru waved his finger in response. “Tch, tch, tch. It’s true that I don’t have any money. How-ev-er! In society. money isn’t the only way to obtain goods. There’s also the barter system, right?”

Rom didn’t object. He silently prompted Subaru to continue to which he nodded and reached into his pocket. And what he pulled out was…

“This right here is a magical item that can freeze an object in time, I call it a ‘cell phone’!”

A compact white cell phone. Rom seemed confused since it was his first time seeing something of the sort, but Subaru was already nimbly using it—Immediately after, the dim interior was filled with a white light.

There was the sound of a camera shutter, and the light enveloped Rom who was so shocked he collapsed behind the counter. Subaru couldn’t help but smile at this extreme reaction,

“What was that just now?! You trying to kill me?! Pulling those weird moves, you’re taking me too lightly.”

“Wait, wait. Take a deep breath and calm down, and then look at this.”

Rom’s face was red for reasons besides his inebriation, and in response Subaru showed him the phone’s display.

Rom stepped back, his eyes full of suspicion as he strained to see the phone’s small screen—and then his eyes widened.

Displayed on the screen was Rom’s face, which Subaru had just photographed. He had used the phone’s camera function to do so.

Of course, this technology did not exist in this world.

Just as Subaru predicted, Rom stared at the screen intently and,

“That’s… My face, isn’t it? What’s going on?”

“I told you, didn’t I? That it could freeze things in time. What you see in here is the Rom from just a little while ago.”

As he said this, he turned the camera toward himself and snapped another photo.

He once again showed Rom who seemed to want to see the result, and this time the screen showed Subaru throwing up a peace sign.

“This is basically how it functions. Well, it’s usually used to commemorate important moments and store them, not to fool around like this.”

“I see… Certainly, this is… Hmm…”

With a hand on his jaw, Rom seemed to be pondering something as he looked at the phone.

The bait had been even more effective than Subaru expected, and he felt that he had already succeeded as far as negotiation was concerned.

As if to boost Subaru’s confidence even further, Rom took the phone and examined it closely as he said,

“Meteor?”

Subaru tilted his head at this unfamiliar term. Rom nodded. “They’re devices that allow people who don’t have open gates to use magic. They’re extremely rare, though, even I’ve never seen one before.”

Rom sighed in admiration once he was finished staring at the phone and placed it on the counter.

And then he once more turned to Subaru. “I can’t estimate its value very precisely. I’ve been in this business a long time, but… This is my first time handling a meteor. However… It’s definitely worth more than anything else I’ve ever sold.”

Seeing a meteor for the first time and the potential to use it for trade seemed to have aroused Rom’s interest. He continued with a slightly shaky voice, “Even so,”

“If you put this up for trade, you’d be sustaining a huge loss. I don’t know how much this insignia you’re looking for is worth, but it definitely can’t match this meteor. From a financial perspective, you’d be better off just selling this meteor on its own.”

A shady business in the slums that dealt with stolen goods. Rom’s advice to him was completely unlike what one would expect of the boss of such an establishment.

His proposal was definitely an attractive one.

Subaru was basically worthless in this world.

He couldn’t use magic, and he wasn’t especially powerful. He knew nothing and he couldn’t even read, and on top of all this he was totally broke.

If he were able to sell this phone, it would definitely help him break out of the corner he was backed into. At the very least, he wouldn’t have to worry about money for a while.

The future before him was one where he would have to struggle just to get some food, so it seemed completely obvious what choice he should make here. However,

“Nah, that’s fine. I’m going to trade this meteor for the insignia that Felt girl brings in.”

“Why go so far? Could it be more valuable than this meteor? Or are you saying its value isn’t monetary?”

Subaru’s obstinacy seemed to baffle Rom. As he asked about the insignia’s value, the latter half seemed to contain a hint of ridicule.

That was how it was for someone who lived here. The idea that something could be more important than money, though they could entertain the concept, probably wasn’t one they could easily accept in reality.

Accepting that people had such values, Subaru shook his head,

“To be honest, I haven’t even seen the thing. Even if I were to exchange it for money, I don’t really think it would go for more than this meteor, I’m definitely taking a massive loss here.”

“If you understand that, then why?”

Subaru felt a thrill of excitement as he saw Rom’s eyes widen yet again.

Yes, that was the answer.

Even if he wasn’t sure he’d have anything to eat tomorrow, even if his future seemed completely hopeless, even if he was throwing away a boatload of money, there was meaning to his loss.

“I want to return a favor. I always repay my debts. I couldn’t live with myself if I didn’t. I’m pretty high-strung, being a child of the modern generation and all. —That’s why, no matter how much I’m losing here, I have to get that insignia.”

“Hm… In other words, the insignia didn’t belong to you to begin with?”

“It belongs to a silver-haired girl who saved me. I don’t know why, but it’s really important to her.”

“And where is she now? Not with you?”

“I’m currently looking for her! Or rather, the fact that I was saved by her and even her existence itself may merely be delusion on my part!”

Suddenly clenching his fist, he spoke his earlier worry out loud and laughed it off.

The conditions all connected properly. It was impossible that Satella didn’t actually exist.

He would definitely meet her again once he’d obtained the insignia.

As Subaru strengthened his resolve, Rom watched him with eyes as though he was looking at something extremely strange.

“—You really are an idiot, huh.”

With this, all other feelings were forgotten and all that was left was laughter.

Chapter 9:
Trump Card

1

Negotiations were established, Rom had assured him of that once he'd examined the phone. But…

"I'll only go as far as helping you secure a talk with Felt. From that point onward, it'll be up to you to make the trade."

"I'm basically getting robbed here, you know? You've guaranteed this thing's value too, so I'll definitely succeed."

Rom grimaced at Subaru's carefree attitude, it seemed like he wanted to say something.

It was probably some advice like don't let your guard down, or don't take this lightly.

But since Subaru's face was turning red from the alcohol he drank, perhaps he felt that lecturing him would be wasted effort,

"Well, you're probably right. If you were dealing with someone more malicious, they might look for even more than that meteor… But Felt's personality isn't that warped."

"Riight, buh—Riight, buh—By the way, do you not have anything better around here? This is horrible, like I'm eating scraps."

"You say this as you eat my food? You really are getting shameless."

Before Subaru was a crude plate with something like bean paste on it, he was steadily shoveling it into his mouth while spitting 'buh's,

His earlier distaste toward the alcohol had disappeared. He had Rom fill up his empty glass, steadily sipping alcohol as he ate his bean paste.

"Say, is this really enough for that huge body of yours? It's not like you’re living off air, don’t tell me you’re about to say that you can survive as long as you have booze?”

“Don’t you know how efficient giants are? Despite our awesome strength, we don’t need much sustenance. We were famed across the land during the warring period, you know.”

Rom’s face was stern as he answered Subaru’s tactless question.

He then brought the bottle he had been pouring out of to his mouth, and as he drank,

“Because of this, most of us were wiped out. Even in the capital, I haven’t seen any other giants.”

“Yer strong even without eatin’, sho kewl. … Gunna throw up.”

“I’m saying something sad here and you respond like that?”

He wasn’t about to let someone’s sob story kill his mood.

As Subaru blocked his ears and interrupted the story, Rom gave up on telling it and started eating his beans.

The two of them passed their time silently eating those terrible beans as a side to their alcohol.

Eventually there was a coded knock on the door, by which time the sun had already set for the most part.

Subaru who had been nodding off raised his head, and Rom nimbly approached the door in response to the sound.

The door looked rather small compared to Rom’s giant frame. Rom pressed his ear against it, and started asking questions with a mysterious expression,

“To the giant rats,”

“Poison.”

“To the skeletons,”

"A pitfall."

"To the noble dragon we are,"

"Shitbags."

His short questions received immediate answers.

This was probably the signal and password he'd heard about. Rom seemed satisfied and unlocked the door. As Subaru watched him, he internally remarked that that was a very tacky password. And then,

"—Sorry to keep you waiting, old man. She was more persistent than I expected. Took a while to shake her off."

The girl seemed happy, as if bragging about her achievement, as she passed by Rom to enter the loot house. She had shoulder-length blonde hair. She had red eyes like a rabbit, and she had a mischievous fang sticking out. Her small frame was covered by clothes that seemed easy to move in, and to put it frankly, were completely ragged.

He'd only seen her a moment, but she was definitely the girl he'd encountered in the alley.

Having seen someone familiar, Subaru reflexively stood up. The sound alerted the girl to his presence, and her smile disappeared as her expression changed to one of suspicion.

"Ah? Who's this? Hey, old man, I told you I was bringing in some good stuff, so you should have the place cleared out, didn't I?"

"I understand how you feel, but this kid is here because he has some business with you. And it's not unrelated to what you're doing."

The doubt on Felt's face increased even further at Rom's answer.

It seemed to Subaru that her hand was reaching toward her chest, that was probably where she'd kept it.

As Subaru silently looked at her, Felt turned to Rom with an uneasy expression.

“What’s with this guy? —Don’t tell me you’ve sold me out?”

“As if I’d be that dishonorable. And I think this talk is going to be one you’ll like.”

Closing one eye, Rom seemed to be seeking agreement.

Having experienced a great degree of disgust at the old man's wink, Subaru nodded.

He then carefully chose what he ought to say to Felt who was still being cautious,

"Let's calm down for now. I have no ill intent toward yooouggghhh…"

—And was then overwhelmed by his nausea, pouring it all out.

""Gyaaaah—!!""

The two shrieked when Subaru suddenly vomited.

Subaru himself fell to his knees, a pain that felt as though his stomach was being squeezed causing him to throw up all of its contents.

The amber liquid and the bean paste were mixed together, producing a truly terrible sight.

"What about this am I supposed to like?! This is the worst!"

"I'm the one who's suffering here! That's my food and booze! That stuff was expensive! You know much it cost?!"

"Shut up! Stop screaming! Feels like my head's going to explode! This isn't good, I feel terribuuuaaaaagghhhh…"

""Gyaaaaah—!!""

Subaru's weak will submitted to the second wave, and the pair's screams echoed for quite a while.

—Even after Subaru had finished emptying his stomach, even after the mess he made was cleaned up, even after the stagnant atmosphere he'd produced had been ventilated, until Rom informed him that he was banned from drinking, this uproar continued to echo throughout the slums the entire evening.

—It was approaching nighttime.

2

"—Alright, let's pull ourselves together and get to negotiating!"

Subaru clapped his hands together and said this in an attempt to fix the ruined atmosphere.

They had moved from the counter to a small table deeper into the loot house. The reason being that Felt had absolutely refused to negotiate there, since there were still traces of the earlier incident (The smell and some remnants) around there.

Felt sat on the other side of the table, and emptied the glass of milk Rom had poured for her.

The caution in her red eyes hadn't decreased at all, and there was now a great deal of mistrust and discomfort added on top of that. She was concerned about what had just happened.

"Come on, don't make that face, smile, smile. You're wasting those cute looks, you know?"

"Don't try to flatter me, bro. Besides, I'm only interested in whether or not whatever you have to say can bring me some profit. How about we cut the crap and get right into it?"

Subaru pressed his fingers against his cheeks and acted as friendly as he could, but her reaction was cold and curt.

Even in this world, his communication ability had completely missed the mark. Transcending worlds, dooming him to solitude, his 'Power of Absolute Isolation'

"I thought I'd left everything behind, but I guess that alone stuck with me. Fufufu, it's kinda like karma, don't you think?"

"Hey, Rom. Did you water this down or something? This milk is terrible."

"I offer you things out of the kindness of my heart and you both keep calling them terrible…”

Felt and Rom seemed to be getting along in their own way as they ignored Subaru who was off in his own world.

Subaru cleared his throat and once again garnered their attention. “Alright, let’s start negotiating. Uhh, Felt—you have the insignia, right?”

“…Yeah, I do.”

Subaru cut right to the chase, and Felt’s short answer was upfront as well.

She retrieved something from her bosom and gently placed it on the table.

—The insignia he’d been looking for all this time. It was a badge modeled after a dragon.

In terms of size, it was like those embroidered patches from his old world. He couldn’t quite tell what it was made of, but it looked to him like some precious metal. As far as Subaru knew, the design looked to be that of a winged dragon viewed from the front, and its core—The dragon’s mouth held a red jewel within it.

The red jewel within the insignia had a faint glow to it. This light caused Subaru to fall silent despite himself.

Rom silently appraised the jewel, hmming now and then like he was having a hard time.

“Come on—”

The one who broke the silence was Felt, who was holding the insignia.

Once she was sure her introduction had brought them back to their senses, she pushed the insignia toward Subaru.

“Show me what you’ve got. If you have something that can match this insignia’s craftsmanship and the effort I exerted to obtain it, we'll both be happy, yeah?"

"I see you're trying to size me up with that evil smile, but too bad, I only have one card to play. Because you see, I'm absolutely broke!"

The same old displeased reaction everyone had upon hearing he was broke, he thought.

Setting aside his feelings on the matter, he used his trump card just as he'd declared.

He placed his phone on the table as if slamming it down, and just as he predicted Felt seemed to be confused.

This reaction was the same as Rom's was back then which gave him confidence as he used the phone's camera.

"Natsuki Flash!!"

"Woah, bright!"

With the flash and the mechanical sound of the shutter, he had taken a photo.

Felt's face looked as though she wanted to complain about his lack of manners, but he thrust the phone's screen before her before she could open her mouth.

Her red eyes went wide when she saw herself on the screen.

"This is…"

"Yep, it's good ol' Felt! This is a meteor that freezes time and stores it as a picture. This is the only card I can play. I'd like to trade it for that insignia."

He played his trump card right away, and the momentum shifted in his favor.

What he'd just pulled was a standard tactic in negotiations. A powerful tactic that, depending on the situation, could seal the deal on its own.

Naturally, this was essentially the same as announcing that you had no stronger cards to play, and in truth Subaru and his big mouth had already fouled it up, but,

“I see, that’s incredible. So, Rom, how much would this meteor go for?”

Felt nodded as she looked at the screen, and her response was outrageously candid.

Her eyes didn’t sparkle, nor did she want to hold it. She was only interested in its value, not its functions.

“Only men can understand a man’s romance even in a parallel world?! Is that how it is?!”

“Quit making such a fuss, it’s shameful. You probably have the confidence to sit still for a bit. Alright then, how about it, Rom?”

Perhaps her attitude ought to be called vulgar, or maybe manly, but her composure seemed unshakeable.

She looked to be about two or three years younger than him, and yet he almost ended up thinking of her as the older sister type.

Setting aside Subaru who was anything but manly, Felt asked Rom who was standing next to her about the phone’s value.

She slid her finger down the phone’s side as if she were barely interested in it at all,

“As far as I’m considered, if this meteor thing is worth more than this insignia, that’s great. I’m sure you can tell me whether it is.”

“Well, I can’t really say how much it would sell for. This is my first time handling a meteor too. However, I don’t think even an insignia of this quality can match up to it—In short, I think you have a lot to gain by making this trade.”

“I see, I see. That’s pretty great then, isn’t it?”

Felt seemed rather pleased now that she’d received Rom’s seal of approval.

Her reaction was a little different from what he'd expected, but it looked like he'd achieved his goal regardless, so Subaru was delighted as well.

However, when Subaru reached out to take the insignia, Felt stopped him.

"We've shown each other our trump cards. But I'm not quite done overcharging just yet, you know?"

"…It's not exactly praiseworthy for you yourself to announce that. But it's pointless to try haggling any further. As I said, I'm completely broke."

"I'm not that cruel either. And even Rom said that this thing would be worth more than this insignia, so I recognize that much. —But it'd be a lie to say you're out of cards to play."

Felt stood up and looked down at Subaru who was still sat in his chair.

Her red eyes were overflowing with sadism, Subaru broke out in a cold sweat as her gaze seemed to see right through him.

As far as this negotiation was concerned, he'd already played what should have been his trump card, his cell phone.

However, Subaru still had a number of items on him that didn't exist in this world.

The coins and various membership cards in his wallet could probably be exchanged for some amount of money. If it came down to it, it wouldn't be unthinkable to even trade away his jersey and sneakers, technical assistance in a sense.

The phone was his most valuable asset, but he did have some other items he hadn't yet shown them.

But these could be used to help support his life later on, so he really didn't want to spend them here if possible.

—But if the cell phone wasn't enough, he would have to use them.

"Relax, I told you, didn't I? That I wouldn't try to rip you off any further. I'll be satisfied so long as I can make some money off this thing."

"I-I-I-I'm? Not Really? Worried or anything? Or rather, I don't really know what you're talking about. I-I-I-I've already done all I can? I don't see what I have to be nervous aboooouuugggh"

"Quit psyching yourself out like that! Don't throw up! I'll call things off!"

The pressure he himself was putting on himself caused him to vomit, but he managed to stop it in his mouth and sent it back into his belly.

Subaru struck a victorious pose as he gulped it down, causing Felt to look disgusted from the bottom of her heart as she drew back,

"It's fine since none of it came out, but—If you hadn't brought this meteor, I'd definitely kick you out for that."

"Although I'd have already finished him off before then."

Gahahaha, the two laughed in a very manly fashion.

As Subaru endured the burning in his throat from his gastric juices, he addressed them,

"So, what exactly do you mean when you say you're not done overcharging?"

"Hm? Ah, it's simple. You're not the only one I'm negotiating with."

Subaru looked doubtful, and as if to respond to that doubt, Felt raised her finger,

"To begin with, I only pilfered this insignia because I was asked to. They said they'd pay me ten holy gold coins for it."

"You had a prior contract?! I'm not sure how much ten gold coins are worth, but…”

He glanced at Rom, and Rom nodded as if he’d guessed what Subaru was thinking.

“I might be able to get four or five gold coins for it. It’s possible I’d have to drop to three.”

“So basically they’re paying at least twice its worth?”

“No, didn’t you hear her say holy gold coins? Unlike typical gold coins, they’re made of holy gold which is rarer, so I’d say they’re paying about 20 gold coins’ worth.”

“Four times, then?!”

“What are you so surprised about? That meteor you’ve got wouldn’t sell for any less than twenty holy gold coins. Depending on the situation, there might even be enthusiasts willing to pay a lot more. There’s no comparison.”

He didn’t really understand how things were valued in this world, but apparently there was something even higher than gold coins, and his phone was worth twenty of those which surprised him.

His phone with less than ten contacts in it was starting to look like some sacred treasure to him.

And since he didn’t use it very much, it looked good too. Thank goodness he didn’t have any friends.

“How about you quit consoling yourself for a moment, if this thing sells for more, then I’ll just turn down my client.”

“You’ve been talking about overcharging, though.”

Felt’s cheeky expression changed into an even more mischievous smile.

“You’ve put up an absurdly expensive item. If they want the insignia, they’ll have to at least match its value, no?”

“…So basically, you’re hoping they’ll bring out more than twenty holy gold coins?”

“And you’ll have to show me what else you’ve got if you want to compete.”

Felt’s expression was mischievous, or rather, pure evil as she cheerfully declared this.

Subaru now felt that the situation was starting to look rather ominous,

“So, when and where are you planning to meet this person? Could I join your discussion?”

“Of course. If you were to be put at a disadvantage, I might end up losing out on some profit after all. And you don’t have to worry about the location—Right here.”

She tapped the table with her finger, and then leaned back into her chair and looked up at Rom.

With her inverted gaze on him, Rom seemed terribly annoyed,

“Yet again you haven’t even bothered to get my permission before…”

“After all, if I have you, almost anyone would be too scared to try using violence. They’d lose their will just looking at you.”

As Felt looked to him for agreement, Subaru too took at a glance at Rom and agreed with her.

A bald old man who was nearly two meters tall and heavily muscled. And he’d easily picked Subaru up with one hand even though he weighed almost seventy kilos, so those muscles probably weren’t just for show.

Subaru concluded that if things got violent, it’d probably barely even be a fight.

On the other hand, Rom didn’t seem very bothered by their impressions of him.

“No helping it. Can’t you do anything without me? Seriously, it’s sad. Want another glass of milk? I’ve got a few sweets too if you want.”

It kind of felt like he was a senile old man doting on his granddaughter.

Rom seemed to be in a good mood as he filled Felt’s glass. As Subaru watched her, he sighed in exasperation, “However,”

“The fact that you’d already called them here must mean you were already planning to hassle them about the price even if I weren’t here, right?”

“That’s right. Do you have any idea how hard it was to get this? And if little ol’ me tried to face them alone, what if they tried to avoid paying? Wouldn’t it be sad?”

“Little ol’ you, huh…”

If one judged by her small and slender frame, she definitely wasn’t wrong.

But considering her indomitable spirit and brashness, he felt it wasn’t right to describe her that way.

Thinking back, there was even once a time when she’d left him in the jaws of death while in the process of stealing the insignia.

Just what part of her is frail, he thought as this memory started to anger him.

“Hold on, do you not remember me at all?”

“? Have we met somewhere? I’m a busy girl, so I don’t really remember people who haven’t left strong impressions. To begin with, you look super plain.”

“Only your hair color and clothes stand out” she cackled.

She didn't seem to be lying, and she'd even dissed his appearance which left Subaru stunned.

Perhaps the concept of empathy had completely died out in this world, considering she'd casually forgotten that she'd seen a murder in progress.

But on the other hand, there was Satella who had saved him when she had everything to lose, and Rom who let him stay even after he'd vomited all over the place, so he just didn't know.

It seemed that there were all sorts of people even in another world. It wouldn't do to only look at the negatives.

"Well, let's aside your poor memory for now. When is this person supposed to be coming?"

"That's a pretty irritating way to put it. I said I'd probably have it by sundown, so they said they'd come here after that… The sun's gone down, so it shouldn't be long."

This "They're coming, right?" sort of conversation may have set off a flag.

The sound of two sharp knocks on the door suddenly filled the loot house.

The three looked at each other, and then Rom asked Felt, "The password?"

"Ah, didn't tell 'em. Probably mine, I'll go see."

Felt stood up as if leaping and headed to the entrance.

As he watched Felt treat the place like it belonged to her, Subaru shrugged at Rom as if to ask, "Is this really okay?"

"Well, it's not like we don't know each other. We've known each other a long time… I don't mind playing bodyguard for her."

He seemed to be in high spirits, like a grandpa who was happy to be relied on, as he retrieved a club from deeper within.

It’s length was around what you’d see in kendo swords, and it looked like it was made of wood. However, it had several sharp bits sticking out of it, and it was obvious at a glance that a single hit could be lethal.

It was standard in many RPGs to be given 50 gold and a wooden stick to start with.

Sure looks like you’d expect, huh, Subaru thought as he evaluated Rom’s equipment from the side, at which point Felt came back with a strangely cordial smile.

“It was for me after all. Over here, wanna sit down?”

She gestured to Subaru to get out of the way, her hospitality being directed at the one behind her.

Subaru was a little surprised as he covertly examined this person, he was somewhat tense as he wondered if they were the one he’d be negotiating with.

Because the person Felt had invited in was a beautiful woman.

She was rather tall, around the same height as Subaru, and she appeared to be in her early twenties.

Her eyes angled downward toward the edges and she had a calm atmosphere to her. Her unusually pale skin clearly stood out even in that gloomy interior.

She was wearing a black cloak, but she’d left the front open so one could easily see her tight black outfit underneath it. Slender as she was, she had curves in all the right places.

And just like Subaru, she had black hair which seemed to be unusual in this world. Her long hair that went down to her waist was tied up as if braided, and she was currently fiddling with the end of it.

She had a rather bewitching aura.

Since Subaru had very little experience with the opposite sex, he wasn’t at all used to dealing with someone like her and his heart started pounding.

Mentally overwhelmed, Subaru ended up ceding his seat to Felt.

Felt sat down in the now empty chair, with the club-wielding Rom to her left and Subaru who couldn’t hide his nervousness to her right.

This was quite the welcome she was receiving, but the woman didn’t seem particularly bothered, merely tilting her head slightly.

“It seems to me we have some outsiders here.”

“It’d be a problem if you tried to skip out on paying, call it the wisdom of the weak. Hey, Subaru, some drinks.”

Felt ordered him around with a wave of her hand, and Subaru couldn’t bring himself to object as he obeyed.

He picked some relatively clean glasses, filled them with milk, and then placed them before the two.

The woman whispered a thank you to Subaru as he did this, and then gazed at him as if appraising him.

“I understand why the old man’s here, but what of this young man?”

She’d probably realized from his behavior that he wasn’t used to being there.

The woman was genuinely doubtful, and Felt responded with a mischievous smile as if to get right down to business.

“This guy’s your rival, another person I’ve been negotiating with.”

And just as she declared, her price gouging had begun.

Chapter 10:
The Consequence for Loose Lips

“I see, I understand what’s going on here.”

Tilting her glass of milk, the woman licked the remnants off her lip.

She’d introduced herself as Elsa, and her every movement was sensual, even as Felt was explaining things she’d cast some flirtatious glances Subaru’s way which caused his heart to pound.

“You’ve got a fine personality, I don’t dislike it. —So, how much is the young man over there offering?”

Ten holy gold coins, that was how much she had offered.

If Subaru was to compete with her, it was only natural to assume he’d put up more.

Subaru decided that he shouldn’t just sit and watch, so he once again used his phone to take a photo. The flash filled the room and Elsa’s appearance was displayed on the screen.

His actions caused her to frown a bit, but beyond this Elsa had no reaction.

He showed her the screen,

“What I’m offering is this meteor. It’s likely so rare it’s the only one of its kind. According to the muscly old man over there, it definitely wouldn’t go for less than twenty holy gold coins.”

“Meteor…”

She looked at the version of herself shown on the screen, and nodded in understanding.

Subaru was going for an exchange of items, and he wasn’t bluffing was probably the impression she had.

She extracted a small leather pouch from her bosom—That was most likely where she kept the holy gold coins she was supposed to pay with.

She set it down on the table. The sound of the coins clanging around gave the impression that its contents were rather heavy.

Felt’s eyes pupils like a cat’s, and Rom rebuked her for this. As Subaru waited for her next move, she linked her fair fingers atop the table.

“The truth is I was given a little extra by my employer. So that if you were hesitant, I could consider raising my offer.”

“Employer… Meaning, just like Felt you were ordered to obtain the insignia too?”

“That’s how it is. The one who desires it is my employer… Could you perhaps be in the same business?”

Elsa seemed to hold some doubt toward Subaru, who intended to trade a meteor for the insignia.

Even though she asked him this, he didn’t really understand her profession in the first place.

Since she was ordered to get something for her employer, maybe she was something like a delivery girl? Regardless,

“Being in the same business as me would mean being unemployed.”

“Well, this jobless guy just outbid you by quite the margin. So, just how much did your master send you with?”

Felt addressed Elsa provocatively and in response she silently opened up her pouch.

As she overturned it, holy gold coins that glittered a dazzling silver poured out.

The overlapping sounds of metal falling caused Felt’s eyes to shine, and even Rom ended up making some noise.

By contrast, Subaru was instead focused on counting how many there were rather than their shininess.

If he wasn’t wrong—

“Twenty, exactly.”

“This is all my employer gave me. They were certain that this would be enough, but… Does it not quite suffice?”

Her question was directed behind Felt, toward Rom.

Rom counted the coins, and then looked down at Subaru's uneasy expression and smiled.

"You don't have to be such a baby about it. It's not very manly… Twenty certainly is quite the sum, but didn't I tell you yours was worth at least that?"

His large, rugged hands violently ruffled Subaru's hair.

Subaru was still somewhat drunk, so being shaken like this caused him to feel absolutely horrible, but,

"It looks to me like Subaru has the advantage here. Sorry about your master, but you'd better take your coins back."

That horrible feeling changed into absolute ecstasy when Rom said this as he pushed her coins back to her.

Felt threw her hands up without objection, and Elsa didn't seem particularly disappointed as she shrugged. Subaru suddenly shot up into a pose of triumph, a reaction that seemed out of place.

"What?! It's fine, isn't it?! I was happy! In a certain sense, I've finally achieved my original goal! A little celebration is warranted, right?!"

"It's not like anybody's even saying anything, you're getting too worked up. I'm happy so long as I make a bit of profit."

"And I don't imagine my employer will mind too much if I return without the insignia, so I haven't much reason to persist."

As Felt teased Subaru whose face had gone red, Elsa seemed rather unconcerned as she stood up.

It's not like he was hoping to hear her lament her loss or anything, but the fact that she didn't seem to care at all about failing did nag at him.

"Ah, sorry, Elsa. They might be mad at you, huh?"

“There’s no helping it. It’s not as if the fault was mine, they simply tried to get away with paying too little.”

“For twenty holy gold coins to be too little, that’s pretty tough.”

“Anyway, hasn’t my luck been crazy good?! Could it finally be my time?!”

Unlike the men who were sympathizing with Elsa, Felt’s attitude seemed as though she was completely unable to read the mood.

At any rate, it looked like he’d finally completed the trade that was giving him so much trouble.

Meaning that he was another step closer to his hope of repaying Satella, who had saved him when he first came to this world.

Technically speaking, he should probably tell Satella about Felt who had stolen her insignia, or Elsa who had ordered it, but in the end the only damages were Satella’s emotional state and Subaru’s phone.

He’d only spoken to them briefly, but Subaru didn’t have the heart to have them tossed in cells.

Surely this was the limit of opportunism.

“Well now, this didn’t exactly end well for me, but I’ll be taking my leave now.”

They all looked at her as she stood up.

Finishing up the last bit of milk, she once again erotically licked the rest off her lip, and then she turned to Subaru as if she’d just remembered something.

It felt as if her deep black gaze was wrapping around his heart, binding it.

“—Incidentally, what exactly do you intend to do with that insignia?”

Her tone seemed somewhat low and cold as she asked this.

The sweet sound of her voice on his eardrums was persuasive, as if forbidding him from lying.

“…Ah, I’m returning it to its owner.”

As soon as the words left his mouth, Subaru realized his mistake.

He’d just announced that he’d be returning the stolen item to the person it was stolen from, and he’d done so in front of the girl who stole it and the woman who ordered it.

That was no different from declaring he was an enemy,

“—So you’re involved too.”

—And it was more than enough to make him the target of Elsa’s cold killing intent.

“U—?!”

He suddenly felt an impact to his side.

The force on his waist caused him to fall to the side, and he couldn’t do anything to brace himself as he hit the ground in an unsightly fashion.

Pain and a collision, his vision spun until he hit the ground, after which he raised his head to see Felt seemingly clinging to him.

“What the—”

“Are you a moron?! Run away, you wanna die?!”

—Hell are you doing, he tried to shout, but it was drowned out by Felt’s angry yelling.

Subaru’s surprise was evident on his face, from his low vantage point he could see Elsa who was still standing, looking his way.

“Ah, I missed.”

She said, tilting her head in curiosity.

In her hand was a weapon that didn’t quite fit her, one that had a dull gleam.

-A Kukri knife, as far as Subaru knew, that was what you called such a knife.

A knife about thirty centimeters long, with its body bent into a < shape, a member of a class of knives commonly known as Uchizori. He’d heard that the weight of the tip was such that it would tear a victim apart like an axe.

Even having brandished her knife, her smile hadn’t changed.

Judging by her stance, she had just swung that blade. If that was the case, Felt had saved him by jumping into him since he was in its path.

His fate was decided in an instant, moreover he hadn’t even realized what was happening, confronted by this fact, the fear set in far too late.

His warning bells were going off, and his heart was like an alarm as it pumped blood. The heartbeats he was hearing almost made it seem like his whole body was a heart, and he couldn’t stop the trembling in the arm that was supporting his body.

Despite his pathetic behavior, the situation continued.

“Uoooohhh—!!”

Rom charged Elsa with a roar.

He was wielding the club he hadn’t let go of even during the negotiations, and was now trying to smash Elsa’s skull with it.

The speed at which he swung it down was extraordinary.

It surely weighed at least ten kilos, and yet he was swinging it like it was a twig, a feat that was a testament to the giants’ strength.

The club slammed into the ground, and the impact felt as though the whole building was shaking.

The shattered floor's wood and the stolen goods scattered around were sent flying by this. As Subaru lay on the ground, a battle transcending common sense took place before him.

"This is my first deathmatch with a giant."

"Keep talking, girl. —I'll smash you to pieces and feed you to giant rats!"

The club he was swinging to the side certainly had the destructive power he was talking about.

Its speed and power were such that any ordinary defense would be ripped apart like paper.

There wasn't much room to move around, and if one were cornered by these blows they would be finished.

But on the other side, Elsa's skill was also at a transcendent level.

Still holding her kukri knife with one hand, Elsa's silhouette seemed to slip right past his maelstrom of attacks.

She advanced even as he unleashed attacks that would surely be lethal if they landed, dodging them by a hair. She was practically toying with him as she dodged around.

Subaru's instincts told him this was bad.

This is really bad, something within him desperately echoed like an alarm.

"Not good…"

"It's okay. Rom couldn't possibly lose! I've never in my life seen him lose, not even once!"

Subaru could only murmur with his lips shaking, and Felt responded with a shout showing her trust, as if trying to convince herself.

Her words showed trust that had built up over many years, trust that couldn’t be broken so easily.

Even as they joked around with each other the two clearly respected one another, a relationship borne of the long time they’d spent together.

But unlike Felt, Subaru wasn’t optimistic in the slightest.

This wasn’t one of the tussles she’d seen until now, this was a deathmatch.

“Eat this!”

Before his worries could take shape, there was a change in the battle before them.

Rom had kicked up a table as he roared. That was where they had been conducting their negotiations, its wood shattered into pieces, the fragments completely covering Elsa.

It was a curtain of splintered wood.

Aiming at her, Rom swung his club with all his strength.

He was swinging with such force that even a car would most likely end up smashed. However,

“—Old man!”

A sorrowful scream left Felt’s throat.

And then Subaru saw the result.

Rom’s right arm had been blown away, club still in hand, and was now spinning around.

His huge and burly arm had been ripped from his shoulder and flew through the air, spraying blood everywhere as it slammed into the wall.

The rain of blood that filled the room covered Felt and Subaru from head to toe. But they hadn’t the leeway to turn their attention to this fresh blood.

“I’ll at least take you down with—”

With his right arm gone, Rom’s shoulder was spraying blood like a hose.

He sprang forward with his huge body, making no attempt to reduce the bleeding as he aimed at Elsa with his other arm.

The wood fragments from the table had fallen to the ground, and there stood Elsa still holding the position of her swing.

Before she could turn her knife back around, Rom’s giant body would crush her.

But his fleeting last stand,

“I forgot to say this earlier—Thanks for the milk.”

Was stopped by the broken glass she’d brandished in her other hand.

Chapter 11:
A Struggle too Late

There were drops of blood running down the glass's sharp shards, and following them upward one would find Rom's throat.

He had lost his arm and his throat was ripped apart which caused a large amount of foamy blood to pour out of his mouth, after which the light left his gray eyes as he collapsed to the ground.

His twitching body had already lost its vitality, and there was no doubt that it no longer held life.

Elsa elegantly bowed to his fallen body as if to pay her respects.

She placed the glass she'd used to kill him down by his still twitching body,

"I'm returning this. I no longer have a need for it, you see."

She said cruelly as she twirled the kukri knife in her hand.

Cleaning the blood off the blade, she once again pointed it toward the other two.

Subaru, who was still on the ground, could not even say anything.

He was entirely focused on the brutal slaughter that had just occurred before him.

Someone he had been conversing with just a few minutes ago was now dead. And it wasn't due to an accident or illness, it was due to another person's malice.

"—Ah, so you're the braver one."

Subaru, who was still frozen, raised his head when he heard her voice filled with admiration.

His limbs would not obey him. As he lay there in that stupefied state, he saw Felt stand up before him, striking her trembling knees as if to encourage herself.

She straightened her legs and combed hair blood-soaked hair back.

“How dare you…”

Subaru couldn’t see her expression since he was behind her.

However, it was clear that her strained voice filled with hatred was not a tearful one.

“If you resist unnecessarily, you might end up getting hurt.”

“You’re going to kill me either way, you damned sadist!”

“I might not cut you properly if you move. I’m not very good with blades, you see.”

She skillfully turned the knife in her hand, and acted out a rehearsal of her cutting ability.

Felt was facing her with no weapons whatsoever, her chances of victory seemed non-existent.

He should raise his voice, his brain decided.

He should attract Elsa’s attention and buy Felt time to escape.

He at least had to give her time to call someone, or even just escape on her own.

Analyzing the difference in their ability with his minimal experience, this was the conclusion he had drawn.

Despite this, his throat produced no sound, as if it was frozen.

His will to fight did not reach his limbs, they merely continued to tremble with fear..

“…Sorry for getting you caught up in this.”

“…I, I’m”

She whispered a small apology to Subaru.

These words caused his face to jolt up toward her, and he completely forgot about his plan to shout and instead all that left his mouth were words that seemed to be begging for forgiveness.

And then, Felt left his sentiments behind forever as she dashed forward.

There was a loud sound as her body flew forward, seeming light as a feather.

The instant after she moved, it was as if a gale was blowing through the loot house.

It looked to Subaru like she had completely disappeared when she started running.

Having disappeared from his field of view, she then reappeared right next to Elsa, whose eyes were wide at this extreme speed as Felt's slender leg sunk into her side.

Having landed her attack, Felt stepped back as if leaping, and once again drew in wind as she moved at top speed.

In that limited space she was even treating the walls as solid ground, her movements were simply amazing and even Elsa couldn't help but be surprised.

"The divine protection of wind. Ah, how wonderful. It seems you're loved by the world,—I'm envious."

Elsa's ecstatic smile suddenly changed, her eyes filled with loathing as her arm whizzed through the air.

That was all it took,

"—Ah"

—For Felt to be cut right through from her shoulder while still in the air, she then helplessly fell and tumbled across the ground.

The wound extended from her left shoulder to the right of her chest, its depth was such that even her organs were cut right through her bones.

Her body had fallen facing upward and blood spurted out of her like a fountain in accordance with her pulse, it seemed like the pain and the shock of being sliced into had already caused her to lose consciousness. Her movements had completely stopped.

The blood pouring out of her lost its vigor within a few seconds, silently signaling that her life was at an end.

His body wouldn't move.

He wanted to go to Felt's side and stop her bleeding.

If one said it was already far too late for that, he at least wanted to close her eyes.

But his body refused to do even this, it had basically become a doll that could only circulate blood and pain.

"The old man and the girl have both fallen, and yet you still haven't moved. Maybe you've given up?"

Her voice was somewhat pitying, and she seemed bored as she looked at Subaru who was still stock still.

It would all be over if she just got a little closer and swung that knife. It was probably because she realized this that she was so casual, it even looked like she might have been stifling a yawn.

Her attitude caused an unbearable rage to surge within Subaru.

They were people he'd only just met, it had barely even been an hour.

But even so, he had conversed with them and they had opened up to each other. She had killed them like it was nothing and showed no remorse whatsoever, to Subaru this was unforgivable.

And most of all, he couldn't forgive himself for letting them die by this wretched woman's hand while he watched.

This belated rage was what finally caused his limbs to move.

He pressed his trembling limbs against the ground and somehow managed to get up in a rather animalistic fashion. Was his body shaking due to rage or fear? Maybe it was both?

"Ah, you've finally stood up. You're late, and rather dull, but not bad."

He faced Elsa who had her kukri knife at the ready and charged her with everything he had.

He would throw himself at her and beat her down with strength surpassing his limits.

But his charge,

"That's no good at all."

Was immediately stopped by Elsa's elbow which slammed right into his nose, seemingly crushing it.

She spun her body and struck him with her elbow with minimal movement, and as he recoiled she followed it up by drawing an arc right into his body with her long legs, easily sending him flying.

Subaru crashed into a shelf of ceramics and fell to the ground as the fragments scattered.

In that instantaneous exchange, his nose and front teeth had been ruined. And the side that took Elsa's kick was in extraordinary pain, he felt like he'd lost some ribs there.

Despite this, he slammed his fist into the ground and stood up immediately. The endorphins flowing throughout his body dulled the horrible pain which was at a level he'd never experienced before.

His breath wild in this excited state, he once more launched a suicidal attack without thinking—And he was countered yet again.

His wild swings did not reach her, she smoothly shattered his shoulder with the back of her blade.

And then, as if his shrieks were an annoyance to her, she landed a kick directly into his jaw, forcefully shutting him up and causing his broken front teeth to fall out. She looked down at his collapsed body.

"Simply pathetic. You're evidently a novice and your moments are unrefined. You possess neither divine protection nor skill, and you weren't even able to think up any sort of strategy. Why even bother trying?"

"Shut up… I've got my stubbornness too… After you've gone and done all this."

Subaru couldn't even properly yell at her because of his broken nose.

He had lost his arm to that counter just now, everything below his left shoulder had gone limp. He couldn't feel the pain, but the ringing in his ears was horrible. His nausea had returned, and it seemed to pour out of his mouth with his rage as he staggered around, barely standing up.

He was riddled with wounds. His chances of victory were zero, and it was exceptionally unlikely that he'd even be able to land a hit.

The sight of him standing up even though the situation was utterly hopeless caused Elsa to sigh,

"I'll admit you've got outstanding spirit. If you'd drawn it out earlier, perhaps things could have ended differently for these two."

Elsa used her knife to indicate the two she had cut down.

His eyes followed the movement of the knife's tip to land on the corpses, and a sudden discomfort caused Subaru to frown.

For some reason, this scene felt familiar to him.

The loot house that had been turned into a sea of blood. A giant who had lost an arm and had his throat torn apart. And within that dim room, the dull gleam of a brownish blade—

A thought suddenly shot through the back of his mind—

“Let’s end this. I’ll be sending you to the angels.”

Elsa licked her red lips and disappeared into the darkness with an alluring smile.

Subaru groaned as he lost sight of the threat, it seemed like she had simply vanished into the shadows.

“Wh-Where…?!”

Subaru restlessly looked around, his sensitivity to every little sound or sign greatly heightened.

His pathetic behavior truly seemed like that of a weakling waiting to be hunted by a predator. From Elsa’s perspective this was probably terribly boring, it was like he was just laid out on a cutting board.

Consequently, when she appeared from the shadows her slash was exceedingly straightforward.

“Wha—?!”

Having judged that she’d target his stomach, Subaru barely managed to dodge.

He stepped back a bit, drawing in his abdomen as he did, due to which the horizontal swing merely grazed him. The slight cut caused a sharp pain to run through him which he bore by clenching his teeth.

“Rrrruuuaaahhh!!”

He then spun his whole body, landing a spinning kick right into Elsa’s face.

A satisfying blow delivered by twisting his waist, the tremendous impact on his foot confirmed that he managed to land a hit, the feeling rushed through his heart. And then,

“Aah, I really felt that one.”

The second kukri knife Elsa had drawn had just torn about 70% of the way through Subaru’s torso, causing blood and guts to spill out,

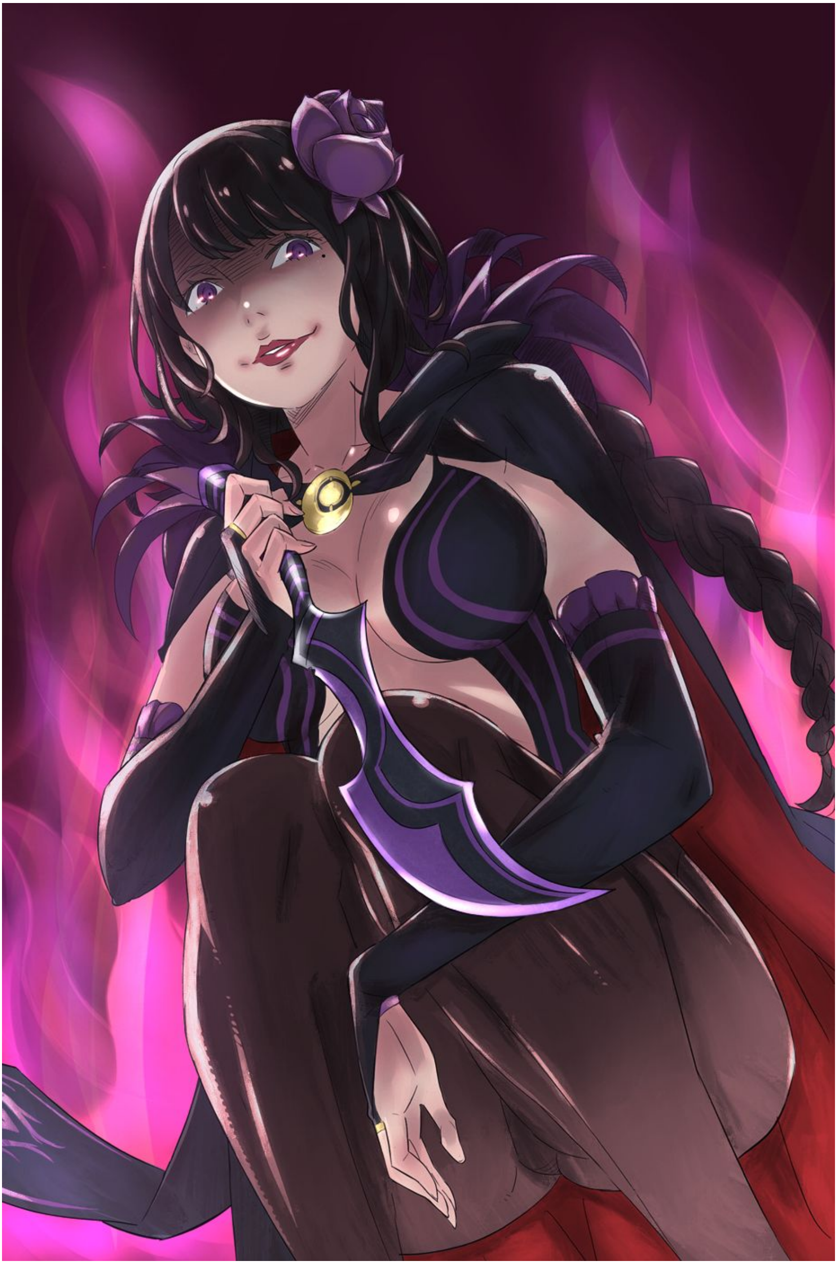
“—Ah?”

One step, two steps, he staggered around until his shoulder hit the wall, causing him to collapse as if he’d slipped. Looking down, he could see copious amounts of blood pouring out of his abdomen, and unable to handle the pressure, his internal organs had also started falling out.

He tried to place them back in with his shaky arm, but the clotting blood prevented him from doing so.

“Are you surprised? I split your stomach when we passed by one another. This happens to be my specialty.”

Elsa said as she smiled, forming small splashes in the sea of blood as she walked toward him.



Once she reached Subaru's side, who was by this point incapable of even speaking as he shrieked, she lovingly looked upon his entrails within his darkened blood,

"Aah, your bowels truly do have such a lovely color, just as I thought."

This woman was abnormal. She was insane.

Even the endorphins flowing through him couldn't hide the terrible pain that was causing his vision to dim, and before he knew it seemed like he had ended up on his side.

Like this, he slowly extended his arm, frailly grasping Elsa's foot.

"Au… Uah"

"Does it hurt? Are you suffering? Is it hard? Are you sad? Wanna die?"

With his hand still on her ankle, Elsa crouched down by him, her line of sight intersecting with his.

Her eyes looked like she was in a trance, it was as though she didn't feel anything at all when she took a life. No, she was definitely feeling something.

The ultimate pleasure.

"But it'd be a shame to make it too easy."

Still crouching next to him, she smiled sweetly as she swung her blade.

And that was the last thing Subaru saw.

Her slash was vivid, and it cut right across Subaru's face. The result,

"—GGaaaaaahhh?!"

Both of his eyes had been torn apart, he had forever lost his sight.

Still collapsed on the ground, Subaru used his hands to feel his deeply cut eyes.

There was a mixture of blood and tears, and he once again vomited blood as he screamed, and he was assailed by the feeling that his insides were completely empty, as if all of his blood and organs had spilled out.

It was strange that he was even alive. It was like he had entered hell.

And he couldn't even look at himself, he simply lay there on the verge of death not knowing when death would finally come.

“Slowly, slowly, slowly, slowly, slowly, writhe around.”

As he approached the end, he felt Elsa's voice gently strike his eardrums, it seemed tormenting, savoring, grieving, cherishing, and loving.

His pain, suffering, rage and despair were all overwhelmed by a jet black fear.

In that world he couldn't see, in that world where he didn't know when the candle of his life would burn out, what dominated his now empty heart was a single-minded fear, the extreme fear of death.

—When will I die? When will I die? Am I still alive? Am I not dead? What defines life? Can it really be said that I'm alive, in this state lesser than any insect? Can it really be said that I'm alive, now that I'm being toyed with in the palm of life and death?

—What are life and death? Why am I afraid of dying? Do I need to be alive? No?

I'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscaredI'mscare

His instincts rejected the inevitable death that was ceaselessly approaching.

It ended up filling Subaru's mind, he was already at the end and now his blank field of view was dyed white,

—Ah, I’m dead.

With this, Natsuki Subaru’s life reached its disappointing conclusion.

Chapter 12:
Reunion with the Witch

1

"—Quit spacing out, man. You want the appa or not?"

When Subaru's consciousness returned, there was a red, ripe fruit before him.

As he gazed at this very apple-like fruit, worthless thoughts such as 'they call it the fruit of wisdom, huh' passed his mind.

A forbidden fruit that resulted in expulsion from paradise if you ate it.

Maybe if he bit into it, he'd be able to escape this incomprehensible situation.

"Hey, you listening?"

The middle aged man knit his brows and once again called to Subaru who had no reaction.

Some distant corner of Subaru's consciousness perceived this which caused his face to jolt upward. He started looking around at his surroundings.

He was standing in front of a stall on a street bathed in early afternoon sunlight.

Within this shop there was a wide variety of fruits and vegetables. This certainly wasn't an unfamiliar sight to him, but there was a small difference.

Filling the crowded street, there were hair colors that were impossible in his old world, as well as races that were quite literally impossible walking around as if it were natural.

Watching all this hustle and bustle, Subaru scratched his head.

His left arm could now move, when it touched his abdomen he felt nothing unusual, and there was no sign whatsoever that his organs had poured out or that his eyes had been slashed.

“I have no idea what’s going on here…”

As he murmured this, his rising nausea and dizziness overwhelmed him, causing his knees to give out.

2

Accepting the cup offered to him, Subaru gingerly sipped at the water poured within it.

The water was ice cold and spread as if soaking into his parched mouth from the tip of his tongue, it even relieved his dreary mood to some extent.

“Aah, just what I needed. Thank you. —You really are a good guy, old man.”

“Quit it. It’d be no laughing matter if you suddenly collapsed in front of my store, it’d look like my products caused it. Rest in the shade until you’ve settled down,” the man replied without a hint of bashfulness and then went back into his stall.

Subaru was still sitting on the ground near the road as he watched the man leave. He then leaned against a shop’s wall as he sighed deeply.

The one who had helped him when he was overcome by dizziness and was about to collapse was the shopkeeper he was now well familiar with.

Despite his rough appearance, he immediately prepared a wet towel and some drinking water once he guessed that Subaru was suffering from heatstroke, and then brought him into this shade so he could rest.

You really couldn’t judge people by their looks. There were muscly bald old men who were like good natured grandpas, and sexy women who took pleasure in murder.

“I thought my stomach and eyes were destroyed…”

He whispered as he felt his eyelids, and once again confirmed that he could see properly.

Naturally there was no wound on his abdomen, and his left shoulder was in good health as well. It seemed his wounds had once again disappeared completely, and perhaps due to some obsession he was placed before the man’s stall yet again.

“But even so… That was… Really bad.”

He moved his hands from his eyelids and looked at them.

Even though his fingers weren’t touching anything, they trembled slightly. This traveled up his arms until it finally became a terrible chill throughout his entire body.

Merely thinking back to it caused his teeth to chatter as he curled up with his head between his knees, the pressing horror so intense it even drowned out the hustle and bustle around him as his body trembled.

It was repulsive, alien, overwhelming, absurd, and the very personification of despair.

He had never been exposed to such malice, he had never experienced such pain and violence, and he had never had his body destroyed to such an extent.

He and his acquaintances had lost their lives, the terror was so heartrending that all he could do was curl up.

He refused to even think of facing such an aberrant entity.

“Stop thinking about it, stop thinking about it, this is absurd. It’s hopeless, there’s nothing I can do. That was death. That couldn’t have been anything but death. That I’m even alive is unbelievable luck, isn’t it?”

Seeking agreement from no one in particular, Subaru desperately begged for forgiveness.

The scenes of Rom's grisly slaughter and Felt's final moments after she was cut down repeated in the back of his mind.

And after that came the horrifying memory of being sliced up, broken, opened up, and having his sight stolen.

He felt nausea and dark emotions surge up and he immediately splashed his remaining water on his head.

There wasn't a lot, but it was enough to cover his head in the cool sensation.

He wiped away the water dripping from his bangs and then repeatedly slapped his face to restore his emotional state.

"Alright, let's cheer up. It's simple. Just forget all about that place. There's a mountain of other things I have to do and think about. For instance, I'll have to think about how I should live in this world. I happened to get caught up in some trouble while I worried, and then…"

—I was saved, and wanted to return that favor, and then felt like I was going to die.

"Come on, I said not to think about that."

Even if he tried not to think about that, the silver-haired girl continued to shine within his memories.

To begin with, most of what had happened to him in this world was in some way related to her, so it was impossible for him to forget about her and focus on the world.

However, if he thought back to his time with her, he would ultimately end up at that painful and despair-inducing memory.

His thoughts were once again in a downward spiral.

His shaking wouldn't stop, and his negative thoughts kept going in circles as he completely lost sight of any hope.

What should he do and how should he do it to succeed, would it be fine if he just stood around and did nothing, right now he couldn't grasp even the slightest hint.

"Hey, how do you feel now? Any better?"

With his face peeking out of his stall, he asked this considerate question.

Despite his attempts to act tough, the concern he displayed showed that he was a good man at heart. It wouldn't do to just rely on his kindness like this, Subaru thought as he decided to leave the area for now.

"Ah, I think I've calmed down somewhat. Sorry to trouble you."

He tried not to look weak as he stood up, and then returned the empty cup. The shopkeeper seemed to want to say something as he took it, but he didn't press the matter further.

"I'll definitely pay you back someday."

"That's unnecessary. But if you ever make some money, come to buy some appas."

Subaru's face was meek as the shopkeeper lightly tapped his shoulder, after which he raised his hand and returned to his store.

Feeling good about the man's laid-back attitude, Subaru took a deep breath and stepped toward the road. The crowd continued to move just the same as when he was curling up, and the main street lined with stalls seemed as bright as ever.

"…The loot house."

He should probably go there, he thought vaguely.

He thought about it, but his legs did not move in its direction. Going there meant facing that terror.

If things went wrong and he encountered Elsa again, his life that he had somehow kept would essentially be wasted.

Having been summoned to another world, he would simply rot away without accomplishing anything.

“Ha. It’d be just the same if I run.”

He ridiculed himself as he smiled, and then put his hands in pockets and started walking.

In the opposite direction from the loot house. That was what he had decided.

He would throw it all away, give up completely, and turn a blind eye to the favor he had received.

After all, that was what he did before he came here. He never did anything he didn’t have to, no need to rock the boat. Stuff like give and take or whatever, human interaction in general was a pain to him, that was the sort of life he lived.

At this point, that couldn’t possibly—

“Eh…?”

When he raised his head and took his first step, an expression of bewilderment left his mouth.

Within his widened field of view, the crowd moving back and forth seemed to be avoiding him as he stood in the middle of the street.

There was a tall figure with reptilian skin, a beastman whose height only reached Subaru’s waist, a young pink-haired dancer, a knight with six swords, —And a girl in a white robe, her silver hair fluttering as she walked.

The girl glanced at him and then as if to avoid touching him, she shifted to the side and passed by.

Her bundled up hair swayed, and a flower-like scent permeated the air and tickled his nostrils. Her strong-willed amethyst eyes had already disregarded him, they had a sharpness that only looked forward, toward the path she was supposed to walk.

Her dignified atmosphere hadn't changed and that shimmering beauty hadn't the slightest blemish, the girl he had been looking for was walking right before him.

"Wa—"

He couldn't immediately call out, the sound stopped in his throat as he ran after her.

The girl smoothly weaved her way through the crowd. His mental state was lost, confused and disordered as he chased her silver hair, and he called out in an almost tearful voice.

"Hey, wait… Wait up… Please wait…"

She looked at him for a moment, her eyes cold as though she was looking at a stranger.

They'd only interacted a few hours, to her he was just a passing acquaintance. Maybe he was even someone she despised, considering he couldn't even heed the simplest warning and put her in danger.

Even if she thought of him that way, Subaru continued to pursue her.

He didn't know how she felt about him. So at the very least, he wanted her to tell him that much.

If he was going to be hurt by whatever he imagined she thought of him, he'd much rather end up hurt by her real opinion.

"Please wait—Satella!"

Once he stopped her, what exactly did he want to say?

The instant the answer appeared within him, he shouted her name as if he just remembered it.

His shout tore through the noisy road and even reached the girl who was getting further and further away.

The silver-haired girl stopped immediately.

He pushed the crowd aside to reach her, and placed his hand on her slender shoulder.

“Please don’t ignore me. It was my bad for disappearing, really. But I don’t get what’s going on either. I even went back to the loot house to look for you, but I couldn’t find you…”

Satella seemed surprised as his hand lay on her shoulder.

When she turned around, all that left his mouth were excuses. He spoke rapidly, justifying himself as if afraid he’d be hurt.

Perhaps her gaze that seemed to see right through him was the cause.

However, even with this gaze on him, Subaru felt some relief in addition to his anxiety.

At a glance, there didn’t appear to be any serious wounds on her. Maybe she had also been healed by someone after the loot house incident. It was also possible that she’d healed herself, but what was important was,

“Sorry, I’ve just been blabbing about myself… But I’m glad you’re okay.”

The fact that they were able to meet again made him happier than anything.

Come to think of it, what worried him next was her partner—Puck’s safety. Subaru had far too many things he had to apologize to him for.

He couldn’t uphold a promise made man to man. That was a sin he ought to be condemned for.

"You…"

Once Subaru stopped talking, Satella started speaking as if to fill in the gap.

It had only been a few hours, and yet it felt like he hadn't heard that silver bell-like voice in forever.

He could see her standing before him, he could even reach out and touch her, he had finally caught her, such out-of-place emotions welled up within Subaru. However,

"What are you thinking—?"

As Subaru felt this sense of relief, Satella directed an angry look at him.

Her white cheeks flushed slightly, and she twisted her body a bit to shake his hand off. She took a step backward to put some space between them, and her eyes were filled with hostility as she looked at him.

Her unexpectedly harsh reaction caused Subaru to gulp and fall silent.

But thinking about it, it was obvious this would happen. To her, it must have been a wonder that he even dared to show his face.

He would accept any abuse she wished to rain upon him. This resolve of his—

"I don't know who you are, but to address someone by the name of the Witch of Envy, just what are you thinking?!"

Was smashed to pieces by this completely unexpected reaction.

3

Faced with these unexpected words, Subaru felt as if time itself had stopped.

The sound from the crowd had vanished. All that he heard were his heart's pounding, and the silver-haired girl's angry voice.

It was as if all other sounds were gone—no, they were gone.

"What…?"

He muttered as he awkwardly turned his head to look around and realized.

Every single person around them on this street filled with stalls and pedestrians was now focused on the two of them.

They were all shaken and had fallen silent, as though even the slightest movement was forbidden.

It was as if the conversation between the two of them had completely dominated the street.

"I'm asking you what you're thinking. Speak up."

However, Satella wouldn't allow any hesitation despite his bewilderment.

Her tone was harsh, but Subaru had no response since he didn't even know why she was angry.

They seemed to be on completely different wavelengths as to what the problem was.

"I'll ask this once more. —Why did you refer to me by the name of the Witch of Envy?"

"No, I mean, I was told…"

"I don't know who told you that, but that's in very poor taste. You're at fault too for going along with it. —The Witch of Envy, the symbol of all things taboo, merely mentioning her name is frowned upon, to think you'd actually call someone by that name."

Her anger clearly on display, Satella—The silver-haired girl plunged him into a sea of confusion.

The crowd gathered around them all nodded at her words. Which is to say they were proof that her words were correct, and this confused him even further.

He didn’t understand what she was saying.

He had just said her name.

And yet she took offense to this, and the people around them acknowledged that she was correct to do so.

He didn’t know what he was doing wrong, he was just being reprimanded for being wrong. He couldn’t reflect on his actions or change his behavior.

“—If that’s all, I’ll be on my way. I don’t have time for this.”

She said as Subaru hung his head, she then walked off gallantly, her silver hair fluttering. Subaru wanted to call out to her, but the name froze in his throat.

He'd be making the same mistake twice if he called her that again. But then, what should he call her?

This hesitation dulled Subaru's judgement.

Consequently, he simply watched what took place before him without doing anything.

"—!"

There was a small gasp atop the canopy of a nearby stall about a head taller than Subaru.

It leapt, its small body was gently pulled downward by gravity, and the instant it landed it rode the wind to accelerate.

That swift wind was wearing somewhat dirty clothes and had golden hair flowing behind it. She easily slipped through the crowd as if divinely inspired, and her quickly extended arm entered a white robe with a hawk embroidered on it.

It was only a moment of contact, but that was enough for the wind.

The wind made the robe flutter, and then took off as the girl turned.

"Don't tell me—!"

The silver-haired girl raised her voice in surprise and stuck her hand into her robe.

She didn't find what she was looking for, and her eyes widened as she looked toward the wind that was fading into the distance.

That wind held an insignia symbolizing a dragon in its hand, and watching it from behind Subaru instinctively yelled,

"Felt?!"

This caused the wind to waver as if perplexed. But its speed did not decline and it disappeared from the street into an alley in an instant.

That was some incredibly fast work. A chance meeting of an instant. He had only seen it momentarily, but that was most likely—

“It’s gone. Was this why you stopped me…? You’re in on it?!”

The girl groaned at Subaru who had just stood still, unable to react to the hectic situation.

She immediately pointed her palm his way, but as if rethinking this decision, she ran off toward the alley the wind had disappeared into.

“Hey, wait! It’s a misunderstanding! I’m not…”

Subaru ran into the alley as well, chasing after them so he could resolve this misunderstanding.

As he ran, his mind was filled with doubts toward many mysteries.

There was far too much information being unloaded onto him, and his flustered brain could not process it all. Even if this weren’t the case, he felt like he had died twice today and that really messed with him.

“Someone please be nice to me! Why the hell was I even summoned here?!”

The absurdity of the situation made him yell this as he stumbled through the dim alley.

He wasn’t sure his stamina would last, but he didn’t think he’d lose to those two over a short distance. He’d catch up to them right away, and clear up all these doubts.

That was what he was expecting as he ran, but,

“Damn… A wall?!”

Subaru spat as a dead end blocked his path.

The two he was chasing weren't there. If he recalled correctly, Felt was agile enough to easily scale walls. And Satella probably wouldn't have any trouble getting over a wall or two with her magic.

"I don't mind climbing, but… I don't think I could catch up that way."

Most importantly, if the gap between them widened Subaru couldn't just keep running.

Even though he had trained his physical strength inside his room, it would be impossible to do the same with aerobic exercise. His lack of stamina was his fatal flaw, and even here it caused him to give up the chase.

"If this is no good, how about the loot house? Satella and Felt are both alive, so… Rom must be too."

He decided that it would be ideal to go on ahead of them and link up with Rom as soon as possible.

For now he should get out of this dead end and head toward the slums. Thus, he turned around,

"…You're kidding."

Before him were some figures blocking his way out of the alley.

There were three of them, they were somewhat filthy, and they had a rough aura about them as if their violent nature had manifested on their faces.

By this point it was a pain to even bother describing the three standing in his way.

These bandits who made the back alleys their hunting grounds had encountered him for the third time that day.

Chapter 13: Ending and Beginning

1

“Just give up already! There’s a limit to incorrigibility!”

Subaru was tired of seeing these guys and kicked the ground in frustration.

This was their third encounter, and it was once again a three on one in an alley. Despite how fruitless their first and second attempts were, they still continued to hound him, he was truly surprised by this tenacity.

If the situation wasn’t as it was, he might have even applauded them.

“I don’t have time for you guys. I’ll face you when things settle down, so get out of my way.”

He was a little uneasy, but he had managed to beat them solo last time so he kept his composure.

If he intimidated them a bit, there would probably be an opening. That’s what he expected, but,

“Get out of his way, huh? What do you say we do?”

“I don’t like his attitude, not one bit. It doesn’t look like he understands who’s going to be giving the orders here.”

“You pathetically lost three on one, why the hell are you trying to act tough…? Even the sorest loser would show more shame.”

To be honest, Subaru couldn’t help but feel like a sore loser himself right now.

In other words, this place had turned into a gathering of beaten down losers.

“That’s way too negative! I thought I was a more optimistic character!”

“It’s no good, he’s completely messed up in the head. We decided to target him because of his weird getup, but maybe this is…”

The men started talking to one another, clearly annoyed by his loud monologue. The empty-handed one and the one with the nata seemed to be losing interest in Subaru, but the biggest threat, the one with the knife, still had a sharp gaze.

Those eyes seemed to have given up on his value as a wallet, but there was another dark desire cruelly wavering within them.

The man’s look caused Subaru to internally mutter, “This could be dangerous.”

Having faced them twice, Subaru concluded that the man with the knife was the most troublesome among them. In addition to his lethality, he was also the one with the quickest temper.

Forget fighting, it would be wise to avoid even getting close.

“Got it. I won’t resist. Just state your demands.”

Subaru said this as he raised his hands, emphasizing that he had no intention of fighting them.

He had completely dropped the confident attitude he had, and instead changed to one of compliance.

The reason being that he decided to prioritize getting out of here, and wanted to keep the man with the knife calm. He had decided that some losses couldn’t be helped, and it would be best to just get out of here for now.

—Well, there was also the unfortunate possibility that they were aiming for revenge and would beat him to a pulp.

If things looked to be moving in that direction, he’d run away with all he had before they had the chance to stab him. If he managed to make it to the main street, they probably wouldn’t be able to do anything conspicuous.

As Subaru vigilantly formed plans to ensure his safety within his mind, the men's attitudes toward him relaxed.

They spoke as if to ridicule his cowardliness for being willing to take their demands,

"C'mon, if you were that scared you should have just done that from the start."

"You bastard. You sure talk big for a scaredy cat."

"Isn't this great? You heard him say he wouldn't do anything, right? What a coward."

Their words annoyed him, but Subaru forced a smile and laughed them off. He found some satisfaction in naming them 'Ton, Chin, and Kan' in his mind.

[TN: Tonchinkan = Foolish, irrelevant]

"Well, just want demands do you intend to make of this idiot?"

"For now, set down everything you've got. Even those weird clothes and shoes. You can keep your underwear, we're not devils after all!"

They mercilessly mocked Subaru who had humbled himself before them.

So they have the concept of devils here too, huh, along with such irrelevant thoughts their words also instilled a strong sense of unease.

Everything he had, even his clothes and shoes, this demand was surely—

"You guys, you really have gone and hit your heads somewhere, haven't you?"

This was the exact same as what they had asked the first time he encountered them.

Perhaps they'd hit their heads, or maybe the poor bastards lacked the brainpower to even remember what they had said before, it could even be that they overused the same template so much they didn't even remember who they said it to.

They were irredeemable to the core, but their attitude toward Subaru who had once beaten them down was strange, considering this, there was one more possibility

"There was Felt too, looks like there's a lot of memory problems around here…"

"Quit flapping your gums. Don't wanna follow your orders? Or do you not have the brains to follow them?"

"You're the last guys who ought to be talking about brains…"

This last mutter stopped in his mouth, and Subaru showed that he was willing to do as they said.

As he wondered if he should at least try to keep his clothes, or maybe deal with them all in one go now that they'd gotten closer, he stuck his hand in his bag—

"Huh—?"

He frowned, this was his most unsettling experience yet in this world.

"Why…?"

He muttered as if groaning, as he slowly confirmed the contents of his plastic bag.

In it was his shoyu tonkotsu cup ramen, his wallet and phone that were too troublesome to keep in his pocket, and finally, a golden snack of a flavor he was extremely fond of.

Right, the gold-colored snack—The corn potage flavored snack.

It was the first thing he had eaten since he came to this world, and it also proved very useful to calm Rom's rage at the loot house, after which most of it was supposed to be used up.

—But right now, it was completely full and back in his bag.

“I thought we’d eaten this… There was definitely only a little bit left.”

They had consumed at least two thirds of its contents.

And yet it had returned to its original state. There was no sign the bag had even been opened. It was strange no matter how he thought about it.

The disappearance of his wounds could be explained. He had seen Satella’s magic. Therefore he could conclude that someone had healed them in the aftermath of both tragedies.

—But even if he supposed that such a high class healer existed, would it really be possible to restore something that no longer existed?

He remembered Rom mentioning something of the sort.

Duplication magic—Magic that made it possible to not only copy something’s appearance, but fully replicate it. If someone used that magic, even this…

“But then what about the bag’s opening. Don’t tell me healing magic can even restore glue or something…”

He didn’t think that was very realistic.

And considering this world seemed to have sacrificed technological development for magical development, it seemed doubtful that they would have the knowledge to reglue the bag.

His thoughts were completely blocked on all sides. But within those trapped thoughts, Subaru started to believe that this was not healing magic. But that was where it stopped, because the other possibility he had thought of was too absurd, his sense of reason rejected it, believing it to be impossible.

“Hey, what the hell are you doing?”

“Ah?”

A sudden call from right next to him caused him to let out a dumbfounded noise.

One of the men—The barehanded third one, whom he called ‘Kan’ in his mind. Subaru frowned when he realized that the man had walked right up to him.

“Why are you approaching me like that? Let me tell you, I don’t need your help to get my clothes off.”

“As if anyone’s going to help you do that! You were the one who staggered over here!”

Only after he was yelled at did Subaru realize that he had gone from the inside of the alley all the way to the side of the road.

It seemed he had been moving unconsciously while engrossed in thought. But to the men, his thoughtless actions ended up looking like hostile conduct.

“If he won’t do as we say, what say we knock him around a little?”

“Or rather, this is a real pain in the ass already. Let’s just end it here.”

Subaru saw that the men were about to do something hasty, so he halted his deep thought for the moment.

What he needed right now was—

“Here, catch this!!”

“Wha?!”

He raised the plastic bag in his hand, and then tossed it deep into the alley.

It drew an arc as it flew into the darkness at high speed. Naturally, the men who were planning to loot it also followed it with their eyes.

Seeing an opening, Subaru energetically dashed past them.

Just as he'd concluded several times now, the most important thing was getting away from them safely. After that, he would have to go to the loot house and find the answers to the doubts that had welled up within him.

He himself felt that what he was thinking was foolish.

Some user of healing magic, who was incredibly proficient in both restoration magic and duplication magic, happened to come across the tragic scene at the loot house and out of the kindness of their heart, they healed everyone there completely free of charge, and then left Subaru alone at that one stall, after which they simply left without even introducing themselves.

Even this completely whimsical story was easier to accept.

"Well, that's pretty hard to accept too, though."

It was what made the most sense.

At least, compared to the baseless foolishness that had crossed the back of his mind.

With two contrary ideas conflicting within him, Subaru dashed out of the filthy alley.

If he made it out to the main street and ran around while making a lot of noise, even these guys most likely wouldn't pursue him. It was unfortunate to lose the contents of the bag, but he had snuck some things out right beforehand, so the only things left in it were the bag of snacks and some small change that was just dead weight —His losses weren't significant.

It was with this in mind that he ran, but suddenly his next step missed its mark by a wide margin, causing him to panic.

His body was unsteady and the leg he was supposed to have put out in front was stumbling. The strength then left his legs and he fell to his knees.

He put out his hands to stop his fall, and scolded himself for being such an idiot as to fall at a time like this. However,

“Huh, that’s weird…”

He tried to gather his strength to stand back up, but his arms were trembling. He was completely unable to raise his body. He had also dropped the things he was holding before this.

“That’s why we told you to just listen, fool.”

He heard a scornful voice from right behind him, and somehow turned his head toward it.

The man standing behind him was the second one, whom he had nicknamed ‘Chin’, an extremely humiliating name.

With that vulgar attitude, the man pointed at Subaru as the edges of his mouth curved up.

Following his pointing finger, Subaru realized why he had collapsed.

—There was a knife embedded in his lower back.

“Goah… Gga…”

The moment he realized this, a terribly sharp pain ran through him and blocked his throat.

This extremely pure and primal pain even robbed him of the ability to writhe in agony.

—I’ve been stabbed! Stabbedstabbedstabbedstabbedstabbedstabbedstabbed.

Unlike the other two, the knife-wielding Chin hadn’t been distracted by the bag. Meaning at that moment, he must have been more focused on hurting Subaru than stealing anything of value.

As expected, Chin was the most important one to deal with, more than Ton or Kan.

This was the result of neglecting to do so. In these few hours, he had already encountered many different types of horrible pain. But no matter how many times he experienced this, it would be absolutely impossible to get used to it.

“Hey, you seriously stabbed him?”

“I had no choice. What if he escaped into the street? It’d be a real pain for us.”

“Aaah, this is bad. You hit his guts so he’ll probably die… It’s even drenching his clothes.”

Is that all you think about when you stab someone, a complaint through the horrendous pain.

He couldn’t afford to think of anything else, he was in so much pain that it was hard to even stay conscious. And judging by what Ton said, his wound was such that he wouldn’t be getting back up.

He at least had to do something while he was still conscious.

Deciding this, he scraped together all the strength he had left, steadily gathering it as he prepared to shout.

Bringing it to his tongue, he tried to scream,

“Aalright, here’s a second one before you go and try anything!”

A second knife was mercilessly thrust right into middle of his back.

“—Ough”

The numbness that spread through him like an electric shock canceled out his shout.

He was already far beyond the point where he could bear the pain or attempt to do anything like scream. There was no longer anything he could do.

The damage to his back seemed to have reached his lungs.

Even as he repeated his hoarse, rough breaths, his lungs would not expand and breathing became more and more painful.

Oxygen deprivation was affecting him severely, he was becoming so weak it seemed he would soon lose the ability to even think.

He lost sensation in his limbs, and no longer knew whether he was facing down or upward.

Even though his eyes weren't slashed this time, he still couldn't see anything as his vision had gone black.

—What do you mean, 'this time'?

It was pitiful to cling to an idea he had already dismissed as absurd.

If he was going to cling to it, he might as well do so to the fullest.

—Don't think about your impending death. Before you die, analyze the world around you.

His eyes were dead. So were his limbs. All he had left were his nose and ears. That being the case, he would have to make full use of them. Any sort of lingering scent would be fine, he didn't mind hearing all sorts of abuse. The stink of the dirt in the alley. The rising metallic scent of blood. His nose just died. It was gone. His ears were at death's door as well, and were barely even functioning.

"—St take… Valuables…"

"—It! The guards… Co…!"

"…Un! This is bad! …If we get…!!"

He could only pick up these fragments of conversation. Picking them up was fine, but too much of his brain had died for him to understand what he had heard. Since it was dead he could only hear. He didn't know if he would remember what he heard. What exactly did he mean, remember? What did he want to do by remembering? What was want? What was what—

As if following the parts that died first, his other functions steadily disappeared, and at the very end, with the scraping sound of something being pulled from him, Natsuki Subaru lost his life for the third time.

2

When his consciousness returned, Subaru was in darkness.

Realizing it was a darkness of his own creation, he gently opened his eyes—And had them burned by the dazzling sunshine, causing him to groan as he used his hand to cover his eyes.

"So, how about the appa?"

A familiar voice asked a familiar question right before his eyes.

His ears were fine. The hustle and bustle of the street was as loud as usual, completely different from the dreadful silence he had experienced in that alley.

Despite the fact that if he considered the distance, he was only one turn away.

"I couldn't even make it past this street, pretty pathetic…"

The scarred stall owner overhead his words of self-derision, however he started to frown, seeming displeased that he wasn't getting a response.

Subaru knew from personal experience that though he looked intimidating, he was in truth a very kind man. Naturally, the shopkeeper probably had no memory of this.

As he thought such things, Subaru once again faced him,

"Say, how many times have you seen me?"

"How many times, you're a fresh face, man. I wouldn't forget such a conspicuous look."

"What's today's date?"

"It's the fourteenth day of the month of Tammuz."

"Thank you. —I see, the month of Tammuz, huh."

He had no idea what that was.

To begin with, he didn't even know how they recorded this world's calendar. —But it seemed they used days and months, and he could probably assume that they used a solar calendar.

It was likely common knowledge, but he hesitated to ask about it. Especially to someone like the owner of this stall, who was completely focused on selling his goods.

The shop owner was being very patient with him, but as expected he seemed to be thinking that he was wasting far too much time just to sell a single fruit.

Holding out that apple or whatever in his palm, he asked for the umpteenth time,

"So, the appa?"

He tried his best to hide his anger with a smile.

His white scar was twitching, and his forced smile looked more like an expression that would scare kids away.

In response, Subaru placed his hands on his hips and puffed his chest out,

"Sorry, but I'm totally, absolutely broke!"

"Get the hell out of here—!"

This angry shout caused him to recoil instinctively, after which he scurried away.

I can’t go back there for a while, he thought, two meanings in mind.

Chapter 14:
Fourth Time's the Charm

1

"There's my wallet. And my phone. The corn potage and ramen and stuff are good too. No damage to my jersey or sneakers either. And naturally…"

Pulling up his jersey, he turned his head with great effort to check the state of his back.

There was no scarring on his middle or lower back, nor were there two knives sticking out of him.

"Phew, thank goodness. A wound to the back is a warrior's greatest shame. As someone who once enrolled in the kendo club, even if I were to stray from the path of humanity, I would never stray from the path of the warrior."

He felt around his unharmed back as he grumbled. He spotted a long hair growing near his shoulder and after a great deal of struggle, finally managed to pull it out after which he exhaled.

"So basically, that's what this is. It's hard to believe, though…"

He blew the hair away with his breath and placed his now empty hand on his jaw as he surveyed the street.

He was still on the same street, by stall only a short distance away from the grocer.

The shady looking owner who had lined up various suspicious looking jars and plates looked at Subaru as though he were a nuisance, but this had no effect on Subaru who leaned against the wall with his arms crossed.

The sun was high and the breeze was gentle. The street was crowded and a lizard drawn carriage would occasionally pass by.

Even Subaru was starting to get used to the dust they kicked up by this point, and his only reaction was to gently fan it away from his face.

All traces of injury had vanished from his body, and his already eaten corn potage snack was providing excellent value, since it could be eaten any number of times. And his jaw was completely smooth to the touch,

“Pretty pathetic for me of all people to forget about my special skill.”

He had the ability to estimate the passage of time fairly accurately based on the growth of his stubble.

Subaru had a level of self-confidence that bordered on admiration in his technique that made full use of a privilege only available to those with a consistent level of male hormones. He was certain, —That his facial hair was no longer than it was after he shaved it before heading to the convenience store.

“So it’s like that.”

He pointed the hand that was touching his jaw forward, and with the gazes of many people including the shopkeeper on him, he snapped his fingers,

“—Looks like I return to my original state when I die.”

And came to the conclusion he had previously dismissed as absurd.

2

“Return by Death, huh… It’s like the ability itself is telling me to bite the dust.”

The original was more like a “Win and then repeat” type of ability, so considering Subaru’s pattern of losing and returning, he felt that his current situation fit the name better from a literary perspective.

“To put it more directly… Isn’t this something like time travel?”

It was limited, but this could be considered what one would call time travel. In short, Subaru had become a time traveler, something he could only dream of before.

To be honest, the possibility had been bouncing around his head until some ten-odd minutes ago, but he shied away from it due to the harsh activation condition.

He also felt that it was more likely that there was some wandering super healer who happened to encounter them.

And most of all, the main reason he thought it unlikely,

“Generally speaking, temporal magic is considered to be the highest class of magic so it’d be strange for me to have it right from the start. To begin with, even though one may dream of going back in time, it’d be impossible to actually do it. Or so common sense would suggest.”

Having said this, he cocked his head wondering what about a parallel world summoning adhered to any sort of common sense.

Thinking of it this way, his earlier feelings of obstinate rejection would also fade away.

“Moreover, if I actually am returning by death, all the strange stuff until now suddenly makes sense…”

His first death, to put it briefly, was when he went to the loot house with Satella.

He had his defenseless stomach torn open and unable to even shout out a warning, he ended up getting Satella wrapped up in this, an absolutely inexcusable development.

His second death was after Felt and Rom were murdered, Elsa had slaughtered him, his resistance completely futile. When he first returned by death, he assumed the discrepancy in time meant it was a different day, but in truth he had returned to the same point on the same day.

His third death had happened recently, he had experienced it some ten-odd minutes ago.

It truly was a pointless death, but he couldn't think of a more fitting one.

For him to actually end up getting killed by random small fry at the very start, it was like every single choice had a BAD END attached to it, and it kind of felt like a poorly designed adventure game.

"Wait, I've died three times in just half a day…?"

Considering human life was generally considered to be something you only got one of, dying three times in the span of half a day truly was nonsensical in every way.

Subaru had certainly lived a mediocre life these past seventeen years, but if one considered that he had avoided death 17 x 365 x 3 times thus far, it was rather moving.

"Or I'm just really bad at staying alive."

He was too used to the comfort of his old world, due to which he could not keep up with the rapid-fire instant death events this one kept throwing at him.

The fact that he kept getting lured into obviously dangerous situations was probably another reason.

"Thinking back to the causes of the first and second time… It was probably Elsa both times."

The first time, the one lurking around in the darkness of the loot house was probably Elsa.

The corpse of a giant old man, that had to be Rom. But it was hard to imagine that Rom would end up dying regardless of Subaru's verbal gaffe.

"Could Felt have been in there… I couldn't confirm that much, huh."

Naturally, Rom was most likely accompanying Felt for her negotiation.

That being the case, she was definitely linked to his death. If things were like the second time, it was very likely that Felt's greed caused negotiations to break down.

“She pointlessly provoked her and ended up getting killed for it, maybe.”

Considering her extremely competitive spirit, it was certainly possible.

And right as Elsa had silenced them, Subaru and Satella arrived with terrible timing. This was probably how the first time went.

“The second time was quite a bit simpler, wasn't it. I just happened to be one of the people being silenced.”

Thinking of it this way, perhaps Satella ended up arriving there after they got murdered.

He knew about her magical ability, but he doubted that that homicidal maniac would give her time to chant. Satella was probably at a disadvantage 8 or 9 times out of 10.

“Wait, I've been killed by the same person twice. Simply put, Elsa's basically a certain death encounter, final answer. Also…”

Is there even a need to take countermeasures, Subaru heard his now calm mind ask.

Right, why did he have to think about what would happen if he encountered Elsa?

Frankly speaking, the loot house was the only place he ran the risk of encountering her.

And the reason he wanted to go to the loot house was in order to obtain Satella's insignia, and the reason he wanted to do that was to repay her for saving him.

But since Return By Death had brought him back to right after he'd been summoned, this debt had quite literally disappeared with time.

Satella's cold reaction to him on his third time was proof of this.

She did not know him. Meaning he had no relation whatsoever to the Satella of that timeline, and his debt no longer existed.

Meaning he could forget all about this insignia business, and instead focus on avoiding those BAD END flags.

He didn't know why he was granted such an ability, but it was a very valuable skill that would allow him to learn of future developments. He would avoid any dangers he could avoid, that was the right thing to do.

He had obtained something that appeared to be time travel. It would be meaningless if he didn't use it this way.

"Fortunately, I now know that my cell phone is worth quite a bit. Even without relying on Rom, if I can find some shop I can trust and sell it off, I'll be able to create a war chest."

More than twenty holy gold coins, he didn't know how much that was, but he figured it would buy him decent lodgings for quite a while. And then he would sharpen his fangs there until the day he was ready to bite.

"Well, I still have no plan as to what exactly I'll be biting into."

He wasn't exceptionally knowledgeable on any particular subject, nor did he have anything he was passionate about. To maintain a broad, but shallow knowledge of many things, such was the stance of the modern generation, and Subaru was no different.

"Once I sell this cell phone, guess I'll have no choice but to get hired as an assistant at some shop or something while I've still got money…"

He was extremely uneasy about how he would earn a living since he had no job experience, but doing some black labor should at least be better than getting involved in bloodshed. At least he most likely wouldn't end up dying thrice in half a day.

"It's simple then. The sun will set if I don't get moving right away. Right, old man?"

"I thought you were muttering something for a while, but what's this all of a sudden. Even if you ask me, it's not like I'd know.."

The stall owner next to him responded with an annoyed expression as Subaru looked for agreement.

He had a turban on his head and was running a stall that sold jars and plates. Regardless of Subaru murmuring nearby, it didn't appear to be one that attracted customers.

"Wonder if I should sell my stuff like this… But I wonder if I'd actually make anything if I tried selling things like you, with those crappy jars and stuff. What do you think, old man?"

"Don't say that crap while looking at someone else's merchandise! What's with you?!"

"I'm a man who'll one day be famed for his wealth. You could even call me the cell phone nouveau… Say, doesn't that wrapping on your head itch? Why do you have it on? You balding or something?"

"I don't understand most of what you're saying, on top of which you're being extremely rude! Go away, I've got a business to run here!"

His attitude was cold as he spoke in a strangely feminine manner.

Guess people treat passing strangers the same in any world, huh, Subaru thought as he sighed on the inside.

"But then, there's also some people so kind they help others even when it puts them in a tough spot."

She had something precious stolen from her, and was in the middle of chasing the culprit.

She stopped to save some useless guy she didn't even know, wasted her time healing him, and then tried to leave without receiving anything in return.

And then this kind girl let the useless fellow accompany her for his own self-satisfaction, and ended up dying a horrible death for it.

"Thinking back to the third time, there's a whole lot I learned. Or rather, it'd be pathetic if I didn't learn, but I'm not that stupid."

"What are you saying now?"

"There's probably a pattern here. You could even call it fate. —No matter how many times it repeats, this will keep happening. For instance…"

Felt stole Satella's insignia all three times.

Rom had been killed in the loot house both the first and second time. Felt had probably died the first time too.

If so, what happened to Satella who most likely arrived at the loot house the second time as well?

She didn't have a burden holding her back, would she have been able to win against Elsa?

"I don't know. And I probably won't know. But there's things I do know."

If he just left things alone this fourth time, Felt and Rom would definitely be killed. And Satella would end up battling Elsa.

So what if those two died? One was a small-time villain who dealt in stolen goods, and the other was a brat who shamelessly tried to pawn off said stolen items at exorbitant prices.

They were both criminals, it would probably be a good thing if they died.

"Aah, I really am a child of the modern era. Even though I absolutely ridiculed these sorts of emotions from behind a computer.”

Mercy and compassion were just stupid, that was supposedly what he believed.

At least, he wasn’t just pretending as if he did. He thought of himself as a cold hearted person, and that all modern people were like that.

So no matter what situation he ended up in, he wouldn’t be particularly moved and wouldn’t react very strongly, or so he convinced himself. The death of a few people he knew was no exception to this.

“But still, I don’t want that. It feels horrible. Those two aren’t good people, far from it. —But when I know that familiar faces are about to die, I can’t just stand by and let it happen.”

But in the end, it seemed that was all just an act. A result of his experiences in the virtual world. When the weight of reality set in, his tenets easily crumbled away, that was how flimsy they were.

He wasn’t really that firm on these principles to begin with, though, so it was no loss to be rid of them.

“And of course, there’s Satella… Or rather, that girl. Can’t abandon her either.”

Calling that name, Subaru thought to himself that it was most likely an alias.

Thinking back to the first time, she was pretty reluctant to say that name. And then there was their exchange in the third world. It was painfully clear.

To sum up, it seemed she didn’t trust him enough. He hadn’t built up enough affection and failed the name acquisition event as a result.

“Alright then, I’ll do my best to actually learn her name this time.”

Subaru started warming up on the spot, and stretched his body to the limit.

“Cha—nCha—Chachachacha!”, As Subaru started his radio calisthenics routine, the shopkeeper was already beyond the point where he had anything to say.

Subaru performed routine two in front of the speechless man, and having worked up a good sweat, he turned around and suddenly raised his hands,

“There are times when a man’s gotta do what a man’s gotta do. — Isn’t that right, old man?”

He’d planned to end it with a posed look, but the terrible reaction caused his face to twitch.

The shopkeeper drove him away with a perfunctory gesture, and Subaru ran off from the stall where he had spent such a long time deep in thought.

Pushing his way through the crowd for a while, he had probably run about 200 meters.

“Well then…”

Subaru stopped and brushed his bangs upward.

He looked here and there in a pointlessly exaggerated manner, and then smoothly placed his hand against a wall to lean on it, after which he closed his eyes and once again smoothed his hair. Then,

“Where should I go to find you, Not-Satella?”

He started his quest with words that didn’t bode well for his future prospects.

Chapter 15:
Because He is the Sword Saint

Thinking about it, his meetings with Not-Satella relied on a lot of random coincidence.

He did encounter her the first and third times, but the only connection was that both had occurred around this main street (He heard from the shopkeeper wearing the turban that it was commonly called the trading street).

It would have been great if he was at least obsessed with keeping time, but he hadn't done the stalkerish act of recording exactly when he met her.

In the end, it was quickest to think back to the third time's pattern, but,

"Back then, just how long did I spend sulking by that fruit shop?"

He sunk down to the ground overcome by dizziness and spent an unknown amount of time hugging his knees.

It felt like it was only a few minutes, but it also felt like it could have been an hour. Regardless of what the answer was, all Subaru could say was 'I don't know'.

"Should I just wander around this street looking for her…? And just hope my beauty radar works?"

Or maybe his silver-haired hottie sensor.

This ability was completely useless in his old world, but he'd be able to use it to great effect here.

He placed both hands in front of his face and straightened a finger on each, and went "MyonMyon" as a number of people looked at him strangely. He felt like he could sense something, and decided to follow whatever was beckoning to him for the moment.

His surroundings steadily changed into an atmosphere he was familiar with, filling him with thoughts such as “Woah, looks like my sensor’s working fine as ever?!”, and then he suddenly realized.

—Without realizing it, he ended up leaving the street and was now entering a narrow alley.

“Isn’t this where I first met her…?”

It looked very similar, but he was unsure.

It wasn’t that different from the path into the slums in terms of atmosphere, on top of which he had only been to the alley of their meeting in the first world, and had never revisited it since.

The second time was clearly in a different alley, and thinking back to the third time, that was yet another dead end. Even if Felt stealing Satella’s insignia was a fixed event, which alley she would run into after the fact seemed to vary depending on the situation.

Perhaps it was the same the first two times, but the third time things seemed to have changed slightly due to Subaru’s presence.

Having thought this far, Subaru suddenly realized just how shallow his thought process was.

Maybe he could find Felt or Satella now that he was in a familiar alley.

However, that also meant the possibility of a different reunion. In short,

“I’m so damn tired of seeing you, Ton, Chin, Kan!”

Subaru turned around fed up, and found the usual suspects blocking his path.

There was no difference in appearance, clothing, or countenance. Their goal and equipment were most likely the same as well, no progress whatsoever. It was only natural since he was back in the same spot.

"Even though I'm having such a hard time finding Not-Satella and Felt."

The reason he was unable to find them was probably because their actions depended on many factors independent of him.

By contrast, the reason he kept running into these guys was most likely because they were targeting him from the start.

That's why he kept encountering them despite taking a different path each time.

"Now that I've come up with a conjecture that doesn't make me happy in the slightest, what exactly do you guys want?"

"Just what the hell has this guy been muttering about?"

"He probably doesn't get what's going on here. How about we go ahead and teach him?"

Even this conversation between Ton and Chin followed the template exactly, which caused Subaru's mood to sink further. However, he also felt that he couldn't take them lightly just because he was tired of dealing with them.

The clear conditions for the Tonchinkan encounter weren't that demanding, but it wasn't like he had a 100% chance of breaking through. After all, they were the cause of his third death.

Maybe Not-Satella would save him like the first time, or maybe he could beat them on his own like the second time, but he had no guarantees.

Things went really well the second time, but this time wouldn't necessarily go down the same way. There was also a high chance that there was a big event waiting for him after this, and he didn't want to sustain any injuries.

"On the other hand, I wouldn't want to escape by handing over my stuff either, I could use those to negotiate."

The ideal would be to get out of here without sustaining any losses, like he did the second time.

And if he could avoid wasting time like the first time, that would be best of all.

Subaru crossed his arms and cocked his head, wondering if there was some way he could get away from them.

On the other side, perhaps thinking Subaru's attitude meant he was ignoring them despite their seemingly superior position, Tonchinkan's expressions were dyed in hostility

He at least had to make a decision before they drew their weapons.

As he lamented their lack of patience, Subaru figured he would have to go with a surprise attack after all—Suddenly, he remembered the moment of his third death.

As he lay there on the verge of death, all he could do was hear.

Back then, what was it that they were talking about? His dying brain could not comprehend it back then, but it should be possible now.

—Yeah, that's it.

"Guaaaaaards!!!"

Tonchinkan were caught off guard by his sudden call for help, causing them to jump.

The volume was such that it smashed the silence of the alley, and even tore through the hustle and bustle of the main street.

His absurd sensitivity was well known when he took kendo, and had long since stripped him of any shame when it came to screaming.

Something like screaming for help did not damage his pride even slightly.

"Someone—! I need a man—!!!"

"Bastard… Don't screw around! You're seriously yelling at a time like this?!"

"You're supposed to listen to us if you don't want to get hurt, that's how it's supposed to be! You can't just do this without even listening to our demands!"

"Shut up! Who gives a damn what normally happens?! Offbeat, off path, off course, wrong way, they're all on the right track! As if I wanna deal with you guys! I just wanna have some fun with gold and silver haired beauties!"

As Tonchinkan went into a frenzy and stomped their feet, Subaru angrily yelled at them.

Subaru was putting on a defiant act as he verbally attacked them, but although it wasn't showing, a sense of panic was rapidly building up within him. The plan to seek help was based on his very vague memories of his last moments in the third world.

The moment before his consciousness descended into darkness, someone among them had said something like "Guards" and "Run", his shoddy strategy relied on this tiny hint.

There was also the fact that when he beat these guys on his second time, it seemed the people on the street simply turned a blind eye even though they knew he was getting robbed.

"So it was a mistake after all…"

"Trying to scare us like that… I was just a little nervous."

"Just a little bit!"

"A really tiny bit!"

In unison, they denied how pathetic they were in a very pathetic fashion.

The men took a deep breath to calm down as if to regain control of the situation after Subaru's stunt, and then they each drew their weapons.

A knife, a rusty nata, and,

“Why are you the only one without a weapon? Didn’t have the money to buy one?”

“Shut up! I’m stronger without one! Underestimate me and I’ll beat you to death, you damned brat!”

“If only I had a recording of the second time, I’d love to show it to you.”

As he thought back to his flawless overhead throw, he started to bask in his own admiration. On the other hand, his situation was now so bad his mind continually warned of danger.

They had already drawn their weapons, greatly reducing his chances of success.

Forget escaping without any injuries or losses, he wasn’t even sure he could make it out of there in one piece.

“Let me go already… I’d rather avoid the pain.”

Having died three times, Subaru now understood that it wasn’t something you could get used to no matter how many times it happened.

Furthermore, all his deaths until now were horribly painful ones brought about by blades. That sharp pain was always fresh and electrifying, like his nerves were being scraped.

He’d really rather not go through that again, and most of all—

“I’ve been able to come back from death until now, but there’s no guarantee it’ll happen again…”

He couldn’t be sure that this ability didn’t have a limited number of uses.

There was no number engraved on his body or anything, but it was said that even Buddha would get annoyed if you touched his face three times. Assuming that that was the case here, he had already run out of continues. If he pathetically died a pointless death here, his life in another world would reach the BAD END.

"… In short, the best thing to do would be to run away, even if I get injured."

The most lethal of them was, naturally, the tried and true knife. That nata was terribly rusty, so it'd probably be no different from a normal hit if he blocked it with his plastic bag. The empty handed thug was no problem.

As he watched Tonchinkan approach, he immediately made up his mind.

Subaru was completely focused on Chin, and started counting down in his head as he looked for an opening.

—Three, two, ah, hold on just one moment, three, two…

"—That's enough."

That voice suddenly and clearly tore through the tension in the alley.

Its dignified tone hadn't the slightest hint of hesitation or mercy. All those who listened to it were struck by its overwhelming presence, and were naturally inclined to obey it.

Subaru raised his head, and Tonchinkan turned around—There was a young man standing there.

What first drew their eyes was his red hair that was like a blazing inferno.

Right below were shining blue eyes that could only be described as daring.

His extraordinary good looks only further amplified his awe-inspiring presence, and a single glance was all it took to tell that he was someone of great importance.

He was tall, slender, and well-proportioned, and he wore well tailored black clothing. At his waist knight's sword that despite its simple appearance, gave off an abnormally intimidating atmosphere.

"Regardless of the circumstances, I will not permit any further violence against him. You've gone far enough."

As he said this, he calmly walked past Tonchinkan and stood between them and Subaru,

Both Subaru and the men were left speechless by this excessively majestic act.

But it seemed they had different reasons for their silence.

Subaru had fallen silent from surprise, and because he was anxiously waiting to see how this never before seen development would progress, but Tonchinkan were different, their faces were going pale.

"N-No way…"

Chin pointed at the man, his lips turning purple as they trembled,

"Blazing red hair and eyes blue as the sky… And that sword's sheath with a dragon's craw engraved in it."

He pointed to each location as if to make sure, and then gulped,

"Reinhard… The Sword Saint Reinhard?!"

"Seems I won't need to introduce myself… That title is a bit much for me, though."

The young man called Reinhard muttered in a self-deprecating manner, but the glint in his eyes did not waver.

With his gaze piercing them, the men stepped back as though they were overwhelmed. They looked at each other as if to decide when to run, but,

"I'll leave it at that if you flee. You'd better head out onto the street.

But if you wish to use force, I shall be your opponent.”

He placed his hand on the handle of his sword, and jerked his chin toward Subaru who was stood behind him.

“It would be three on two in that case. In terms of numbers, you would have the advantage. I do not know to what extent my meager strength can aid him, but as a knight I shall face you.”

“Yo-You’re kidding! There’s no way!”

Reinhard’s declaration caused them to panic, they ran off into the street having forgotten to even conceal their weapons.

They were so panicked they couldn’t even make any parting threats like they did the first time. That in itself showed just how extraordinary the man before him was.

“I’m glad we’re both safe. Are you unhurt?”

After he watched the men leave, the young man turned around with a smile.

Suddenly, the air of intimidation covering the alley disappeared. Realizing that even that was something the young man had consciously manifested, Subaru couldn’t help but fall silent. Most of all.

“To be this cool after doing all that… This is beyond the level of Ikemen.”

His face, voice, demeanor and actions, they were all scoring extremely high on the Ikemen index. If he also had a personality and pedigree to match, he had to be doing something evil behind the scenes or the world’s balance would be thrown off.

Anyhow, setting aside his heart overflowing with envy, it was a fact that he had been saved. Subaru dropped to his knees and prostrated himself on the spot.

“I am ever so thankful to you for saving my life, please allow me to express my gratitude. I, Natsuki Subaru, admire your gallant spirit…”

“Relax, you don’t have to go that far. They felt that they had lost their advantage when it became three on two. It would have been different if I were alone.”

“No, judging by how terrified they were, forgot three on one, they’d back down even if it was ten on one… What’s with this guy. Is he truly an Ikemen to the core, both body and soul? You’re raising my route’s flags!”

It’d be a real tearjerker, so a handkerchief would be indispensable.

As he spoke random drivel, Subaru once again took a good look at Reinhard.

The more he looked at him, the more it seemed like his handsome features were sculpted by God himself, but his outfit didn’t really give the impression that he was a guard. Beyond the quality of the materials, his clothing didn’t seem very different from those of the general public milling about the street.

“Um, Reinhard-san… Can I call you that?”

“You don’t need to be so formal, Subaru.”

“You sure closed the distance smoothly… Uh, thank you once again, Reinhard. You were the only one who responded to my screams, how terribly lonely.”

Considering how many people there were, there was no way he was the only one who heard. Reinhard lowered his eyes slightly as Subaru lamented the lack of human kindness,

“I don’t really want to say this, but it can’t be helped. For most people, it would be very risky to antagonize such fellows. In that respect, your decision to call for the guards was the correct one.”

“From the way you’re talking, you’re a guard? You don’t really look like one.”

“I hear that often. Well, today’s my day off so I’m not in uniform, that's probably one of the reasons."

As Reinhard spread his arms with a strained smile, Subaru retorted internally.

The main reason he didn't seem like a guard was because he seemed like the furthest thing from the somewhat unrefined image the term suggested To add on…

"I believe they called you something like 'Sword Saint'…"

"My family is somewhat special, you see. Every day feels like the weight of their expectations could crush me."

He shrugged his shoulders in a lighthearted manner, it looked like he had a sense of humor as well.

There was already no doubt whatsoever that he was an Ikemen in both body and soul. Subaru couldn't hide his wonder toward this man whose very existence was Ikemen, but Reinhard stared at him intently,

"You've got unusual hair and clothing, and that goes for your name too… Where are you from? For what purpose have you come to the capital of Lugunica?"

"It's a bit hard to answer that first one. The typical setting of a small country to the east got some backlash so… H-How about further east, then—"

Subaru thought it seemed like a pretty safe answer. But Reinhard's reaction was stronger than expected.

"East of Lugunica… Surely you don't mean beyond the Grand Cascade, some kind of joke perhaps?"

"Grand Cascade?"

Subaru cocked his head at this unfamiliar term.

He figured it was something like a waterfall, but he was completely clueless when it came to the geography around here. To begin with, he didn’t even know how large the capital was. As far as Subaru knew, this Lugunica place only consisted of a trading street, some alleys, and the slum.

Essentially the same level as his old world, that only consisted of his home, his room, and the convenience store.

“Thinking of it that way, I’m basically being a shut-in even in another world, this has already become an inherent part of me… I really am something.”

“It doesn’t seem like you’re trying to trick me, so let’s leave it at that. Anyway, it does look like you’re not from around here. You must have had a reason for coming here, right? Lugunica is currently in a bit of a complex situation. I can aid you if you wish.”

“No, no, it’s your day off, right? You don’t have to throw it away just to help me out, you’ve already done more than enough… But while we’re at it, there is something I’d like to ask you.”

He shook his head at Reinhard’s proposal, and then raised his finger as if he just remembered something. Reinhard casually nodded, giving him the go ahead.

“I’m not well versed in the happenings of the world so I’m not sure if I’ll be able to answer, though.”

“Well, what I’m asking about relates to a person I’m searching for, so that’s fine. So, have you seen a silver-haired girl in a white robe around here?”

Having surveyed the main street several times, he could tell that Not-Satella’s clothes stood out. Her silver hair was rare much like Subaru’s black hair, and of course there was her robe with the hawk embroidered on it.

Thinking back, that white robe seemed expensive in its own way. Considering she had an insignia with a jewel embedded in it, he guessed her lineage must have been a prestigious one.

“A white robe and silver hair…”

“In addition, she’s super gorgeous. And there’s this cat… Well, it’s not like she goes around showing it off. That’s all I can tell you about her, ring any bells?”

There would be no doubt it was her if the cat spirit was a match as well, but since it was usually hidden in her hair most of the time that was probably too much to ask for.

Mentioning her beauty, he ended up thinking she and Reinhard who was very handsome himself would look perfect standing next to each other. This arbitrary thought caused a strange envy to well up within him.

“…What are you planning to do when you find her?”

“I’m going to find something she lost, or rather, would it be something she’s looking for? Anyway, I’ll find it and give it to her.”

Of course Subaru didn’t actually have it on him right now, and it was even possible that it hadn’t even been stolen yet.

Reinhard narrowed his eyes at Subaru’s response, and contemplated for a moment.

“No, sorry. I don’t really know. I could help you with your search if you wish, though.”

“I can’t impose on you like that. It’s alright, I’ll find it one way or another.”

Subaru raised his hands when Reinhard offered his aid, and then decided that he would wander around the main street for now. If things went well, he might catch sight of her on the street like he did the third time.

If possible, it’d be good to stop Felt on the stop and prevent the theft entirely.

Thinking about what could happen after, he felt that that would be the best way, and became all the more impatient.

“The problem is how to stop her with that agility of hers…

Repeated sideways jumps like this to block the road, a zone defense?”

“What unusual movements. For what purpose?”

“It’s a defensive action to pressure the opponent and snatch away the ball. Despite how it looks, it’s a well-established defense. Later, you end up participating in a position where you have no effect whatsoever on the ball, it’s that kind of ability.”

Subaru was someone who, when he participated in dodgeball, would simply stand right by the line in such a way that you didn’t know whether he was infield or outfield. It wasn’t uncommon for him to go entire games without once touching the ball.

“Anyway, I’d better head to the trading street first.”

“Are you leaving?”

“Yeah, I’m going. You really helped me out. I’ll definitely repay you someday… Can I meet you at the guard station or something?”

“I believe so, you just have to mention my name. Otherwise, on days off I’m usually wandering about the capital.”

“I wouldn’t really want to wander around town looking for a man… This isn’t an Otome game.”

He replied with a joke and suddenly raised his hand, to which Reinhard responded, “Be careful”, cool to the very end.

As if those words were giving him a push forward, Subaru successfully left the alley having sustained no injuries or losses.

—Never realizing that blue eyes were on him, appraising him.

Chapter 16:
Negotiation in the Slums

1

Having returned to the trading street, Subaru immediately started trying his hardest to locate Not-Satella.

Although, all he could really do was stare into the crowd with eyes as wide as dinner plates. In the third world, he wasn't very far from the fruit shop when he encountered her, so he decided to position himself around there for now. Subaru could see the shopkeeper's face in the corner of his vision and his expression seemed rather stern.

"Our meeting didn't go that well this time… But I know that you're actually a great guy deep down! I know it!"

Subaru directed a smile and a thumbs up at him, and the shopkeeper immediately averted his eyes with an expression that looked like he'd seen something unpleasant.

Subaru felt somewhat lonely as he withdrew his thumb, and once again directed his gaze toward the street.

The street was swarmed with all sorts of people as usual.

Diverse inhabitants of a fantasy world, and among them Subaru saw what one could perhaps call a beastman, a bipedal dog-like being that had incredibly fluffy fur which caused him to freak out. He wanted to feel it, really badly.

"What's with that loveliness… They've already won at birth, just like Reinhard or Not-Satella, it's sinful."

Their gait was tottering due to their short stature, giving them the charm of a small animal.

"Kh… Calm down, my right arm… This isn't the time to feel them up, have you forgotten why we're here?!"

He somehow gained control of his arm that was going to reach for that white fur, and after he regretfully watched them walk away, he returned his gaze to its original position.

However, it had already been almost ten minutes since he started watching the road, and he didn't find anyone that looked like her. Confirming the time on his phone, he found that it had almost been an hour since his reset.

"My sense of time feels off, but going off my memories it'd be weird if the theft hasn't happened by now…"

As he said this, an unpleasant premonition suddenly flashed through his mind.

Once he felt the chill of doubt, there was no escaping it. Subaru scratched his head and let out various 'Aahs' and 'Oohs', and having no other choice, he walked toward the stall before him.

"Hey, old man."

"What, broke kid."

Standing before him was the owner of the fruit shop, clearly annoyed that Subaru dared to show his face again as he responded.

True or not, that was a pretty harsh way of saying it Subaru thought as he forced a smile, and without being discouraged,

"It's true that I'm broke so I won't deny it, but… There's something I wanna ask you, old man. Has there been a pickpocketing incident around here?"

"You've got some nerve asking questions without even buying anything… Also, too bad, but that sort of thing is really nothing unusual."

"Seriously?!"

Subaru couldn't help but raise his voice in surprise at this mean-spirited response. But it wasn't as if he didn't understand. To begin with, the loot house was a place where stolen items from all over the capital were gathered. There was enough theft going on to fill that giant storehouse, which gave an idea as to the level of public order around here.

"Does this mean I'm out of luck…?"

"—But, I do remember the commotion just now since it was unusual. There were two or three blasts of magic, you see. Have a look."

He leaned out of his stall and pointed to the left, at a stall about four spaces away. Subaru's line of sight followed and,

"Woah, incredible."

"Those icicles pierced that wall like arrows and left that damage. They disappeared immediately, though."

Right next to the stall was the entrance to a narrow alley, and one of its walls had holes bored into it.

There were four of them, and each one was around the size of a 500-yen coin. Since they were able to piece a stone wall, the thought of their speed and power at the moment of impact sent a chill down his spine.

"This isn't like those ice rocks she fired before… I wonder if she's angrier this time."

If he approached her carelessly, he might end up getting blasted with them himself. The thought of this caused a cold sweat to form on his forehead.

"But this means I was too late this time too."

Setting aside his frightening imaginations, he wiped the sweat off his forehead as he muttered this.

Not-Satella was most likely the one who left these marks behind. If it was a theft involving her, it was probably alright to assume that Felt had snatched the insignia from her.

That being the case, it meant that he had lost the means to link up with Not-Satella.

At least, there was no surefire way to meet her as far as Subaru knew.

In other words, what he ought to prioritize was,

“Meeting up with Felt who has the insignia, huh. I’d like to get to her before she reaches the loot house, and trade my phone for the insignia on the spot if possible.”

He truly did not want to approach the loot house, considering he had been slaughtered there twice.

Strictly speaking, what he actually wanted to avoid was getting involved with Elsa there.

“It’ll just be a repeat of the first time if I’m too late. Having said that, reaching Rom first and waiting for Felt would be no different from the second time.”

So the crucial point was Felt’s location.

At the moment, she was probably desperately running around in order to shake Not-Satella off. Of course it wasn’t like she could run forever so he figured it should be possible to catch her somewhere, but such a thing would prove extremely difficult for Subaru who was even less familiar with the capital than the average person.

“Should I rely on Return By Death and just use this attempt for investigation…?”

It certainly seemed like an effective strategy, but Subaru shook his head and rejected it right away.

First, having experienced death three times, he didn’t think he could make the decision to throw his life away in order to retry. All three deaths were quite literally so painful he could die. If he could settle things without tasting death, then he’d rather only ever experience it at the very end, on his deathbed.

In addition, he was also concerned about the fact that he didn’t know exactly how Return By Death worked. Throwing his life away only to find out he had zero left wouldn’t even be funny as a joke.

“In the end, I guess I’ll just have to struggle all I can while I’ve still got life. That much is obvious, though.”

He twisted his waist, grinding his joints, and started bending and stretching to warm up.

The shopkeeper seemed annoyed by the fact that he was doing radio calisthenics in front of his stall. Having warmed up, Subaru raised his hand toward him as he jogged away.

“Alright, thanks a lot, old man. I’ll be leaving now. I’ll definitely buy some appas next time.”

“Yeah, you’d be more than welcome as a customer. Work hard, broke kid.”

“For sure. —I really am praying I have some money the next time I show up here.”

The shopkeeper apathetically saw him off as he broke into a run.

He was headed toward the slums—But not in the direction of the loot house. He had already decided that he’d be raising BAD END flags if he went there. That being the case, it was time to try a new angle of attack.

2

“Where Felt lives, huh? Head two streets down that way, it’s ahead of there.”

“Thanks a lot, you’re a lifesaver, brother.”

The middle aged man said with a weak smile as he disappeared into the creaking door.

Thinking back to how the man's strained smile was filled with sympathy from beginning to end, Subaru pumped his fist at his strategy's success.

He was covered in mud and dirt, his appearance was such that even slum dwellers found it pitiful.

"It was a strategy I devised from my experiences in those first two times, but… That sure was effective, huh."

As he said this, Subaru wiped off his sleeves which had become crusty now that the mud on them had dried.

Having arrived here, he devised an ingenious plan to pinpoint Felt's destination, which was to play the part of an extremely downtrodden person.

When he was wandering around the slums with Not-Satella in the first world, he had just recently been beaten into the ground by Tonchinkan, and the inhabitants' reception was correspondingly sympathetic and cooperative.

Completely different from the second time, when their reaction was cold and curt since he had no real damage to speak of. Thinking back to that, he ended up going a little overboard with his appearance this time.

"Well, I did end up stepping in some unknown animal's dung and stuff."

Thank goodness he barely managed to avoid falling in it, he thought as he trembled.

Since it only got on his shoes, his honor was probably still intact.

Unfortunately, even as he thought this there wasn't the slightest hint of honor or anything of the sort left in his filthy appearance.

"I've got four reports right now… Three of them match."

Sympathizing with him, four people gave him information. Right now, three of the comments about Felt's location matched. Unless they were all conspiring to screw him over, it was probably okay to assume the information was accurate.

The one differing report came from an old woman who was hard of hearing, so she definitely wasn't trying to deceive him. Maybe.

"I think I've found out where she sleeps, but… Now the problem becomes whether or not she'll come here."

He did find out where she normally stayed, but since she was currently in the midst of escaping it was fifty-fifty whether or not she would run here. If she was worried her pursuer would destroy her place, perhaps she would think it better to avoid it. —If that happened, he could only say he had no luck.

"It's not like worrying about it will do anything. I'm not going to worry about things I can't answer, alright."

Even when he was at a loss, he wouldn't waste time on things that couldn't be helped. His decisiveness shined here too.

Subaru jogged deeper into the slums as he knocked the hardened dirt off his clothes. When he first came here, he couldn't even do anything besides hide behind Not-Satella let alone independently gather information, he had developed quite a bit. Made him want to reward himself.

"A reward for my hard work… Am I going to open my corn potage again?"

As he fished around in his bag, he approached a road. He then almost collided with someone who suddenly emerged from there.

He moved out of the way in a panic, but his back ended up colliding with that narrow road, knocking the wind out of him. Watching him, the person he was about to walk into spoke in a gentle manner,

"Oh, do excuse me. Are you alright?"

“I’m good, I’m good. Despite how I look I’m actuallyyyy!”

Subaru raised his face to play it off, but was unable to end his sentence when he saw who he was talking to. Hearing his high-pitched voice, the black-haired woman giggled slightly.

“You’re a fun kid, aren’t you. Are you really alright?”

She brushed up the hair covering her ear. Even this gesture was somehow sexy, and Subaru thought to himself that her each and every action was as erotic as usual.

A sexy beauty who behaved in an erotic manner—Someone he absolutely did not want to meet.

“—You don’t have to be so afraid, I’m not going to do anything to you.”

“Af-Afraid? It’s not like I’m afraid of anything? What proof do you have to claim that I’m nervous? I’m seriously freaking out, though—, but you can’t talk down to me like that—, I’m really nervous, though—”

“Your scent…”

Ignoring his attempt to act tough, her eyes narrowed into a sweet smile.

Subaru cocked his head at this, and in response she used her well-shaped nose to sniff.

“When someone is afraid, it shows in their scent. Right now, you’re scared… And you’re angry too. At me.”

She seemed to be having a good time exposing his inner feelings as she looked up to him.

Subaru went silent, only responding with a forced smile as he took deep breaths to calm his rapidly beating heart.

Her words were true.

Subaru was afraid of her. The woman before him was the most terrifying person he knew in this world.

She was also the one he hated most in this world.

He truly wanted to beat her down if it was possible for him to do so, and before that he had an unbearable urge to run away immediately.

He had died by her hand twice now. She inspired fear from the bottom of his heart, and who could laugh at him for it?

Elsa narrowed her eyes like a snake in response to his silence. But even as he felt her gaze pinning him down, he would not allow himself to show weakness by averting his eyes.

She licked her lips at his bravado,

"…I am somewhat interested, but it's fine. It wouldn't do to cause a fuss right now."

"Th-That's not a very nice thing to say. Act too scary and that beauty will go to waste, you know?"

"Ah, very nice. —Hide your hostility and it'd be even better."

She reached out and lightly tapped his forehead with her finger, and this simple gesture released the tension from his body.

Subaru exhaled, his shoulders heaving, and Elsa placed her finger against her lip,

"Well then, I'll be taking my leave. I get the feeling we'll see each other again."

"If it's a bright place with lots of people around, I'll be able to relax too."

It took everything he had to get those sarcastic words out.

Elsa flipped her cloak with a longing smile as she disappeared into the alley's darkness. After he watched her quite literally disappear, Subaru felt exhaustion rush through him as he leaned against the wall.

“That… That was an unexpected encounter, seriously. To think she was prowling around here before going to the loot house…”

This unexpected encounter almost tore his heart apart.

In terms of mental preparation, this was far more of a shock than Not-Satella. He wanted to pray that this would be his last encounter with her if possible.

“Felt’s place should be around here, I believe… But surely it’s not possible that Elsa already destroyed it…?”

She was a pervert who drowned in pleasure when she sliced people’s bellies open.

It wouldn’t be strange if she carved up a few people to kill time before the appointment. Furthermore, now that he was heading deeper into the slums, he couldn’t help but imagine all sorts of horrors.

“I-It’s okay, probably. There isn’t the stench of blood, nor do I see any, maybe.”

The garbage and the rotten smell made it impossible to discern the smell of blood, and it was too dark for him to confirm if there were any bloodstains around, but there definitely wasn’t any blood. That’s what he wanted to think.

He didn’t have the courage to run right now, so he slowly continued onward with stealthy steps.

Even the hum of an insect or the sight of a not yet empty bottle of alcohol would cause him to freak out as he searched.

About five minutes after his encounter with Elsa, he finally reached a rundown shack.

“This should be it according to my information… But does a human really live here?”

Subaru tilted his head as he stood in front of a wooden board that seemed to be the door.

The shack before him was around the size of two of those porta potties one would see around construction sites and the like. It felt like someone was actually putting the saying, ‘half a tatami mat to stand, one tatami mat to sleep’ into practice.

“This is definitely what you call a place to sleep, so I guess that’s about right.”

Even so, the idea of such a small girl living in a place like this caused him to feel some pity. He felt like he could forgive her, that her ambition and greed couldn’t be helped.

“She’s curling up her already small body and living in a place like this. Guess it couldn’t be helped that her personality would turn out so warped. Aah, it just couldn’t be helped, poor thing. Aah, how pitiful.”

“You’re going way too far, it’s disgusting. I can’t believe you’re looking around someone else’s bedroom like that.”

As he was entering his sympathetic mode, a voice from behind him caused him to turn around.

Before his eyes was a small blonde girl glaring at him with disgust —Felt.

She didn’t look particularly different from their previous meetings. That her slightly dirty clothes were now dirtier than usual was probably a sign that the chase was much more intense this time.

“What’s with that increasingly pitying expression? You looking down on me just ‘cause I’m a girl and a little bit filthy?”

She made no attempt to hide her displeasure, and Subaru instinctively dropped his shoulders in relief.

He was truly happy that he was able to find the girl he was looking for. He was worried about what might have happened after his near miss with Elsa, but looked like things were alright after all.

In response to his murmur, she snorted, “What, a customer?”

She stared at him, still cautious,

“Since you came all the way here, I assume you have some business with me? … Judging by your look, you’re not from around here.”

“Oh. To see that I’m not one of you, you’ve got good eyes.”

“Even the guys around here are a little more careful about their appearance. That level of filth is just unnatural. In truth, you’re even dirtier than us right now.”

As usual, she always had a comeback—Made him want to retract his earlier sympathy.

Felt ignored his inner feelings even as his veins popped, and stepped back, “Well?”

“What do you want? If you want something stolen, I’ll need payment in advance. Depending on the target, I might ask for more after the fact.”

“Commissioned thefts… This sure is a greedy business you’re running. Are you proud of your sticky fingers?”

“It’s how I stay alive. If it weren’t for this, I’d have to sell my body. So, what’ll it be? Or do you perhaps have some other business? Depending on what it is…”

Felt rapidly moved her fingers to show off her dexterity.

Suddenly, a small knife appeared in her hand as if by magic. Probably a warning that depending on why he was here, she would use it to defend herself.

Speaking practically, if he ended up fighting her now he would have no chance of winning. She would just disappear from his sight with that speed of hers, and before he knew it he would complete the ‘Stabbed to death in a back alley: BAD END 2’ route.

“What I want is just one thing. —I want to purchase the insignia you stole right here and right now.”

Chapter 17:
Negotiation in the Loot House

1

Having reached this point, Subaru decided that beating around the bush would only worsen her impression of him.

There was also the fact that Elsa was prowling around the area, so he wanted to finish this up as soon as possible. However, this caused Felt to become even more cautious.

She placed her hand on her chest, presumably where she was keeping the insignia.

“How do you know that I stole an insignia? I don’t imagine the one who requested it would have leaked it, and I only just stole it. It certainly isn’t the sort of thing you’d just happen to hear.”

“Now that you mention it, that was far too impatient. I’m so damned careless!”

“…You can’t possibly negotiate with anyone if you show your hand that easily. You crumbled way too easily to a bit of pressure.”

Subaru crouched down with his head in his knees and Felt knelt down to meet his gaze as she spoke, “Well?”

“So you want to purchase this insignia, what’s that about? You’re not with the woman who made the request, right? A business rival or something?”

“I guess you could call her a business rival, but there’s probably a mountain of things that doesn’t cover?”

“I don’t get it. Well, I don’t really care about that anyway.”

As Subaru agonized over how to talk himself out of this one, Felt seemed indifferent as she laughed it off. She then extracted the draconic insignia from her bosom.

In her hand was the insignia, the jewel within it glowing red. She dangled it before him as if to flaunt it,

“I’ll just sell it to whoever can offer me the highest price. That woman will probably be mad if I scrap her request, though.”

Setting aside these words that would only complicate things, Subaru once again cleared his throat and donned a serious expression,

“So, you’re going to allow me to negotiate for it?”

“I’ll hear anyone out so long as they can bring me some profit. Ain’t it obvious?”

“Talk about a strong will… I’m going to be offering an item worth more than twenty holy gold coins. I would like to use it to purchase your insignia.”

“Hmm, I see. You’re offering quite a bit, huh. That’d certainly reward my efforts… But your rival’s offering that much too, you know?”

“Yeah, right. The deal was ten holy gold coins. Too much greed is going to kill you, you know? Seriously.”

Practically speaking, he did think that that was probably why the first massacre happened. Cause of death: Greed.

Since he even knew the exact number, she must have thought that her tricks wouldn’t work. After her eyes widened slightly, she scratched her head in resignation,

“What, you even know that much? … That’s right, it was ten holy gold coins. Even so, once she learns she’s got a rival, she’s bound to offer more, isn’t that right?”

“That much is true, you know?” The edges of the perhaps fourteen or fifteen year old girl’s lips curled upward.

She sure is sly, as Subaru felt a certain degree of admiration toward her boldness he was also excited at the prospect of negotiating from a superior position like this.

“I don’t suppose you’d listen if I asked to make the deal right here and now?”

“Obviously. I mean, the stuff you said earlier is pretty suspect too. I definitely didn’t mishear you, and what you said was not that you have twenty holy gold coins, but rather something worth that much. It’s unfair for only one side to know what cards are being played in a negotiation, right?”

“I think what really matters in a negotiation is how much you can prepare beforehand, but… I suppose it’s also true that you can’t make a decision without knowing what I’ve got.”

He didn’t want to waste time with her grumbling.

Making a decision, he pulled this negotiation’s key item, his cell phone, out of his breast pocket.

The sight of this small contraption caused Felt to raise her eyebrow slightly, but that was it. As usual, she didn’t really care unless there was a clear connection to money.

“That’s supposed to be worth twenty holy gold coins? Doesn’t look any different from a hand mirror or something to me.”

“This is one of those ‘Meteor’ things that are all the rage these days. It can freeze a moment in time. Alright, now check this out—NATSUKI FLASH times eight!!”

Subaru turned on continuous shooting mode, causing mechanical sounds and flashes of light to emanate in rapid succession.

White light filled the alley, and as the light covered her, Felt reacted to the sounds and flashes with a rather unfeminine shriek.

Subaru was happy to have gotten a better reaction than last time, and quickly thrust the screen before her when it looked like she wanted to complain. Her red eyes widened in surprise.

“This is the power of this meteor. It can produce exquisite pictures in this manner. And if you’ll let me add some PR speak, it’s the only one of its kind in this world. So, how about it?”

As Subaru looked down at her with pride, Felt hummed in response. She examined the phone in his hand closely, and once she’d looked it over, she nodded in understanding.

“…Doesn’t look like you’re lying. But is this supposed to be me? You said it produced a clear picture of the world, but I think I’m prettier than this.”

“I get the feeling that you’ve got a fine base, but when the presentation is this bad there’s really nothing to be said… If we cleaned you up and put you in some nice clothes, you’d be like a totally different person, for sure.”

“That condescending attitude and the way you ended that sentence piss me off… Kinda makes me want to never show you that.”

He had needlessly provoked her, but Felt’s attitude seemed favorable..

But then, that these slum dwellers didn’t easily go along with others’ plans was one of their strengths.

Felt smiled sadistically at his proud expression,

“I’ll admit you’ve got something unusual there, but it’s still unclear how much it’s worth, you know? Let me warn you, I’m not so much of an airhead as to just accept everything the other party says, I’m not going to believe this thing is an easy twenty holy gold coins just like that.”

“…Well, that’s obvious. I wouldn’t really mind if your brain were a sponge, but I suppose we do need a third party’s opinion.”

It would have been nice to keep things going and settle it right here, but he did expect that it might not work. The problem now was who to use as a third party,

“Deep in the slums, there’s a place called the loot house. The place is as the name would suggest, I think it would be quickest to ask the weird old man in there. He appraises things fairly, you know? He’s got some experience, so he should be able to judge a meteor as well.”

“It comes to this after all…”

He also expected that she would end up suggesting this.

From her perspective the loot house was the place she was supposed to meet Elsa, and also a place that had a bodyguard she could rely on in case things got violent.

When you also added the appraisal of the meteor, there was no other choice. Despite this, Subaru really did wish to settle this before they reached the loot house.

“I’m fine with having the old man take a look, but…”

“You’re suddenly calling him an old man even though you’ve never even met him, you might end up regretting that, you know? He’s actually pretty scary if you’re rude to him.”

“Although he does seem to dote on a certain foul-mouthed girl, giving her milk and stuff…”

This was clearly irrelevant, but Subaru did feel like it was as if he was doting on his granddaughter.

Regardless, the problem wasn’t the person, but the location.

“Can you not call him out here or something? You can use my phone if you want.”

“Even if you ask me, I’ve no clue what I’m supposed to do.”

“That’s true, isn’t it. —I’ve only got family and stuff in here, anyway.”

And to pad his lonely contacts list, he also had the police station, fire department, ambulance, time announcement service, weather report etc. It was like a prideful loneliness.

“I don’t know what your issue is, but if you’re in a hurry let’s head there right away. There was a little something I wanted to do, though.”

“Something you wanted to do?”

“Ah, the owner was a lot more persistent than expected, it was a real pain to get away so I wanted to sabotage her. Give ‘em a little money and the guys around here will happily do it.”

“Alright, let’s go, right now, immediately, in a flash!”

As Felt started walking, Subaru started pushing her shoulders from behind and hurried her toward the loot house.

“What the hell?” She pouted as Subaru hurried her, congratulating himself for minimizing unnecessary damage.

To try to hinder Not-Satella while she was chasing after her insignia, there was a limit to how far you could go for a little money. If it meant being blasted by ice and writhing in pain, it was probably better to just stay home clutching their empty stomachs.

“But we’ll have him look quickly and then seal the deal on the spot.”

“Man, why are you in such a hurry? You’re getting pretty sweaty, live strong.”

“Looks like everyone around here says that, is it a slogan or something?!”

Subaru thought it ought to be revised to ‘live stubborn’.

Leaving such impressions behind, he headed to the loot house for the third time, in this fourth world.

—He’d get out immediately. He’d dash out of there. He’d leave even if he had to leave them behind.

Having come to this decision internally, Subaru was fire up and pushed hard at the shoulders before him.

“That hurts.”

“That hurts!”

He was kicked.

2

“To the rats,”

“Where do they sell boric acid balls? Poison.”

“To the skeletons,”

“Digging is a lot harder than you’d expect, huh. Pitfall.”

“To the noble dragon we are,”

“It probably really exists since this is a fantasy world, but if I were to actually face it I definitely wouldn’t be able to do anything. But it certainly fascinates me, so I do want to meet it. I can’t deceive this wavering heart of mine, however I can’t say I dislike it. A real shitbag of a feeling.”

“Can’t you just say the password without adding all that crap?! You’re too damned annoying!”

The door opened from within with such force that it was like it had been kicked open, but Subaru had anticipated this and quickly leaped backward to avoid taking damage.

There was a giant standing there, too tall for the door and growling in frustration—It was the bald old man Rom whom Subaru was already familiar with. His face was red, it seemed like his blood pressure had spiked.

“You’ll have an aneurysm if too much blood flows into your head.

That’s pretty dangerous even with modern medicine.”

“If you know it’s bad for me, don’t anger me! What’s with you?! I have to keep the place cleared out today, so you can’t enter! You can’t! Serves you right!”

Rom stamped his feet in a very immature fashion. But, what wiped the smirk off his face was,

“Aah, sorry. This guy’s one of my guests too. Let him in, old man.”

Felt who was hiding behind Subaru.

She looked at Rom with sympathy as his shoulders dropped in disappointment. She then cast a sidelong glance at Subaru whose expression was apathetic as he whistled,

“You’ve got a pretty horrible personality, huh. You’re the worst, and that’s putting it lightly.”

“I just somehow end up wanting to tease people. The type that shines when they get to mess around, huh… I thought I’d discovered my M tendencies, but it turns out I was an S as well…? Isn’t this the perfect offense and defense?!”

“I don’t know and it looks like it’d be best not to know so I’m not listening. We’re coming in, Rom.”

Felt slipped by Rom who was hanging his head and entered the loot house as if it were completely natural.

Rom’s gaze seeking an explanation was ignored, so he turned his confused face toward Subaru instead. Subaru nodded at his wrinkled face,

“I’d like to start over from when I was teaching her what words meant… Get in quickly.”

Rom seemed to have given up on everything as he carelessly shrank his giant frame and went back in. Following him, Subaru entered as well, welcomed by the dusty interior.

Still cautious, he snuck a glance inward, but fortunately it didn't look like Elsa or Not-Satella were lying in wait.

Felt casually sat at the counter, drinking some milk like she owned the place. She noticed his gaze,

"What? This is the only cold one, I'm not giving it to you."

"Your shamelessness doesn't bother you at all, huh. I'll take some booze, old man."

"You're just as shameless as she is! I'm not giving you any! None at all!"

The floor creaked under Rom's giant body as he ran to the other side of the counter to hide a box that seemed to contain his drinks. His turmoil almost inspired pity, and Subaru chuckled in response, "That was a joke."

"I see, so that's where the alcohol is. Now that I know where it is, it's practically mine already…"

"You're saying that out loud! To try to loot booze from the owner of the loot house, you wanna be lower than the lowest?!"

"Woah… You'll make me blush. And it's not like I'll do the stealing myself. I'll be hiring Felt."

"Sorry, old man. I can't turn down a job."

"Will no one take my side?! Isn't this my house?!"

By this point he was actually worried about Rom's blood pressure, so he decided to stop teasing him.

Felt seemed disappointed since she was just getting into it, but Subaru brushed her off with an ingratiating smile and turned to the counter

He didn't want to sit on these seats any longer than he had to, so he got the point right away.

"Alright, old man. We got sidetracked, but let's get to the point."

"Feels to me like that was mostly your fault, but… What do you want?"

"What I want to request is an appraisal, basically. I'd like you to put a price on this meteor I've brought and guarantee its value to Felt."

Rom's gray eyes became serious when the conversation turned to business.

He looked at Felt to confirm this, and returned his gaze to Subaru after she nodded.

His eyes suggested he wanted to see the item, and Subaru took it out of his pocket.

What first caught his eye was its metallic appearance. It looked like a toy in his oversized hands as he gently handled it.

"This is a meteor, huh. Even I've never seen one before."

"There's probably only one of this thing in the world. Also, it's pretty delicate so handle it carefully. If it breaks, I'll seriously have to die."

Meaning a retry.

As he felt around its exterior, he gently opened the flip phone. Its startup sound was what first surprised him, and the wallpaper was the next surprise.

"This picture is…"

"I thought it was perfect timing, you see. To show you how effective this thing is, I decided to use a scene from Felt's day as the wallpaper."

The phone's wallpaper had been set to one of the pictures of Felt he had just recently taken.

He picked the one he thought looked the cutest, and the image quality was decent as well so he thought it was pretty nice to look at.

Rom compared the picture with the real Felt who was sipping milk right next to him.

“What a surprise. I don’t think there’s anything out there that could produce such an excellent picture.”

“It’s a meteor that seals away a moment in time, you see. A human couldn’t draw anything even close to this, right? I could even photograph you if you’d like.”

“I’m interested, but it’s also somewhat frightening. It doesn’t shorten your life or anything, right?”

“Regardless of the age and regardless of the world, looking at a picture brings to mind that kind of superstition, huh…”

Rom’s reaction felt like it came from before the Taisho period. Next to him, Felt’s ears pricked up when they started talking about lifespan. Subaru reassured them by responding, “You’ll live to eighty just fine even if you get photographed”, and then used the camera function to photograph Rom.

Rom hummed as he looked at the picture.

Doing this before his very eyes was probably sufficient as a demonstration of the phone’s abilities. To begin with, he already knew from personal experience that Rom’s impression of the phone would be favorable.

“This is definitely something amazing. If I were selling this, I’d take at least fifteen… No, twenty holy gold coins. That’s how much it’s worth.”

Perhaps his smuggler spirit had been stimulated, his eyes were sparkling.

He dealt in stolen goods, Subaru wondered if such an occupation was really one to be proud of, but he was still relieved to receive Rom's seal of approval.

Subaru turned to Felt, his nostrils flaring as his face filled with pride.

"Well, that's what I'm offering you. Just as I said, an item worth more than twenty holy gold coins. I'd like to trade this for your insignia."

"Seems you make that face often, it's annoying."

Perhaps unhappy that things went as he expected, Felt's expression was one of displeasure. But still, that didn't change the fact that this meant she had a windfall coming her way.

Her gaze moved toward the cell phone in Rom's hand,

"Well, I'm definitely happy now that I have a guarantee that this thing can make me some money. It looks like I don't need to doubt your claim of twenty holy gold coins either. Alright, I accept the card you're playing."

"Right?! Okay, negotiations went off without a hitch. Selling it is up to you, do your best! Anyway, I'm in a hurry, so I'll be taking my leave now…"

He approached Felt in a hurry and extended his hand, seeking the insignia.

However, his palm was gently pushed away.

When Subaru raised his eyebrow, Felt brought her face close to his,

"Hold on a moment. Why are you in such a hurry?"

"It's not like I'm in a hurry or anything? A-Also, your face is too close."

"What, you're the sort that gets shy when a girl gets close to you?"

“Nah, you probably haven’t bathed in several days so there’s this terrible stench.”

She walloped his jaw from directly below.

The pain of biting his tongue brought tears to Subaru’s eyes as he recoiled.

“You sure don’t go easy on the girls, huh?!”

“And you, can’t you take a little joke?! I’m already shedding blood here!”

The cut in his mouth was fairly deep, and the metallic taste brought back some unpleasant feelings.

Felt’s face turned red, and she covered her face with her shoulder-length hair.

“Do I really smell that much…”

“I just said that to hide my embarrassment, is what I’d like to tell you but I can’t lie to myself.”

He turned his face away, still teary-eyed, and collapsed on the spot, his teary form looking rather effeminate. The triviality of this act sent Felt beyond the point of anger, and she simply took deep breaths with her fingers on her forehead.

“Alright. Hold on a moment. Let’s get back to what we were talking about. Calm down, cool off.”

“What we were talking about, huh. Yeah, that’s right. For now, I think it’d be best to start cleaning up around your bed. There’s quite a bit of garbage around there, so even when you sleep the stink…”

“How about we forget about my stench and get back to the other thing?!”

“…You… Sure kick, quickly…”

She kicked forward in embarrassment, and scored a clean hit on Subaru's jaw due to the position he was crouching in. He didn't bite his tongue this time, but he hadn't even stopped bleeding yet, and the second impact caused even more blood to pour out.

"Drinking too much blood makes me feel absolutely horrible…"

"If you've learned your lesson, take our conversation more seriously. Well, getting back to our return to the topic at hand, I'll ask you again, why are you in such a hurry?"

She extinguished the anger from her expression, and looked as cold as she could as she asked this.

Rom read the mood and remained silent, so he couldn't look to him for help. Subaru shrugged his shoulders in resignation,

"Life doesn't last forever. Every second is precious, I don't want to waste any…"

"Aah, right, right. That's enough of that. Hey…"

Subaru attempted to cover things up, but Felt stopped him in his tracks.

Her red eyes narrowed, and with a detached attitude she finally pierced the heart of the matter.

"To begin with, why do you even want this insignia?"

Chapter 18:
Battle in the Loot House

1

They saw Subaru's breath catch, and he realized what a mistake he had made.

This was where he needed to brush things off with a casual joke like he had been doing, but instead his complete lack of communication ability had him displaying his weakness for all to see.

In a negotiation, there was nothing that could make you lose your advantage quite like having your weakness exposed.

As a result, the edges of Felt's mouth relaxed in response to Subaru's silence.

"The woman who hired me didn't want to say anything either, and it looks like it's the same for you, huh?"

"…Thievery is pretty immoral in itself, so naturally anyone involved in it would have some shady business going on."

"But you're the shadiest one here. Thinking about it clearly, what you're trying to do is to snatch away a stolen item requested by someone else."

With the cruelty of a cat toying with its prey, Felt incessantly attacked Subaru's incompetence.

She then coldly addressed him with a sadistic smile,

"What is this insignia anyway? The truth is it's worth way more than it looks. That's why you all want it, right? In other words, it's worth more than a meteor."

"Wait, Felt. That way of thinking is really dangerous. I can pretty much guess at what you're going to say next thanks to my gamer brain, but… You'd better leave it at that."

Subaru saw her miser gauge start to fill up, and tried to keep her in check even as he broke into a cold sweat. At this rate, she'd just keep on raising her price.

If that happened, the negotiation would drag on and they'd walk right into the BAD END waiting for them.

"It's more than twenty holy gold coins, just take the deal! Don't try for more than that! El… The one who hired you can't go over twenty either! You're not going to get more!"

"And why do you know that?"

"Ah…"

"You're slipping up. —So you know her."

How easy it would be if he could just declare that he knew because of Return By Death.

But even if he actually tried explaining it, there's no way she'd believe him.

The suspicion in her eyes was getting deeper, she probably wouldn't believe a word he said at this point.

If it was going to turn out like this, he'd be better off just snatching the insignia from her, but,

"This muscly old man's going to be a problem if I try that…"

"She got you good, kid. Pretty pathetic to be outwitted by a girl younger than you."

"It's probably because of how you raised her. Her stubbornness could make me cry."

If he resorted to violence, he'd just get flattened by Rom.

Even supposing he were able to snatch it away from her, he didn't think he could outrun her.

If it came to a long distance race, Subaru's ability was pretty low even among his classmates.

No matter how much he placed in the top three elsewhere, he could only ever manage consolation prizes in long distance runs which meant he would generally never get an A.

"Felt, please…"

"Begging won't do you any good. I acknowledge your right to negotiate, but it's hardly fair to end things without even hearing the other party out, right? But it'd be a different matter if you could tell me what this thing is really worth and produce adequate compensation."

Her pressing eyes didn't contain the slightest hint of mercy or compassion.

Her eyes were completely focused on him, hoping to deduce the truth from his behavior. However, it wouldn't be possible to ascertain the insignia's value no matter how much she started at him

But the reason he wanted the insignia was different from Elsa's, he just wanted to repay a favor.

Beyond that he only knew what it looked like, that it had a jewel embedded in it, he didn't know anything Felt didn't.

Thus, it would not be possible for him to give her the response she desired.

"The reason I want that insignia… Is so I can return it to its owner."

"—Hah?"

That's why, with all of his sincerity, he revealed the truth

"I want to return it to its owner. That's why I want it. That's all."

As her eyes widened, Subaru raised his head and repeated his declaration.

Her crimson eyes were filled with hostility as she glared at him, but even so Subaru could only remain silent.

He didn’t have the leeway to crack jokes, he sincerely got on his knees and lowered his head.

“…Felt. It doesn’t look like the kid’s lying.”

“Don’t be fooled, old man. He’s clearly screwing around. Return it to its owner? As if he’d pay such a large sum to get it back from the person who stole it, that’s absurd. It’d be over if he just brought a guard with him to apprehend me.”

He couldn’t do that.

Not-Satella didn’t want guards involved in this.

That’s why he even refused Reinhard’s offer to help.

If it was something inconvenient for her, then Subaru wouldn’t do it.

That was all he could do, his sincere response to her for saving his life.

“You need to come up with something better if you want to trick me. I won’t fall for it no matter how serious you act. Otherwise I… Right. I won’t fall for it.”

“Felt…”

Felt’s voice was hoarse, as if she was trying to get something off her mind.

Rom seemed concerned, perhaps his pained expression was because he understood what she was feeling.

Either way, all Subaru knew was that her obstinate attitude meant she wasn’t going to change her mind.

In other words, this negotiation had ended in failure.

"—Who's there?"

At that moment, Rom's expression changed as he glared at the entrance to the loot house.

Subaru, still on his knees with his head lowered, was currently in shock from the breakdown in negotiations.

Because of this, his mind's response was just a little too late.

There were several sharp knocks, and Rom silently turned around.

His gaze was directed at Felt, who nodded. She pointed to herself,

"It might be my client. —Seems kinda early, though."

She headed toward the door as she said this, she reached for the door with her anger still evident in her expression.

As Subaru watched her from behind, he suddenly felt a terrible sense of unease well up within him.

Loot house, knock, Felt's client—There was only one answer that fit.

"—Don't open it! We'll be killed!!"

This was earlier than expected. The bit of light pouring in from the window was still fairly bright, that orange shade was too brilliant for the sun to have set.

In both the first and second worlds, the despair came after the sun went down.

It wasn't as if he was taking things lightly because he thought he had time.

But even so, this was still too soon.

—He still hadn't managed to change anything about this world.

His scream filled with grim determination was futile, he was unable to stop Felt from opening the door.

With the door open, the loot house's dim interior was faintly illuminated by the evening glow.

And then,

"—Kill you? I wouldn't do something that drastic without warning."

A silver-haired girl entered the loot house with a sour look on her face.

2

"Thank goodness you're here… You're not getting away this time."

Felt wordlessly backed away at the sight of the silver-haired girl—Not-Satella.

She had a mortified expression as she retreated, and her lips warped in annoyance.

"You really are a stubborn woman."

"You're quite impertinent for a thief. I won't hurt you if you hand it over quietly."

While Felt seemed to be grinding her teeth, Not-Satella's voice was extremely cold.

Subaru felt the temperature of the room drop rapidly, and couldn't help but shiver at the changing atmosphere.

—Why is Not-Satella here?!

The sun was just now setting, from what he'd previously experienced, she shouldn't have even reached the entrance to the slums at this point in time.

And from there, gathering information would take almost two hours. And only then would she reach the loot house, that was how it went on his first attempt.

"So basically, she would have gotten here this quickly if I weren't with her?”

If she hadn’t healed him in that alley, she would have just made it here on her own. And this quickly.

Subaru couldn’t describe how he felt now that there was proof of his uselessness that transcended space and time.

Even as Subaru felt this emptiness, the situation continued to progress without him.

Felt had already crossed the center of the room and reached the back as she continued to retreat, and Not-Satella smoothly blocked the path to the door as she turned her palm toward them.

The magic being gathered in her palm caused the air to crackle faintly. It seemed like ice magic was her specialty, the room’s temperature dropped as she formed icicles.

“I have but one demand. —Return my insignia. It’s important to me.”

There were six icicles floating in the air. Their tips were rounded, so their power came from their weight rather than their sharpness. But if she scored a direct hit, the damage would definitely be on an entirely different level from those rocks.

Of course, Subaru himself was one of her targets and this caused him to break out in a cold sweat, all he could do was watch what happened silently so as to not provoke her.

“…Old man.”

“I can’t move. You picked up something troublesome and someone troublesome came with it, Felt.”

Felt quietly called to him, but Rom shook his head, his giant body filled with tension.

The familiar club had appeared in his hand at some point, but his arm didn’t look like he could swing it. As if lost, as if bewildered, he alternated between loosening and tightening his grip on it.

“The fight hasn’t even started and you’re giving up?”

“I wouldn’t withdraw if she were just some magic user, but… She’s trouble.”

Rom chided Felt for her provocation.

His gray eyes narrowed slightly as he stared at Not-Satella who had icicles at the ready.

His eyes were filled with strong caution and even stronger reverence as he looked down at her.

“Young lady… You’re an elf, aren’t you?”

Rom asked with trembling lips, causing Subaru to look up instinctively.

In this sort of fantasy world, elves were an indispensable race.

They had long ears, long lives, and were beautiful.

Rom’s question caused Not-Satella to close her eyes briefly, after which she sighed,

She spoke as if this confession was painful, and Subaru knit his brows at this.

But the other two had much bigger reactions.

Felt’s reaction was especially striking, she shuddered as she retreated even further,

“Half-elf… And silver hair?! Don’t tell me…”

“It’s an accidental resemblance! … I find it quite bothersome.’

Subaru didn’t understand their exchange, but he did to some extent get that it was one Not-Satella really didn’t want to deal with.

He didn’t know what exactly she was denying, but it didn’t seem to calm Felt down at all.

Rather, she turned her gaze toward Subaru who was just standing there in silence, and her red eyes were filled with intense animosity as she glared at him.

Subaru's face stiffened in confusion, and she laughed as if mocking herself.

"So you were playing me all along, huh?"

"What?"

"I thought it was weird when you started talking about returning it to the owner and stuff. Stopping me from hiring those guys in the alley to block her was part of the plan too, wasn't it? You were with her from the start."

Her questions were filled with resentment, and Subaru realized she had misunderstood the situation.

But he also realized something else, he was now closer to piecing together why Not-Satella had arrived so early.

Originally, she wouldn't have made it this soon after all. Right, normally the guys Felt hired would meddle with her and delay her arrival.

That didn't happen this time thanks to Subaru, and Not-Satella was able to appear earlier than usual.

From a causal perspective he was the main reason this happened, so Felt's anger wasn't exactly misplaced. In truth, the situation was starting to go the way he hoped.

Unless Felt and Rom had some trick up their sleeve, they would have no choice but to return the insignia to Not-Satella.

To be honest, Subaru wanted to obtain the insignia and return it to her himself, but he wouldn't complain as long as it ended up in her hands.

If things kept going like this, one could probably call it the second best plan. However,

"…? What do you mean? You're not comrades?"

Not-Satella reacted to the apparent break up between Felt and Subaru.

In response to Not-Satella's confusion, Felt laughed scornfully, "Hah"

"Just drop the act already. I've been cornered. How about you just take the insignia back and laugh at my stupidity?"

"You're caving too easily. All that just because you're at a slight disadvantage?"

"That's what you have to say after landing me in this situation? Aah, damn it. I've been had!"

Felt angrily scratched at her blonde hair and groaned in frustration.

The crease in Not-Satella's brow deepened further as she watched this completely unladylike behavior.

Seeing that they weren't quite on the same wavelength, Subaru clapped his hands and intervened,

"Well, things are just getting complicated so let's leave it at that. Give that insignia back, Felt. And Sate… You, leave this place quickly. Don't let anyone steal from you again."

"Why are you acting nice all of a sudden? I don't get it…"

"I don't understand either. What's with you?"

His plan to smoothly intervene had failed magnificently.

It had completely backfired, he had drawn their attention to him and become the focus of their ire.

It'd be too hard to explain, so he turned to Rom for help, but he crossed his thick arms,

“Our opponent uses the spirit arts, not ordinary magic. Can’t make any careless moves.”

He ended up misunderstanding Subaru’s intent and denied him his aid.

Subaru was interested in the new term Rom had casually used, but the sharp gazes from the two girls were unbearable.

He had to get out of this somehow—The moment he glanced at the door,

—A shadow stealthily approached the silver-haired girl from behind, as if gliding.

“—Puck! Block it!”

A sensual smile passed through the room’s shadows, and a silver glint that seemed to be squirming lunged at the girl’s white neck.

In an instant, the girl’s head was torn off as Subaru watched with wide eyes—That’s probably what would have happened originally.

—A crack.

What hit his eardrums was not the sound of steal severing bone, but that of steel smashing glass.

Not-Satella lowered her body slightly, and a magic circle that glowed a pale blue manifested behind her head.

The knife was stopped when it slammed into it head on, the magic circle had perfectly protected her neck from the blade.

“Puck…”

“That truly was by a hair’s breadth.”

Not-Satella leapt forward and turned around.

Following after her was her silver hair, and a small animal with gray fur peeked out of it from around her shoulder.

Puck hummed in pride and glanced at Subaru,

“Right in the nick of time, you saved us.”

“I’m the one who’s been saved. Thank you.”

Puck’s gesture was akin to a thumbs up, and in response Subaru offered a frail thumbs up as well.

Satella had appeared before sundown—Meaning her reliable backup was still on the clock.

Even though he had been called so suddenly, Puck was able to protect her with his unexpectedly splendid performance.

As for the assailant whose surprise attack was blocked,

“—A spirit, you’re a spirit, yes? Fufufu, wonderful. I’ve never killed a spirit before.”

The familiar murderer raised her kukri knife up to her face that was filled with ecstasy—It was Elsa.

Her sudden appearance put Not-Satella and Subaru on guard. However, the first one to take action in response wasn’t either of them.

“Hey, what’s this about?!”

Felt yelled as she stepped forward.

She pointed at Elsa and pulled the insignia out of her bosom.

“I thought your job was to purchase the insignia. Turning this place into a sea of blood wasn’t part of the deal!”

“Purchasing that insignia is indeed my job. But negotiating won’t be possible since you’ve also brought the owner along, so I’ve decided to change my plans.”

Felt’s face had turned red with rage, but faced with Elsa’s gaze full of killing intent she instinctively stepped back. Elsa looked down at her as if she found her fear adorable,

“I’ll massacre everyone in here, and then collect the insignia.”

Elsa’s smile was like that of a loving mother as she made this cruel declaration, she then tilted her head,

“—You couldn’t do your job properly. It’s only natural you’d be cast aside.”

“—!”

Felt’s face warped in agony, not from fear but from a different emotion.

Subaru didn’t know if Elsa’s words touched a sore spot. He didn’t know, but “Quit screwing around, damn it—!!”

It angered him enough to make him forget about the difference in their ability and yell at her.

Elsa looked at Subaru in surprise. Felt, Rom, and Not-Satella were no different. But the one who was most surprised of all was Subaru himself.

He himself didn’t understand why he suddenly flew off the handle.

He didn’t understand, so he just let his emotions take over and spilled everything.

“Is it really that fun to pick on a little kid?! You damned bowel-loving sadist!! Also, your appearance was way too sudden, were you just waiting outside for the right timing or what?! You made me celebrate prematurely because it looked like things could go smoothly, you’re too damned scary, I really didn’t want to meet you! Just how many horribly painful, tear-inducing memories do you think I’ve got?! If I had some change for every time I got torn up by a blade, I’d be a damned millionaire! That was an exaggeration!”

“…What are you saying?”

“My tension and rage meters are maxed, so I’ve got no clue what I’m saying either! That’s how my day’s been, so how are you guys doing? And please don’t change the channel.”

In response to Subaru’s nonsensical screaming, Elsa let out a small sigh of exasperation which was rather unusual for her.

Subaru found her attitude strangely hurtful, and as he sent spittle flying.

“Stalling complete—Do it, Puck!!”

“That was magnificently awkward. —I’d better live up to your expectations.”

As Subaru stamped his foot, an aloof voice responded to him causing Elsa to look up.

Sharp icicles surrounded her in every direction—There were more than twenty of them.

“Seems I haven’t even introduced myself, young lady. My name is Puck. —Remember that name in the afterlife.”

In an instant, Elsa was bombarded by icicles from every direction.

Chapter 19:
A Spirit Art User's Battle

The icicles crisscrossed mercilessly, filling the room with a white mist and covering the black cloaked figure in freezing wind.

The speed of these icicles was far beyond what he'd seen in the alley, as far as Subaru knew this had transcended the major league and had reached a level of speed you only saw in video games.

Their sharp tips would easily pierce through the human body and come out red with fresh blood.

There were about twenty of them. If they landed, it'd mean certain death. But,

"Is she finished?!"

"Right, there's a bad flag—!!"

Even though he had remained silent for so long, the baldy just had to go and say something at the worst possible time.

And as if to answer Subaru's shout—

"—I was prepared, you see. I quite dislike its weight, but it was the right decision to wear it."

Cutting through the white smoke, Elsa dashed forward with her black hair dancing behind her.

As she brandished her kukri knife and nimbly advanced, there was no sign of injury on her body. She had cast aside her cloak and was now only wearing the form-fitting black clothes she wore underneath it, but there was no change besides this.

"Don't tell me it's the sort of thing where you take off weighted clothing and become faster?!"

"That would be pretty interesting, but the reality is simpler. —My cloak had a spell woven into it that could negate magic just once. Seems it allowed me to keep my life.”

Elsa politely answered Subaru’s query, and then swung her blade forward from a low stance.

Standing in her path was Not-Satella who had just unleashed that huge attack.

The blade’s path was true, intended to plunge the heavy tip into her chest. Subaru was about to scream, but before that could happen,

“You’d do well not to underestimate a user of the spirit arts. We’re rather frightening when you make enemies of us.”

A multilayered shield of ice easily stopped Elsa’s blade.

Not-Satella placed her hands together before her chest. She had probably formed that shield using her hands. With her attack blocked, Elsa immediately backflipped away.

A number of slightly smaller icicles were rapidly fired in pursuit and pierced the ground.

This was Puck’s attack, he floated by Not-Satella’s silver hair as he waved his arms like he was conducting an orchestra.

“They’re splitting the roles of offense and defense—It’s really two on one.”

“That’s what makes spirit users dangerous. One handles offense while the other handles defense. Depending on the situation you’ll have one stall with simple magic while the other prepares a powerful move… They can do that sort of thing. On the battlefield, it is commonly said that ‘If you encounter a spirit user, you should drop your weapon and wallet and run.’”

As Subaru looked on in admiration, Rom who was next to him muttered gravely as he tightened his grip on his club.

Subaru nodded at his words. Indeed, in a one-on-one battle their advantage was absolute. Overcoming it would be no easy feat.

"By the way, what are you planning to do, old man?"

"I'll look for an opening to help the elf girl. She seems more reasonable than the other one."

"Waitwaitwaitwaitwaitwaitwait! Don't try it! You'd only be a burden! You'll just have your right arm and throat ripped apart if you go, so stay right there!"

"Don't be that specific! It almost feels like that actually happened!"

He had actually seen this happen twice, as a result his statement felt genuine.

Rom seemed rather displeased as he clutched his arm and neck as if he felt himself getting cut down in another dimension.

Even as they had this exchange, the battle continued.

Although Subaru had warned Rom with his frivolous talk, in truth there were no openings to interfere in the battle.

—Countless lumps of ice formed one after another and were blasted all over the room.

Their sizes varied, the larger ones were about the size of a head, and the smaller ones were roughly fist-sized. They were all fired with the speed of a full power pitch, and it was clear just how dangerous they were.

However, even as she was surrounded by all of this ice, Elsa's movements now that she had lost her magic-negating cloak had transcended the realm of common sense.

She would twist her body, lower herself to the ground as if crawling, and occasionally even defy gravity by running the walls. If she judged that even this wouldn't suffice, she would strike the ice with her blade, shattering the white crystals. She matched quantity with overwhelming quality, her skill was exceptional.

"You handle yourself well for a girl."

Even Puck had to admire her combat sense that could only be described as godlike.

His mutter caused Elsa to smile broadly even in the midst of that chaotic battle.

“Oh my. It’s been quite a while since I was last regarded as a simple girl.”

“Most of my opponents might as well be babies from my perspective. But even so, you’re so strong it’s almost pitiful.”

Genuinely delighted this compliment, she swept away the ice surrounding her with her blade.

He must have fired close to a hundred by now, but besides that first bombardment not a single one connected.

Puck was pressuring her with the sheer quantity of his offense, but he was unable to land a decisive blow.

“At this rate, won’t they run out of MP and lose?”

As he pictured a reversal in offense and defense, Subaru pointed out that a lengthy battle would prove disadvantageous.

However, Rom shook his head.

“I don’t know what this Empi is, but there’s no need to worry about a spirit user running out of mana in battle.”

“No need to worry about them running out of mana…?”

“Unlike magic users, spirit users do not use the mana within them, but rather the mana around them. Unless the world itself runs dry, a spirit user will never run out of mana.”

“They’ve got unlimited gasoline so they can rev their engines as much as they please, huh. Quite a cheat.”

Rom cocked his head, Subaru's response was completely incomprehensible to him.

He then continued with his head still tilted, "But,"

"There's also the matter of how long the spirit can remain corporeal. Once the spirit is gone, the situation might change drastically."

"Crap, that's right… It's almost five, isn't it?!"

In the first world, Puck went to sleep not long after sunset.

It hadn't been that long since the fight started, but surely throwing around that much magic must have been a significant drain on his mana reserves or whatever.

Subaru's worries,

"Ah, this is bad. I'm getting a little drowsy. Actually, I was fighting in my sleep just now."

"Hey, Puck! Get it together!"

"…Hah! I'm up! I'm awake! I'm definitely not sleeping!"

"His voice is so low, isn't that conversation super concerning?!"

Seemed to be right on the mark.

Puck seemed to be nodding off already, and he could see that Not-Satella who had Puck on her shoulder was also starting to look anxious.

"Just when it was getting good. You're not even paying attention, how cold."

"That's the problem with being a popular guy. The girls just won't let you sleep. But staying up too late is terrible for your skin, you know?"

Bending her knees slightly, Elsa prepared to leap.

Anticipating this, Puck shrewdly winked at her and spoke.

“How about we go ahead and put an end to this? You must be tired of seeing the same old performance, right?”

“—My leg.”

The instant she tried to advance, she tipped forward and had to put out her hands to stop her fall.

Subaru stared in shock at this unbelievable screw up, the reason for which was at her feet.

Elsa’s right foot was stuck to the frozen floor.

The shattered ice had slowly piled up, and had now been used to trap her foot.

“…So you’ve got me, is that right?”

“Just think of it as the difference in experience, I believe this is worthy of some praise. Good night.”

As he threw his chest out, Puck’s small body started to waver.

He thrust his hands out in front him, a pose that suggested he was about to use a killer technique, and started gathering up the largest amount of magic thus far—Even Subaru could see it radiating from him.

That magical power did not turn into ice, it was fired as pure destructive energy.

The bluish white light froze everything in its path, and dyed the loot house white in one fell swoop.

The energy passed through Elsa and slammed into the entrance to the loot house, blowing away the poorly fitted door. The freezing waves left in the aftermath even reached outside.

Once that magnificent light passed through, all that was left was frost. The goods, the furniture, the counter, everything was completely frozen.

Naturally, anyone who took a direct hit would inevitably be turned into an ice sculpture.

However—

“You’re joking…”

“I’m afraid not. Aah, splendid. I thought I was going to die.”

If she had taken it head on, perhaps.

“…You’re a girl, so I can’t really praise that sort of thing.”

She had managed to avoid his last resort, but Puck wasn’t any angrier than his words suggested. He truly was displeased by the act itself.

—Subaru could see blood dripping, and traces of steam coming off the frozen floor.

The source of the blood was Elsa’s right foot. She was standing barefoot just barely out of the path of Puck’s attack, and a large amount of blood was pouring out of her right foot.

It was only natural. After all, she had sliced off the sole of her foot.

“I was in such a hurry I almost chopped the whole thing off, that was a close one.”

“But even that amount ought to be quite painful.”

“Yes, I suppose you’re correct. It is painful. Wonderful. I feel alive. Now…”

In response to Puck’s concerned words, Elsa nodded with an ecstatic look, and then raised her bleeding foot and pressed it against a nearby lump of ice with no hesitation.

It sounded like the air was cracking, Elsa moaned seductively after which she used her kukri knife to smooth the ice's surface.

With that, she managed to stop the bleeding. She had recklessly attached a part of the ice to her sole.

"It's a little hard to move, but it's enough."

Her ice shoe produced a stiff sound as she tested it against the ground, she then smiled even more cheerfully.

The fact that she was so addicted to battle that she didn't even mind mutilating herself left Subaru speechless, but it left an even bigger impression on Puck and Not-Satella who were facing her.

"Puck, can you continue?"

"Sorry, I'm really sleepy. I underestimated her a bit. I used up too much mana, gonna disappear."

When Puck responded to her murmur, his voice had for the first time lost its composure.

The cat on her shoulder, by her silver hair, started to emit a faint glow and looked as though he could disappear at any moment. He was out of time.

"I'll handle this somehow, so get some rest for now. Thank you."

"Should anything happen to you, I'll act in accordance with the contract. —If it comes down to it, wring your Od to draw me out."

As if urged on by Not-Satella's tender voice, Puck's body suddenly scattered and vanished.

Every single person in that room lamented his retreat, but the one who was most disappointed was,

"—Aah, he's gone. How terribly unfortunate."

Elsa, who had been fighting for her life.

She once again readied her blade, and moved toward Not-Satella with high-pitched footsteps.

In response, Not-Satella started forming icicles one after another, but she couldn't form nearly as many as Puck had.

But considering Elsa's mobility had dropped, their chances of winning were probably still fifty-fifty.

"We can't just stand around staring anymore."

Rom gripped his club and readied himself, perhaps he thought the situation looked bad.

When Subaru silently looked at him, he shrugged his shoulders,

"We don't know if she can win without assistance. So if we just sit around and watch, we're just missing our chance… You understand, right, Felt?"

"Yeah, I get it. Even if we choose to run, we've got to do it right now."

Felt hadn't spoken a word since Elsa first made her threat.

She stood next to Rom who seemed ready to fight, and then suddenly turned to Subaru.

"About earlier… You kinda saved me."

"—Ah?"

"Just a little, mind you. Also, don't call me a kid. Despite how I look, I'm actually fifteen. Probably around the same as you."

"…I'm eighteen this year. I can drive and get married."

"You don't look it! You look like a kid, you gotta live a life that shows on your face more!"

On top of being a shut-in, he also lived a life without major ups and downs..

But still, he felt that his current situation had way too many gigantic ups and downs.

As the two resolved themselves and observed the state of the battle, all Subaru could do was watch.

He was probably the weakest one there. And it wasn't merely fighting strength that he lacked…

"My legs are trembling, they won't move… I don't even have the resolve."

It was more than a problem of being unqualified, he couldn't even get involved.

Rom had his arms, Felt had her legs, and Satella had her magic, they could use these to fight. However, Elsa's abnormality transcended all of these.

Truly—

"She's getting overwhelmed."

Rom's candid impression said it all.

Not-Satella continued to fire an endless barrage of ice, but they were all smashed apart by Elsa's blade dance.

Elsa sprang toward her, slashing as if she was dancing, and in response Not-Satella halted her attack to block with her ice shield and then froze the ground underneath her to slide away, barely avoiding the subsequent attacks.

If she managed to gain some distance she would once again go on the offensive with her ice barrage, but Elsa didn't seem like the kind of opponent who'd fall for the same trick twice.

The next time she approached Not-Satella, Subaru would probably end up seeing a sight he never wanted to see again.

"Here goes—!"

Probably imagining the same thing, Rom roared as he joined the battle.

He raised his club and produced a powerful wind as he swung it, a bit of the hair on the back of Elsa's head got caught up in this as she ducked.

"Oh dear, it's rather boorish to cut in on a dance."

"If you wanna dance that bad, I'll make you dance the finest dance of all! Here, round and round!"

Rom thrust his spiked club at her, changing the scope of his attack from a line to a point.

This sudden unconventional attack was aimed at Elsa's throat, and the end the result froze Rom's throat.

"What the hell?!"

"Because you're so strong, I can even do this."

Elsa was on her tiptoes, standing on the tip of his club.

There was a divinely inspired sense of balance to this disparity in power, the first time such acrobatics were performed. Before this miraculous balance could collapse, Elsa swung her blade horizontally.

It was aimed at Rom's temple, the force was such that a direct hit would blow the top of his head off.

"As if I'd let you—!"

Clang, a small knife was thrown into her blade's path, hitting it.

The impact from directly below slightly disturbed the blade's movement, and the side of the blade slammed into his head, still retaining its speed. There was the dull sound of steel striking bone, and Rom's body collapsed to the side.

"Bad girl."

"—Ah."

Elsa landed casually, and turned her gaze toward Felt.

Felt's small knife had saved Rom from a fatal slash. She had probably been aiming at Elsa's arm, but it seemed her haste threw off her aim.

But it could also be said that this just barely saved Rom's life.

"You have neither the resolve nor the strength to fight. That being the case, you should have just cowered in the corner, making yourself small."

With high-pitched footsteps, Elsa's dark figure seemed to be gliding as she instantly appeared before Felt.

Rom was unconscious from the blow to his head, and since Not-Satella had put some distance between them, she would not make it in time. Felt herself was paralyzed, like a frog in a snake's sights.

"Haidaraaaa—!"

So the only one who could grab her small body and leap out of the way was the one who had been cowering in terror right next to her.

Chapter 20:
The Gang's All Here

He leaped into her waist, and embraced her small body as they fell toward the ground.

The instant before he hit the floor, he felt as though steel had singed the hair on the back of his head which made him shudder. But he forced himself to ignore it due to the weight in his arms, and tried to create some distance as they tumbled.

He got on his knees and turned around to find Elsa standing still with an expression of surprise. He felt as if he'd gotten one over on her, and donned a twitching smile at his triumph.

His smile almost made her retaliate, but she switched to defending against the rapid-fire icicles coming from behind her. Thankful for Not-Satella's aid, he looked down into his chest,

"Are you okay?! It was a desperate situation, so please overlook it if I touched anything I shouldn't have!"

"I'd have thanked you if you didn't say that. —Wait, why?"

"No clue! My body just moved on its own! It's seriously a miracle! Make miracle! If I had to say, it's because I'm repaying a favor, although you probably don't know what I'm talking about! You don't!"

He released Felt and clenched his fist, congratulating himself for somehow doing a good job.

In the second world, Felt had saved him from Elsa. He was able to repay her for that. But that was a meaningless memory in this world, and now both Felt and Subaru had fallen before her blade.

—But even so, the kindness he received wouldn't just disappear. And if he could move now, he obviously had to see things through.

“Alright, I can move. Did that brush with death suddenly strengthen my resolve? Bravado is still bravery, recklessness is still courage. I’ll do it, it’s time to do it, gotta do it, have to do it, aren’t I gonna do it?!”

“H-Hey, bro…”

“Listen up, listen me. Listen closely, Felt. I’m going to start buying time just like Rom did before he fell in battle. I’ll create an opening one way or another, use that to run away. Run straight out of the entrance with all you’ve got, don’t look back. It’s what you call an escape, got it?”

“—! Absolutely not! Are you really telling me to just turn tail and run?!”

Her red eyes looked up at him as if glaring, and he accepted the challenge and brought his face close.

He immediately noticed when for a moment, his strong will caused Felt’s expression to falter.

“That’s exactly right, turn around, tuck your tail in, and run. To be honest, that’s what I want to do. I don’t want to stay in this violent hellscape a moment longer than I have to.”

He patted her blonde hair with all his might and then took a breath, “But,”

“You’re fifteen, and I’m eighteen. So you’re probably the youngest one here. Therefore, we obviously have to choose whatever option gives you the best chance of survival. It’s obvious!”

“Wh-What are you… Don’t screw around, you were cowering in fear just moments ago.”

“That was then! This is now! I’m not cowering now, so it’s fine! Or rather, I’ll have to do this before the fear paralyzes me again. That’s how it is, so run!”

Subaru pushed on her forehead to silence any further objection, and then started warming up as he stood up. Rom’s club had also fallen out of his hand and tumbled nearby.

He picked it up with great effort, despite its extreme weight, he could still swing it.

“I can probably keep her in check with at least one good strike… Looks like I was right to swing that pointlessly large bamboo sword every day. To think it was all for this moment, not bad, me.”

He sang his own praises as he swung the club, and then held his breath as he waited for the right time.

Felt looked like she still had something to say as she held her breath behind him, but he didn’t have the time to deal with her indecision right now. Their chances of survival were probably dropping with every second.

There wasn’t any sign of sluggishness in Elsa’s movements as she danced through the ice. To begin with, Subaru couldn’t even begin to understand whether or not she was open considering his complete lack of actual combat experience.

Therefore, the instant Elsa’s view was blocked as she cut down a particularly large icicle, he forgot to even breathe as he brought the club down.

“—Fush!”

It seemed the desperate situation had increased his strength, he swung the club even faster than expected.

It was a blow that could split a human head like a watermelon if he scored a direct hit, but,

“Your aim was excellent. But unfortunately, you exuded too much killing intent, it made your attack obvious.”

“Killing intent?! I have no idea how I’m supposed to control that!”

Although he’d attacked from right behind her, Elsa slammed the back of her blade into the club, altering its trajectory to avoid it. As Subaru whined about the failure of his surprise attack, he bared his fangs,

“Now! Go, Felt—!!”

“—!!”

As if jolted by his shout, Felt’s small body dashed forward, riding wind itself.

She’d reached her top speed in a single step. She ran through the room so fast the human eye couldn’t track her, moving past the scattered icicles and frozen floor as her body headed toward the entrance.

“You think I’ll let her?”

To stop her, Elsa drew a knife and threw it from right beside her.

Perhaps as revenge for Felt’s interference earlier, the plain looking knife was going to plunge straight into her back as she ran. But,

“You’ll have to let her go!!”

Kicking up a nearby table, Subaru blocked the knife’s path.

His reflexive reaction produced results, the knife ended up piercing the table and thus could not reach its target. Subaru couldn’t help but internally applaud his miraculous feat,

“Awesome! But my toes hurt more than expected…Bubugaru?!”

A long leg kicked him in the side of his head, interrupting his praise midway and causing him to crash into a wall.

The impact was to his shoulder so his head was fine, but this unexpected force halted his thoughts. The pain finally set in, and he once again tasted blood in his mouth.

“How unusual, I feel just a little annoyed.”

“Well, that’s just great! Hahaa, That. Is. What. You. Get! I made you lose one! Now, let me enjoy your whining, you loser!”

Putting on a show of courage as he got back up, he relentlessly provoked Elsa to draw her attention.

He didn’t think it was a very reliable plan considering her personality, but as if reading his mind, her smile deepened and she completely disregarded Felt.

“Alright, I’ll play along. In exchange, don’t bore me with your dancing.”

“Let me warn you, you’d better be prepared if you wanna dance with me. I’m rather unrefined, so I’ll end up stomping all over your feet.”

He ended up taking some mental damage when he remembered how he couldn’t dance with the girl he liked at a certain folk dance.

He spat out the blood gathering in his mouth, and fixed his grip on the club he was holding.

He wouldn’t have very many chances to use it. So instead of thinking about using it like Rom or whatever, he focused completely on meeting Elsa head on as she approached.

“Don’t forget about me!”

As Elsa focused on the opponent in front of her, she was suddenly assailed by some ice from behind.

She swung her blade without even turning around and deflected the attack. Her senses transcended human understanding, even Subaru couldn’t crack jokes at this point.

“I’m tired of that game, though… Do you think you can still entertain me?”

She asked in a low voice, her smile the color of blood.

This smile sent a chill down Subaru’s spine, he then glanced at Not-Satella. When their eyes met, he gave her a slight nod,

“If you have some kind of hidden power or something, now would be a good time to use it.”

“…I do have a trump card, but if I use it I’ll be the only one left.”

“I’ve got this! I can still do it! It’s too early to use your trump card! Why give up so soon?! The fight is still even! Let’s do this, me!”

Subaru waved his limbs around to show he was in good health, trying desperately to stop her from giving up on everything. His frantic expression caused Not-Satella’s lips to relax even though they were in the midst of battle.

“I’m not going to use it. Not while you’re still trying so hard. Let’s struggle all we can—Running to daddy is my last resort.”

Her resigned expression as she said this caused something to light up within Subaru.

He thought it was rather unlike him to have this sort of sentiment well up from within.

It wasn’t like him, he wasn’t that kind of person at all.

He was always apathetic toward his surroundings, he was unaffected by whatever went on around him, no matter what sort of problem arose, he would never choose to face it earnestly, instead he would just casually wait around for it to fade away, like a cloud or something.

Pinning his hopes on others or having others place their hopes in him, he thought he didn’t care about any of that.

—Just now, he ended up hoping. And because of this hope, he was disappointed.

He had only ever seen her look tense or brooding as she looked for a certain something, so he wanted to see her smile.

But to think that this expression that looked like she was giving up, like she had resigned herself to whatever was going to happen, would be the first ‘smile’ he received from her, there was no way he would allow that.

“That doesn’t count…”

“—Eh?”

“Ignore what I just said! It’s all nonsense! I’m seriously fired up here!! I’m going to do this, damn it! I definitely won’t let you use that trump card!!”

He thrust his finger out, and announced this to both Not-Satella and Elsa.

He stomped his feet and sent spittle flying as he howled in excitement.

“Don’t make that sort of face, you’re wasting your beauty! And you, you damned sadist of the year, read the mood! Don’t make her look like that! You’re wasting your beauty too!”

“…Seems you have a little too much energy.”

“Because you haven’t managed to spill a single person’s blood! But this club, ‘Kotetsu’, has been lusting for your blood all evening! Fm! Fmm!”

He swung his club on the spot, like a bat.

Pulled by its weight, Subaru staggered around flustered as Elsa pointed her knife at him.

“That’s enough fooling around. It’s about time we started dancing, do try to keep up.”

“You too, don’t think this will be over too quickly. Don’t underestimate me, I’ll toss you with my right and slam you with my left!”

As Elsa leaned forward slightly, Subaru pointed his club at her as if he was announcing a homerun.

Because of this unnecessary gesture, he wasn’t able to respond in time when she leaped at him. He readied the club in a panic, and prepared to strike the slender figure flying toward him.

There was a strong wind as he swung from the side, this attack would blow Elsa's head off.

He put everything he had into this merciless swing, prepared for the horrific sight it would create. It wouldn't be strange if a direct hit turned part of her into mincemeat.

"As if I could beat her by showing mercy!"

The urgency of the situation meant Subaru couldn't even think about holding back.

In response to this lethal blow, Elsa lowered her stance even further with practiced movements and continued to approach if slithering on the ground as she avoided his attack.

"You damned spider woman—!"

"Well, you are trapped in my web."

Seeing the blade reaching up to him, Subaru immediately threw himself backward. However, he still couldn't escape the blade's range.

In an instant so short you'd miss it if you blinked, the memory of the first time he stood up on his own two legs flashed through his mind, his parents clapped and exclaimed 'This kid might be a genius'.

"Damn it, looking at my current situation after that flashback, there couldn't possibly be a more pathetic memory—!!"

The embarrassment this memory caused made his knees shoot up.

He hadn't been aiming for anything, but Elsa ended up taking a direct hit to her torso as she slipped toward him.

She let out an erotic moan of pain and her blade's path was thrown off slightly. There,

"An ice shield. —Nice cover!!"

“I’m not very good at forming it where I want to. —I almost ended up creating an ice sculpture there.”

“You mean her, not me, right?!”

A block of ice appeared near his face and stopped the blade, Subaru immediately spoke his thanks as he retreated, and Satella stated this as she wiped her forehead.

She then dodged his question and started firing another barrage of ice at Elsa to keep her in check.

“You insects are starting to become an annoyance…”

“Hey now, don’t go underestimating insects. You might be allergic to our bite!”

“You’re acting pretty cocky now that you’re in a safe spot.”

Elsa was focused on dodging the hail of ice, and Subaru was attempting to break her focus with his taunts.

He would have loved to slip behind her to attack, but if he carelessly stepped into that barrage he would probably be taken out by his own ally.

That was probably why Not-Satella had restrained her attack while he was fighting.

This was the level of teamwork you could expect from an impromptu team formed on the spot.

“However, the two worked together to overcome this trial and their bond deepened. Before they knew it, trust had turned into love and their burning passion could no longer be stopped…”

“I have no clue what you’re whispering over there, but it’s clearly something compleeeetely irrelevant.”

“To think of another girl while you’ve got a woman right in front of you, how very boorish.”

“They both hated it?!”

Elsa somehow kept her composure even in the midst of these rapid-fire attacks.

Subaru continued to watch as Elsa deflected the ice, he would occasionally cut in with an attack of his own and then immediately retreat, he kept repeating this cycle as he thought.

Their steadily worsening situation hadn’t changed, it was obvious that Elsa could easily take out Subaru just like she did to Rom if she felt like it.

It only seemed like he was able to put up a fight because she possessed an overwhelming advantage in ability and was making light of him. The fact that Subaru’s fear would not let him step any further into lethal range was another reason.

If Subaru had more courage than brains, she’d probably end this equilibrium in a single swing.

Nonetheless, it didn’t seem his cowardice could prove useful for much longer.

The severity of her slashes was gradually increasing, and Subaru was steadily accumulating cuts as he failed to evade in time.

There were cuts on his arms, his calf, under his armpit, and even a shallow one on his neck, his gray jersey was starting to turn red as his blood stained it.

“Getting cut hurts! It hurts real bad! Even wounds of this level could make me cry!”

“—No good after all, huh.”

“Ah, sorry! I lied! Please ignore that! Don’t give up, don’t use that trump card! I can still do this! I’m completely fine, I’ve got this!”

He waved his hands to show Not-Satella he was fine, and then immediately performed a spinning kick.

He had aimed to catch Elsa off guard with an attack completely different from the pattern he established with the club. But,

“Geh.”

She easily avoided his kick, and then grabbed his leg before it could pass by. She raised her kukri knife aiming to chop off his entire leg. The force would easily tear through his leg in one stroke, its speed and sharpness were more than enough.

The shock from the blood loss and pain of having his thigh severed would kill him—He could see the words BAD END 4 appear before him.

“Nuooo! Whatever is within me, burn up—!!”

He immediately tried to raise the club to block, but the weight meant he couldn’t lift it in time while standing on one leg.

Not-Satella screamed in despair as the merciless slash reached his leg.

The premonition of horrible pain and fresh blood caused him to quite literally scream up blood—

“—That’s enough.”

Piercing the roof, a blazing inferno descended into the loot house.

The flame’s dreadful aura swept through the room and even halted Elsa’s brutal act.

Subaru stumbled backward when his leg was released and ended up falling on his butt.

And before him, within the swirling dust and smoke, he saw a crimson glow.

“It seems things were rather risky just now, but I’m glad I made it in time.”

“Y-You’re…”

The flame wavered as it stepped forward.

In its path was Elsa, who had retreated quite some distance. She adjusted her grip on the kukri knife as she faced the being before her, losing her composure for the first time.

Before this overwhelming sense of intimidation, she no longer had the leeway to enjoy herself.

Its dignified presence froze Subaru’s, Not-Satella’s, and even Elsa’s expressions.

Even with all their eyes on it, its handsome features did not waver.

The young man only had a single-minded sense of justice in his sky-blue eyes as his lips formed a slight smile.

“Now, it’s about time we finished this—!”

Brushing his crimson hair upward, the handsome youth loudly declared this.

Chapter 21:
The Power of the Sword Saint

1

[Side: F]

Her body rode the wind out of the battlefield, she felt as if she was freed from the despair the moment she passed the entrance.

In the end, in that world she didn’t even have the leeway to look back at, the battle raged on even now.

There was the dry sound of freezing air as well as the sound of steel shattering ice, and there was also the sound of a blunt weapon tearing through the air along with the occasional ‘Hyoeh’s and ‘Fuah’s as someone dodged while making strange noises.

The battle wasn’t over.

Even though Felt had run away, leaving it all behind.

“What the heck am I thinking? Isn’t it lucky that I was able to escape?”

If she had stayed there, she would be dead, that was obvious.

Felt didn’t have the slightest change against a woman who could bring Rom down with one blow. It was the same for the silver-haired elf, she probably wouldn’t be able to match Elsa now that she had lost her spirit’s support.

As for Subaru, it was completely obvious that he was worthless.

Once could tell at a glance that he was just an ordinary fellow, and he hadn’t the slightest hint of combat experience. His lovely fingers suggested that he had never held a weapon, and his unmarred hair and skin probably meant he had never been injured.

In other words, he had lived a sheltered life. His social status was such that he didn't need to think of combat.

He did bring that absurdly expensive meteor, so this way of thinking made sense.

She should just think of it as him getting his just deserts. Ignorant of the ways of the world and possessing just a little chivalrous spirit, he ended up trying to do more than he could. She should just laugh at his recklessness.

"Right, keep running. I can't stay in this town anymore. There's people that terrifying. Before they find me, before it's too late to run away, I need to, quickly…"

Even within the slums, she had to choose a route known only to those who stayed here. Narrow and tiny, it was like a path for animals, but it was an ideal escape route.

Considering her agility and small frame, she didn't think there was anyone who would be able to capture her here. If she was to prioritize her life, this was the ideal method.

After all, Subaru who was probably dead by now had tried to act cool by letting her escape, so if she ran away successfully, he could at least rest in peace. That much was obvious.

It was obvious, but,

"—Someone, isn't anyone there?!"

Even though her brain told her she should choose the narrow path, her legs took her to the slum's main road which connected to the main street. Her expression was one of panic and she was out of breath, even her line of sight was unsteady.

Sighting a rundown shack, she ran up the wall and stood atop it, she then sent spittle flying as she screamed.

It wasn't just anyone that she needed.

She needed someone who had the power to face that murderer—Elsa.

If anyone would do, she had already seen several figures as she ran here. But Felt was by no means someone well-liked around here.

Especially now that she was in trouble, Rom was probably the only one around here who would help her.

If she just left Rom like this, he would die.

Even Subaru who had helped Felt escape was probably fighting for his life right now.

It was a strange feeling. Without understanding why, she desperately rubbed her eyes that were on the verge of tears.

Setting Rom aside, what was so bad about some guy she just met dying? He seemed to have had a good upbringing, spoke a lot of nonsense, and to call him inconsiderate was putting it lightly.

But when Elsa's words almost made her cry, he got angry for her, and even now he was sacrificing himself so she could escape.

She didn't understand what she was feeling. However, because she was feeling it, Felt's heart urged her to run.

She had felt something in response to his actions. Because of this feeling that wouldn't stop heating up, Felt continued to run, desperately wanting to scream.

And then, once she had run through many, many streets—

"—Please, help."

"Understood. I shall help you."

She encountered a young man like a crimson inferno, and changed fate.

2

"…Reinhard?"

"That's right, Subaru. It's been very long, has it? Sorry to be late."

The tall figure turned its head toward Subaru who was still on the ground—Reinhard's faint smile seemed apologetic.

Even though he had ripped through the roof and dropped about five meters, this didn't seem to have had any effect on him as he casually walked forward. His movements were refined even as he cleared the dust, Subaru felt that he was now somewhat different from when they had faced Tonchinkan, he felt that he was getting a glimpse at Reinhard's true nature.

Reinhard looked forward with his guard up, at the beautiful woman in black clothes whose hostility was directed at him. His blue eyes suddenly narrowed as if remembering something,

"Black hair and black clothes. And a curved blade characteristic of the north. —With those characteristics, there's no mistaking it. You're the 'Bowel Hunter', yes?"

"What's with that super disturbing nickname…"

"It was given to her due to her distinctive method of killing. She's a rather infamous criminal who is known to be dangerous even in the capital. It is also said that she's just a simple mercenary, though."

Reinhard sincerely responded to Subaru's mutter, and set his clear blue eyes on Elsa. His gaze caused her to stir,

"Reinhard—Yes, the knight among knights. From the line of sword saints. Incredible, to think I'd encounter such interesting opponents, I suppose I'll have to thank my employer.

"There's a number of things I'd like to ask you. I recommend you surrender."

"You think a starving predator could resist a splendid steak dripping blood?"

She seductively licked her lips with her red tongue and looked at Reinhard with an ecstatic expression.

Receiving her gaze, he scratched his cheek as if troubled, "I suppose not."

"No choice. Subaru, step back a bit. Get the old man somewhere safe if you can. It'd be a great help if you could stay by that person's side after that."

"Understood… She's a monster of a woman, so don't let your guard down."

"Fortunately, hunting monsters happens to be my specialty."

With these promising words, Reinhard advanced, completely calm.

He did not even reach for the sword at his hip, he approached her barehanded.

His composure made Subaru gulp, but what happened once the battle started shocked him even more.

"—Sh"

Exhaling sharply, Elsa brandished the knife in her hand, aiming for his neck.

She was no longer holding back like she was against Subaru, the flash of silver killed the air itself as it rushed toward Reinhard's slender neck. Reinhard seemed completely defenseless against this. Forget drawing his sword to block, he did not even attempt to dodge.

As the blade swung toward him, Subaru saw a vision of Reinhard's head being torn off. There would be a spray of blood, and Reinhard's head would fall later like in a manga.

That was the scene he saw. But—

"I'd prefer not to be too violent against a female opponent, but…"

Reinhard said these gentlemanly words in a somewhat lower tone. Then,

"Excuse me."

With force that shattered the ground and created a shockwave, his kick sent Elsa flying.

The shockwave even reached Subaru, who was rendered speechless by the wind..

It looked like a normal front kick, and yet it held such power that the wind from the shockwave shook the entire building. Having received a direct hit, Elsa's body flew like a leaf until she sprang off the wall to reduce the impact and landed as if tumbling onto the ground. Ever her expression was one of astonishment.

"Woawoahwoah, seriously… What's with that?"

He had used the term 'off the charts' many times until now, but right now, for the time Subaru believed that he had been using it all wrong.

The term surely existed just to describe the man standing before him.

Compared to him, running like the wind, swinging a club like a twig, transcendent battle sense, and magical power boasting overwhelming quantity, all of these were completely overshadowed.

"You're as good as the rumors say… No, you're even better."

"I'm not sure I can live up to your expectations."

“Will you not use the sword at your hip? I would love to experience its legendary sharpness.”

Elsa recklessly pointed at Reinhard’s sword, she wanted to face him at his best.

But Reinhard shook his head in response,

“This sword can only be drawn when it is necessary. That it has not left its sheath means this is not one of those times.”

“It seems I’m being looked down upon.”

“I find this judgement rather troubling as well. Therefore—”

Reinhard suddenly averted his gaze and looked around the loot house. He then found a worn down two handed sword among some loot that had been placed against the wall, but were now strewn about the ground.

He flipped up the handle with his foot and easily caught it as it spun, he then lightly swung it as if testing it,

“I shall face you with this. Are you dissatisfied?”

“—Not at all. Aah, wonderful. Simply wonderful. Please, do entertain me!”

As Reinhard held the sword, Elsa took the initiative by spinning her body to the side.

Immediately after, she threw several knives as she spun. There were four of them, thrown near simultaneously. She had been holding back when she aimed for Felt.

These blades thrown at different heights weren’t as fast as Not-Satella’s ice, but the difference in their trajectories would make it difficult to dodge. In other words, he had to deflect them, but,

“Of course, I’ll take advantage of that opening.”

Elsa’s body leaped like a wind-up toy. She flipped as if using the ceiling as footing, and then sprang back down aiming for Reinhard.

A two stage attack, even if he managed to deflect the knives he would still have to deal with Elsa's attack.

There were four attacks and another one right behind them, in response Reinhard raised his sword before him,

"Sorry, but—Projectiles won't reach me."

Immediately after he whispered this, Subaru saw a sight that defied the laws of physics.

The knives that were going to plunge straight into Reinhard's body—Their trajectories suddenly changed, they missed his body and hit the wall harmlessly.

He hadn't used any special magic, nor had he swung his sword faster than the eye could follow. He had essentially faced her first attack completely defenseless, this was an unfathomable spectacle, an absurd sight.

"The divine protection of arrow avoidance—!"

"I was granted it at birth, you see… Please don't think of it as unfair."

The knives completely failed to impede him, so their next exchange turned into a direct confrontation.

Elsa's slash had all the speed from her leap, and Reinhard was prepared to take it by swinging his sword directly upward.

Even though it was an exchange of an instant, Subaru could see everything in slow motion.

Perhaps that was because Reinhard's movements were perfectly refined, his every action seemed to possess divine skill that was almost magical.

He was holding some crude sword he found in a warehouse in the slums, but in his hands it shone like a legendary sword spoken of for generations.

His swordplay truly seemed to push the sword to the limit of what it could do.

Reinhard's blade hit its mark, the base of Elsa's kukri knife—Even though it was a clash between steel, that absurd cutting power easily dispossessed Elsa of her blade.

Flipping by placing her hand on the ground, Elsa was left speechless by the fate of the weapon she held.

With the blade sliced off, all she had left was the handle, and as for the blade,

"Now that you've lost your weapons, I recommend you surrender."

Reinhard held it in its hand as he turned around, lowering his sword.

Reinhard threw it with a flick of his wrist, and it did not even look as it pierced the wall with a sharp sound. Even Subaru could hear Elsa gulp.

"This guy's seriously out of this world. Even I can't find the energy to crack jokes about this."

This impression leaked out of Subaru as if he was being squeezed, he then excitedly distanced himself from the battle.

He approached Rom's fallen body, and somehow managed to drag him near the wall.

"Old man, Rom. Hey, baldy, listen here, are you still alive?"

"Uu… Who's… Bald…"

"You, obviously. As if it'd be anyone else. My only goals in life are to never go bald or become fat. From my perspective, you're a great example of what not to do."

Though frail, at least he was able to respond, Subaru struck his forehead and heaved a sigh of relief.

Setting aside the severe damage to his head, the old man was probably alright. His memory might end up getting a little worse, but that would be a small price to pay to keep his life.

“Is that person alright?”

As Subaru relaxed, Not-Satella called out while running over to him.

With her long silver hair flowing behind her, she analyzed Rom’s injuries, she then whispered, ‘I’ll have to heal this’ as a faint blue glow emanated from her hands.

“Hey now, this old man’s one of the people responsible for your insignia’s theft, you know?”

“That’s the reason. Once I heal him up, he’ll have to repay that favor by answering my questions. He definitely won’t lie to someone who has saved his life. This too is for my sake.”

Perhaps she needed to make such long winded excuses to justify her actions.

Smiling wryly at her roundabout nature, Subaru redirected his gaze to the battle.

Elsa was on her knees, he couldn’t see her expression but it seemed that Reinhard had concluded that she had lost the will to fight. Lowering the hand holding his worn out blade, he approached Elsa with his guard down.

This was probably because he was confident in his superiority, but conceit always led to the worst outcomes. Alarm bells went off within Subaru, and the moment before Elsa moved as if leaping,

“She’s got another one, Reinhard!”

The knife she drew from her waist sliced off a bit of Reinhard’s bangs as he leaned backward.

Now that her surprise attack had failed, she turned to Subaru,

“That was rather sharp of you.”

“I’ve experienced it first hand, after all!”

He flipped her off with pride that barely even counted as pride, but Elsa seemed to think he was talking nonsense and simply ignored him.

“However, I have more than just two fangs… Shall we start over?”

“Will you be satisfied if I dispossess you of all your weapons?”

“If I lose my fangs, I shall use my claws. If I lose my claws, I shall use my teeth. If I lose my teeth, I shall use my bones. And if I lose my bones, I shall use my life—That is what it means to lust for battle.”

“Well then, I’ll have to shatter that declaration of yours.”

Pulling out a third knife from her waist, Elsa took a two blade stance as she once again rushed him.

Blade met blade, the clash of steel caused sparks to fly. With the force against one blade, Elsa swung the blade in her other arm.

The curved blade was aimed at Reinhard’s neck, but his long leg shot up into her arm, ensuring it wouldn’t reach him. Elsa used the momentum to withdraw and leap off the wall up to the ceiling. She then kicked off the ceiling to reach another wall.

In a manner befitting the ‘spider woman’ insult Subaru had lobbed at her, her movements around the room defied gravity and prevented Reinhard from going on the offensive.

She would freely attack from any direction and immediately withdraw, and Reinhard was completely focused on intercepting her attacks, not moving a single step from where he stood. However, it didn’t seem like there would ever be an end to this.

“Don’t tell me even Reinhard can’t finish her off…”

Elsa's inhuman skill was now at an entirely different level from when she was wielding a single blade.

It was like a boss character reaching their second phase. She had ascended to a higher realm.

And even Reinhard who was facing her possessed his powerful divine protection (Subaru didn't really understand much about this stuff, though) and his supreme combat ability, he too had transcended the realm of humanity.

It truly was a battle between Gods. But even so, it did seem to Subaru that Reinhard was superior in terms of ability, however,

"…He's being considerate of us."

Not-Satella whispered as she healed Rom, as if answering Subaru's doubts.

She sent a sidelong glance at Subaru when he went 'Eh?' and bit her lip restlessly,

"I'm using the spirit arts right now, so he can't fight seriously. At the very least, until I finish healing this person…"

"What's the connection there?"

"If he were truly intent on fighting, all the mana in the atmosphere would turn away from me. —I'm almost done here. When I give the signal, call out to him."

"Ye-Yeah."

Her explanation didn't quite hit the mark, but since she was relying on him, Subaru accepted despite his confusion.

The blue glow continued to heal the blow to Rom's head, and a cut that had been bleeding slightly. His wounds and the traces of blood on him gradually disappeared, and Satella sighed deeply as Subaru looked on in admiration.

After wiping off the scar tissue with some cloth, there was no longer any sign of the blow that had knocked him unconscious. As Subaru gasped at her magnificence, she tapped his shoulder.

“Please.”

“Leave it to me. —Reinhard! I don’t really get it, but do your thing!”

Subaru announced the completion of Rom’s treatment to Reinhard who was still on the defensive.

Reinhard glanced at him for a moment. When his eyes met Subaru’s, he gave a slight nod.

“—What are you going to show me?”

“The swordplay of the Astrea family—”

Elsa asked this mid-leap, and Reinhard’s answer was short and stern.

—Immediately after, Subaru felt the space within the loot house warp.

Chapter 22:
Starting Life in Another World from Zero

1

“Hah?”

The atmosphere before him seemed to be warping, and he got the feeling that the room was somehow getting darker.

Furthermore, the temperature that was already low from all that ice magic had now dropped even further, causing Subaru to clutch his shoulders as he shivered.

And then,

“Eh, huh, hey.”

“Excuse me… Lend me your shoulder for a bit.”

Subaru was in a panic as he supported the silver-haired girl who was now leaning on him.

Her delicate body felt terribly hot, and Subaru felt his heart race for a different reason than it had been until now. But those feelings vanished in an instant when he saw her expression.

Her breathing was rapid and shallow and she seemed to be suffering, as though she had a high fever.

“What’s wrong, did you suddenly feel unwell…”

“That’s not it. My mana… You understand, right?”

—I don’t understand at all.

He wanted to cross his arms and announce this, but this wasn’t the time.

The main factor sealing his lips was not the weight on his shoulder, but the change in the room's atmosphere—and who stood at the source of it.

In the center of the room, Reinhard held the two-handed sword in a low stance.

No, he had been holding it since the battle started. But even so, Subaru felt that it was appropriate to say that he was now holding it for the first time.

—Right, the Sword Saint, Reinhard, had just now readied his sword.

"The Bowel Hunter, Elsa Granhiert."

"—From the line of sword saints, Reinhard Van Astrea."

His sword's overwhelming aura enveloped the room, and their fighting spirit made the atmosphere tremble.

Elsa introduced herself with a lick of her lips, and Reinhard responded with a dignified nod.

In this place that had almost been turned into a ruin, the assassin dressed in black and the lightly dressed hero faced each other, the metal that would clash was on one side a knife drenched in blood, and on the other a rusty old two handed sword—Even so, Subaru gulped.

Having introduced themselves to one another, the two would now face each other one on one.

The brilliance of this scene was such that it truly appeared like a verse straight out of some epic.

"—!"

There was a breathless scream, was it Elsa, Reinhard, or Subaru himself as one would expect? It was unclear.

But the result was clear to all three of them.

A brilliant light tore through the loot house that had lost its roof, and split space itself in two.

It looked as if the world itself was misaligned, that extreme light dyed the room white in an instant, but the world suddenly changed when the light faded.

The misaligned space started to return to normal, and the aftershock of this power so great it even warped the atmosphere was now rampaging through the room as wind.

The surging wind enveloped the loot, the furniture, and the scrap wood and violently tossed them about, and Subaru desperately held on to Not-Satella and Rom to protect them from this disastrous collateral damage.

“Nuwaaah!! What the heeeelll?!”

He didn’t understand the blast wave, but he did know what caused it.

With all his might, he had swung his sword but a single time—That was all, and it led to this.

Raising his voice, he endured the wind and the pain. Finally, the storm faded, and the sounds of the loot and wood that were being flung about falling to the ground in addition to the dull sound of the building creaking announced that it was over.

Tossing aside a hanging scroll-like bit of wreckage that had fallen on his head, Subaru confirmed the safety of the two he had given his all to protect. It seemed Subaru’s cover wasn’t quite enough, it looked like Rom had some milk or something splashed on him, but he’d cut himself some slack for that much.

“What do you mean hunting monsters is your specialty, you’re quite the monster yourself!”

“Even I get hurt by words like those, Subaru.”

The source of this destruction, Reinhard, turned around and said this with a faint smile.

His seemingly blazing red hair had been ruffled by the storm, and even his nonchalant face had some sweat on it. As for the two handed sword he was holding—

“I pushed you too far. Rest easy.”

It crumbled in his hand, its poor craftsmanship could not withstand Reinhard’s attack.

An attack so powerful as to destroy a steel blade, and Elsa who took it head on,

“There isn’t even a piece of meat left…Maybe it’s actually a good thing that she completely disappeared like that.”

In the aftermath of the slash that seemed to split the world itself, there truly was nothing left.

The destruction had blown away the counter near the entrance along with the seats, and the shockwave even reached the clearing in front of the building. The violent winds caused much of the building to crumble, and even now it looked like the whole thing could collapse.

Naturally, the spot where Elsa had been standing was also within range of his slash. Her tall figure dressed in black was nowhere to be seen, and he couldn’t even begin to comment on Reinhard’s overwhelming power.

“But with this…”

Stretching his body that was stiff with tension, Subaru heaved a big sigh.

And as if to confirm the reality that he just couldn’t accept, he thought of the person next to him.

The silver-haired girl leaning on his shoulder—Though her breaths were still shallow, her amethyst eyes met Subaru’s gaze when she noticed he was looking at her.

“Is it over?”

"Yeah, just barely, in the true sense of the term."

Answering the question she weakly asked, Subaru supported her as she stood up. In doing so, Rom's head that was in her lap ended up falling to the ground, but that didn't really matter.

Having stood up, she fixed her hair and separated from Subaru, though her legs didn't seem very steady just yet.

Now that Not-Satella had left his side, Subaru stared closely at her.

"Why are you staring at me like that? I think that's reeeally rude."

"You've still got your head, and of course your limbs too."

"…Isn't that obvious? Could you not say such scary things?"

She probably didn't understand what he was feeling.

As she glowered at him with reproachful eyes, he raised his thumb and flashed his teeth,

"That's true isn't it, it's obvious. I've got my limbs too of course, and there's no knife sticking out of my back nor is there a massive hole in my stomach!"

"You speak as though you've actually experienced such things."

He did. Those were some seriously troublesome times.

Because of his uselessness, Not-Satella had lost her life, Rom had lost both his arm and his neck, and Felt had been sliced open, it was truly cruel.

"Speaking of which, Reinhard. I haven't thanked you yet. You seriously saved me. There was that time in the alley too, you must have heard my heart cry out, friend."

"I would be rather proud if I could do that, friend."

Reinhard shrugged his shoulders with a somewhat pained expression, and indicated a certain direction with his jaw.

Following his gesture, Subaru looked in that direction,

“Oh.”

The sight of the person standing there caused Subaru to feel his mouth unexpectedly change into a smile.

At the now destroyed entrance to the loot house, in the shadow of a barely standing pillar, was a girl with a snaggletooth and striking blonde hair looking their way timidly.

“She was running around the alleys desperately. She then asked for my help. It was thanks to her that I was able to come here. After that, I just did my duty as a knight.”

“A knight’s duty, huh. Does that include leveling old buildings?”

“Do you not think you’re being rather harsh, Subaru?”

Reinhard touched his chest as if that struck a nerve.

Now that he’d created such a disastrous scene, his unchanging friendliness seemed a little frightening. In other words, Ikemen Maji Ikemen.

“That girl is…”

Not-Satella, with her unsteady footing, also noticed Felt’s presence.

Subaru stepped between them as if to keep Felt out of her sight,

“Time out, time out. We’d most likely be dead if she hadn’t called Reinhard, you know? So out of consideration for my face, please spare her the ice sculpture punishment.”

“I wouldn’t be that violent. Also, out of consideration for your face…?”

Not-Satella rubbed her brow in exasperation.

Even that gesture of hers somehow brought Subaru joy.

They were both alive and on somewhat good terms, because of which they could mess around like this. It felt pretty misleading, but this was basically the development Subaru was hoping for.

“The rest depends on my negotiation, huh… That’s completely unreliable!”

“What’s the matter with you all of a sudden? You’re all flustered and it’s reeeeally disgraceful.”

Her words cut deep, Subaru placed his against his chest just like Reinhard had. But he only ended up looking funny and didn’t have the slightest bit of Reinhard’s coolness.

Watching their exchange, Reinhard smiled without a hint of malice. He then raised a hand toward Felt who was watching them silently, and started walking over to her.

Watching his gallant figure from behind didn’t even inspire envy, Subaru simply dropped his shoulders. So this was the difference between those who had it all and those who had nothing.

Though cautious, Felt seemed to be grateful for his help, she did not try to run away when Reinhard approached her.

Subaru found the sight somewhat charming as he watched them,

“—Subaru!”

When Reinhard suddenly turned to him and shouted, causing him to realize they weren’t out of the woods just yet.

“—!!”

Some wooden wreckage burst open and a black shadow emerged from underneath.

The shadow’s black hair danced behind it as it firmly pushed against the ground to accelerate, dripping blood all the while.

Tightly grasping a crushed kukri knife, Elsa wordlessly dashed toward them covered in blood.

"You—!"

The murderer had kept her life by somehow evading that incredible slash, and her eyes were now filled with absolute darkness.

The killing intent she was now releasing was the greatest thus far, and it was like ice down Subaru's back.

She would reach them in mere seconds, in that time Subaru's thoughts raced rapidly.

A crushed knife. An instantaneous exchange. She's probably betting it all on one shot. Reinhard won't make it in time. If I somehow survive just one attack, Reinhard can take it from there. Not-Satella doesn't even have time to turn around. Who's the target? This third time, I'll protect her.

Protectprotectprotectprotectprotectprotectprotectprotectprotectprotectprote

"She's aiming for the gut she's aiming for the gut she's aiming for the guuuuuut!!"

He pushed Not-Satella out of the way and immediately raised the club he was still holding to guard his abdomen—Impact.

The force behind the horizontal slash was such that it felt more like a heavy blunt force attack than cutting one.

The impact to his gut swept him off his feet and he felt the world turn upside down as he coughed up blood.

His field of view kept spinning. In truth it was his body that was spinning, having been blown away.

He had no clue how far he had been sent flying and ended up crashing into the wall completely defenseless.

"This kid again—"

Elsa clicked her tongue in frustration as she looked at Subaru whom she had sent flying.

She then turned to Not-Satella who was standing stock still, but,

“That’s enough, Elsa!”

Reinhard had returned, and she realized it would be meaningless to continue fighting.

She threw the kukri knife in her hand at Reinhard, though it was completely bent from her final attack against Subaru. It failed to reach him due to his divine protection of arrow avoidance, but,

“Someday, I shall slice open the bellies of everyone in this room. So until then, do take good care of your bowels.”

It bought Elsa enough time to leap away atop the wreckage.

It would take too much effort to pursue her now that she was nimbly leaping from rooftop to rooftop. Not wanting to fight anymore, Reinhard intentionally stayed behind, choosing not to chase after her.

After he saw her fade into the distance, he ran over to the silver-haired girl.

“Are you unhurt—”

“That doesn’t really matter, does it?! More importantly—”

Worry flashed across Reinhard’s handsome face, but she brushed him off and forced her unsteady legs to move toward the wall—Toward Subaru, who had collapsed upside down.

“Hey, are you alright?! That was far too reckless.”

“Y-Yeeeah… Th-That was nothing. That was exactly the time to act reckless, ya know? I was the only one who could move, and I knew right away where she would strike.”

Subaru raised his hand as Satella’s worried face drew closer, and then gently rubbed his abdomen where he had been hit. He was terribly bruised, when he rolled his jersey up he saw that everything underneath had turned purple.

‘Uegh’, he stuck his tongue out at this disgusting sight, he then rolled over and used the momentum to stand up.

“She’s really gone this time, right?”

“My apologies, Subaru. This happened because of my negligence. If you weren’t there, the outcome would have been much worse. If anything were to happen to her, I…”

“Stop stop stop stop! Don’t say another word! I’ve been acting pretty pompous thus far, if I leave even that part to someone else I won’t be rewarded.”

Subaru stopped Reinhard’s apology, and smiled at him when he fell silent. He then slowly turned to the silver-haired girl looking up at him, and met her gaze.

She stirred slightly, and then stood up. They were about two steps apart, he could touch her if he reached out. It was a long, hard road to get here, thinking back on it caused powerful emotions to well up within him.

When Subaru suddenly closed his eyes and fell silent, she looked like she wanted to say something.

But before she could open her mouth, Subaru thrust his finger into the sky.

With his left hand on his hip and his right hand reaching into the sky, he completely ignored the surprised gazes of those around him and loudly raised his voice.

“My name is Natsuki Subaru! I know there’s tons of things you want to say and tons of things you want to ask, but set that aside for now and hear me out!”

“Wh-What…?”

“Just now, I saved your life by protecting you from that evil blade! Are we okay on that?!”

“O—Kei?”

“Meaning is that clear. So, are we okay on that?!”

Subaru twisted his body into the shapes of O and K, and in response the silver-haired girl responded ‘O-Okay’ as she twitched.

Subaru nodded enthusiastically, and continued as if pressing her for an answer.

“The one who rescued you, the savior of your life, was me. And the heroine whom I saved was you. So naturally I ought to receive a fitting reward, right? Right?!”

“…I get it. Only if it’s something I can do, though.”

“Alright then, I have but one wish, just a single one.”

Subaru raised a single finger and thrust it before her, emphasizing his words further. He then wriggled his fingers which made her somewhat anxious, after which he cleared his throat and shot her a lecherous smile as she nodded with a grim expression.

“Right, my request—”

“Yeah.”

Flashing his teeth and snapping his fingers, he raised his thumb and donned a posed look,

“I want you to tell me your name.”

Her eyes widened, her expression was one of astonishment.

The room fell silent for a while, and Subaru started to tremble slightly as he maintained his posed look.

The feeling he’d disregarded earlier came back in the form of extreme embarrassment, but he couldn’t lose his nerve before even seeing their reactions, that was the worst cliche in this sort of situation.

So he remained silent, and waited for the girl’s response.

He was ready for anything, be it lumps of ice, icicles or even a freezing beam. Ah, he'd rather not deal with the freezing beam.

"Fufu."

As Subaru's thoughts rapidly turned to extreme situations, they were drowned out by the faint sound of someone giggling.

With her hand against her lips and her white cheeks flushed, the girl smiled as her silver hair swayed behind her.

It was not a smile of resignation nor was it a faint fleeting smile, and it certainly wasn't a grim smile prepared for the worst. She simply smiled because she was happy, that was all it was.

"—Emilia."

"Eh…"

In response to the word she said following her laugh, Subaru could only let out a small gasp.

Seeing this reaction, she straightened her posture and smiled impishly with a finger to her lip.

"My name is Emilia. Just Emilia. Thank you, Subaru."

"For saving me." She said as she offered her hand.

Subaru looked down at her fair hand and timidly touched it. Her fingers were slender, her palm was small, her hand was delicate and terribly warm, a woman's hand with blood flowing through it.

—Thank you for saving me.

She wasn't the only one who wanted to say these words, that went for Subaru as well. She was the one who had saved him first. All this meant was that he was finally able to repay her.

He had been slaughtered thrice before he finally reached this point.

After all that pain, all that sorrow, all those horrible memories, after he fought to the bitter end with his life on the line, his reward was her name and a smile.

Aah, seriously—

“Man, that’s not nearly enough.”

Saying this, Subaru smiled as well as he firmly returned the girl—Emilia’s grip.

2

—That would have been a good spot to end things, but…

“At any rate, I’m glad you’re alright, Subaru.”

He was probably waiting for Subaru to finish his conversation with Emilia.

Having been forcibly silenced, Reinhard now spoke a few words of surprise at Subaru’s safety.

Perhaps that meant that even to someone like him, Elsa’s final attack must have looked devastating.

Subaru lightly pressed his sore abdomen and then pointed to the club on the floor.

The spiked club served as an excellent shield, just as its thick and study appearance suggested.

That may not have been what it was intended for, but even so.

“It’s because I was able to use that to block right away. If it weren’t for that, my torso would be split in two right now.”

“Right, if it weren’t for this—”

He wouldn’t have been able to avoid BAD END 4, Subaru smiled casually and Reinhard smiled along with him as he innocently picked the club up,

“Huh?”

In his hand, part of the club slid off due to the smooth cut going through it, producing a dull sound as it hit the ground.

Now that it was split in two, its days of service were over.

Reinhard slowly looked in Subaru’s direction with pained eyes.

Following his gaze, Subaru felt an unpleasant premonition as he rolled his jersey up. His torso was completely purple from the bruising just like before, but there was a difference.

—There was a red line going across it.

“Ah, this is bad. Even I can tell what happens next.”

The sharp pain arrived first.

The next instant—Subaru’s abdomen split along the middle, causing copious amounts of blood to gush out.

“—Hey, Subaru?!”

Subaru could hear Emilia’s panicked voice from right beside him.

Aah, I finally heard her real name and now it looks like this could be the end.

—But even so, I’ll probably come back here again.

His field of view tilted. Perhaps his body had collapsed.

Reinhard looked panicked as well, and Emilia’s well-featured face drew closer as she looked at him with an expression of sorrow.

—Aah, so cute even when she’s panicking, a true parallel world fantasy.

With that final impression, similar to a certain other time, the sharp pain and shock swept his consciousness away like surging waves.

Interlude: The Moon is Watching

A faint blue light. —As he watched the water-like waves administer healing from a distance, Reinhard heaved a sigh so faint no one noticed it.

His handsome profile was rather despondent and his clothing was slightly battle-worn. His figure standing before the wreckage was such that an image of it would be a masterpiece in itself.

However, despite his objective brilliance, from his subjective viewpoint, his inadequacy brought him such chagrin that no amount of words could describe it.

Even now, Emilia was putting her all into healing Subaru. The wound he had received was due to the opening created by Reinhard's conceit.

He had let Subaru sustain an injury that shouldn't have reached him, and placed an unnecessary burden on Emilia.

Furthermore, due to his innate characteristics he would only hinder Emilia if he was by her side.

Watching from afar like this was the best he could do, realizing that some part of him was calmly acting on this judgement increased his guilt even further.

"—Alright, that should be enough."

As Reinhard condemned himself with his eyes closed, a voice like a silver bell reached his ears.

Emilia lightly brushed away his bangs as if wiping his forehead, and confirmed that his face was tinged red. She then stood up with a nod and turned around.

"I've finished his treatment. —Looks like we're past the worst of it."

“That’s splendid news. Now, Lady Emilia…”

Reinhard briskly walked over to Emilia who seemed satisfied, and dropped to his knee and lowered his head. Not a single one of his movements were lacking, his etiquette was flawless.

“Due to my inadequacy, I have caused you a great deal of anxiety. I shall accept any punishment for this failure.”

He placed his sword before his knee as he apologized for his failings.

To a knight, this was the highest form of apology. Reinhard was prepared to accept any order or punishment she may give him.

However, in response to his apology, Emilia said, “You know, I don’t really understand why you people are like that.”

“Huh?” he replied.

“You came to save us from danger, and somehow settled things without anyone dying. Despite this, you’re now trying to take responsibility for all the pain and suffering that occurred in the process.”

She waved her finger and pouted, a little displeased.

She then suddenly turned her finger toward Subaru, who was sound asleep. “That kid’s a lot more straightforward. He saved my life, and thus demanded a reward. Although he really didn’t ask for very much.”

Reinhard too had seen Subaru try to act cool as he asked for her name. As Emilia smiled thinking back on it, Reinhard’s lips ended up forming a smile as well.

“So,” Emilia suddenly narrowed her amethyst eyes at Reinhard. “thank you for helping us. —That’s all I have to say to you. As far as I’m concerned you haven’t done anything wrong, so there shall be no punishment. If you can’t accept that, then do your best from next time onward.”

"—Understood," Reinhard replied. "I am thankful for your kind words."

After lowering his head even further to show his respect, Reinhard stood up.

Now that the two were facing each other, Reinhard ended up looking down at her since he was much taller. Even so, what was that majesty he had just felt from her?

It was probably the difference in their caliber, Reinhard guessed, aware of his narrow-mindedness.

On the other hand, this only reaffirmed the fact that Emilia too was one of the 'Chosen'.

"By the way, you're dressed rather lightly today…"

Emilia murmured as if she just realized this as she watched his silent form.

Her eyes were on his clothes. —Since he was off-duty today, he wore dark clothes suited to a stroll around the capital. He understood that the fact that he didn't look very much like a knight must have been strange to her.

"Today is one of my rare days off, so I wasn't wearing my imperial uniform. My armor is presently in the castle, so for today my sword is the only knightly object I have on me."

He placed his sword back at his hip, its conspicuous claw marks catching Emilia's eye.

She then blinked, seeming somewhat surprised. "How come you got wrapped up in this on your day off?"

"That's a little complicated, but… It was thanks to Subaru over there."

It was his encounter with the boy who was presently unconscious that led him here.

If he were to explain things in order, he would have to start with the alley where he first met Subaru and spoke with him.

Back then, Subaru had revealed to Reinhard that he was looking for a silver-haired girl in a white robe. Reinhard knew of only one person who fit that description.

Subaru wished to meet her. While in the process of investigating him, Reinhard ended up coming to the slums. "I met her along the way, and then arrived here."

"Right, that girl."

Now that she had been brought up, Emilia's eyes turned to a corner of the clearing—to the girl who was tending to the still unconscious old man.

Feeling her gaze, the blonde girl turned around and then lowered her eyes awkwardly.

"Lady Emilia, she…"

"Reinhard. You've been a great help. I'm grateful that you saved us. But I have one more request: don't interfere any further."

In response to her firm words, Reinhard gave up on saying anything further.

Taking his silence as a yes, Emilia walked toward the blonde girl. The girl also turned to face her, as if prepared for the worst.

"Is that old man your family?"

Emilia leaned over to meet the crouching girl's gaze as she asked this.

The girl was dumbfounded by this question. That was probably because this was entirely different from the sort of words she was expecting to hear.

Even Reinhard, who did not know their circumstances, could tell that their relationship was not a friendly one.

The girl, who seemed to have the wind taken out of her sails, scratched her cheek as she tried to compose herself, and repeatedly tapped the unconscious old man's head as if to hide her embarrassment.

"S-Something like that. To me, Old Man Rom is my only… Yeah, something like a grandpa I guess."

"I see," said Emilia. "I've only got one family member too. He's always asleep when it matters. I could never say that sort of thing while he's awake, though."

"Yeah, I couldn't say this sort of thing if Rom was awake either."

It seemed like her blows to Rom's head were becoming more than just taps. This was probably unintentional. Her pace increased as well, and his round white head started turning red.

She then looked up at Emilia with a frail light in her red eyes. "I thought you'd be way harsher."

"I suppose you would. Perhaps I would have if things were the way they were before, but it seems I don't feel like it now. So I'll let it go out of consideration for that kid's face, just a little, though."

Emilia shrugged her shoulders with a wry smile like it just couldn't be helped.

When she did this and pointed Subaru out, the blonde girl lowered her face for a bit, and then quietly mouthed an apology. "I'm sorry," she began. "You saved my life. I can't act ungrateful. I'll return what I stole."

Saying this, she stood up and directed her gaze toward the alley.

She then addressed Emilia. "Listen," she said. "When I came back, I wasn't sure you guys were even alive… So I hid it elsewhere. Is it fine if I go to retrieve it?"

"I see you're rather cautious… I don't dislike it, though. I'll wait here."

"…Are you sure? I might be making stuff up to run away, you know?"

"Running is fine, but you'll have that coming after you, you know?"

Reinhard, or that, as Emilia referred to him, straightened his posture.

It was a mystery what the blonde girl felt when she saw him do this, 'Uee', she let out a sound showing deep displeasure and then dashed into the alley saying she'd be right back.

"Once she comes back and returns everything… We'll finally be able to go back, huh."

"I won't ask for details, but do be careful. —I shall have a squad join you, please allow them to accompany you on your way home."

"Going that far is… Even if I say that, I suppose it hardly makes a difference considering how much trouble I've already put you through. Very well."

Having received her consent, Reinhard responded with an "Understood." He then followed her gaze to Subaru, who was sleeping peacefully. "Well then," he said. "What is your relationship with him—with Subaru?"

"Passing acquaintances," Emilia replied.

Reinhard was taken aback by her immediate answer.

Perhaps finding his reaction amusing, Emilia's lips broadened into a smile. "That's all I can tell you, we really are just passing acquaintances. I don't remember ever meeting him prior. I believe just now should have been our first meeting…"

"However, he was looking for you," Reinhard informed her. "He said he wanted to give you something. He was here during all of this, and also…"

He put his life on the line to protect you. Reinhard hesitated to speak this next part out loud.

It felt like doing so would somehow sully the nobility of his actions. He surely did not do it to receive praise.

Furthermore, Emilia probably understood without having to be told.

She continued from the part Reinhard did not speak out loud. “That’s what’s strange about it… Although I do suspect that that pervert might have something to do with this.”

“Please refrain from speaking poorly of Lord Roswaal,” Reinhard retorted. “He is a magnificent person. It is true that he is somewhat eccentric, but…”

“You knew who I was talking about, so it’s rather obvious what you think of him.”

“…My apologies. Please keep this secret from Lord Roswaal.”

Reinhard winked as he apologized, and Emilia ambiguously replied, “Right, right.”

After this, Reinhard once again raised the topic of Subaru. “What shall we do with him? If you wish to leave him to me, my family can take him in as a guest.”

“…No, I’ll take him with me,” Emilia answered. “I’ll be able to find out exactly who he is, and even supposing he isn’t connected to that pervert, the fact remains that he saved me.”

“Thank you for your concern.” She finished, and Reinhard responded with a nod.

With that, their discussion had concluded for the most part. What was left was to assign some subordinates to Emilia and escort her home safely. In the meantime, Reinhard would also have to deal with the aftermath.

Taking a look at the collapsing building, Reinhard closed his eyes at the scale of the damage.

As usual, he cursed his lack of self-control. He had failed to restrain just a bit of his power and this was the result. His power would wipe away the entire region if used carelessly, he had to be cautious.

“What’s going to become of this place?”

“We’ll forbid entry into the area for a while and put up some wanted posters for the Bowel Hunter. Although there’s always plenty of shady rumors surrounding her, so there’s a good chance it would only be a waste of time.”

“And that girl and the old man?”

“…I’m unsure of the circumstances, but considering my duty as a knight, I do not believe I can overlook their actions. However,” He paused and took a breath, and then shrugged slightly. “It’s my day off, and furthermore, if the victim does not file a complaint, it would be difficult to pursue the matter due to a lack of evidence. Ha-ha. Seriously, I don’t know the situation, so.”

“Fufu, you’re a bad knight.”

“Sadly, this is the true nature of the man known by such titles as the knight among knights.”

As they spoke, Reinhard sensed someone approaching them from the alley. From her gait and breathing, he knew it was that girl without even needing to look.

The snaggle-toothed girl showed herself and looked at them with an embarrassed expression. “I brought it back like I said I would.”

“Great, I’m glad you came back. I’d feel reeeally guilty if I had to set this guy on you.”

“The knight among knights; it’d be insane to try to outrun someone like that. This is my first time seeing someone faster than me. That shocked me quite a bit.”

Responding to her gaze with a smile, Reinhard took a step back and watched the two.

The girl approached Emilia while fishing around her chest. “Alright, I’m returning this. —If it’s important to you, conceal it so it doesn’t get stolen next time.”

“I find it a bit strange to receive that warning from you of all people… If possible, I’d prefer you stopped doing this sort of thing entirely.”

“That’s impossible. Let me tell you, I only wanted to return this to you because you saved my life. I don’t think I’ve done anything wrong, and I have no intention of stopping.”

She bluntly refused Emilia’s request and donned a stubborn smile.

Her profile felt rather tragic when one considered her age. Even as he heard her position on the matter, Reinhard silently accepted it.

He knew that this definitely wasn’t something he should overlook considering his responsibilities. But how else could they survive? It wouldn’t be right to simply speak of justice without even offering an alternative.

Reinhard’s thoughts were the result of all he had seen in the capital.

Emilia seemed to feel it as well. She lowered her eyes for one fleeting moment, and then extended her hand without pressing the matter any further,

“I see… You’re pretty stubborn, huh.”

“I might stop if food just appeared before me without me having to do anything, though. Anyway, here you go.”

The object she took out was in the palm of her hand, she was returning what appeared to be the stolen item to Emilia.

For an instant, a red shine flashed by his eyes. That dazzling light felt familiar, and in an instant Reinhard narrowed his eyes and searched his ocean of memories.

He then found a memory that matched,

"—Eh"

"Reinhard…?"

He grabbed her hand which was holding the insignia from the side.

Surprise filled both the girls' eyes. The two of them looked up at Reinhard, and hesitated to say anything further when they saw his serious expression and gaze.

"Th-That hurts… Let go…"

Felt weakly shook her head as she resisted.

However, Reinhard's grip on her hand showed no signs of loosening. Reinhard's strength was such that he could even crush steel if he wished. Although he was holding back, it definitely wasn't the sort of grip a dainty girl could shake off.

"What is this…"

A quavering murmur. It had come from Reinhard's mouth.

It was Emilia who responded to his words. Her amethyst eyes seemed shaken,

"Reinhard, wait. I do understand that it won't be easy to let her off just like that. But she didn't know the insignia's true value. And I, the person she stole it from, don't intend to make an issue of it either. —I was also at fault for letting it get stolen, so. So."

"That's not it, Lady Emilia. That's not what I'm worried about."

The firm tone of his response caused Emilia to fall silent with a perplexed expression.

Even disregarding his rudeness toward her, Reinhard looked at the girl whose arm he was holding. Looking up at the young man whose hair was the same color as her crimson eyes, her eyes wavered with unease.

"…What is your name?"

“Fe-Felt…”

“Your surname? How old are you?”

“I-I’m an orphan, you know? I don’t have anything fancy like a surname. My age is…probably around fifteen, or so I’m told. I don’t know my birthday. Hey, let me go!”

The girl returned to her usual self as they spoke, and struggled as she yelled in a coarse tone. However, Reinhard kept her in check with his dexterous control over his strength as he fixed his eyes on Emilia.

“Lady Emilia, I can no longer uphold our agreement. —I shall take charge of her.”

“…May I ask about the reason? If it’s about punishment for stealing my insignia…”

“That is certainly no small sin… But compared to the sin of overlooking what’s happening in front of me, it is but a trifling matter.”

Emilia raised her eyebrow in confusion and incomprehension.

Reinhard deemed her confusion something that couldn’t be helped and simply accepted it. After all, this was a sight she was used to. It would probably be cruel to tell her to notice it.

“I would like to take you with me. My apologies, but you do not have the right to refuse.”

“Don’t screw…don’t get carried away just because you saved…?”

Her foul-mouthed response to his words was interrupted when her body went limp.

Her shoulders mysteriously lost their strength before she could finish, and she resentfully glared at Reinhard to the very end,

“Go to hell… Damn it.”

After she hurled this final abuse, her head slumped.

Supporting her unconscious body, Reinhard smoothly carried her under his arm. In response to his practiced movements, Emilia,

“That’s not very knightly of you either… If you’re too harsh, there will be lasting effects on her gate.”

“Fortunately, I’ve had to deal with this from birth so I understand how to control it. —Lady Emilia, it seems you may soon receive a summons. Please understand.”

He gently took the insignia from the unconscious girl’s hand and presented it to Emilia.

The draconic insignia truly appeared to symbolize ‘The Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica’ itself. The red jewel emitted a faint glow in Reinhard’s hand. When it was passed to Emilia, it shone brilliantly as if overjoyed to be reunited with its owner.

“I shall leave Subaru in your hands.”

Reinhard bowed to Emilia who wordlessly gazed at him once she accepted the insignia.

As he felt the weight of the light girl in his arms, he suddenly brushed the bangs covering her forehead aside. Her cherubic white features possessed a charm befitting her age now that she was unconscious and thus had no need to brace herself.

If he gave her a change of clothes and got the alleys’ grime off her, she would surely shine brightly.

A strong wind blew, causing Reinhard’s red bangs to dance.

He looked up at the sky through that gap, it was already dusk and the moon floated in the capital’s sky.

The full moon shone a faint bluish white, its beauty was filled with a certain bewitching charm.

“Today might be my final opportunity to calmly gaze upon the moon—”

Reinhard’s whisper did not reach anyone but the moon looking down at him.

Emilia's Capital Touring Chronicle

1

"—The capital really is suuuuper huge after all."

With her hands joined in front of her chest, the girl said this in a lively voice as her eyes sparkled at the scenery before her.

She was a beautiful girl. She possessed long, silky silver hair that reached her hips. Her braided silver hair was accentuated by a white flower accessory, quite literally giving her a flower-like loveliness.

Her skin was as fair as virgin snow, her slender, well-proportioned limbs were draped in a dress with a white theme, and her amethyst eyes that were admiring the townscape sparkled so beautifully it was if there were jewels embedded in them.

Her beauty was such that one would not hesitate in the slightest to call her the loveliest girl in the world. However, the way the girl was looking around her surroundings full of excitement was just a little too childish to fit that description.

Her eyes followed the sea of people passing to the left and to the right. Once glance at her eyes that were full of curiosity as if looking at something novel would be enough to tell that what she was feeling was somewhat akin to someone from the country visiting the big city for the first time.

"You're very cute when you're having fun like this, but perhaps it's about time you returned to reality—"

Raining on her parade was a voice whispering so it would only reach her slightly longer than normal ears. However, there was no one around her. But the voice was quite literally right by her ear, so —

"—M, Come on, I already know that the situation has gotten a bit troublesome. You're being so mean even though I only stopped for a moment."

"Well, it's not like I want to earn my daughter's ire by endlessly scolding her either. But this is going to be quite a bother to the others as well, and you don't want that either, right?"

"That's true, but…"

The voice continued its sound argument and the girl despondently lowered her head in response. As she did this, a small figure nimbly pushed its way through her hair out to her shoulder. This was—

"Anyway, try looking around for a place that looks familiar. There's no point in getting dejected."

Offering this forward-thinking proposal while stroking its whiskers was a cat small enough to fit in one's palm.

It was coated in gray fur, with big, round eyes and a pink nose. Setting aside its size, that was all there was to say about its appearance, but where it differed most from an ordinary cat was in the fact that it was standing on two legs.

Waving its tail that was about as long as the rest of its body, the cat purred atop the girl's shoulder.

"I suppose your final option would be to build up your courage and ask someone. Can you do that, Lia?"

"Don't make fun of me. Of course I can do something that simple. Puck, you blockhead, you're always treating me like a kid."

"How else would you treat a kid that ended up losing their attendant because they were having too much fun?"

In response to his words that were both carefree and flippant, all the girl could do was pout.

The cat known as Puck smiled as the girl started behaving like a kid immediately after complaining about being treated like a kid.

“Alright, this is going to be a real problem if the sun goes down. You’d better find your way while I can still help you, Emilia.”

“I’m not some lost kid. I just ended up getting a little confused about the area!”

Becoming stubborn in response to his call, the girl—Emilia started walking with a prim expression.

Toward the endless sea of people before her, in order to find the servant girl she had lost.

2

The capital city of Lugunica, possessing a population exceeding 300,000, was the world’s foremost metropolis in terms of populace and was the core of the Dragon Kingdom,

At its center was the royal castle, and the city—The royal capital was a melting pot of all sorts of races, always bustling with activity and overflowing energy, one could spend their entire day watching the people walking on the streets without getting bored.

In particular, the commercial district, also known as the ‘trading street’, which was home to countless stalls and hawkers, and had any number of high quality goods or curios imported from other countries lined up due to which it was always dizzyingly busy.

“…Humans really are amazing.”

Somehow making it out of the wave of people, Emilia escaped to the side of the street and paused to take a breath. Smoothing down her ruffled silver hair, she once again examined the street once she was done with her short break.

The trading street was filled to the brim with people passing back and forth, conversing and negotiating endlessly. One street, just a single shopping street had this many people on it. Just the mere thought of how difficult it would be to find a single person in all of this depressed her.

“That girl was wearing a rather conspicuous outfit herself, but…

Even that doesn’t really mean much in the capital, huh.”

Puck who was slipping back into her hair spoke her thoughts out loud. Poking the cat as if she were touching her hair, Emilia lowered the ends of her eyebrows looking troubled.

“Yeah, that’s going to be a problem… Also, you’d better be careful too, Puck. It’d cause a real panic if anyone were to see you, you could just go back into your crystal since you don’t have anything to do.”

“I do have something to do, though, I’m your conversation partner. It’d be a problem if you started crying because I left you alone. But anyway, what are you going to do? Wanna haphazardly wander around at random with no destination whatsoever?”

“The way you put it seems like I’d probably never ever find her. I’ll have to use my head on this one.”

Shaking her head at his proposal, Emilia tapped her head with her finger.

With this, Emilia fell deep in thought and Puck started grooming his fur as he patiently waited for her brilliant idea. But what emerged from her was not a brilliant idea—

“—Look, Puck. It looks like there’s a bit of a quarrel going on over there.”

“Liiiaaa.”

“A little! Just a little bit! I’m curious, so I’ll head over there for just one moment!”

On the other side of the street, she could see that some curious onlookers were gathering around a stall some distance away. In response to what Emilia said when she saw this, Puck sighed in a somewhat troubled manner.

“Hey, Lia, you’re in trouble yourself, you know?”

“Y-You’re wrong. It’s not like I want to help them or anything…

Right, I just feel like taking a look.”

Looking as evil as she could and yet still quite cute, Emilia ran over to the disturbance. Making her way through the crowd, she made it to the front of the onlookers. And then—

“C’mon, Mimi keeps telling you—. Mimi doesn’t do things like dining and dashing. Mimi just ended up losing Hetaro who had the wallet, so Mimi’s in a lot of trouble!”

“You too, young lady, how many times are you going to make me repeat myself. I don’t know about this missing person, but you’ve already eaten my product, so I must receive the appropriate compensation. Aah, if your companion isn’t with you, you could use your possessions instead....”

“Mimi’s got this staff and stuff, but if Mimi hands it over the lady’s going to be super mad at Mimi!”

The sight of the two who were quarrelling in the middle of all of these rubberneckers caused Emilia’s eyes to widen.

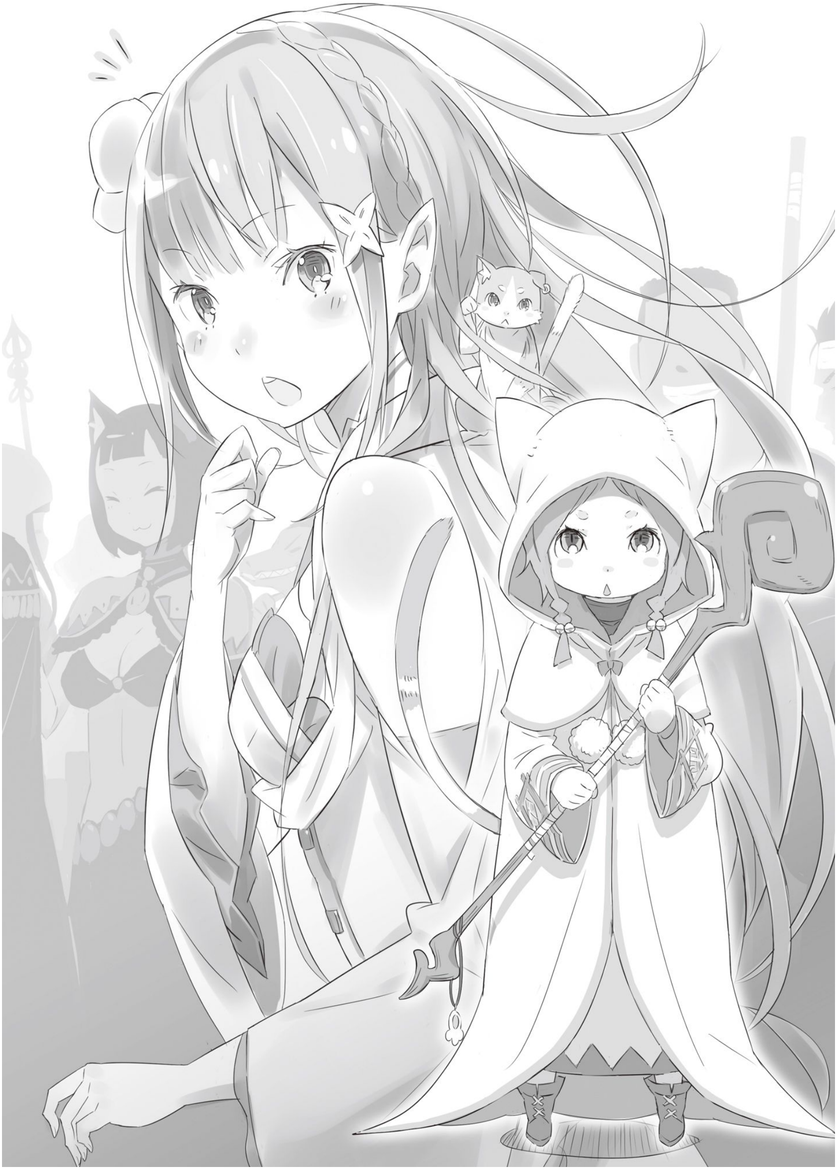
One of the two parties who were arguing was a tall, dark-skinned man, and judging by his appearance he was probably the owner of the stall in question. And facing him was the one who had been arguing with him all this time, a person with a small build who was much shorter than him.

They were a cat-like beastman bearing round ears and orange hair. They were probably of the catman race. In terms of height they barely even reached Emilia’s waist, and their large white robe covered their entire body. Possessing cute, round eyes and an adorable nose, she was a girl whose entire body seemed to exude loveliness.

Judging by the contents of their conversation it seemed as though she was unable to pay the bill she owed the stall, but,

“Mimi doesn’t want to be thought of as someone who dines and dashes either. You want this staff, old man?”

“I feel guilty after all! That’s quite a decent staff, isn’t it? How troublesome…”



“Gosh, that Hetaro, getting lost so easily! Mimi’s mad at you as your older sister.”

“Excuse me…”

As the concerned parties started wearing themselves out, someone raised their hand and interfered. The girl and the shopkeeper were both surprised, the one standing between them was none other than Emilia.

Emilia had timidly stepped in, and with the two of them staring at her she continued, “Umm,”

“I happened to overhear, but… Basically, you just need compensation for what this girl ate, is that right?”

“Ah, yeah, that’s right, but… Young lady, are you this girl’s acquaintance?”

“Eh, this lady’s my acquaintance? First time I’m hearing of it! I don’t know her at all!”

“No, I don’t know her either. This is my first time seeing her.”

“Ehh—?!”

Emilia and the kitten, caught between the airheadedness of these two the shopkeeper screamed in despair. But Emilia disregarded this and quietly reached into her pocket.

“But I’ll pay for her. That should solve everything, right?”

“That would certainly be a great help, but… You don’t even know this girl, right?”

“True enough, I don’t know her, but… She does look reeeeally cute.”

This felt sloppy even for an excuse made up on the spot, but the shopkeeper seemed to conclude that Emilia was being considerate in her own way.

The shopkeeper nodded as if giving up, and Emilia smiled at him as she pulled out her purse.

“…Eh, eh?”

The hand digging around in her pocket was unable to grasp what it was supposed to. Emilia carefully checked every nook and cranny of her bosom, hips and sleeves and then nodded deeply.

“—Looks like I dropped my purse somewhere.”

The heartrending murmur of the girl who had lost her attendant in the middle of the capital and was now completely penniless dominated the area.

3

Having announced that she would shoulder the girl’s debt, Emilia was now in quite the predicament now that it turned out that her purse was missing.

Her attempt at philanthropy, or rather, philcathropy had ended up like this. Feeling Puck sigh in exasperation from within her hair, Emilia was unable to say anything in response as she fretted.

She had to find some way to break through this situation. But just how in the world could she—And then, in that place that had fallen silent, her brain arrived at one hope. That was,

“—I’m going to perform. If you find it entertaining, please toss me some money.”

“Eh?”

This impromptu announcement of a street performance caused all the bystanders to tilt their heads.

Among all these faces of astonishment, only Emilia who started preparing with a face that looked as though she was intending to do this from the very start, and the catman girl who was delighted, “Ooh! A performance! How fun!” Were different.

Needless to say, not even Puck was able to follow this completely unexpected idea of hers. The cat rustled around in her hair as he changed position, and quietly whispered into Emilia’s ear.

“Lia, Lia, I’m afraid to ask this, but what’s this all of a sudden?”

“I just remembered, Puck. If you show off some unique performances in a place with lots of people around, you can get money, isn’t that right? I think this is the perfect solution for me and this girl since we’re both broke!”

“You’re definitely cute when you’re trying hard, but there are times when I wonder if I went wrong somewhere while raising you. For instance, now would be one of those times.”

It was already too late to turn back, and Emilia had no intention of turning back either, Puck’s lamentations had no effect on her.

Neglecting to even prepare the bystanders for what was to come, Emilia took a step forward and started breathing deeply. Standing before the stall, right in front of all of these onlookers, the area naturally ended up getting monopolized by Emilia.

“I shall now have an extremely rare animal perform for all of you.”

“I’ve suddenly got a bad feeling that I’m about to get wrapped up in this.”

“Let’s go.”

Emilia thrust her right hand out in front of the onlookers and declared this.

The spectators seemed baffled as she showed them her empty palm. Unfazed by their reactions, Emilia signaled to Puck who was taking quite a while to emerge from her hair.

“C’mon, please. Hey, Puck. Come out.”

“It’s not that I mistimed my appearance, it’s that I don’t want to appear at all. But I'd rather not humiliate you in front of everyone, so I suppose I'll have to come out."

Shrugging his shoulders as he sighed, Puck was dejected as he reluctantly forced himself to creep out of her hair. His appearance instantly caused a commotion, and even as this happened he continued to walk across her upper her arm and elbow until he finally reached her palm where he raised both paws and proclaimed, "Victory"

The crowd grew excited in an instant. Emilia thought this response meant she was doing well—

"This is an extremely rare animal. I shall now have it…"

"S-Spirit! It's a spirit! She's a spirit user!"

"Crap, run! Drop your weapons and all the money you have and run!"

Perhaps she should have him dance, as Emilia thought up a program the crowd in front of her dispersed and ran off. They dropped everything they had on them, and the panic started spreading to people who weren't even involved. Like this, the commotion continued to spread and when the dust finally settled, the street was completely deserted.

Emilia was dumbfounded by this, and Puck who was still on her palm started grooming his face with his palm as he spoke,

"Just about everyone would run away if they saw a spirit. It was just like you said."

"That's true, but… They didn't need to be that surprised, did they?"

Accepting Puck's words, Emilia sulked a bit as she looked around her surroundings. She was surrounding by all the things the onlookers had discarded. Going by the rules of street performances, all of these things now belonged to Emilia. Of course, she wouldn't actually take them.

"…Your dancing is so cute, it would have been nice if they saw it before they went home.”

“To call that reaction going home, I quite like your elegance.”

The two had this frivolous exchange. And then—

“Ohh! This cat’s really talking! How? How can you talk? Are you the same as Mimi? Are you a catman? You’re tiny! Super tiny! Ufuhahaha—”

“This kid’s pretty bold, huh. If you consider appearance alone we’re certainly rivals in terms of prettiness, but we’re entirely different beings.”

“Is that so? How do ya know that?”

“I’m Lia’s father, and you’re that Hetaro kid’s elder sister, isn’t that right?”

“It’s true—!”

For some reason, Puck’s joke caused the aforementioned girl to explode with laughter. Anyway, she was genuinely happy that this girl stayed with them.

If even she had run away, even Emilia would surely be hurt.

“Huh?”

Suddenly, Emilia’s eyes widened as she examined the fallen items. The reason for this was one of the items by her feet—A white purse placed on top of some somewhat dirty wrapping.

She crouched down and picked it up, and then nodded when she confirmed its feel.

“It really is the purse I lost… Why is it in a place like?”

“—Perhaps some kind hearted soul brought it here?”

Puck said this as if bored, and yawned as he slipped back into her silver hair.

He was basically declaring that he was done. This upset the catman girl, but she immediately returned to her usual self and started wagging her tail when Emilia stroked her head.

“Ufuhihihi, you’re super good at this, lady! You’re probably a match for the lady! You’re definitely far above the captain!”

“Yeah? Fufu, thank you.”

“Mimi can tell you’re a really good person, so Mimi’s gonna remember ya! If you ever have something troubling you or someone you wanna drop, just tell Mimi and it’ll all be fine!”

“Drop… I don’t really get it, but okay. I’ll be sure to remember you too.”

She didn’t really understand what this cute catman was saying, but Emilia magnanimously accepted her words.

Emilia then turned around as she continued to stroke the girl’s head. Behind her was the shopkeeper who even though the situation had completely left him behind, continued to man the stall because he could not abandon it.

Now that she had her purse back, Emilia approached the dumbfounded shopkeeper and opened it.

“Um, so, how much did she owe you?”

And she once again resumed her philanthropy under the guise of nosiness.

Felt’s Job

1

“…So I’d like for you to pick up the dragon-shaped insignia from that woman. The reward will be ten holy gold coins… would this be enough for you to take the job?”

It couldn’t be better. I shook hands with the black-clothed woman whom had made the request.

For all her feigned absent-mindedness, she’s got a tracking gaze that’s like a snake, I thought.

Still, this is the slums, so there ain’t any nice people who’d ask ta steal stuff around here.

I didn’t ask for the details of the circumstances, since we had a tacit agreement that I didn’t need to know.

That’s why we only spoke about the target’s appearance and location whereabouts, where to deliver the stolen goods, and parted without any other questions. …Ta be honest, I should be happy about that.

After all, it’s an important job worth ten holy gold coins. It’s a large bounty that’s ton more than ma savings from doing odd jobs up until this point, I can’t let this chance get away.

In this world, if you want to do anything, you need money. You need money to be happy.

I refuse ta spend ma last days in this den of losers. I’ll definitely get outta here someday, I’ve had enough with living in such a gloomy place.

“With this reward and my savings, I…”

I won’t have ta sneak around in the shadows of the capital. I can go out in the open without worries.

It won't just be me, definitely someday…

2

This city that I was born and raised in is apparently the biggest one in the kingdom, and is called "the capital." Honestly, even if I didn't know about the other cities, I still would've considered this city too big.

Still, even though I live in the capital, it's at the bottom rung slums—a stupid place where shadows gather. The world of the capital sure lacks glamour.

This is how I would best describe the capital. The aristocrat district is where rich people's homes are lined up, and a place where I could earn some small change by sneaking around; the commoner district beneath is a world's difference; and the shopping district is filled with greedy shops that would do anything to even earn a single copper coin. Lastly, below everyone are people like us from the slums, who desperately try and steal from those above us.

Weaklings become food, that's the ironclad rule of this world. This is even more so in the slums, where you can only rely on your own strength to survive. In my case, I used my agile hands to steal from other people's pockets.

At first, they were petty jobs like stealing a coin purse from someone I passed by on the streets. At some point, I broadened out and began working by stealing based on people's requests.

By the time I realized it, I had become a master thief. I was no longer doing it just to earn money, I was working for the sake of a greater goal. Step by step, I was getting closer to it, I was sure of it.

…Then this important job happened to land in my lap, and now I'm one step away from my goal.

Ten holy gold coins. Of course, the higher the reward, the more difficult it is ta steal. But I'm not carefree enough ta be scared of something like that. It's a great chance ta escape from the slums, and that's good enough.

Then…

“-is it really alright to go for that woman full of openings?”

Hearing that conversation held at the street, I turned my head to look for the woman described.

White clothes with golden birds woven on it, and long, dazzling silver hair. Even though her clothes and appearances are uncommon and eye-catching, ma attention seems to be elsewhere.

“She’s sorta jumpy… like she came from da countryside.”

The woman was looking around restlessly as she carefully walked along the edge of the street. Since I was also rotten and raised in the capital, I could tell at a glance who was unfamiliar with the capital, and was therefore easy prey.

My intuition from my many years of experience told me that she was obviously a country bumpkin. She gave off the feeling that she was not cautious of her surroundings, but rather, worried about being swallowed by the crowd. …Her defenselessness is enough ta make me want ta hold my head in anguish.

“Just as I thought, she gathered a bunch of us to go after Ms. Grey…”

Keeping my distance while tailing the woman, the faces I saw a moment ago started appearing on the streets.

They’re the same as me, thieves with their target set on this defenseless woman. It’s only natural for ruffians ta congregate in a flash towards someone who’s that unaccustomed ta the capital. It’s a painful lesson she’s going ta have to learn.

“For you guys, stealing that might mean today’s grub money, but if I get it, I’m swaggering away with ten holy gold coins!”

I was seriously troubled on how I could properly threaten them so that they would leave. Well, since so many of these guys are terrible at tailing, it would be easy ta just stick a knife in one of their backs.

But right before I got ready to act… "…?"

One of the men tailing the woman had a puzzled look on his face as he looked around. He then tilted his head, changed directions, and disappeared down the streets as if he had forgotten about the woman.

If that was the only case, it was simply a matter of the man realizing his inexperience and withdrawing, but when others also began leaving as well, that's another story.

"Wha…? Why did every single one of them disappear?"

When I realized it, all the people whom I thought were going to pursue the woman had vanished.

Only two people remained. The carefree woman, completely oblivious to having just been targeted by a group of people, and I, who had maintained a careful distance while following.

Confused about what had just happened, I studied the woman from behind. Staring, staring, staring… and suddenly, the woman's figure looked blurry. I shook my head.

"What was that just now…?"

What a strange feeling. I think it might be magic or something.

Old Man Rom told me stories about how this world has mirrors that can talk ta people from far away, flying clowns, and even walls that people can walk through. That woman can probably use those kinds of magic.

"So that's why she could walk around the capital while being so defenseless… Shit, this is bad."

In front of me was a woman casually strolling around the capital, but unlike before, looking at her back from afar now sent shivers up my spine.

As expected of ten holy gold coins, it won't let me have it that easily.

“Alright, if that’s how you’re gonna be, I won’t lose to you. I’ll definitely get that insignia…”

Fired up again, I was about to clench my hands and chase after the woman when I found myself taken aback. That was because…

“Oh, I’m sorry.”

She was shyly apologizing to some bastard who had bumped into her on the street. It seems like she’s embarrassed because she wasn’t paying attention in front of her, but that wasn’t the case. That other guy did it on purpose.

At that moment, that person had quickly stolen the woman’s coin purse. “What’s even happening?! Argh, shit! It can’t be helped then!” Scratching my head in frustration, I reluctantly ran forward.

The one I ran after was not the woman who was merrily touring the capital, but rather, the man who took the purse from the woman.

Seeing him pull ahead even though we had the same aim hurts ma reputation.

Plus, if the requested insignia is in that purse… This is the worst possible outcome.

Even if I were ta look away for a bit, it would be hard ta miss someone who stands out as much as her. So I should prioritize the thug who would not be easily found once he enters the slums…

“His movements aren’t bad, but the alleyways are like ma backyard ta me.”

His ability to slip into the crowd was amateurish compared to mine, so I had planned on cornering him somewhere unobtrusive by waiting at the end of the alley he escaped towards.

“…Looks like you meddled with someone quite out of your league.”

But it seemed like there was a scary old gramps holding an awfully magnificent sword at the throat of the thug.

From head to toe, the old gramps was in a nicely tailored black formal wear. And though he seemed calm relative to the contents of the words he spoke, that calm impression was offset by savageness of the upheld sword.

Above all else, his body emitted a distinct aura—something unique to extremely dangerous people.

Very occasionally will the capital get these people who give off this sort of vibe, and I hate it. They might be disguised as a patrol guard, or act as a shopping district store's security… this old gramps is also one of them.

"Take out what you stole. If you do that, I shall let you go."

He had a smile on his face, but his eyes showed no signs of joy as he spoke.

The bastard being glared at probably already looked inside, I thought, as the man hurriedly placed the coin purse onto the outstretched hand of the old gramps, and sprinted away as soon as the sword left his throat.

Conversely, I failed to escape, and was left with no choice but to stand there with a stunned "what should I do" look.

"It looks like you had the same idea, Miss." I gulped.

The old gramps standing in front of me gently looked down, but I couldn't see his smile as anything other than malicious. I genuinely thought I was going to be eaten.

"What a sharp child. It seems I still have much to learn… Now then, here."

After saying that, the old gramps handed the purse over to me. I quickly accepted it, and was surprised by how light it was compared to what I expected.

"Please return that to its owner. If I were to hand it back, things might get a little complicated."

“A-Are you sure? Don’tcha think I might take this and run away?”

“You did bother to chase all the way to here. Besides, you wouldn’t do something like that, would you?”

The old gramps’ gaze sharpened for just a moment, and it felt like my heart was being grasped. I was left with no choice but to nod. Seeing that, he gave a satisfied nod and headed towards the street, giving me a pat on the head with his coarse palm as he walked by.

“Aah! Jeez Grandpa Wil, where did nya go? Feli was worried, nya know?”

“I apologize, some boorish things came up.”

As soon as I returned to the main street, I noticed the old gramps was apologizing to someone. However, I didn’t turn to look because I was in a hurry to leave this place… or rather, escape it.

Occasionally, things like this would happen, so the capital is a scary place. Locations where there are lots of people mean those kinds of dangerous people are more likely to appear. It’s something you have to bear in mind.

“Th-This should be far enough, I should be fine for now…”

After I ascertained that I was far enough away, I breathed a deep sigh of relief. After that delay, now it’s time ta check the contents of the purse. It would be great if the insignia I’m after is in here, but I don’t have much expectation.

My expectations were low because it was related to how light and thin the purse was. “And what’s inside is… What is this, pocket money for a kid?!”

The amount was at the level where if you bought some candy from the shopping district to eat, it would run out relatively soon. Ta be honest, I had ma suspicions about whether or not that woman actually had the gem-embedded insignia like ma client claimed.

Her appearance fits, but the item is missing. Did she drop it or something?

"Crap, that's right! Even if the purse is safe, it's more important that I steal the insignia from that woman. If someone else took it, this would've been pointless!"

I might've been careless, but that woman was even more careless than me.

I hurried back to the street where I had stepped away from the woman, and began searching the crowd for the conspicuous woman. This is when I noticed that the street was rowdier than when I had left just a moment ago.

It was awfully clamorous, with many people throwing their belongings as they ran off. I looked around in confusion until I saw a silver-haired figure at the center of the commotion.

I was a bit relieved to find the woman, who had a reluctant look on her face, and drooped shoulders.

As to not be perceived by anyone, I feigned indifference and tossed her purse onto the pile of stuff thrown around her.

After having started a commotion in front of the shopkeeper's store to pay for something, she noticed the purse, gave the shopkeeper a look, and went to collect it from where it was dropped.

3

After that, I continued to tail the woman. While I was searching for a chance to steal from her, I very clearly understood something.

"…This woman is a really nice person."

I learned of this by eavesdropping a conversation from behind me. Supposedly, the reason for the commotion earlier was because a child cat-beast human next to her had tried to dine and dash.

Then this woman had nothing ta do with it, was what I thought initially.

Apparently she tried to shoulder the kid's meal fee, but realized her purse was gone. Undiscouraged, she seemed to have earned the money by putting up some kind of performance. Well, it turned out ta be some ruckus that I can't understand.

She would then walk with the cat human for a bit, part from the child, and wander about. Even though she used up everything in her purse, she doesn't look ta be ending her walk any time soon.

To be honest, I was getting tired of following her, but because I had observed her for so long, I was able to make an educated guess on where the insignia was. While walking, she constantly checks the side of her clothes near the waist.

There's something important there… It's not her purse. She's hiding something else.

"…"

Time ta steal it, I decided, and got out of the streets to avoid being in the woman's line of sight. Using the buildings' walls, I hopped onto the roof and observed her movements. Doesn't look like she noticed. I can jump over there, grab the insignia from her pocket, and escape by running into the alleyways. I was confident about it.

But I feel just a tiny bit sorry for stealing the insignia from her.

Those who request thievery are scoundrels; but those who get robbed are also evil in some way—those were my beliefs. However, I didn't know how this woman could be applied to it.

"There's no point in thinking about something I can't understand. …I just gotta do what I normally do."

Those were words that even I saw as a means to convince myself with. They were pointless excuses.

Having said those excuses, I took a deep breath. From the roof, I jumped straight towards the woman.

My forelock fluttered in the wind as I landed. The wind flapped at her hair as I landed. While witnessing her look of surprise, I reached towards her.

…In my hand was a dragon-shaped insignia, its jewel shining bright red.

Ram’s Flirting Refusal

“Really, Emilia-sama is such a pain.”

Looking at the crowd of people walking passed her, the young girl places her hand to her forehead. Despite showing such a tired expression and grumbling, the girl normally had an adorable face. With her sharp facial features and her left eye concealed by short peach pink colored hair. The typical impression would be that of a beautiful girl, but it might be better to say she gave an impression of strength in spite of her cuteness.

Her expression remains relaxed and cool, her lone visible eye not betraying the slightest hint of emotion.

Amidst the noisy crowd, the young girl looked around and sighed seeing no signs of her target. However, her gaze remained determined. her pale skin and petite frame like that of a dancer. An Oni, looking like a cute little animal but so much more. She walked the streets of the Capital City Lugnica, wearing a maid’s uniform, which on its own was eye catching.

Although the uniform was decided upon to suit the interests of her master, the girl had no objection to such an outfit. The design attracted many curious stares from people on the street, but the young girl had grown accustomed to them.

“—She said to just wait a while here, how annoying.”

She was unable to find the “master” of her own master, and gave a dissatisfied shrug.

The pink haired girl’s name was Ram. No family name, it’s just Ram.

She works as the maid of a nobleman of the Dragon Kingdom, Roswaal L. Mathers, an on this day she’s come to the Capital.

As capital of the Kingdom of Lugnica, The city is more lively than others in the country. For Ram, who has had numerous visits to the Capital, and become familiar with the city as a result of following her master's orders. Ram wasn't particularly interested in the city, but—

"It's always Emilia. He already said from the beginning Ram would lose such a target."

After making a slight judgment on the character of the target, Ram, who is still pacing back and forth, continues to search.

If you haven't

If you haven't looked for someone like a stupid person in such a wide place since you have separated with the person for less than 15 minutes, it is more appropriate to judge whether the other person has searched far enough away from the initial position. However, if the she is going to the left at the very beginning, it will be totally luck. If you choose the wrong one, it will be very difficult to find her. If she doesn't, then there is no way of returning.

"Even something as simple as sending a letter, she gets lost. Ram must blame Emilia-sama's curiosity. This was underestimated, Ram isn't in the wrong."

Ram evaluates her current master, who was nowhere to be seen, and the result is the current situation.

In spite of this, no matter how absurd it was, Ram is certainly displeased with the current events.

"If only she had chosen a place to meet, it's no good. Even with my Clairvoyance, Ram cannot handle so many people…"

"Hey Hey! You there in the maid uniform!."

"…As a result, you can only personally inquire about it. It's really troublesome."

"Hey Hey Hey!Don't ignore me so casually ! Here ! Look at me !"

Hearing an annoying voice that had been calling out from the beginning, the person began scolding the ignorance of Ram as she walked away. When she turned to face the person speaking, Her facial expression dramatically changed.

“Hey, that look disgusts me from the bottom my heart. Missy, are you sad?”

“Anybody who is not only dressed in suspicious clothing, but even talks in a manner that makes people feel that they have no way to come to know it, will always receive this expression.”

Although Ram was harsh in her first meeting with the person, this time no one would criticize her attitude.

This is because the man who is standing in front of Ram is really beyond common sense.

With a dark, angular helmet, his head is completely covered. If this is the case, he can be recognized as an suspicious man.While his head is concealed in armor, from the neck down instead, he is dressed like a villager with cheap and simple materials. He wears shoes consisting of straw ropes on his feet. Can he even become more suspicious?

“The law and order of the Royal Capital has also begun to be corrupted. Now it’s time to call the guards over. Please wait a moment.”

“If you think of me as a perverted old man, you should be more conscious of your own safety, right?! What’s the point of waiting in the same place?!”

The tough-looking man, responding to Ram’s harsh approach, stopped in desperation. He stopped and loudly called out after Ram, who was staring straight at him with a pointed gaze.

“That’s not really a friendly look. Wait a minute please, I’m just looking for someone, so I’d like to find out where that someone may be.”

“What a coincidence, I’m also very busy trying to find someone here. Well, you’re free to keep searching.”

"That's too cold for someone wearing a maid outfit which symbolises service, isn't it?!"

Extending his hand to try to stop Ram from leaving, Ram who sidesteps to avoid the other person suddenly notices—the man had no left arm.

"Oh, did you stop out of sympathy? Anyways, that's right, since I lost my arm, my life has seen and suffered all sorts of awesome fates ! I'm relying on the warmth and sympathy of others to live and survive. Quite unfortunate, aren't I? "

"If you don't have enough hands, just ask a cat. If you've enough feet, please find it on your own. That's all ."

"Isn't that too harsh?!"

Toward the helmeted man before her, Ram's face began to lose it's angry glare. The man waved his right hand in panic.

"Wait Wait!I just want to find her!May I ask, have you seen a young lady with orange hair who looked almost the same age as you but had very large boobs?"

"I have never seen her. apart from what I have done so far in order to send you away, this time it's a message from my heart."

"This confession is persuasive!! No way…Well, could you tell me please who you're looking for?"

"I haven't answered, because I don't intend to answer."

"This is nothing but coldness. We're both simply searching for our people!"

"There is no "we". This is pointless."

Ram isn't entirely sure, but out of dissatisfaction with the man's heart, she refuses his assistance. She does not doubt there is dissatisfaction, but the reason for rejection is another problem altogether.

Seeing the silent Ram. the man gave a sad and dejected look as a result.

“Ah…yeah I understand, I’ll stop here. It’s not getting either of us anywhere.”

“I already knew that this was meaningless from the very beginning, but you still wasted the time of mine. What do you really intend to do about myself leaving… Oh yeah, nothing. I didn’t expect anything out this conversation anyway.”

“I’m sorry to hear I’ve troubled you!”

Giving a glance to the man yelling after her, Ram lets out a”sigh…” toward him and then leaves. She doesn’t remark further or offer a goodbye. It’s completely disgusting. Then she hears behind her—

“Well then, Bye, Ram”

Said innocently as she was leaving, and Ram stopped after hearing it. However, the shadow of the man with a helmet has already disappeared.

“—Did Ram ever mention her name?”

Ram mutters this to herself brushing her hand against her pink hair.

Ram’s search still hasn’t progressed well thanks to the helmed man wasting too much of her time.

“Hey! It’ll be best if you keep quiet! Cause us any trouble and this won’t end happily.”

“Isn’t it too inconspicuous? walking down busy streets in that eye catching outfit?”

“We’re not in a patient mood, wouldn’t you say? Maybe we should get a little rough?”

Ram stares at the three sh*t faces with disappointment.

The three thugs, one tall , one brawny, and one short came out of nowhere to begin threatening Ram.

“It would seem the security of the Capital truly is no better than the wilderness.”

“huh? Wilderness? Where are you from? Doesn’t seem like you’re from The Capital.”

“I mean you’re no different from wild animals spending your day scrounging for food and behaving in this barbaric way.”

Listening to their idiotic chatter Ram gave a look of disgust, in that moment the men looked to each other blankly, then laughed.

“Hey wait! Don’t mess with us !”

Unable to read the girl’s attitude, the tall thug pulls two knives and points them toward Ram.

“Don’t make me laugh ! You can’t possibly escape, unless you brought the Sword Saint, you’re in trouble!”

“Aah, I guess her lucks run out.”

“Haha, even if we actually have to fight, victory is ours.”

Intimidating, berating, the hateful words continue. Ram frowns hearing this, and then for the first time it seemed like she let out a helpless sigh.

“Hey, Just don’t move lady—”

“Ram is still trying to show patience, because this is an important task ordered by Lord Roswaal. …But now, I am at my limit with this.”

Ram whispers these words annoyed and reaches for a small wand within her dress. She points it to the sky and light starts to shine, magic power bursts in the atmosphere to create a strong wind surrounding her.

“Hey! Don’t go trying any funny business—Wuah!”

The man with the knives was blown away against a wall and buried in debris from the impact. Seeing the brawny man try to make a run for it while his remaining companion froze in place, Ram had already reacted before the fleeing man could even notice.

“Ah, Aayy?!”

the large man waved his arms trying to cast aside her wand, but immediately he was thrown into the sky. Slamming into the ground on his back accompanied by a scream before finally the man fainted on the ground.

And then—

“Is there something else you want to say to Ram?”

“Wait…Wait ….Sorry?”

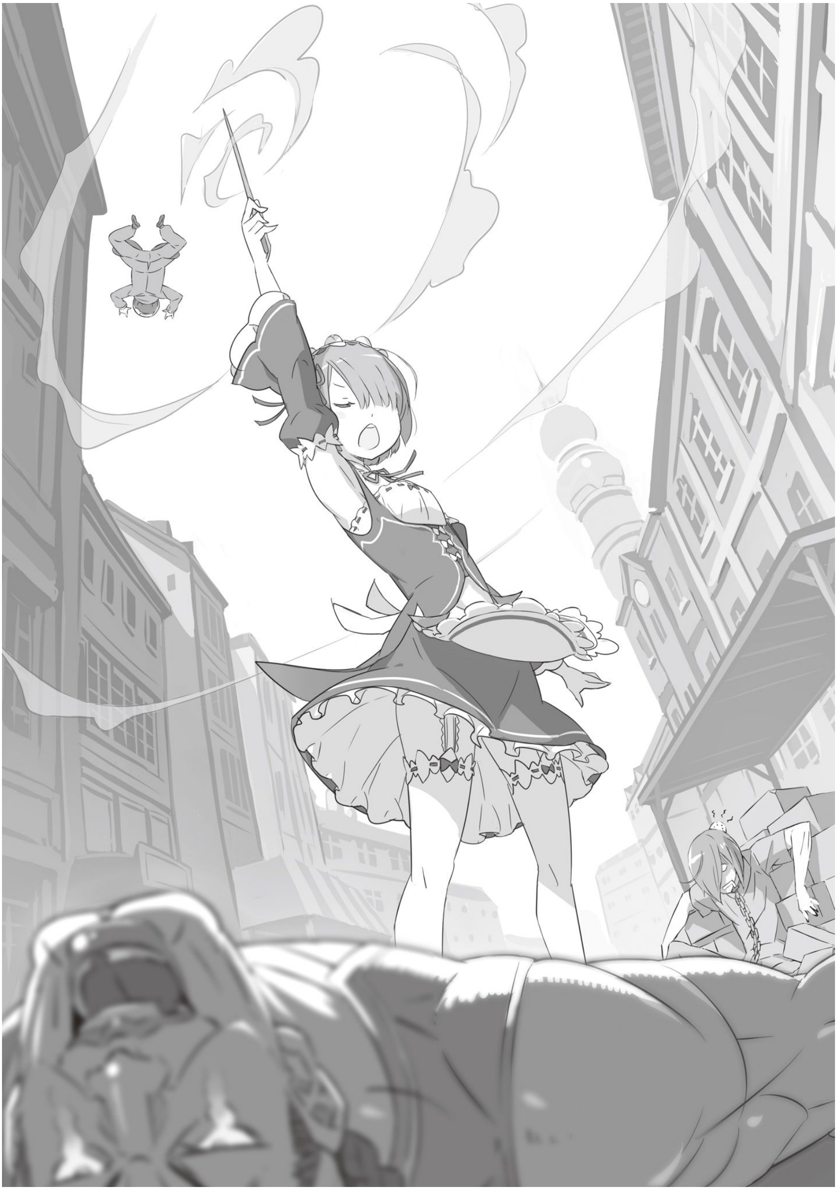
The short man gave a nervous smile before being launched into the sky by the merciless Ram.



The three thugs were dumped into the alley like trash, and Ram patted her skirt looking up at the dimming sky.

“The sun has completely set… The target should have already gone back to the mansion.”

Ram’s conditions for finding her target have become more unfavorable. If she is not found quickly, the situation will become very bad. Looking up at the moonlight, Ram suddenly noticed.

“The light is—”

Ram looked up at the starry night sky of the Capital and notices Aurora Light waves in the sky.

The waves sweep around, and Ram emerges with a strong sense of intuition and rushes off toward the source of the Aurora Light without hesitation. The person she is searching for is this way, she doesn’t know why, but Ram is sure of it.

“Ram was just about to start thinking that Ram was finally done with being involved with trouble—Ram really is a troublesome person .”

Ram runs towards the lowest district of the capital—The Slums, and toward the deepest point of the slums.

She arrived, and in front of her, Ram finds her target holding a teenage boy’s hand. She realizes that the boy will come to the master’s mansion along with her target.

But that’s for another story…

Rem Meets Subaru

1

…Feeling her chest tingle, the girl looked outside the window.

The girl looked at the path in front of the gate that led to the main road, visible from the mansion window, then looked back.

Rem: “Master Roswaal, it seems my sister is coming back. It looks like she’s in a bit of a rush, though.”

Roswaal: “Hmmmm, she’s coming back earlier than plaaaned. Since she’s coming back soon, that must mean that she had left there at niiiiight.”

The man responded carefreely to the girl who gave a report based on her chest tingling, and he really sounded like he was feigning ignorance.

It was a person who was sitting in a leather chair and held a cup that gave out steam. He had long indigo blue hair. His different colored blue and yellow eyes were mesmerizing; you could say that at a glance he looked like a frail, handsome man.

However, the clown makeup applied on his face ruined these classy impressions.

Roswaal: “In a rush… I wonder if something happeneeeed. Do you know the details?”

Rem: “I’m sorry. I don’t know much about the situation. But, it seems Miss Beatrice has work to do.”

Roswaal: “Beatrice does? I see… But, that means a bone has been brooooken.”

When Roswaal looked up at the ceiling upon hearing her explanation, he pompously put down the cup onto the desk. After that, he fixed the posture of his long legs, and when he turned around to face the girl as he moved the chair, he said,

Roswaal: “At any rate, the things Ram does usually aren’t pointless… I think. Sorry, but can you go find Beatrice? I think she may be a little late, thoooough.”

Rem: “Yes, understood.”

After receiving her master’s orders, she lightly held onto the maid outfit she was wearing and answered with a perfect curtsy. On her lowered head, where she wore a white head dress, she had somewhat short blue hair.

After the servant bowed, Roswaal tugged on his chin approvingly and said,

Roswaal: “Well then, please take care of business. …Rem.”

The girl—Rem bowed formally again, and quietly left the office.

2

With her blue hair swaying, Rem walked briskly through the mansion’s spacious corridor.

It was Lugunica Margrave Roswaal L Mathers’ mansion. Rem was the head maid of this mansion. She was a maid that could do everything and did most of the mansion work.

Even though the Roswaal mansion was pretty big for a mansion, there were currently only two people who were permanent maids due to various reasons—there were only Rem and her twin sister Ram. So, Rem made up for lack of workers and took care of most of the mansion work by herself.

And then today, she had been contacted by her sister that had been away from the mansion for business, then the exchange from earlier happened.

Rem: “Judging from the range of synthesia, I suppose my sister will be back in about an hour.”

There did exist magic where they could communicate in real time that also cancelled far distances, but the sisters didn't need that.

The synesthesia the twins had—Rem and her sister Ram possessed a special ability that relayed strong emotions and small thoughts. She had felt her sister's return and her slight sense of impatience precisely as a result of synesthesia.

However, at this point in time it was uncertain whether she'd be able to do what her sister had asked of her.

Rem: "If only the great spirit was here, things would be much easier…Miss Beatrice?"

Rem boldly rose up to the difficult challenge, talking about how there was no use in asking for too much.

The challenge was very simple—open every single door that she sees. However, there was almost 100 doors in the mansion. This was, of course, no easy task.

Rem: "Miss Beatrice, which one are you in?"

She opens the door that had a "reference room" plate on it. She was met with a bunch of books and a pile of a countless number of books. It was normal, since it was a reference room.

Normally, there aren't any people who permanently stay in the reference room. Rem wasn't going to do that either.

Rem: "Miss Beatrice? Miss Beatrice?"

While calling out to her, Rem calmly opened doors one after another, though at an unusual pace. After doing that for five minutes…

Beatrice: "Augh! You're so annoying, loud, and noisy I can't stand it!"

A lone girl comes out of the next room with a loud but cute voice.

It was a little girl that had her hair put into drills, and she wore a magnificent dress. Seeing this girl that had dollish looks appear, Rem straightened herself and bowed deeply.

Beatrice: “You’ve been so loud, and you just don’t pipe down, I suppose! What in the world do you want from me at this time of night?!”

Rem: “I apologize, Miss Beatrice. But, thank goodness you’re still awake.”

Beatrice: “Hmph, even if I was sleeping, the noise would wake me up. You sure do have guts, little sister.”

The girl—Beatrice arrogantly snorted at Rem, who bowed, with a book held to her chest. She was acting all high and mighty, but Rem didn’t even care.

Beatrice was someone of a noble position. The way she interacts with Rem, a maid, is something to be expected.

Rem: “By the way, Miss Beatrice, Master Roswaal needs you for something. I’ve been told that he really needs your help for it.”

Beatrice: “For him to summon me through a maid, he’s become quite an arrogant one, I suppose. It seems he’s forgotten that there is no hierarchical relationship between me and him, I suppose.”

Rem: “…”

Beatrice, who seemed to not like this selfish way of going about things, was becoming grumpy since she had been summoned late at night.

Beatrice: “Haah. You should hurry up and show me the way before my mood changes, I suppose.”

Rem: “…! Yes, thank you. I’ll show you the way.”

Beatrice broke the momentary silence, then expressed tolerance in a way that showed that she had gave in. Saved by her thoughtfulness, Rem started walking through the corridor as she guided Beatrice.

Beatrice: “Mm…I heard Pucky’s instructions. He said to prepare a bath, a clean towel, and the guest room, I suppose.”

Rem: “The guest room, you say?”

Beatrice: “Yes. …It seems that foolish girl is bringing someone back, I suppose.”

Murmured Beatrice in somewhat of a displeased manner while showing no emotion in her eyes. Rem thought about Beatrice’s instructions in her mind without mentioning what she’d said.

The guest room is always ready. All she has to do is prepare some sheets and let in some fresh air. Then heat up the bath, prepare a clean towel—she immediately realized that they were bringing in a wounded person.

With that, she also understood why Beatrice was needed.

…Beatrice is a great healer that Rem could never compare to. She hears the earth dragon growl from afar, and had a feeling that the dragon carriage was very close.

3

…The black-haired boy laying down on the bed was breathing profoundly in his sleep as though he was dead.

Healing the boy in the boy that had been taken in took at dawn took a lot of time; outside the window, the sun was already setting westward in orange light. It wouldn’t be long before night approaches.

Emilia: “Now he should be relieved…yeah.”

Sitting on a chair next to the bed, breaking into a smile out of relief was a silver haired girl—it was Emilia.

Emilia was the one who took this boy back and asked for his injuries to be healed. Now that the commotion finally settled down for the time being, Rem threw a question at Emilia.

Rem: “Lady Emilia, now that things have settled down, I think it’s about time for you to tell me what’s the situation…”

Emilia: “Mm, you’re right. Umm, this boy’s name is Subaru. I had a lot of trouble at the capital…but that’s when he helped me out. I owe him my life, and a lot of other things.”

Rem: “Is that so?”

At her vague explanation, Rem shot a glance at the person next to her—she looked at her pink haired twin sister who looked identical to her.

Being looked at by her sister, the older sister—Ram kept her stone face, shook her head, and said,

Ram: “Even I don’t know the situation in detail. It’s something that happened while Lady Emilia and I were separated.”

Rem: “Separated…? I thought you were with Lady Emilia to escort her…”

Ram: “It was to encourage Lady Emilia to be independent and have a strong sense of responsibility.”

Rem: “As expected of my sister… I’m very impressed.”

She spoke in a bit of an insolent way, but Rem unconditionally accepts what Ram says. Seeing those sisters interact like that, Emilia burst out laughing.

Emilia: “You two really do get along reeeeaally well. But, don’t make me laugh too much. I want to let this boy get some good rest.”

Rem: “This boy must be someone you met while being separated from my sister.”

Emilia: “Nope, he’s not. Subaru is my…my, my what?”

Emilia put her finger to her chin and started to worry with a serious expression on her face. It didn’t seem like she was trying to put off

Rem. She saw that she really was at a loss for an answer.

If she wasn't trying to hide something, this must be someone whom she had too little information on in the first place since she was having trouble explaining.

…Then perhaps this was a kind of a person that mustn't get close to Emilia.

Ram: "…Rem. This person saved Lady Emilia's life. Master Roswaal acknowledged that fact, too. No matter how stupid he looks, he's our guest. You do understand what that means, right?"

Rem: "But, Sister—"

Ram: "Rem."

She calls her name once for a moment. Rem felt like her sister had looked deep into her heart, and after that she couldn't continue.

Emilia stared at the silent sisters in confusion, then slowly sat down.

Emilia: "I actually want to stay by his side until he wakes up…but apparently he won't wake up until morning."

Ram: "We were told that she used up most of his mana to heal, after all. I was surprised that Miss Beatrice helped heal someone she didn't even know."

Emilia: "Because of that, Puck will be Beatrice's for a day tomorrow. Also, Roswaal is…gone from the mansion for tonight, I think."

Rem: "He was called over suddenly, so he left the mansion before the afternoon. He plans on returning tomorrow night."

Emilia: "I see. Well, let's leave the room for now."

Emilia, who seemed to be satisfied with the sisters' replies as she had a quick stretch, prompted them to leave the room. Then, lastly Emilia ran her fingers through the bangs of the boy laying on the bed—through Subaru’s bangs.

Emilia: “I have so many things I want to talk about with Subaru when he wakes up.”

Rem felt like she was whispering, and it sounded like it had some sweet anticipation to it.

When they left the room, they separated in the corridor for each of their plans. Emilia’s duty to report the trouble in the capital to Roswaal was one in particular.

Emilia: “Hmm, he’s gonna get mad at me. How do I explain this…”

Emilia dropped her shoulder, and was trudging towards her private room in the mansion. Rem watched her go, said goodbye to Ram who had work left to do, and went to the kitchen to prepare dinner —

Rem: “…Before that”

Rem confirmed that they were gone and snuck into the room where the boy was sleeping in.

She silently closed the door with her back and walked up to the bed in the gloomy room that had the lights off.

Rem, who held breath, only heard the sleeping boy’s soft breathing. The boy’s innocent sleeping face reflected in Rem’s light blue eyes.

…She didn’t know who this suspicious boy was, or what he was after.

Emilia had explained that he was a lifesaver, but she just could not believe that he didn’t have an ulterior motive. Emilia was beautiful, but she was so vulnerable that just watching her would make you uneasy, and there was no end to people with bad intentions going after her.

…Before problems arise—before peace is disturbed, maybe I should do something.

Dangerous thoughts rise up in Rem's head, and she silently reached for the boy's neck. Then…

Subaru: "Ehehe, you're cute even when you're mad…parallel worlds, fantasies…"

With a very sloven look on his face, the boy talked in his sleep like a slob while drooling.

Just as Rem heard that, she didn't know what to do with her hand, and…

Subaru: "…Aagh"

Seeing the sleeping boy shriek after being flicked by her finger made her feel relieved.

Rem: "I don't think I'll ever get along well with this guest…Please leave as soon as possible."

Only Rem's superficially polite murmur was left in the guest room before she exited it.

The Awkward Duo

1

Natsuki Subaru had practically no experience with walking around the neighborhood alongside someone of the opposite sex.

The last woman he'd walked around holding hands with had been his mother; he would need to go back to when he was a primary school student to find a time where he'd had rapport with the opposite sex, outside of relatives. Considering that he had to go all the way back to when there was no distinction between male and female to find any memories of that, that spoke volumes about his relationships.

Subaru: "E-Even so, this business of trying to find that girl among this crowd is like trying to find a needle in a haystack."

Subaru kept making talk with the girl walking right next to him, unable to stand the awkward silence. He wouldn't have known how to pass the time otherwise.

The Girl: "I guess you're right… But it's not like we can just give up. If we have to find a needle, then a needle we must find. Though I really only have myself to blame for letting my guard down."

The girl who'd given him that reply was so beautiful that he felt like his eyes were about to explode.

She had snowy-white skin and long silver hair that shimmered like moonlight. Her white garb greatly accentuated her innocence, and her amethyst eyes were full of determination as they gazed off ahead.

Her picturesque beauty stood out even from Subaru's shortish life. And to make matters worse, he could hardly get to grips with himself in the fact that she matched his tastes to a tee.

Regardless though, that wasn't the only reason why Subaru was walking with her.

Subaru: “Either way, I owe you for helping me out, so I’m gonna give it my all for you, my young lady.”

The Girl: “I already told you that you don’t need to do any of this… You sure are an odd boy.”

Though the girl stubbornly refused to admit it, the fact was: she’d saved his life. He really didn’t need any more reason than that to help her.

Subaru: “Well, even so…”

Walking up ahead of the girl, he strutted down the narrow alley at rapid pace. Then, he stopped in his tracks, turned around and struck his usual pose as she tilted her head in doubt.

Subaru: “By the way, it feels like we’re going somewhere with less people around, are you sure it’s this way?”

The Girl: “Wasn’t it you who knew the way?”

It felt like great troubles awaited them ahead, yet this strange duo’s trek was already going awry.

2

The girl had practically no experience with walking around the neighborhood alongside someone of the opposite sex. Or rather, she could hardly remember spending time with someone like this.

???: “…Are you a little nervous perhaps?”

A voice suddenly came whispering in her ear, causing a slight smile to creep onto her face.

The Girl: “Just a little. But now’s not the time to worry about such things.”

She purposely stiffened her lips as she replied back to the voice in something like a whisper. Though it wasn't like they were actually speaking, they were using something like "thought-waves" to communicate; a kind of magic that utilized the path between a contracted spirit and its contractor to share their thoughts.

The young man next to them heard nothing of their current conversation as he went around in circles in search for someone to call out to.

He was a strange young man. She hadn't taken notice of this when she'd first come across him cornered by those thugs, but he was dressed weirdly. That, and he had unusual black hair and dark eyes; plus, once in a while, he'd say stuff in a strange language that she'd never heard before. He was probably a foreigner, but even so, there was a lot of odd stuff about him.

He was strangely prudent for his confidence, and seemed to know a lot despite lacking in common sense. Even the girl could tell that something wasn't quite right—in spite of believing she couldn't speak for others.

???: "But it's definitely thanks to Subaru that we were able to get closer to our objective. You have to give him credit for that. Don't you think he'd be delighted if you gave him some praise?"

The Girl: "Quit with the silly talk. I doubt he'd be delighted even if I said something to him."

The tone of his voice sounded pleasant, in contrast to her's which showed signs of discouragement, probably because she understood where she stood. Nevertheless…

???: "But that boy gave off the impression that he didn't care about stuff like your identity, didn't he? I don't know what you think about that though, Satella-san."

There was a small hint of blame there in his words, which the girl accepted, along with the pang of conscience that came with it.

Her cheeks still flushed whenever she recalled how the black-haired boy, who'd called himself Natsuki Subaru, had effortlessly accepted her confessing to being a half-elf.

There'd probably never been a moment in the girl's life where shame had filled her heart as much as it did now. Subaru's reaction back then had been completely unexpected for her. It had made her aware of just how shallow and conceitful she was, bringing her almost to the verge of tears.

And what really couldn't serve as her saving grace was her own heart for being so happy about it.

Satella: "Maybe I'm just a reaaaally bad person…"

Subaru: "Hm? Did you say something?"

Satella: "…No, nothing. Let's just hurry and search the slums."

Flustered, the girl tried to pass off for the fact that she'd let that slip out loud, rather than as a thought-wave. She pushed the young man forward as he tilted his head in confusion.

They'd helped a lost child out, and thanks to that, they'd been able to get a strong lead from its mother, who'd told them about the slums, where stolen goods end up.

How could she even reward this young man after he'd led her this far?

Having completely forgotten that she'd saved his life when they'd first met, the girl continued to fret, not realizing that they were even with each other.

3

Seeing that the girl named Satella was getting more and more discouraged, Subaru began to question in dismay whether he'd screwed up by acting as her escort.

Her objective—which was searching for the insignia—seemed to be going well so far.

They still hadn't found the item in question, but he did feel like they were making good progress in tracking it down.

There was no question that looking for the lost child had given them valuable information and blown a wind in their sails.

Even so, ever since they'd started searching the slums, Satella had been acting strangely, sighing and such every time she glanced his way.

Subaru: "I mean, it sure is damaging when someone looks at your face and sighs at it. And if that isn't painful enough already, it becomes four times as effective when a beautiful girl does it."

Anyone snubbed by such a beautiful girl would have been hit just as hard; such was the fiercesomeness of this special attack.

The fact that this girl wasn't satisfied didn't match with all the life experience he'd accumulated so far; now if that isn't a bitter pill to swallow, he mused.

Subaru: "Though, well, I don't really have any life experience to match with this sort of thing."

That's why he was making great efforts, using his liveliness, to try and cover up for his lack of experience. Yet so far, all of the topics, quips and American jokes he'd brought up had fallen flat. Then, all that he had left was to reward her with actual results; thus he decided he would go back to his original plan, and show her the fruits of his hard work.

Subaru didn't realize that acting like that was only making the girl more and more discouraged.

Subaru: "I have to let her see my cool side by showing her some results. I need to take advantage of this windfall."

People's general attitudes towards Subaru asking them questions had improved a lot since they'd come to the slums. Strange as it was, most people in the main streets hadn't even bothered to give them a moment of their time; whereas, in the back streets, they'd gotten far more welcoming responses.

Even now, Subaru was still holding some kind of dried fruit an old woman had given him while saying: “Here, eat this and live strong.” He didn’t feel courageous enough to put it in his mouth, but all the same, her consideration was well-received.

Subaru: “Guess I’ll just feed it to Puck or something. Come here kitty-kitty, chchchchchch”

Satella: “Please don’t give him anything strange, it’d be a real pain if he were to get a taste for it.”

Puck: “If you think that I’m going to fall for these cheap tricks that only work when feeding strays, then you’re sorely mistaken.”

The grey kitten pushed its way out from Satella’s silver hair and emerged onto her shoulder. Apparently he was supposed to be a great being known as a “Spirit”, but Subaru saw him as no more than a cat, albeit a rather peculiar one.

Satella’s response had also felt more like something you’d say to a pet than a Spirit.

Subaru: “The way you’re saying it, you sound to me like a character flag where you’ve been completely hooked in…”

Puck: “Hmmph. You can only say these things to me now. Just you wait until I unleash my true strength, you shall regret all of your careless remarks… Meowmeowmeow!”

Yet half-way through his grand speech, he flicked the tip of the Spirit’s—Puck’s—nose with a few blades of grass he’d twisted together. As soon as he did, the Spirit began to swipe his paws at it, acting very much like a cat. Indeed he was all bark and no bite.

Subaru: “You sure are damn good at raising and triggering flags…”

Puck: “It pains me to admit it… But I really can’t resist playing with it…!”

(TL Note: The term flag Subaru likes to use is in reference to games or other such computer programs setting flags. Raising them refers to setting them, while triggering to reaping the rewards of the flag.

He's basically saying he's set the flag by offering the food to Puck, and then reaped its rewards after Puck went into cat-mode.)

Puck's face had turned positively cat-like as he played, now completely under Subaru's spell. As she watched them, Satella couldn't help but burst out into a few small chuckles.

Subaru saw her reaction, and with that, one of his missions had been cleared; one that he'd been pouring the same amount of enthusiasm into as their search for the insignia. He raised his thumb up, eliciting a discreet nod from Puck.

She looked far better with a smile on her face.

At least that was something which both Subaru and the Spirit were in agreement with.

4

Satella: "No… It's nothing. I'll give him a proper apology when I get my insignia back."

Puck: "I don't know what you're trying to apologize for, it'd be nicer to give him a thank-you rather than a sorry. And if that gets you smiling some more, then that'd be fantastic."

Satella: "You dummy."

Subaru had stepped into the loothouse, all the while putting on a show of bravado. The girl had sent him off, grateful from the bottom of her heart. She had so much to tell him when he came back after fulfilling their goal.

Satella: “Though… I’m way way more of a dummy than you…”

The girl was standing watch outside just like the young man had asked her to.

She quietly brought her hand over to the pendant she wore over her chest. It was inlaid with a bright green crystal, and within it, slumbered the Spirit that she relied on more than anyone else in this world.

She’d ended up keeping both him and Subaru around her for too long today.

Perhaps Puck wouldn’t be able to forgive her, no matter how much she apologized, especially for how dishonest she’d ended up being with Subaru. Though apologizing would be the thoughtful thing to do, her very idea of it was shallow.

At least for now, all she could do was pray that no harm would befall that goofy young man.

Satella: “…Huh?”

And yet, her prayer was interrupted by the sound of a sudden crash.

She snapped her head up and ran into the loothouse, her amethyst eyes vigilant.

The loothouse was a large, old, single-story building located deep inside the slums. Only a few minutes had passed since she’d sent Subaru out into the pitch-black awaiting him behind its enormous closed doors.

Satella: “…Subaru?”

The girl stepped inside without any hesitation, still keeping her guard up.

She kept herself focused, and made sure that the Minute Spirits drifting around her were ready to kick into action at a moment’s notice. Then, she squinted her eyes through the darkness, when suddenly, she spotted a white glow coming from something that had fallen in a corner of the room.

It was coming from the light source—the Lagmite Ore—that she'd given Subaru.

Satella: "…?!"

She hesitated for a moment, wondering whether she should walk over to it. However it was at that moment that the decision was made for her.

The girl felt something whistling towards her. She immediately turned around, giving her Minute Spirits a command—But before they could carry out her order, her body was ravaged by a sharp blade.

The blow pierced through her and she clattered down onto the hard floor, unable to do anything about it. She could feel a terrible cold gripping her, far more pronounced it was than the scorching heat. Yet, it was only for a moment that she could feel them.

Satella: "…Ah"

Countless thoughts, feelings, resolutions, memories and decisions flashed through her mind. It was as if they were a muddy stream, sweeping away all of her fears and regrets. In the hour of her death, the girl realized that she'd become completely empty.

She hadn't found out anything. She hadn't realized anything. Things were just ending without beginning. Yet it was in that moment…

???: "Just you wait…"

She could hear a voice. A voice that seemed to be almost fading, a voice full of anguish and regret.

A voice, that like hers, was on the brink of death. It was nearing its last, yet still unwilling to admit defeat.

But then, why is it that I…

???: “I will definitely…”

Why is it that I want to believe in the words that would follow?

The story, however, ends here for now. The girl’s thoughts unrewarded, the young man’s unheard; even so, the story winds back and starts anew.

Perhaps, only then, would the time they’d spent together be rewarded.

Lone Wolf of the Slums:
Felt's Noisy Days

1

The term 'Lone wolf' sounds good, but it's really just something you call yourself to hide the fact that you don't fit in with your surroundings and are isolated. The young girl was painfully aware of that from a young age.

"Damn it! They're being hella persistent. Stop messin' around with me!"

The one speaking in foul language was a girl who had clear eyes, despite her rough way of speaking. The combination of crimson eyes and blonde hair was rare, and it wasn't tainted by the stale air and dust of the slum. Her somewhat graceful face and features were also the cause of the rift between the girl and her surroundings.

However, the girl herself was unaffected by what others thought of her. And as we speak, her appearance was causing her problems.

"Damn it! That brat, where did she run off to?! Find her!" a man roared.

The one searching for her while holding his nose was a middle-aged man with a peculiar haircut. He had a bloody nose, and his face had a shoe mark on it that was a perfect match for the girl's. The man with the nosebleed was accompanied by ten or so companions. They were listening to the orders of the man with the bleeding nose as they boxed her in, making sure to block every escape route and keep her cornered.

"As expected of kidnappers, they are used to doing this. Aah, shit, I messed up!"

She pushed her little body inside an alley and glared at the men surrounding her, then clicked her tongue. She observed her surroundings carefully but none of the paths seemed to lead out of the intricate alleys.

"—She's there! Don't let her esc…gah!"

"Shut up, you slowpoke," the young girl retorted.

The young girl had jumped and delivered a kick to the man's face the moment she'd been found. The man, who seemed to be around twice the size of the girl, had gotten knocked out cold and crashed to the ground. The young girl ran off, leaving him there.

The men who had lost their companion chased after her frantically.

"You guys really are persistent! Aah, shit! I'll get scolded by Old Man Rom!" the girl, Felt, yelled in a way that sounded somewhat relaxed for the situation she was in—and ran like the wind through the dirty alleyways, jumping along swiftly.

2

As an orphan who had nobody to rely on, the royal capital Lugunica's slums had always been her home for as long as she could remember. However, she'd never felt like the slums were a place she could call home. Moreover, everyone living in the slums felt the same way as her. Only those living a life of comfort could afford to have such thoughts. The people living in the slums were all just trying to survive for the day. Of course, the same could be said of Felt. Like other orphans her age in the slums, Felt had been making a living by stealing with her cunningness and dexterous hands since she became independent (the age when she could no longer get charity from others.) She didn't get along with the orphans who chose to live together. She was often disliked by the people of her own gender, and, having gotten tired of socializing with others, chose to remain alone. The only exception was her only family. Despite his fierce appearance, he was very compassionate, and enjoyed acting as Felt's guardian. But what made Felt not want to rely too much on his kindness was her small amount of pride. The one she called family made a living by selling the stuff that had gotten stolen in back alleys. But even though he was in that line of work, he paid a fair price for the stolen goods people brought him. Felt knew that her pride was tainted, but it was an important ritual for her.

—Thus, Felt felt really miserable when she caused him trouble due to her insistence on doing things on her own. So…

“This time too, I’ll solve this on my own.”

Felt solidified her resolve, remaining silent all alone on the rooftop she had jumped to. She glanced down and saw that the men were still running around, searching for her.

The vindictiveness of guys like them is hardcore. Just running away from them isn’t gonna solve things.

The people chasing after Felt were a group of kidnappers that were at the bottom of the barrel in the royal capital’s underworld. It was rumored that they were newcomers there, but the way they did things without restraint was intolerable.

“I might’ve gotten soft. I should’ve just abandoned them.”

Recalling how she’d gotten into this mess, Felt pursed her lips and regretted her mistake. The alleyway she was currently hiding in wasn’t in her home turf. The place known as the Slums was scattered throughout the large royal capital’s lower district, and there were three of them. Felt lived in a place that was connected to the commercial district, but the area she was in now mainly contained warehouses, and thus wasn’t her turf. The reason she was being chased by the thugs was because of what she did when she witnessed them doing their ‘business’ while looking for the day’s source of income. Felt would have just ignored it and let it go by saying that it was too bad for whoever was getting kidnapped since it was just business as usual there, but this time, she was unable to take her eyes off the person being kidnapped. She saw a little girl being ripped from the hands of an old man who looked like a withered tree, which lit a fire in her that made her jump in and kick the face of the leader with everything she had. After that, she managed to help the old man and little girl escape from the encirclement, but the thugs had noticed her and started going after her in a frenzy.

And that's how things are.

"I'm not familiar with the area around here. And they are good at hunting people down here since it's their turf."

While annoyed by their organized criminality, Felt was also aware of how bad the situation was. She was confident that she was strong for her age—or rather, she was confident in her ability to kick her way out of bad situations—but she wasn't overconfident enough to think she could beat down a dozen men. Besides, the more time she spent on it, the more their numbers would increase, which would only worsen the situation.

As long as I can get back to my turf, I can do something—

"Woah, that was close?!" The moment she quietly peeked over the edge of the building, a sharp piece of wood whizzed by her face. She felt chills run down her spine at the sound of the dangerous object, and right after that she heard someone cussing from below.

"You idiot! Don't hit her in the face! We won't be able to sell her if it leaves a scar!" the Nosebleed Man scolded, his nosebleed stopped now that his face was covered with a white cloth.

I had no idea my facial features were something that would make them happy, but if he's shouting at them to go easy on me, then there's something I can do.

"Here goes!" Felt jumped, stomping on the face of the man who had set the ladder up and was climbing up to get her, making the rest of the men fall.

"Gaah!" the man grunted.

She didn't stop there but continued to step on the heads of the startled men, breaking through the enclosure with the skillfulness of an acrobat.

"Wha?!" the Nosebleed Man exclaimed. "Sh-She's too quick! Don't let her get away!"

"Your orders are to capture me, not beat me up. Even I can easily spot a mistake like that!”

She somersaulted while at the same time landing a kick on the last person, landing near the feet of the Nosebleed Man, who was shouting with spit flying out of his mouth. She dodged the arm that had come flying towards her and moved in on him, then kicked him with her leg, which was rather long for her height. The Nosebleed Man felt her toes plowing into his flesh—his nether regions—which did a lot of damage. He fell to his knees, letting out cries of anguish as Felt headbutted him without hesitation. The top of her head smashed into the tip of his nose, straight through the cloth, crushing it. He fell back as blood flowed from his nose and foamed at the mouth.

“Serves you right!” Felt yelled. “That’s what happens when you let your guard down because you think your opponent is ‘just some kid’!”

Seeing their leader get taken out so easily, the thugs hesitated to pursue her for a moment. Felt stuck her tongue out while they were hesitating and sped up once again, becoming one with the wind.

Once she had escaped their encirclement and the unfamiliar slum, she felt safe enough to take it easy. “I probably won’t need to deliver the finishing blow after doing all of that, right?”

They got their asses handed to them by a little girl, so I bet they’ll keep quiet for a while since their reputation is important to them. But if that’s the case, then the thing I saved for last will go to waste.

“Well, that’s fine by me. But that seriously tired me out, like for real.”

Crossing her hands behind her head, Felt blended into the crowd and sighed. While doing so, she slipped her hand into the pocket of a naïve passerby who didn’t have their guard up. Given the situation she was in, it was quite impressive how she was still trying to earn a few extra coins.

3

"I think I might have really gotten soft."

After earning a lot of coins, she went back to her turf with slumped shoulders. She was just thinking that she'd earned enough today to put her in the positive, but then trouble just had to come knocking on her door. The fact that she couldn't hide her disappointment and discouragement wasn't surprising.

"You put us through the wringer, but you done fucked up now, ya damn brat."

The man with a wicked smile on his face was the Nosebleed Man, who seemed proud of his victory while resting on the shoulders of his subordinates. His face was covered in even more cloth than before and his knees were shaking, which showed just how injured he was.

"I'll give ya some advice out of the goodness of my heart: if you are that banged up, then just go home and sleep," Felt told him.

"Don't make me laugh! Who the hell would run away with their tail between their legs after being humiliated so much? I won't be satisfied until I hear you beg for your life, you cocky brat!"

"Stop actin' like such a bitch just because your short nose and balls got crushed…"

"A little whore like you will never be able to understand how painful this is!" the man shouted with red eyes, his spit flying everywhere, after hearing Felt's unapologetic response. The thugs around him nodded in agreement with somewhat pale faces.

What a bunch of drama queens.

Felt, who didn't get what the big deal was about her act of violence, was surprised at how tenacious the thugs who'd chased her down and tried to cast a net around her in the part of the slums that belonged to them were.

So, where did they get information about me?

"You seem surprised," the Nosebleed Man said. "I'll give it to you straight… Your own people hate you, don’t they? They talked a lot.”

“…I feel like you guys are the same, talking a lot like that.”

Whenever people like them get the upper hand, they want to give the reason why they got the upper hand away. And it’s also true that the reason behind it is often simple and trivial.

The answer this time was simple too: she was sold out by people who hated her in exchange for a small amount of money.

This is why socializing is a drag and why I only really trust one person.

“Oh! Don’t get any weird ideas, k?” the Nosebleed Man warned. “I’ll tell you beforehand: my companions have this area surrounded. You should be crying tears of happiness since we set up a really extravagant welcome party for you, even if you’re just some brat!”

“Not gonna lie, it’s really making me start to tear up. Don’t you think it’s sad how you’re getting so worked up over a kid?”

“It’s a hundred times better than letting my reputation get dragged through the mud because I let you get away with that shit!”

With a lot of footsteps, the thugs gathered behind Felt to block her escape route. In front of her were the people she had used as steppingstones in the alleyway earlier. Similarly, she could see thugs placed firmly at the multiple alleyways in her sight. There was no escape. The amount of effort they had put into this was unbelievable, and it meant they were serious.

“We aren’t gonna hurt ya, but be prepared to pay us back in other ways, brat.”

“Are the rumors of you guys being new to the royal capital true? I’m just a bit curious.”

“Huh?” The Nosebleed Man frowned since he was expecting her to be scared, but on the contrary, her words showed no sign of fear.

“Alright, alright.” Felt took that as a yes and nodded. “Then I’ll give you some advice. You should learn a little more about the royal capital before doing anything else next time. Well—if there is a next time, that is.”

Before the Nosebleed Man could raise his voice, Felt took something out of her pocket and put it in her mouth. It was something she had stolen from an unsuspecting person in the crowd before she returned to her turf.

“A whistle to call the guards?”

She blew into it instead of answering with ‘correct’, and the high-pitched sound echoed through the back alley. The sound immediately made the thugs cover their ears, but what followed their surprise was a relaxed attitude.

“You…you scared us. What can a mere whistle do…” the Nosebleed Man said on behalf of the calm people around him.

However, his expression was soon tinged with uneasiness. They heard it too. The heavy sound of the ground shaking made by the military boots entering the alleyway one after another.

“Wha?! Why are they here so soon?!”

“You might not know this since you guys are new to town, but the guards regularly patrol the lower districts. Obviously, since I’m a local, I know when and where the patrols will happen, too.”

Today was the day when the guards patrolled the slum that Felt considered her turf. In consequence, Felt took her time after going out to look for easy pickings, and was also considering using the guards as her trump card if anything went awry.

Though I wasn’t 100% sure that the thugs would come after me, I borrowed this whistle from a guard who wasn’t paying attention just in case.

“Eeeek! Kidnappeeeers! Stop! I’m getting kidnaaaapped!” Felt screamed as much as she could in a wheedling voice, raising the morale of the guards. The Nosebleed Man quickly turned back, but Felt had already slipped through a crack in their ranks.

The Nosebleed Man glared at Felt, who was jumping from roof to roof, and then let out an agitated scream. “You fucking brat…argh!”

“Don’t lose to a fucking brat in a competition of smarts then. You’ll never beat us when it comes to fighting dirty, dumbass.”

As the boss let out an unintelligible scream, the guards arrived in the alley and collided with the thugs. The guard up front was particularly powerful, and it felt satisfying to see the thugs get blown away like leaves one after another.

—And just like that, the newcomers to the royal capital’s underworld were destroyed before anyone could remember their name.

4

So, did my final earnings and the effort to get it put me in the positive or the negative? Felt thought as she brushed the dust from her body. Even though she had stolen some purses along with the whistle, there hadn’t been much in them. However, giving the kidnappers a painful experience had given her a sense of pleasure that was worthy of her effort.

Nonetheless, the realist Felt concluded that pleasure was only a temporary thing that didn’t fill one’s belly. Therefore, all I made today was the coins in the purses.

“This isn’t enough to reach my objective at all.”

Felt’s objective—though it was still a far-off goal since she didn’t make much from stealing—was to eventually save enough money to escape from the poverty of the slum. She would be even happier if the only one she considered family was there with her when it happened.

With a renewed determination, Felt started walking towards the building that had come into her view, then halted her steps before she arrived. A huge figure, so huge that it couldn’t be thought of as a human, stood in front of the large building and was waving at her.

“Gosh, stop embarrassing me… Old Man Rom, I’m back!”

And with that, Felt ran towards her family with the biggest smile she’d had all day.

Behind the Scenes of Life in Another World from Zero

1

The moment Emilia realized that her precious insignia had been pulled out of her pocket, she ordered her lesser spirits to chant and aimed an ice pellet at the back of the miscreant.

“It’s dangerous everyone, so don’t move!”

The silverbell-like voice called for caution, and the people on the street, who heard it, stopped moving. A petite girl with fluttering gold hair and a black ribbon moved through the gaps between them, running like the wind. Icicles created with mana were shot at the feet of the girl on the run. Making a sound similar to an arrow flying through air, the icicles approached the girl with the speed of a bullet. But the girl ran, ignoring the attacks as if she knew that the person attacking had no intention of hitting her. The icicles that missed their target gouged into the wall of the nearby shop and the ground, then began losing shape and disappearing.

After a moment of silence, the people who had stopped moving started making a fuss.

“What is it?! Is it a fight?!” a bystander shouted.

“What the hell are you doing in such a crowded place?!” another person yelled.

While listening to that, Emilia chased after the little figure that had escaped into an alleyway.

“Gosh! What’s up with today!” she exclaimed. I got separated from the girl accompanying me, the money in my purse got spent on food and drink, and I thought I was getting along with the nice cat girl, but now I am in a situation where something I hold dear got stolen.

“You seem busy, Lia,” muttered one with the appearance of a palm-sized cat while leisurely washing his face on Emilia’s shoulder.

The one muttering near her ear was the great spirit, Puck, who was the girl's contracted spirit.

"I'm in trouble, Puck! My important insignia got stolen! I'm going to be in a looot of trouble if I don't get it back, and Roswaal will get mad at me!"

"If you think he'd just get mad, you should give it some deeper thought… And the child who stole it seems to be quite skilled, too. Look."

"Huh?"

Emilia, who had been chatting with Puck after jumping into a back alley, stopped suddenly. A dead end appeared right in front of her at the end of the maze-like path.

I'm pretty sure I ran down the same path as the thief, and I'm sure the road didn't have any twists or turns near the end, either.

"We might have missed a side street, or she might have quickly climbed over the wall," Puck posited.

"I… I can climb walls too," Emilia hesitantly replied. "I need to catch up or else…"

"If she took a side path, then climbing it would just be a waste of time. You know that, right? We need to think more carefully here." As Puck said that with his short arms crossed, they heard a high-pitched guard's whistle coming from the front street. It was probably blown by a guard from the Royal Capital Guard who heard the commotion caused by Emilia's magic.

"We could get into trouble if the guards find us," Puck said. "What do you want to do?"

"If I explain the situation, I wonder if they'll help me find the insignia?" Emilia wondered.

"They would help you, but I don't think that's a good idea. You know the reason why without me having to explain it, right Lia?"

"…I know. It's because I'm a candidate. It would be troublesome if they found out about me losing my insignia."

"Good job." Puck clasped his soft paws together and complimented Emilia with a silent clap.

Emilia puffed up her cheeks and looked up at the wall in front of her, then snapped her fingers and created a staircase of ice.

By the time the guards came running towards the dead end, the silver-haired girl and the ice staircase were gone without a trace.

2

"We've gotten away from the commotion-filled street and alleyway, but…what should we do now?" Emilia asked.

"Isn't it better to meet up with the maid?" Puck replied. "I think it'll be easier to find that girl than the person who stole the insignia since she stands out so much."

Emilia and Puck were having a strategic meeting regarding what to do next in the street across from the merchant's street, the street where the insignia was stolen, after getting away from the guards.

"It would be great if Ram could give us a hand," Emilia said. "But would that be fine? I feel like I've been breaking Roswaal's orders really often."

"Don't stray away from your attendant. Don't waste money. Don't cause a commotion. Not losing your insignia wasn't something he thought of mentioning. Hmmm, there's no way you'll be able to escape from being scolded, don't you think?"

"I'm starting to feel like I should solve this on my own."

"Being afraid of your mistake from before being exposed and then making more mistakes because of that… I think you're clearly walking down a path of destruction with nothing stopping you."

Emilia pouted at Puck, who kept being a killjoy, but his arguments were sound. It would be far wiser to report the current situation with a mindset to be scolded rather than making the situation worse. However, that might result in the worst possible outcome for Emilia.

"But what would I do if Roswaal gives up on me because he thinks I'm useless?" Emilia asked.

"…"

"I can't let that happen. Roswaal is my ally now, but it's possible he might step down from that position before the royal selection happens. I don't want to owe him anything more until it starts."

Emilia envisioned the devious guy in her mind who was her guardian. He and I share the same interests, and I don't want the balance of power to be tilted towards either one of us.

"Ah well, my daughter is someone who chooses to walk down a thorny path," Puck said after shrugging his shoulders at Emilia's thoughts while wagging his long tail.

Emilia smiled and lowered her brows at the response of her family with whom she had been with for a long time. "I'm sorry to cause you trouble all the time," she said.

"That's something you shouldn't say… Well then, we must do our best to find that thief. I wonder what we should do. The sun will go down if we keep searching blindly around the vast royal capital. Do you have any plans?"

"Let's see… How about we keep our eyes wide open and search reaaally hard?"

"That's what it means to search blindly, Lia. I was able to get a quick glance at the thief, but they seemed like a child from their appearance. And the thief's clothes didn't seem that clean."

"Do you mean that she is someone who doesn't have money? You are right about that since she stole something." Emilia nodded at Puck's deduction, agreeing with him, then clapped her hands right after that when she understood what he wanted to say. “Oh, that’s right! Since she is someone who doesn’t have money, she must be from the slums I heard about when I was being guided around the royal capital! It’s a place where people without jobs or houses gather. You’re implying that the thief might be from there!”

“That’s just what I’d expect from you, Lia. Even I couldn’t predict that you’d be able to guess what I was thinking…”

“Alllright, let’s search the place called the slums. And after that…”

After deciding what to do, Emilia was about to start walking with high spirits, but she stopped the moment she took a step. Her gaze was directed across the street at a small figure. A small girl was crouching there helplessly with a tearful face.

“Lia.”

“I… I know, Puck. I’m veeery busy now. I don’t have time to worry about a girl in trouble at all. I need to hurry up.”

Emilia started making excuses, even if she hadn’t done anything, after being called by Puck, who was glaring at her. And even if she did say that she had no time to care about the girl, she showed no sign of moving, making Puck sigh.

“No matter how hard one tries, my daughter will always be a kind girl, so why don’t you go talk to her?”

“Is it alright?”

“If you ask whether the timing is good or bad, then it’s bad. But if you ask whether it’s a good thing or a bad thing, then it’s a good thing. So go ahead and perform your good deed that’s bad timing-wise.”

Emilia’s face brightened up, and then she went towards the young girl after getting the go-ahead from Puck. The young girl noticed Emilia looking down at her, and looked frightened at the sight of a stranger, but… “I know I might just be being a busybody, but aren’t your father and mother with you?” she inquired while smiling kindly at her, as if she had forgotten her own situation.

As a result, Emilia had to go through a lot of trouble to get the lost child to let her guard down. It seemed like her parents had disciplined her well, as she was reluctant to talk to strangers. To overcome that obstacle, they needed to take the first step, which was to tell each other their names. After overcoming that, Emilia made small ice flowers and ice sculptures of animals using her magic, which eased the tension, and finally won the little girl's trust by using her trump card: Puck dancing.

People mistook the ice flowers and ice animal sculptures as some sort of a street performance, so she received some change from people passing by who stopped to look. And after that, she got some skewers from a food stall using the change she'd earned and enjoyed them with the little girl.

"Lia, Lia. Have you forgotten your objective by any chance?"

"No…no, I haven't forgotten. Look, she is completely relaxed now, just like I planned."

"You know you don't look very convincing with sauce around your mouth, right?"

While holding the little girl's hand, they somehow managed to arrive at the fruit shop run by the girl's father. The girl leaped at the huge man with a white scar on his face, and the man—the girl's father—thanked Emilia profusely. The little girl's mother, who had been separated from her, was in the shop, too, and both parents bowed to Emilia, making her feel nervous.

"You are my daughter's savior, so I want to repay you. You can ask me anything," the girl's father said.

Emilia shook her head, saying she didn't want anything in return. But it was an unexpected stroke of luck when the father told her that she could ask him anything. After she told him a bit about her situation, she was given the location of the slum and the name of the loot house.

“It’s said that it’s a place where light-fingered people turn the goods they steal into money, but I wouldn’t recommend going there. I mean no ill will, but I think it would be wise to give up…”

“Ummm…”

Emilia wanted to say that it wasn’t something that she could give up on, but she hesitated since nothing was going to change even if she told the family about her situation. It would make them worry, too.

“I understand. Thank you for the warning. It’s such a shame, but I guess it can’t be helped.”

“Yeah, it’s better that way,” the father replied. “I am sorry that I couldn’t be of help… Hey?”

The father nodded in relief when Emilia pretended to give up. And then the little girl slipped past him and extended her hands towards Emilia. There was a red flower ornament in her hand. Emilia looked at the young girl’s smile, then at the flower ornament, and was at a loss as to what to do.

“Please, take it. It seems like my daughter wants to repay you in her own way,” the mother of the child said, urging Emilia on.

Emilia timidly took the flower ornament, and the little girl gave her a big smile.

“Thank you. I’m reaaally, happy.” Emilia held the flower ornament to her chest and gave the little girl a heartfelt smile that came from the bottom of her heart.

4

Waving goodbye to the little girl’s family, Emilia headed towards the slum after carefully putting the flower ornament away. The streets became less crowded, and you could visibly see the atmosphere beginning to deteriorate.

“Hmmm, as expected from the slums,” Puck said. “The people living here are both poor in pocket and character.”

“Don’t say rude things, Puck. It’s disrespectful to the people living here,” Emilia scolded, but she couldn’t say that the environment in this district was good, either.

The ugliness of the cityscape that had been left to rot after being built with minimum effort felt cramped, especially for Emilia, who had lived for a long time in the forest.

“The loot house, was it?” Puck asked. “It sounds bold from the name itself, but should we search for it?”

“Yeah, I couldn’t get any details about its location since I didn’t want to make her father worry,” Emilia replied. “But will the people here even listen to me?”

“Giving money in exchange for information is the norm, but we don’t have any.”

“The change I got was exactly equal to the cost of the two skewers. It being the exact amount is reaaally such a coincidence,” said Emilia proudly, but Puck had a hard time coming up with something to say.

At the moment, their search pace for the insignia was going steady. The search for the parents of the lost girl, which could be said to have been a mere detour, had paid off and they were able to get useful information through that.

It would have been nice if they could find the girl who had stolen the insignia at this steady pace, but…

“Who have you been mumbling to for quite some time, young lady?” a man said.

Emilia’s steady investigation was finally interrupted by someone with obvious malicious intent. A middle-aged man with a scruffy beard and dirty clothes had blocked the narrow alley in front of Emilia, who had stopped. On top of that, two more men appeared behind her, sandwiching her.

“It would be better to talk with us than with an imaginary friend. What do you say? We won’t hurt you… Huh? What’s a fine pearl like this doing here? Seems like we’ve found ourselves a good one, boys.”

“A fine pearl…? I don’t think I’m round anywhere… Am I fat?”

“A lot of money has been put into her appearance. We really hit the jackpot. She’s first-class inside and out.”

Not even hearing Emilia’s worry that had come out due to her misunderstanding, the middle-aged man moved towards her with lecherous breaths. Now feeling the presence of the two men behind her slowly inching closer, she put her back against the wall.

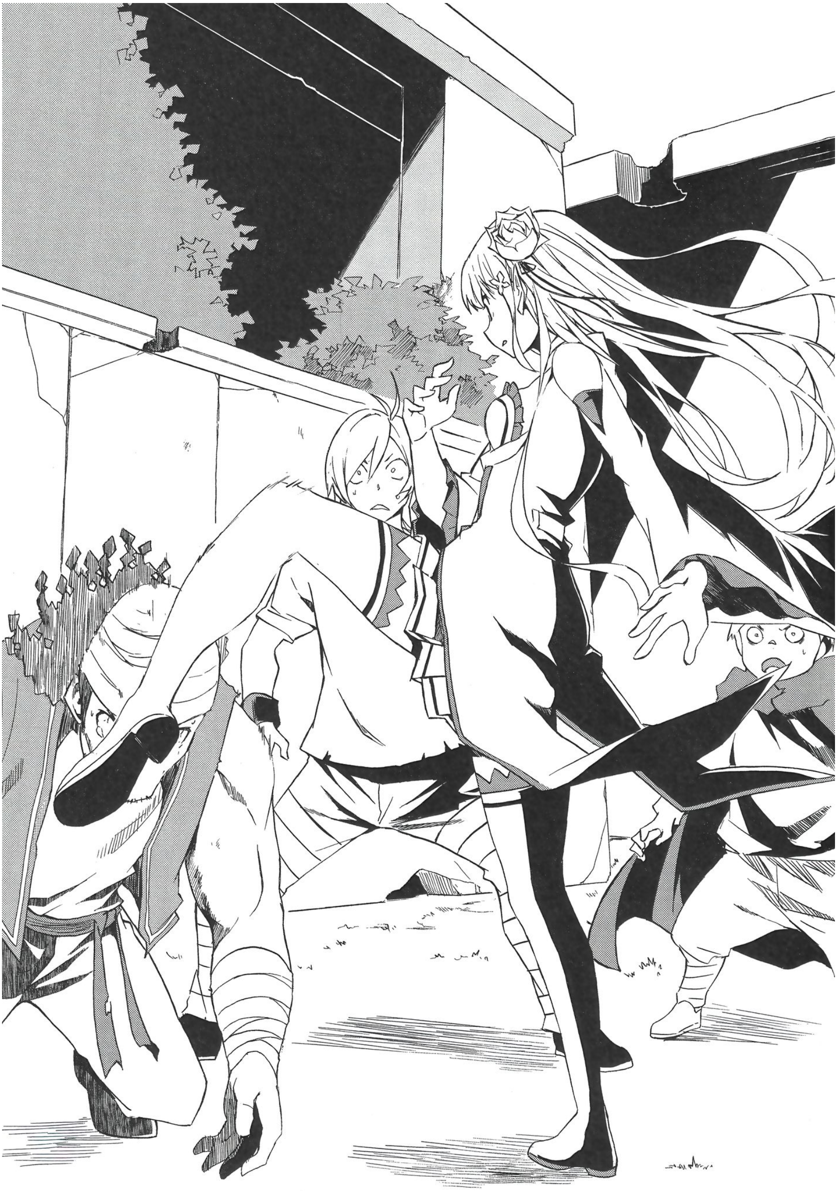
“Hee-Hee, looks like you’ve given up,” the goon said. “That’s fine. Even if you’re dumb, I’ll adore…”

“There’s not much time left before the evening, and I can’t push Puck too hard. So, it might hurt a bit, but…”

“Huh? The ones doing painful stuff will be us…”

“Haah!”

That was the end of the nonsense spewed by the middle-aged man. Emilia had shifted the position of her foes to her side rather than at her front and behind by leaning against the wall. She brought her long, slender leg up, then swung her heel down on the head of the enchanted man.



The sharp impact made the middle-aged man's eyes roll to the back of his head, then he collapsed to the ground, shocking his two companions. Using that to her advantage, Emilia quickly moved towards one of the men and gave his chest a hard push, flipping him over. The last one extended his arms towards her, but her flowing silver hair that danced in the wind slipped through his fingers.

“Take this!” Emilia shouted, running up the man’s body without stopping, landing a kick on the man’s jaw with the top of her foot as she backflipped off of him, which slammed him into the wall. After landing, Emilia, went towards the man she had pushed.

“Don’t move! If you move then…ummm, what should I do?”

“If you move then I’ll give you a terrible time in place of this kind child. Is that clear?” Puck threatened the man, his fur standing on end, from Emilia’s shoulder, as she hadn’t decided on what to say yet. Seeing how his companions had gotten beaten up and that a spirit showed up, the man lost the will to resist.

“Ask us whatever you want. We’ll tell you whatever you wanna know. He-He-he…”

The man smiled subserviently, and Emilia clapped her hands as if to say that the situation was lucky for her. “So, can you tell me where the loot house is? It would make me happy if you knew something about it.”

5

By using somewhat violent means to take care of the evildoers, Emilia succeeded in finding the loot house.

Emilia, her hand on her waist, tilted her head at the loot house in front of her. “I wonder if I am reaaally lucky today.”

“If you were lucky, then your insignia wouldn’t have gotten stolen to begin with. But it’s true that you were able to reach here without incident… Maybe you’re lucky in a bad way?”

“What does ‘being lucky in a bad way’ mean, for example?”

“It’s kind of like having to endure pain equal to the amount of success you get… Like you fell down and hurt your feet, but you were able to find a coin because of that.”

In Emilia’s case, it was due to bad luck that her insignia got stolen, but finding the person who’d stolen it so quickly was something only good luck could pull off. So, the only problem left was—

“What I do now will determine whether I can get it back or not.”

“Yeah, that’s what it is. We have a bit of time till sunset, so use me well.”

With Puck’s reassuring words, Emilia nodded and went towards the door of the loot house. It was quite a large building adjacent to the outer wall of the royal capital. According to the villains Emilia had beaten, the owner of the loot house was a huge man who was used to rough situations, and that fast girl might even be there, so they couldn’t afford to not be cautious.

“…” Emilia’s hands reflexively went towards her chest, since it was where she’d placed the red flower ornament the young girl gave her.

Even though nothing had been solved yet, Emilia recalled the various events that had occurred in the royal capital on her way here. She got separated from Ram, who was accompanying her, she played with the cat girl, she got her insignia stolen, helped a lost child, and then arrived here in the loot house. Good and bad things happened all in a single day.

Let’s act in order to end this day with a ‘It was a good day.’ I need to pull myself together since there will be no one on my side in here—

“Lia, the person inside has noticed us,” Puck whispered into her ear while she was standing in front of the door, confused about what to say when she went inside. Before she could reply to that, they felt someone running towards the door. And then the door opened—

“—Don’t open it! You’ll get killed!”

Right after that, she heard the desperate cry of a desperate-looking boy, making her lose her nerve. That’s really rude. Does he think some kind of short-tempered person is at the door?

Seeing Emilia standing in front of the door, the blonde girl getting hit by the evening glow backed away. Emilia followed the girl into the loot house and looked at the faces inside.

“—I would never do something scary like killing someone out of the blue,” Emilia said in a quiet voice with a pout.

6

What happened after that was not Emilia’s story but the story of another boy. However, as a result, Emilia would get to know that the dense day at the royal capital would end with ‘It was a good day’ as well as ‘It was a tough day’. And one more thing: that the determination she had before she stepped into the loot house that there was no one on her side inside would be proven wrong by the boy with a bright, cheerful smile who said, “—I’d like to know your name.”

Chapters 1-28

Chapter 1:
The Unfamiliar Ceiling, The Endless Hallway

1

For Subaru, it was a far cry from waking up from a bad night's sleep.

When he opened his eyelids, what met his eyes was a dim white glow that was seemingly artificial. The ceiling was unfamiliar to him, and the crystals on it somehow managed to emit a faint glow that illuminated the interior of the room.

Subaru had a reputation of being good at waking up, so once he woke up, he would immediately become wide awake.

"…The pillow feels different."

As he rolled over, he noticed that the feeling under his head was different than usual.

Moreover, the softness of the bed couldn't have been possible on the futon he was used to sleeping on. In fact, the floor underneath his futon had become discolored because he never folded it and put it away after waking up.

"And it smells super nice, too. Ha-ha-ha…it smells like the sun! Well…it's really the smell of lice that were burnt to death in the sun, isn't it…?"

That was one of the top three pieces of knowledge he didn't want to know in his life.

I'm going to enjoy the stench of death to the fullest!, he thought, and then he opened his eyes. He then raised himself up halfway and looked around the room, which was instantly recognizable as a room for the upper class.

The bed was roomy enough for about five people, and the room around the bed was at least 350 square feet in size. Using a 350 square foot room as a bedroom would be a complete waste of space. However… "Given the size of the mansion…that's probably not the case, huh."

Fully awake, Subaru got off the bed and lightly turned himself around to check his current condition.

First of all, he checked his shoulders, then the various joints in his arms and legs, and then his cardiovascular and endurance strength by lifting his legs and doing squats, and lastly, while taking a breather due to being out of breath, he pulled up the clothes he was wearing to see if he had any wounds from before.

"Stomach wound…it's gone! No bruises, of course, and no scar from getting disemboweled, either. And zero stitches, so the doctors of this world are excellent! Great! No one would sweep me off my feet if I had any scars, after all."

Cooking, laundry, sewing, and other household chores were all things Natsuki Subaru would rather avoid, but he at least had potential in them.

Subaru was pretty tough due to all the exercises he'd done at home, and he was able to eat a lot of food as a result. I wonder if a rich official or minister would take me as a bride…

"I'm definitely not going to do that…Anyway…"

The room was as simple as he initially thought. —In addition to the bed, there was a houseplant by the window, some furniture, and paintings on the walls.

Subaru wasn't sure if it existed in this world, but he couldn't find a clock anywhere—or anything that looked like a clock—and he couldn't find anything that looked like a calendar, either.

"The question is…how long was I unconscious…? Well, maybe five hours?"

Subaru touched his chin and measured the approximate time elapsed by the feel of his stubble.

It was his secret technique that allowed him to check the time quite accurately without a clock. From the feel of his stubble clock, it had been roughly five or six hours since he'd last checked. In other words, it would be around the time the first day after being summoned to another world had come to an end.

Thinking that far, Subaru once again touched his belly. "Anyway… does that mean I avoided activating Return by Death this time?"

That was the question he had been trying to avoid thinking about ever since waking up, but then he ultimately decided to face the reality that he couldn't look away from.

2

Up to the point of losing consciousness, Subaru recalled the events leading up to each Death.

"First, I died in a haphazard manner; the second time I died bravely; the third time I died like a dog; and the fourth time I died from a stray projectile after getting thrown into a fight to the death—is what I would be saying if I actually died, but I'm glad I was able to stay alive. If I were to die like that again, I'd be on track to becoming a mob in no time."

All of the causes of Death were charming like that.

On the bed in the large and uncomfortable room—with the sheets and comforter thrown into a heap—Subaru sat cross-legged in silent contemplation.

There was no doubt that this was different from the site of the usual restart point since the activation of Return by Death had been avoided. There was a one-in-ten thousand percent chance that this was the home of the fruit stall owner where he always ended up before when he Returned by Death, but the only thing he could think of at the moment was, "It's either Reinhard's house or Emilia-tan's house."

They were the only two people who were friendly to Subaru and gave the impression that they would own a large mansion like this.

Hopefully it's the latter, Subaru thought with his own wishful thinking.

The treatment of my abdominal wound—this was probably due to Emilia's magic. If the treatment had not been carried out immediately on the spot, I'd probably have died, and above all, my male mind wants to believe that the beautiful girl was the one who healed me.

"It's not that I have an issue with that handsome knight healing me, but to have a gorgeous girl heal you is any man's dream, right…? This is a different world, after all!"

He then stroked the sheets with his fingers and made feminine gestures while daydreaming.

After that, Subaru bounced on the bed and used the springs to land on the floor. "For now, I'd like to figure out where I am," he began. "Then it's the beginning of a new adventure…no, no, no, no, don't dread these changes! Get back on track, me! —Are you really going to go back to those reclusive days when you were a pain in the ass who didn't want to do anything for himself?! Do you really want to go back to that kind of thing where you just eat and play games and watch anime and go to bed at the time you want to go to bed and check out what's on the internet and post comments occasionally…actually, yes, it would be nice to go back, wouldn't it?"

It wasn't that Subaru had any desire to be summoned to another world or anything.

It wasn't that he was dissatisfied with the shut-in life in the first place. It's just that he never thought that the days that passed by were boring or wasted, and to be able to sleep as long as he wanted to was all he needed as a shut-in.

"I do feel a little bad for my parents, who had to deal with me…but it's almost like they just let me do whatever I wanted without getting in the way."

He exercised, ate meals with his family at the table, went out occasionally, and even begged for an allowance. It was a relatively normal life for a teenager except for not going to school, so it would perhaps be better to call Subaru a drop-out rather than a shut-in.

“What a shocking fact, huh. If I didn’t have the opportunity to look back at myself in another world, maybe I wouldn’t have realized that I wasn’t a real shut-in for the rest of my life… No way, maybe that’s why I was summoned here…?”

Subaru firmly decided that he would be careful about self-identifying in the future. Wouldn’t wanna be easily identified as a shut-in and have to deal with the anger of the ‘World Shut-in Association’ or whatever it’s called.

“I suppose all the members of the association are also shut-ins…and if that’s the case, then how in the world do they all cooperate with each other…?”

His thoughts kept going in circles as he pondered that question over and over again. With a twist of his head, Subaru tossed out the entire investigation into that matter with “It doesn’t even matter” and crept toward the door.

Ideally, it would have been preferable for me to have an encounter with someone who had come to see me while I was killing time—someone who would also be able to give me an explanation of the current situation.

“Or I’d wake up and hear, ‘Are you awake?’ from a beautiful girl sitting by my bedside who had nursed me back to health. I mean, isn’t that’s normal? If you were summoned and the beautiful girl who summoned you isn’t by your side—that’s a pretty big disappointment for the one who was summoned and means something went terribly wrong…”

In any case, what he should appreciate was that, for now, as promised by the common clichés of otherworld-fantasy, the people he meets should all be beautiful.

At any rate, there are only five named characters I know of. The three hoodlums can’t be counted since they are essentially uninteresting mobs. And another one is an old man with a wrinkled face, but… “Felt looked like she could shine if she were cleaned up a bit, not to mention Emilia-tan and Reinhard. Elsa is… Oooh hell no, my fingertips are starting to shake just thinking about her!”

Subaru’s trauma gauge shot up, so he concluded that she should be excluded from the list.

I can admit that she is beautiful if only in appearance, but when her addiction to killing and disemboweling people is added to that… “That’s what we call ‘gap moe’!” —That isn’t something I can just ignore just because she’s pretty.

“OK! Now that I’ve figured out what I want to do, I’m going to stop procrastinating and start my journey… Starting something new is always super exciting!”

After he casually whispered that, Subaru carefully turned the doorknob and opened the door.

The chilly air from outside flowed into the room and crept over his bare feet, causing him to let out a “Wah!”

Outside the room was a long hallway painted in warm colors. There were long stretches of walls on either side, and he could see similar doors dotted along the way. All of the rooms had probably been constructed similarly to the room he’d slept in.

—With this many rooms in the 350 square foot class, this must have been a more luxurious mansion than he had previously imagined. He couldn’t help but think of the status of the owner of this mansion, and then he cleared his throat. “The only thing I can say is, wow. It’s super spacious. But with all this space, I wonder where all the people are?”

Walking barefoot down the hallway with floors made out of a smooth, polished material—similar to the floor of his school—Subaru couldn’t help but raise an eyebrow at the quietness of the hallway.

“This is even more quiet than the room. Almost too quiet…to the point where I’m afraid of making a sound…”

Normally he'd be shouting, "Is anyone here?!" It was in his nature to do as much as he could in whatever circumstances he found himself in, but under the current circumstances, it didn't feel safe enough to do so.

At any rate, Subaru didn't have a shred of understanding of his current situation at this point in time.

He had been sure that he was in the home of a benefactor, but it wasn't unreasonable to assume that after losing consciousness, Elsa may have organized a large army consisting of 100,000 men to get revenge and captured him while he was asleep.

If that were the case, it was Elsa's side that had captured Subaru, and the mansion would quickly change from a good-natured millionaire's mansion to the hideout of a group of assassins.

"Maybe I should just wait for something to happen after all? I should just go back to my room right now and offer a prayer to God while trembling on my knees."

While looking at the furnishings that also adorned the hallway, Subaru hummed nervously as he began to plan his escape.

The paintings on display were more like the landscapes in the room, but many of the paintings in the hallway were quirky and abstract. As Subaru looked at the geometric patterns, he thought to himself, Hmmm, so the brushstrokes went this way and that way… as if he were a know-it-all.

"Well, I'm not going to let the flag slip away because of that weak-ass thinking. I already decided on a course of action. As if I swore an oath. I don't remember making an oath or who I made an oath to, but I'll keep that in the back of my mind and act on it." Erasing the option to go back, Subaru walked off with the goal of finding people for now.

Right or left—without much hesitation, he chose the right. This was because he remembered seeing a conversation in a manga that said, 'There are many traps on the left, hee-hee-hee,' which was reason enough.

The distinction between right and left changed depending on which room you left, but Subaru only realized that after walking for a while, so he just went along with it anyways.

“Oh well. Everything looks alike and I still can’t see any sign of anyone.”

He hadn’t even reached the end of the hallway yet or saw a place to turn into, and after another five doors, Subaru was baffled.

There would be a limit to how long it could be. A minute or two might not sound like a long time, but the distance he’d traveled in that time was easily 1,000 feet.

It wasn’t normal for there to be a hallway that went on for 1,000 feet without seeing the end of it.

“I’m not going to be able to get a good idea of what’s going on,” he said, scratching his head. The worst thing that could happen is that he would have to return to the room he came from.

“Huh?” With a bare voice, Subaru deepened the angle of his neck in further confusion.

Behind him, from where he had just come from—the problem is that he couldn’t see the end of that hallway either, assuming it was in the same condition.

“Didn’t I already see this painting when I first left the room…?”

He was pretty sure he remembered joking about the brushwork or something like that.

It was possible that they had the exact same artwork on display, but it would be in bad taste to display the same artwork outside of every room. In other words… “I mean, to put it more bluntly…I’m on an infinite loop.”

Perhaps it just felt like he’d moved down a hallway to some extent and was simply transitioning to the other side of the map? Or there was a moving floor contraption that subverted the clichés of otherworld-fantasy and operated so casually that Subaru didn’t notice it.

“With the whole moving-floor thing, it’s totally going to screw up the spirit of the time period. Since Return by Death is already part of the story, does that mean that it has an affinity for looping things, perhaps?”

After speaking cleverly to no one in particular, Subaru opened the door to the nearest room. It was a simple 350 square foot room with a bed and basic furniture inside. In other words, the very room where Subaru had come from.

“What the heck is this supposed to mean? That it’s useless to move around, and I’m supposed to just quietly stay put?”

—So this is how they limited Subaru’s movements after he woke up. He felt like this was a total waste of time and magic, but it may be that they had a plan to deprive him of the energy to resist by showing the difference in power.

“Well, now that I have a basic understanding of what this thing is, it’s really a clever way to sap my spirit, huh. There is no reason why I wouldn’t be shocked by the creation of such a mysterious space, if I think about it in a normal way…”

He stretched his arms, legs, and hips with an “Mmm.” Then he put his hands on the wall to firmly loosen his Achilles tendons, successfully warming up his muscles for his upcoming actions.

“My usual mode of action would be to jump into bed like, Hey! I’m just gonna chill until someone comes along…, but not this time! If they think this is enough to make me give up, then they are in for a big surprise!”

He crouched in the middle of the hallway and assumed a starting position.

Get set, ready—

“As expected, after sleeping for half a day, I’m full of energy!”

After a not-so-cool boast of his amazing amount of energy after getting a lot of sleep, Subaru started running as fast as he could.

He definitely wasn't as fast as Felt, and frankly, he felt like even Old Man Rom would give him a run for his money.

His stamina wasn't anything special, and his 100-meter dash was so disappointing that he got out of breath at the 70-meter mark, but in this moment at least, he felt like he could sprint like an Olympic sprinter.

Run, run, run. —He kept internally thinking this to push himself forward.

The end of the hallway was still out of sight, and he kept returning to the same starting point no matter how much he ran. It was like it was mocking his determination and telling him 'Resistance is futile'.

However, Subaru did not stop running.

As if to show with his attitude that the only thing an ordinary man could do was to keep on running straight over and over again.

Subaru didn't care if the hallway was just a forgotten, unused place in the mansion, or that it was a stranger's mansion, or that he had just been disemboweled half a day ago, or that he felt like he needed to take care of a little business sooner or later.

"No, that last one isn't good! That's not good! Oh man, I'm suddenly having a raging urge to pee! And number one and number two feel like they wanna come out at the same time!"

The boy parts of Subaru begin to squeal and the dashing form of an Olympic sprinter from earlier is nowhere to be found. The posture in which he ran through the air devolved into a woman's running posture in which his upper body swayed as he squeezed his inner thighs together.

However, such trivial differences in Subaru's running style did not stop the world from mocking his efforts.

The repetition of this maliciousness eventually slowed down Subaru's speed.

His shoulders shook loudly, and he breathed roughly. A lonely battle with even sweat on his forehead, and, unable to gain anything from it, Subaru squatted down on the spot. “I give up. Let’s just do it here.” He threw everything away and put his hands on the garment that protected his lower abdomen.

One could say that his dignity as a human being was about to be lost. Not being able to go to the bathroom in the proper place made him feel no better than a wild dog or cat.

But he refused to feel like his dignity was being lost. This wasn’t enough to make his heart falter.

“Moreover, it seems like I’ve discovered a new kink… This kind of abuse feels kinda good…” He said, with a fresh smile on his face for the first time since being summoned to another world. He squatted down in the hallway. At the very least, he’d stopped at the end of the hallway, which showed he at least had a little bit of reason left.

And… “Natsuki Subaru, ready to g—huh?”

Just as he was about to say, “Ready to go,” a change occurred in front of Subaru’s eyes.

The image of the hallway, which had remained the same no matter how much he ran, suddenly distorted in Subaru’s vision.

The transformation of the world occurring in front of his eyes was akin to crumpling a piece of paper and then stretching it back out.

Subaru blinked as if to confirm it was actually happening after the wrinkles had been fully stretched, and then stood up, holding back the urge to urinate that had involuntarily retracted.

“I don’t really understand it, but…is everything gonna be alright now?”

When he looked at his surroundings again, he could see that the world had changed. He could clearly see the end of the hallway in addition to other hallways he could turn into.

The abstract painting Subaru had seen many times was in front of him, and the room he had woken up in was right in front of the painting.

Subaru was sure he had been returned to his starting point, and he seemed to have broken out of the loop as well. He wasn't entirely sure what caused this to happen, but. "So it's essentially because I tried to go to the bathroom in the hallway. That's a complicated flag… It's the kind of thing you wouldn't notice normally. Whoever thought of it, I'm sure they're an evil genius."

"Well, now that I've escaped the loop, why don't I just go back to the room and go to sleep…"

Scratching the back of his head, Subaru looked back at the first door—however, a sudden chill swept through the hallway as he did so. It wasn't like it conveyed any words, but the feelings put into it were rather straightforward. —It was as if someone was facepalming somewhere.

"Whoever it is, I know someone's out there telling me to go back! —Yeah yeah, okay! I'll go!"

After throwing an angry yell at the cause of the endless loop, Subaru began walking once again. It would have been possible to just do his business there, but that wouldn't have advanced the event, and finding a bathroom was what mattered most right now.

"In other words, for the sake of protecting my dignity, I have no choice but to proceed. —I mean, whoever this is is too good, so I'm not going to back down!"

With a determined look on his face, he affirmed his intentions. Yes, Subaru would keep fighting on because of his urge to pee.

Although the looping mechanism had been deactivated, the hallway was still wrapped in a strange atmosphere as if saying it wasn't over yet. Subaru felt like that sensation was somewhat similar to the feeling he had when he saw Emilia use magic. This was his best guess as someone who couldn't use magic, but the hallway seemed to be completely filled with it.

Unlike when he was dealing with the endless loop, it wasn't even trying to be hidden this time. The magic user must have been quite confident in their abilities—to the extent that they could set up their evil schemes and confidently say, "Come on in, there's a trap in here."

"It's not safe to proceed in the dark, or so they say. But being too cautious is the same as being a coward. And above all, I have a time limit…"

The tide had receded quite a bit now, but it was no secret that it would eventually return as a massive wave.

Gulping and wiping the sweat from his forehead, Subaru took the first step with determination.

The door was in front of him, and with a twist of the doorknob, said, "The hallway is always full of traps after breaking the loop. In a typical dungeon event like this, surprisingly enough, the first door is always the best choice."

With that intuitive guess, he opened the door, and the response he received was, "…What a deeply bothersome guy, I suppose."

He received a resentful look from a curly-haired little girl staring at him in an unfamiliar library.

Chapter 2:
The Keeper of the Forbidden Library and the Twin Maids

1

It was a room that basically screamed “library” at you.

The room was twice as large as a 350 square foot room, and there were bookcases set up all over the place, going from one corner of the room to the other. Every bookcase was so tightly packed with books that it was hard to imagine how many books it truly held.

Books took up a lot of space and were heavy, so it was a problem to have so many. In Subaru’s case, his whole family loved to read manga, and there used to be a room on the second floor of his house that was filled to the brim with books, especially manga.

One day, without any warning, the floor fell through, and it was a complete renovation disaster. Fortunately, no one was injured, and Subaru had since put them all in a dedicated book storage room, so they should never experience that kind of catastrophe again.

Even from the perspective of Subaru, who has had such an experience involving books, the number of books in this room exceeded the number of books in his house even with the floors removed. Of course, the structure of the mansion itself was much sturdier than that of his house.

Finding even one book to read—that Subaru could understand—would be a tall order for him considering the enormous number of books in his view.

“With so many books here…there must be one that I can read, right?”

A quick glance around the library revealed that there were no spine covers written in Japanese. There were no alphabets here as far as he knew, and most of the letters were characters based on what he'd seen on the signboards while walking around the capital. These were the commonly used characters of this world, after all.

If Subaru wanted to live in this world, it was going to be essential to learn it. For him, who had even dropped his language classes in middle school, it already felt like such a drag.

Subaru sighed while envisioning his coming difficulties. Then—

"Gazing at other people's bookshelves, and even sighing as you do so… So you're trying to be offensive, I suppose? Shall I respond in kind, I wonder?"

Subaru didn't have the communication skills necessary to talk to someone he just met without any sort of preparation, so he had no choice but to say, "I'm really not good at talking to people I've never met before, so I'm gonna have to head out for a sec, sorry. I'll be right back for a Take-Two!"

After he raised his hand to the little girl who stared at him with her unmoving eyes, Subaru casually walked out of the room.

Then, after a few moments, he opened the door, re-entered the room, and looked at the little girl who hadn't moved an inch from where she had been standing.

"Oh, look who's here. Hi! Nice to meet you! Can I have a word with you?"

"Betty knew you were making fun of her, I suppose. Don't you think you deserve to be punished for entering Betty's library without an invitation, I suppose?"

The little girl laughed adorably and cruelly at Subaru as he tried to start their encounter over from a better starting point.

How many times have I seen this sight in this other world? —She was a beautiful, sweet girl.

She appeared to be younger than Felt, perhaps eleven or twelve years old. She was wearing an indigo-colored dress with lots of frills and had a lovely face that suited her ornate hairstyle and clothes.

Her hair was closest to the color of cream and was grown long and rolled into curls—it looked like drills.

Adorable came to mind, and the little girl's appearance seemed to be the embodiment of that word. The cuteness level was so high that one's heart couldn't help but melt if she were to smile.

Now she was standing in front of Subaru with a solemn face.

"You'll ruin your pretty face if you don't smile. You see, just smile! Smile! Smile!"

"Betty being pretty is simply Betty's nature. But a better question would be: what should Betty do with you? I suppose."

"Do what with me? I'm sorry I ignored your intentions. I'm the type of guy who unconsciously pulls out all the correct answers to a question like this, even though the GM would want me to step through all the events he's prepared for me."

A talent for pulling off the correct answer in a situation where there were four choices and only a total of four hints were available. People also called it 'not being able to read the mood'.

In the past, there had been many events that Subaru had subconsciously crushed in that way. The endless loop earlier could be added to the list of those events.

"Trying to do your business in the hallway of someone else's house, coming here without even crossing the hallway with lots of mana-sensing traps…there's only one word to describe you, the worst, in fact!"

"I'm the type of guy who doesn't stop for anything, even RPGs. That's why I'm so busy collecting sub-events the second week."

If it was a 'Visual Novel Game', he would often go straight for the main heroine, and though he enjoyed collecting special illustrations, he wouldn't necessarily collect all of them if there were too many side-quests to do.

Leaving those off-topic thoughts aside, Subaru said, "Well," and then looked at the little girl once again.

From what she said from earlier, it was safe to assume that she was the culprit behind the endless loop in the hallway. After that, it seemed that the hallway was also set up with various surprise events that prevented Subaru from finding a bathroom. However, he managed to skip all of those events in the end.

"I understand that you want to show off your power, but messing with someone's bodily needs for that purpose is not funny. It almost killed me socially. I shudder just thinking about it."

"Now that she thinks about it, Betty should have just let you run around in circles for a while longer, in fact. That would have saved Betty at least half the humiliation, I suppose.”

“Uh-huh, yeah, Betty. Well, now that I’ve stepped in here, that means I was just better than you. I’m not as much of a sore loser as you, either.”

Subaru felt a sense of urgency due to the toilet-talk, which caused him to start tapping his feet anxiously.

The little girl tiredly put her fingers to her own eyebrows. “Betty is growing tired of you, in fact. Roswaal lets that girl do whatever she wants without any consequences… Now Betty has to clean this mess up, I suppose.”

“You’re tired? But you’re so young! Children should play outside in the sun! Wrinkling your eyebrows together is so boring! C’mon, c’mon! Live strong!”

Thumbs up

The catchphrase was ‘Live strong’, which Subaru first heard in the slums of the capital. At first, he wasn’t sure about how he felt about it, but the more he said it, the more he grew to like it.

The little girl stared at Subaru with half-lidded eyes as she began to like the phrase soberly. Subaru responded to her gaze with a shy smile and then stuck out his tongue.

“Wait. That reaction is not what Betty expected, I suppose. You’re creeping Betty out, in fact.”

“Ow, you just said the whole phrase instead of using the abbreviated version! With that out of the way, can we get to the point? If I get sidetracked too much, my bladder will be in trouble.”

“I don’t know what the second half means, but I have a feeling we’d better get down to business for Betty’s sake, I suppose.”

“Okey-dokey. So…”

Subaru was about to ask the question, “So where’s the bathroom?”

but he was getting the impression that she would use that to her advantage in order to tease him, so he restrained himself and kept his mouth shut.

No matter how he looked at things, the little girl in front of him had to be a magic user of some sort. It was pretty obvious based on how well the looping hallway trick went, and there was a good chance he wouldn't be a match for her.

Moreover, Subaru was extremely hungry right now on top of recovering from life-threatening injuries, and his fighting power was declining. Especially after all the sprinting and running he did earlier, he felt a great deal of anxiety about his physical strength. He knew that his wounds were healing, but he was low on blood as well, which was a bit dangerous.

"I want to start with liver! A heaping serving of pork, liver, and garlic chives to replenish my blood! Tonight, it's not Koetsu, I'm the one who's bloodthirsty, Hiyaa."

"This boy… What are you even talking about now, I suppose…?"

"Oh, sorry, sorry, I'm gonna cut to the chase. Let's see, what's this place, anyway?"

After all, it was good to gather information while the other party was honestly willing to discuss it. While thanking the girl for her patience and understanding, Subaru decided to ask a few questions.

First of all, Subaru wanted to confirm where he currently was. He didn't think he had been captured by Elsa now, but he couldn't necessarily claim that as a fact yet.

He was hoping to get an answer from her concerning that issue. However, she responded with, "It's Betty's bedroom, I suppose."

"…Ah…giving a literal answer right away. I know that youngsters nowadays think that being literal is fun and all, but don't you know that's the exact problem with y'all?"

I teased her back a little bit and this is what happened!

That clearly upset the little girl—who called herself Betty—but he wondered if that was her real name. It seemed more like a nickname.

The girl puffed out her cheeks at Subaru, who was struggling with his emotions. She crossed her arms and shook her glittering dress as she approached him. “Betty has had enough, I suppose. Betty has a feeling she’s going to have to teach you a lesson, in fact.”

“Oh, come onnn, abusing prisoners is barbaric! Don’t do it! I’m just a normal guy who has to endure the urge to pee, and that makes me less dangerous than the average person!”

“That makes you more dangerous due to your desperation, in fact.”

“Damn, that’s clever. Crap, I can’t think of a single thing to do to prove that I’m not a bad guy! Listen, I-I’m not a bad guy!”

She shook her head in small increments, a determined appeal that made her eyes moisten as she shrank to the limit. But the girl’s steps, instead of slackening, increased in speed.

And then she said, “Don’t you dare move, in fact.”

A shiver ran down Subaru’s spine as he heard those words.

Suddenly, the smell of old paper that had dominated the library disappeared, and the pain he felt was as if ice had been thrust into his nose.

Subaru’s skin turned to the color of ash, and he could hear a distant high-pitched ringing in his ears. The reason why he couldn’t smell anything was so his other senses could be strengthened. In this case, sight and touch—his five senses had been cut down to those two senses only.

In front of Subaru’s eyes, the little girl was already close to the point where she could reach him. The difference in height was obvious. The little girl was only as tall as Subaru’s chest, and her shallow blue eyes were looking up at him closely.

The pale pink lips formed a smile, and the little girl’s innocence was the only thing that kept Subaru's alarm bells ringing.

"Do you have something to say, I wonder?" The little girl tilted her head back and asked Subaru, her eyes wide and her lips quivering.

As sweat trickled down his forehead and down his cheeks, and the sensation broke his rigidity for just a few moments, Subaru searched for the best word to say in the moment he was allowed.

That's right, the one word that should be uttered right here, the one word that would break the current situation. That was… "Is it gonna hurt?"

"Betty is impressed you can be so light-hearted in this situation, I suppose. —Betty guesses it's up to you whether it hurts or not, in fact." Saying that in a seriously impressed tone, the little girl's hand reached for Subaru's chest.

A palm met his chest and gently and modestly stroked the surface.

There was a tickly sensation running up his spine, like a chill. "Buhhhh..."

—In the next moment, Subaru felt as if his entire body was on fire.

Something terrible raged inside his body, burning everything from his fingertips to his hair. It was as if her fingertips were wrapped in flames and moving all across his body—it was an extremely painful sensation for him to endure.

Subaru's vision flickered, and the next thing he knew, he was on his knees with tears running down his face. His breathing was ragged, as if he had been running for miles, and his whole body was as sluggish and achy as the day after he had done a reckless muscle workout.

Most of all, he felt exhausted, with all the mental "stuff" dragged out of him.

"It looks like you didn't pass out, I suppose. Just like Betty was told, you're quite sturdy, in fact."

“What the hell did you do to me, drill loli…?”

“Betty simply took out some of the mana inside your body, I suppose. It seems to have a special shape, in fact…even though you’re just an ordinary guy. Your Gate also seems to be closed, in fact.” Muttering to herself, the little girl knelt in front of the crumpled Subaru.

Subaru struggled to support his upper body as she poked her fingers at him while he was trying to get up. “Well, it confirms that you aren’t hostile, I suppose. And for all the disrespect from you towards Betty and for all the hard work Betty has done, taking your mana should be a suitable payment, I suppose.” She poked him again, causing him to reach his limit, and his upper body fell to the floor, unable to support himself with his trembling arms.

This is the third time I’ve kissed the ground in a face-down position. Actually no, this isn’t even the first time… Since I Returned by Death, this is totally my first kiss.

Gathering up all the extra energy in his body between his silly thoughts, Subaru somehow managed to change the angle of his neck on the floor. Slowly, over time, he managed to look up at the little girl’s face.

“Hmm?” As the little girl watched Subaru’s efforts, she loosened the corners of her mouth in amusement.

Subaru peeled his teeth at such a smile and laughed. “You’re not human…are you? —And in this case, I’m not talking about your personality…”

“For all the times you’ve seen Bubby, you’re a little slow on the uptake, I suppose.”

Her words made her sound younger than she appeared, which in turn gave him the impression of a little girl cruelly playing with the wings of a feathered insect.

The fact that she was enjoying watching Subaru crawl along the floor drooling was another point that supported his current impression of her. “One correction…in terms of personality, you’re not even human, either…”

“Don’t measure a noble and sublime being by your standards, human.”

It was a statement said in a far too cruel tone for a little girl to utter.

Somehow, Subaru felt something smoldering in his chest. However, although he felt it, he no longer had enough energy left to act on it. No matter what he did, he was being dragged into the darkness.

—Come on! I just woke up and I’m being rendered unconscious again?!

“I will speak to the others, I suppose. It would be troublesome if you started leaking here, I suppose.”

What if I just let it all out now…no, I don’t have enough guts to say that…

Unable to speak with his unruly mouth, Subaru fell unconscious again.

2

“Oh, he is awake, Sister.”

“Ah, he is awake, Rem.”

It feels like my consciousness is rising to the surface from the ocean’s depths.

The time change and waking up again began with the voices of two girls with the same quality of voice.

Based on how well I slept, I guess I’m in the same soft, comfortable bed as before.

What burned Subaru’s eyelids as he woke up from his slumber was the slight amount of sunlight streaming in through the curtains. The amount of glare was so soft that one would think it was morning.

Don’t know what time it is when you’re on the road? Then when not try out my handy dandy ‘Stubble Clock’! He gave a sales pitch to no one in particular and checked the time while waking himself up.

When Subaru touched the stubble clock on his chin, it felt like it had been four or five hours since he’d woken up last. He could still feel some slight sluggishness in his body.

“It is Seven Brightsun now, sir.”

“It is almost Seven Brightsun, sir.”

Perhaps it was because Subaru stared at the window and showed the action to check the time, but the voice kindly answered the question.

Seven Solartime—Subaru didn’t even know what it meant, but he guessed it was seven o’clock in the morning, judging by the letters. In the first place, he didn’t even know if the time in this world ran on a 24-hour system.

It’s hard to tell if it’s really seven o’clock in the morning, but if I don’t count the first time I woke up… “So I pretty much slept through the whole day, huh? Well, that’s not much of a surprise to me as someone who has slept for 52 hours straight.”

“Sister, did you hear that? Truly the words of a lazy man.”

“Yes, I heard that, Rem. Truly the words of a good-for-nothing man.”

“So who are you two people who are always stereotyping me, ladies?” With a thud, Subaru bounced off the covers and got up.

The sudden action surprised the girls, who were standing next to the bed with Subaru between them. The girls jolted away from the bed, moved to the middle of the room, and then looked at him, hand in hand with each other.

Although they had expected this to some extent, the girls looking at Subaru with their fingers intertwined looked exactly the same—twins.

They were around five feet tall. They had large eyes and pink lips with shallow faces that made them seem childish and lovely.

The two girls, who looked exactly alike, had their hair cut short, but their hair was different colors—one was pink, and the other was light blue. Furthermore, they covered one eye with their hair, but the pink-haired girl covered her left eye, and the light blue-haired girl covered her right eye.

But such differences were only trivial. At this moment, based on those features, the thing that stirred Subaru's heart the most was… "No way…are there even maid outfits in this world?!"

A black apron dress with a white prim on top of their heads. The beautiful twin girls were dressed in the orthodox classic style of maid clothing.

—This is the embodiment of the ideal maid.

"Oh no. I'm currently being indecently humiliated in our guest's head, Sister."

"Oh no. I'm being violated right now in the head of our guest, Rem."

"Don't underestimate my mental capacity. You're both fodder for my fantasies, ladies." Subaru held his arms out and ruffled his fingers in the air. The meaningless movement brought a shiver to the faces of the two maids, and they untied their intertwined fingers and pointed at each other.

"Please forgive me, sir. Just let Rem go and go defile Sister."

"Please don't do it, sir. You can let Ram go and defile Rem instead."

"What kind of sisterhood is that?! Selling each other out and making me look like some kind of evil villain?!"

So scary! and the twins ran away, holding hands again.

Subaru jumped out of bed and chased after them.

The three of them ran around in circles in the large room, chasing each other. And—

“Couldn’t you have woken up more quietly?” A girl had knocked on the door softly, which opened with a thump, and then looked at the three of them from the doorway.

The beauty of her long silver hair could be seen in full and today it was untied and naturally flowing down her back. Her clothing was not the robed outfit she usually wore, but was designed with noticeably darker colors to suit her white, slender body. The skirt was slightly shorter than knee-length, revealing her slender legs, but that area was hidden by knee socks that reached up to the top of her thighs.

“Wow! Whoever picked this outfit out, I get what they were thinking!”

“Well, I’m not sure what you’re talking about, but it’s soooooo disappointing when I know it’s something meaningless.”

Before he knew what he was doing, Subaru pumped his fist and cheered unintentionally.

The girl—Emilia—looked at him with dumbfounded eyes in the doorway of the room.

Chapter 3:
I Can’t Be a Bride

Subaru felt his heart flutter involuntarily at Emilia’s sudden visit. The unexpectedly perfect outfit was a fresh and pleasant surprise, but what was even more pleasant was her presence here.

Simply due to being treated poorly after first being summoned to another world—especially the ones who put him through hell in the beginning—Subaru had special feelings for her, the one who was the first to treat him with unconditional kindness.

“I feel like I’ve imprinted onto you! I don’t want to leave you for a second, Mom!”

“Uhh… I was a biiiit worried because I heard that Beatrice played a prank on you while you were low on blood…but I guess it was useless to do so.”

“Hey, I’ve never had trouble waking up! And I’m kind of afraid to ask you this, but…”

At the puzzled Emilia, Subaru nervously tapped his index fingers together and looked up at her. “So uhh, do you remember me?”

“Your mannerisms are soooo weird, and that’s a weird question to ask. I don’t think anyone could forget someone who leaves such a strong impression like you, Subaru.”

Subaru’s shoulders descended in relief when he heard Emilia softly whisper his name. The fact that the girl called him by his first name without an honorific was completely unexpected and embarrassing for him, someone who never really interacted with the opposite sex in his original world. His ears ended up turning bright red in embarrassment.

Putting aside this somewhat immature behavior of Subaru, the twins, who had noticed Emilia’s presence, rushed to her side. They moved behind her, and with only their faces on either side of her, they stared at Subaru.

“Kindly listen, Lady Emilia. The guest has humiliated my sister.”

“Kindly listen, Lady Emilia. The guest has held me captive and violated Rem.”

“It’s reaaaally not good to tease him too much… I think it’s something Subaru would do, but there’s no way he could get away with it. Ram and Rem, don’t you think you’re playing too much with a sick patient?”

“Yes, Lady Emilia. My sister is sorry for what she’s done.”

“Yes, Lady Emilia. I’m sure Rem will reflect on this.”

Ram and Rem, the two who were called by name, declared their remorse without a shred of remorse in sight. Perhaps accustomed to their attitudes, Emilia looked at Subaru without seeming to be bothered by it. “So how are you feeling, Subaru? Does anything feel strange?”

“I thought I was going to die because I felt like my whole body was on fire before losing consciousness,” he said, “but I don’t feel like that at all now. Now I feel like I slept too much, actually.”

“Yeah. It’s been almost a day since I met you, and you’ve slept through half of it.”

“That’s not true…” Recalling the events that had occurred up until now, Subaru was at a complete loss for words as he tried to refute her statement.

The time it took for Subaru to get through the events of yesterday felt like more than 24 hours to him, but that wouldn’t be the case for Emilia.

From Emilia’s point of view, their chance encounter would only have taken less than an hour. The number of words she exchanged with him could not be said to be much, either.

For Subaru, having this conversation event with her took top priority, especially since he hadn't had a chance to do so this time around.

"Sleeping too much and being lazy are habits of mine…and it's super unusual for me to be up in the morning."

"What kind of life have you been living…?"

"You see, it's easier to play games at night because you don't have to deal with all the unnecessary noise. To be frank, for a shut-in, the high hours of the day are a perfect time to sleep."

"You know, I'm really getting more and more disappointed in you, Subaru." Emilia expressed her disappointment with a sigh in a way that was easy to understand, even though she probably didn't understand most of the meaning, but she understood the essence of what he was saying.

Detecting that the mood was turning sour, Subaru quickly attempted to change the subject by talking about her clothes. "By the way, you look soo different today. What were you doing?"

"Oh, don't mention the clothes too much. I don't like it either. If you're wondering what I've been doing, I was just about to go about my morning routine." Emilia held her forehead and slurred her words as if she were having difficulty saying them. Her lack of clarity also bothered Subaru, but he didn't the pursue the subject any further.

"What's your morning routine?"

"I'm going to borrow the garden of the mansion and talk to the spirits for a bit in the morning. Because that's part of the contract I made with various spirits."

"Wow, talking to spirits is super cool! I don't know what a contract is, but…

The first thing that came to mind when he heard the word 'spirit' was still a tiny gray-haired cat.

In this version of the world, he hadn't had much contact with him, but Subaru still found himself looking forward to seeing him again. Mainly to get his daily dose of cuteness and fluffiness.

Seemingly out of habit, Subaru wiggled his hands. Emilia was quickly learning to ignore the oddities of Subaru's mannerisms, however.

"Well, it's good that you're fine, but don't make too much noise because most people are still asleep at this time. Although, it's awful of me to tell someone who's been asleep for so long to be quiet."

"You're right. Oh, when you say garden, does that mean it's a bit bigger?"

"It's more of a park than a garden. Why do you ask?"

"Nah, provided you don't mind me doing something in the corner of the garden while you talk to the spirits, Emilia-tan…"

"As long as you're not making too much noise or anything… What? What did you just say?"

"Okay, I'm in. I'll go with you."

"Hey, what did you say? What's tan? Where did that come from?"

Though she was asking him questions in a frenzy, he dodged them. With a nasty attitude in return for their earlier mean-spiritedness, Subaru turned his body towards Ram and Rem. "Hey, maid sisters. Do you know where my clothes are? I don't know where they went, but these feel like hospital clothes, and I think they're probably keeping it here."

It hadn't been mentioned so far, but Subaru's current outfit was similar to a thin samue costume made of red-brown fabric. The material was too stiff to be called a hospital gown, but it was much cooler than it looked and quite easy to move in.

"But when it comes to moving around, it's not as comfortable as my tracksuit. So I'm wondering if I can find it somewhere. I don't know if the blood ruined it or not…"

"Do you know, Sister? Is it that dirty little gray rag by any chance?"

"I think so, Rem. Maybe it's that blood-stained rat-colored piece of filth."

"Quite fearless you two—yes, the dirty little rags. If it's still wearable, can you bring it here?" Subaru asked.

The twins looked at Emilia as if seeking approval. When Emilia indicated with her eyes that she had no choice, the twins nodded and tottered out of the room.

"Are you sure you're feeling okay? It wasn't a shallow injury, from what I can tell."

"For sure, I feel perfectly fine. And I don't want my body to be idle, either. If you miss one day of training, you'll have to train for three days in a row to catch up, or so they say."

Subaru straightened his posture as he remembered something, tidied his appearance up, and then turned to Emilia. She looked puzzled by his actions, but he bowed to her and said, "You were the one who healed my wounds, right? Thanks for the help. I'm still scared of dying, actually. I only wanna do it once."

"Normally I'd think you'd only do it once… But nope, it wasn't me." After saying that, Emilia gave a small shake of her head.

Then she looked straight at Subaru with seriousness in her amethyst eyes. Due to the brilliance of her gaze, the fascinated Subaru was stuck as if in a trance and just stood their silently, lost in her eyes. "I'm the one who should be thanking you, Subaru. Back then, you risked your life to save me, a person you barely knew, right? Treating your injuries was only the natural thing to do."

With such a sincere look on her face after conveying her gratitude to Subaru for saving her life, Subaru couldn't help but let out an involuntary "Ahh."

He resented himself for not being able to give even a single sincere response. It was unlikely that he would be able to confront her unless he was fooling around and deceiving her.

He thought about how much easier it would be if he could tell her that she had saved him by saying, That's not true. You were the one who saved me first, Emilia-tan. Though only Subaru remembered what happened in that world.

"—Well, since we helped each other out, how about we say we're even?"

"Even…?"

"It means we don't owe each other anything! So let's be friends, sista!"

If only they were still in the slums—they could have teamed up together, shoulder to shoulder, but all Subaru could do now was use his zeal to cover up his shame.

Emilia smiled slightly at Subaru's bravado. "I don't think I need a strange little brother like that."

"That's a rather harsh comment, right?!"

Subaru felt a little depressed when Emilia gave such a poor assessment of him, but he knows he hadn't shown an ounce of dependability yet, so he'd just have to resign himself to this harsh assessment without a single rebuttal.

"We found what you requested, sir."

"Here you go, sir."

While Subaru was in a depressed state of mind due to what had just occurred, the twin maids brought in his recently washed tracksuit. The pink-haired maid had his jacket, and the light blue-haired maid had his pants. Fortunately, they were able to get the tracksuit washed without leaving any traces of blood on it.

At first glance, Subaru was relieved to see the return of his good-as-new tracksuit. However, the two girls rushed over to him and tried to remove his clothes as quickly as possible.

"Hey, hey! No, I can do it on my own! Although I'm kind of flattered.”

“Oh my, he feels more pleasure than shame, Sister.”

“Oh dear, he feels more happy than humiliated. —He must be a pervert at heart, Rem.”

“Wow, the pink-haired one is the one with the foul mouth! I’ll get dressed, just hand—it—over!” Subaru quickly shook off the squirming twins’ hands and got his tracksuit back.

He was about to get changed as quickly as he could, but then suddenly realized something. “Speaking of which…were you the one who changed me into these clothes?”

“It was me. Ram and Rem were out, and since I was patching you up anyways, it only seemed natural to do it. Oh, and I gave you a quick but thorough wipe down too.” Emilia said, as if it was the most natural thing in the world to do.

Subaru gently peeked inside the underwear he was wearing and confirmed the fact that even his underwear had been replaced. He collapsed on the spot and covered his face with his palms. “I can’t be a bride anymore…”

“If the genders were reversed, that would make sense… Anyways, we don’t have much time, so if you’re going to go, let’s get going.” As if she were the man in the relationship, Emilia patted Subaru on the shoulder in a comforting manner. Since she probably didn’t understand what he was saying, Subaru decided to bury everything he just said and take it to the grave with him.

Subaru had been undressed, cleaned up, and then redressed by a beautiful girl who would have seen his naked body. He thought that was pretty nice in its own way and could even be seen as a reward. He decided to think positively—positive thinking.

Gently wiping the tears from his heart with these positive thoughts, Subaru got to his feet.

As he grabbed his clothes and looked around, the females in the room, sensing that he wanted to change his clothes, left the room in a hurry.

The twins left the room first, and the last thing he saw exit through the door was Emilia's beautiful silver hair. But just before her figure disappeared behind the door, her white profile suddenly turned around. "Don't worry about it. —It was impressive."

As she left, the door closed with a thud.

For the time being, Subaru had to get his clothes changed. He wasn't quite sure how the samue-style clothes were put together, but he figured it out eventually.

He then neatly folded the samue and placed it on the bed. After that he checked how the tracksuit felt after having not worn it for a few hours and stretched with an "mmmmm" and was ready go.

"Well…"

After swinging his hips around and popping a few joints, Subaru looked out the window of his room.

He gently pulled the curtains apart, and he could see the morning sun still blessing the early morning world as it began to rise. After basking in the warmth of the sunlight, he walked over to the bed and dived into it.

"I can't be a bride anymore…"

Pressing his face against the pillow, this time Subaru cried like a little boy.

The last thing that happened was the most heartbreaking for him. Subaru thought he was going to die back there. He even wished he could just die and start over.

—But this heartache wasn't bad enough for him to take such measures, and for a while, Subaru continued to cry his little-boy feelings out like a panzy.

Chapter 4:
Boot Camp in Another World

After wiping away his tears, Subaru left with Emilia, and this time, the hallway he walked through had a proper end. He was then led to a familiar-looking garden outside the manor.

The maid twins also had some work to do around the manor, so they slipped away while they were on the way to the garden.

“Wow, it’s huge…! The mansion is big too, but this is more of a field than a garden, huh.”

The garden of a well-off person’s mansion—a place that was often used as the setting for lunch or dinner parties in manga and anime. Subaru let out a sigh of admiration as he looked around the large garden and immediately began doing stretching exercises to get himself back into shape.

“Those are some odd movements. What are you doing?”

“HUH?! Is warming up not a thing here? If you don’t loosen up your muscles before moving your body, you’ll damage your ligaments before you know it! You could tear your Achilles tendon, or something like that!”

“Hmm, I don’t think I’ve seen something like that. But it’s true that you can easily get injured if you move suddenly without warming yourself up.”

“I didn’t know people in this world don’t do warm-up exercises. Oh well…then how about I teach you? The authentic warm-up exercises of my homeland, passed down through the generations!”

Impressed by the confidence of Subaru, Emilia hesitantly replied with a “O-Okay, then just for a little bit, then.”

Subaru asked her to stand next to him. After the two of them were lined up side-by-side, facing away from the manor, they took deep breaths with the sun pouring down on them. “Radio Calisthenics Exercise Twooo! Go! One-two one-two one one-two.”

“Uhh, what, no way?!”

“Hold your hands out in front of you and touch the sky! Follow my movements, follow me!” While encouraging the puzzled Emilia, Subaru performed his homelands famous Radio Calisthenics Routine. In the beginning, Emilia seemed perplexed and tried imitating his movements, but she gradually became more motivated and was absorbed in the exercises with a serious look on her face. Once the exercises were over, she took a deep breath, and… “And at the end, hold your hands up high and say, victory!”

“Bi…bictory!”

“Alright, that’s the spirit! Not bad for your first time. Emilia-tan is awarded the title of “Calisthenics Novice.” Keep up the good work! Fight!”

In another world, Subaru’s life as a radio calisthenics instructor began. Emilia, his memorable first apprentice, exhaled with a blank look on her face at the ever-so-enthusiastic Subaru.

“Despite what you just said, Subaru, it’s true that these exercises were effective, because I can feel my mana circulating in my body.”

“Then I hope you can spread the word! But only on the condition that the song and victory! are spread too.”

The song and victory! had to come in a package. That was non-negotiable for Subaru.

Feeling pressured by Subaru’s uncharacteristically serious attitude, Emilia nodded her head. “Let’s see…wan-to wan-too?”

“No! It’s one-two one-twooo!”

They spent some time saying “one-two one-two” to each other, but Subaru decided to write the lyrics down on paper in the end.

After he reached that decision, Subaru came to the realization that the people in this world might not understand the words he wrote down. At least for now, he couldn't read the letters of this world.

"Maybe I should check it out later, huh. I can only write in Japanese, a little English, and some gal characters, but…"

Subaru had mastered the Gal alphabet after spending a surprisingly enthusiastic amount of time learning it. Although, never actually being able to use it makes it feel like he just wasted his time.

"Even so, you are pretty fit, Subaru." Emilia suddenly muttered that to Subaru, who was turning his wrists and ankles and popping his joints.

For Subaru, despite already having been seen naked by her, even if it were for the purpose of being treated, he couldn't help but feel embarrassed when Emilia looked at him from top to bottom.

Recalling the extreme embarrassment he felt ten minutes ago, Subaru scratched his head. "Well, sort of. Since I'm a shut-in, I should at least exercise a bit."

"Well, I don't know what "shut-in" means, but I'm sure Subaru comes from a reaaally good family. Weren't you taught martial arts?"

"No, I'm seriously from a normal middle-class family, but where did that come from? Do I give off some noble-like elegance?!"

"You must be reaaally curious."

Subaru said, "Let's hear it." and raised his hands up in a playful manner.

Then Emilia quickly grabbed both of Subaru's raised hands. The girl fiddled with his hands vigorously, and he emitted an "ahh" as his throat froze up. "Like these fingers, it's because of the way your skin and hair look. These hands look sooo different from the hands of a commoner. And these muscles don't look like they came from working…" She continued to fiddle with his hands, causing him to blush constantly, but he felt satisfied regardless.

Aspects about his hair and skin, and other things he had never mentioned before, were pointed out to him, and he was greatly reminded of his own foolishness.

Subaru's mind was spinning at a dizzying pace as she talked about aspects of his appearance that were not usually seen among commoners here. Meanwhile, she continued, "Black hair and black eyes. It's a common trait among migrants from the south, and it can be seen in Lugunica too. I've never seen anyone with these traits, but maybe there were some servants before…? Even that outfit was made with a material I've never seen before… Am I right?"

At the silent Subaru, Emilia smiled as if she were proud of herself.

While being captivated by Emilia's beautiful appearance, Subaru nodded solemnly, and examined the content of her words. "If I were to say whether it's true or not, it isn't, but how can I explain it without hurting you?"

"Even if I'm wrong, you need to say it clearly, or I'm reaaally going to feel embarrassed."

"It's all good. I don't mind, I've been showing a lot of ignorance for some reason or another. How about we just be friends and be embarrassed together!"

"I don't remember our relationship being sooo close that we can casually embarrass each other without fear. I'm not making any progress by speculating, so I'm just going to ask you frankly. Where did you come from, Subaru?"

—A question that blew the shame and outrageousness of the situation away, and Subaru could only think, hmm.

Subaru felt like he could honestly say "I was summoned from another world" here, but saying he was summoned from another world would make him sound like a crazy person.

In a world full of opportunities, a crazy person would not be thrown out, but looking at the seriousness of Emilia in front of him, Subaru had a feeling he'd get turned into an ice statue if he gave a poor answer. “So… I guess it’s best to go with Deflection Plan B here.”

“It’s reaaaally disgusting to be muttering like that. You’re not going to answer my question?”

“I do have an answer for that! And it’s super! But unfortunately, I don’t have the answers to these questions… Uhhh, because I have amnesia and don’t know anything about myself!”

“You said your name was Natsuki Subaru.”

“Oh, shit! You’re not letting up! You keep pushing forward without wavering!”

“Soooo, you’re not going to give me a straight answer. —Well, I won’t try to pry if you don’t want to answer.”

Emilia surprisingly let Subaru off the hook without much trouble while he was engrossed in his thoughts about her behavior. She let out a single word, “Now…” and took out a green crystal that was attached to her blouse.

“Oh, that’s—”

“It’s a crystal for spirits to inhabit. You already know about Puck, right?”

“The gray cat that disappeared when we needed him most, right? And it doesn’t know what I did after that because it was taking a nap, huh?”

It was the crystal that housed the spirit that disappeared during their battle with Elsa. This was the first time Subaru had seen it in this world, but he caught a glimpse of it before in a previous loop.

The green crystal suddenly started glowing as if in response to Subaru’s mean criticisms. And then… “Unfortunately, I heard all about it from Lia after that mess was wrapped up. I don’t sleep all the time, Subaru.”

The light leaking out of the crystal came together and gradually formed a small outline. The head was formed, the torso emerged, and then the limbs appeared, fully equipped with fur. And a few seconds later, a small bipedal cat appeared in Emilia's palm.

"Hiya. Good morning, Subaru. Nice day today."

"It was a rather wild night and morning for me, though. I had to deal with looping hallways and the need to pee, and worst of all, my purity was stolen from me, so I can't marry Emilia-tan anymore…"

"Don't use such harsh words."

After being told that, Subaru replied with a vague "Sure!"

Emilia closed her eyes as if resigned to it, then looked at Puck, who was still in in her palm. "Good morning, Puck. I'm sorry I put you through all that last night."

"Good morning, Lia. But I feel bad about what happened yesterday. I almost lost you. I can't thank Subaru enough for that." Puck looked up at Subaru with his round eyes, tilting his little head back. "I should thank you. If there's something you want me to do for you, just let me know. I can do most things for you."

"Well, then let me touch that fur of yours whenever I want." Subaru also responded immediately to Puck.

The speed of the reply was the same, but perhaps the content of the reply was a surprise as well. It wasn't just Puck who rolled their eyes, but also Emilia, who was listening. She seemed a bit flustered. "Wait, can't you think about it a little more? I know he looks small and weak, but Puck's level of power is really quite something."

"It's a little awkward, but yes. I'm a pretty powerful spirit, despite my appearance, so I don't mind if you're a little greedy."

"For a top fur lover like me, the right to pet your fur whenever I want to is absolutely priceless. It's something that can lead a person's mind to a higher level and purify even the most desolate of souls."

As he said it, Subaru took advantage of his newfound rights and continued to play with Puck in Emilia's palm to his heart's content, starting with his belly, then his chin, and his ears too. "Wow, these ears are amazing! I can't get enough of this fluffiness!"

"Hmmm, the great thing about Subaru is that he's serious. I can read your mind vaguely, so I can tell," Puck said with amusement as he played freely with his fingers.

Emilia gave a distinct sigh of dismay at their playfulness. "It's soooo tiring trying to understand you, Subaru."

"You can't give up. Things in life, like interpersonal relationships, are built on a spirit of mutual understanding. But don't think it'll be easy to understand me, alright?"

"What's that? This is reaaaally frustrating," Emilia replied.

Subaru folded his arms and turned his face away while looking at Emilia with one eye open. Seeing her attitude, which showed her displeasure, Subaru made his mind up about the future.

And then she saved Puck from Subaru's barrage of petting attacks. With a light wave of her hand, she turned her feet toward the outskirts of the garden. "Well, I'll go talk to the spirits now then, and Subaru, ummm, can you go over there and weed quietly?"

"Alright! Weeding is so exciting, so I'll do my best! But I didn't come down to the garden to do that, right?!"

"I'm kidding, I'm kidding" he said, laughing as he watched her silver hair disappear into the distance. Then Subaru got on the ground before doing some exercises.

Subaru had already completed his morning exercises, so other than that, he can still do his daily muscle workout regime. After having skipped yesterday, it would make sense for him to do two days' worth of exercises to make up for it.

A hundred push-ups, a hundred sit-ups, and a hundred squats.

This was the type of workout regime Subaru did every day at home even though he was a shut-in living with his parents. Sometimes he would even swing a sword, or something similar, but he would mostly just do those three sets of exercises.

—In the meantime, Subaru did push-ups, sit-ups, and squats, all while sweating profusely.

After resting for a bit, Subaru did another round of exercises. Doing each set of exercises only took around ten minutes, but he was very serious about his training and would do them every day.

“I feel like I’m missing something. If only I had a wooden sword or something to train with…”

“Here, sir.”

“Please use it, sir.”

The maid sisters had appeared out of nowhere and offered Subaru a wooden sword to train with.

Subaru was stunned by their thoughtfulness, and, after receiving the sword with a respectful “thank you,” they disappeared without a trace. Regardless, he now had a wooden sword to train with, just like he had wished for.

The shape of the sword was in the style of the commonly used two-handed swords in this world, which was slightly different from what he was used to. However, a sword was a sword, and the fundamentals of using it were the same no matter what shape, material, or size it came in.

He swung it lightly to make sure, and decided that the weight was just right.

“Thank God that all-in-one maids exist. Anyways, I haven’t swung a sword in a long time, so let’s go!”

Ready, and swing! Ready, and swing!

Subaru had only been a member of the kendo club when he was in middle school, but he had stayed long enough to get to the first dan, or graded rank, so he was at least proficient in it and could make progress by practicing. After having those thoughts, he continued to swing over and over again, and as far the sharpness of his swings was concerned, it was still as good as it was when he was in the club.

“This is a fantasy world where magic is used along with swords, so I wonder if this will be useful.”

As Subaru continued his training, he could feel sweat running down his forehead like a waterfall and spilling onto the lawn.

Subaru recalled the battle that took place at the Stolen Goods Warehouse. —The sight of Reinhard and Elsa clashing blade against blade with sparks flying.

He then envisioned himself swooping in with his two-handed sword.

“Take this, Elsa! Your evil acts end here!”

He sprang into action and went in for a strike, but then got instantly defeated with a slash to his gut.

He gave it another go, but this time, he imagined being in the line of fire of Reinhard’s powerful sword slash… It didn’t end well either, as he saw himself being turned into ash as if he had been instantly cremated.

Subaru concluded that no matter how hard he tried, it would be impossible for him to beat a cheater—or overpowered character—as a normal person.

“Is it even worth the effort…? Well…”

Carrying the wooden sword on his shoulder, Subaru paused in order to look over at Emilia to check how she was doing.

He could see that she was sitting on the green grass with her feet sprawled out in front of her, and talking about something with Puck, who was on her arm.

Subaru thought that the person she was talking to was Puck, however, “If my eyes aren’t deceiving me, it looks like Emilia-tan is surrounded by dim lights.”

Within the reach of the seated silver-haired girl, Subaru could see that the space was enveloped in a hazy, faint glow. Around her, dim multi-colored lights were floating around and flickering like the light of a firefly.

It was a mysterious and fantastic sight to behold.

It wasn’t a scene that mortals should tread upon. —It was like a sanctuary for the divine where only heavenly beings were allowed entry.

“Wow, this is amazing. So are all these fluffy things spirits then?”

“Huh?”

Subaru casually spoke to Emilia while she was talking to the spirits as if it were the most natural thing to do.

Emilia couldn’t help but be surprised by Subaru’s sudden appearance, and her eyes moistened with tears as if they were responding to her astonishment.

—And her sudden change in feeling spread to the spirits around her.

“Uh oh, I’m in trouble now…”

Many dim lights could be seen fluttering from side to side, trying to move behind Emilia in an attempt to escape from Subaru’s view.

Subaru felt as if he had made a flock of pigeons flee from him in a park.

“You are amazing, Subaru. Normally it’d take a lot of courage to even try to touch a spirit,” Puck said.

“So you’re saying, ‘you’re lucky to have me around’, right? I know! I can’t imagine my life without you, tickle, tickle, tickle.”

Subaru ambushed Puck, who was still on Emilia's arm—which had stiffened in response to his actions—and began his tickle attack. While doing so, he tilted his head towards her, who was still speechless, and enjoyed the feeling of her silver hair with his fingers. "What's the matter? Your insignia will get stolen again if you aren't careful."

"Don't poke people where it hurts! That's not what I meant. I was just suuper surprised." Emilia blamed Subaru for her own shortcomings while wiping away her tears with her fingers. The spirits swayed up and down as if agreeing with her, and Emilia replied with a "Well, aren't you all in a good mood." while watching the reaction of the spirits.

"Weeelll, this is the first time seeing a spirit in my life, so it's a bit exciting for me. They didn't look dangerous to me, either."

"I was keeping them under control, so it was okay. If it were an inexperienced spirit arts user, they would cause the spirits to run away and…bam!"

Emilia tried to scare them with her voice, but she only managed get let out a 'bam' at the end of her sentence, as if her vocabulary wasn't broad enough to find a better word to use. Subaru listened intently and ended up shrugging, and then looked over at Puck. "Totally exaggerating, huh."

"What's so dangerous about a fluffy-looking light like that?"

"Mhm. For example, I could turn you into dust in a matter of seconds."

"I'm soo sorry if I offended you!" Subaru dived into a prostrating position and expressed his gratitude.

Puck laughed with a wave of his little hand, and Emilia pouted her lips due to the difference in treatment. "Why don't you treat me like that…Hey! Puck?"

"Is it the difference in age…?" He replied calmly, stroking his beard. Emilia sighed and gave up on pursuing the issue, perhaps due to how calm and gentle Puck was.

Chapter 5: Awareness of Emotions

1

Emilia sighed as she looked down at Subaru, who was still prostrating himself, and put a finger to her lips as if she had just remembered something. “That reminds me…”

The gestures she made sometimes looked strangely childish and cute in the eyes of Subaru. As he leapt up off the ground, Emilia removed her finger from her lips and pointed at her eyes. “You’ve never seen a spirit before, right? So do you know how to use mana then?”

“How do you use mana?”

“It’s as simple as focusing your eyes, right? What else is there…”

“Lia. It’s not that simple. You’ve only ever seen humans who are pretty good at using mana. Well, apart from that, Subaru’s situation is a little bit special.”

Emilia tilted her head and asked, “Special?”

Puck crossed his arms and nodded at Emilia. “From what I’ve seen after taking a quick glance, Subaru’s Gate is basically shut tight. Even if he has never seen a spirit or magic before, isn’t it too closed? It’s on that level.”

“That’s strange… Even if you only lived a normal life, that wouldn’t happen, right?”

“Yep, that’s why it’s strange. Subaru didn’t live a normal life.”

After they nodded to each other with their gazes linked, they looked at Subaru at the exact same time with bated breath. Subaru, who was being stared at by them, responded. “I can’t help but hesitate to interrupt you two when you’re in your own little world… I’m sooo jealous.”

“Well, well, I know it’s not normal.”

“Your definition of normal is totally wrong! I mean, isn’t it pretty rude to look at someone’s face and say they’re normal or not normal? How about your daughter then, huh?”

“I’m happy to say that she is growing up to be a kind and honest girl.”

“The stupid cat-parent has arrived!” Subaru covered his face with his palm at Puck’s attitude, which was nothing short of sweet to his daughter.

When Emilia saw that overreaction, she said, “I’m not sure why, but they seem really close.” Murmuring that, she looked at them back and forth.

After they heard her murmur, Subaru and Puck looked at each other, nodded, and then gave each other a high five. “Ohhh, definitely, we’re best buds! We’re on the same wavelength. Why don’t you come join me and then aim to be the world’s best comedy duo?!”

“You say that, but I’m sure you’re only after my body, right?” Puck replied.

“Whether it’s for love or your fluffiness, they are two different things, but I’m sure I’ll come back to you in the end. I’ll even tolerate a little bit of cheating if I’m feeling generous, tickle tickle tickle.”

They were interrupted by the touch of someone’s palms, and Subaru seemingly forgot about the conversation they were having since he was fully focused on playing with Puck with a grin on his face. Emilia then decided to leave Puck with Subaru for a while. “Puck, go play with Subaru over there. I’m going to go talk to the spirits now. I reaaally don’t want to be disturbed anymore, okay?”

“She’s thrown us away…”

"We've been thrown away…"

Emilia silently ignored the two of them who shrugged their shoulders in a joking manner. As soon as she gained some distance, she began to immerse herself in the spirits she brought along with her, which seemed to be the continuation of what she was doing before.

The scene of her talking to the spirits was just like the one he saw before—a fantastic sight to see. Subaru wanted to get a glimpse of it, which was why he had acted like that.

"Anyways, that wasn't my real intention, so please understand that."

"Don't worry about it. Well, I don't want to keep getting scolded, so I'll just tell you about it myself. She's in the middle of an important ceremony with the spirits, so I can't overlook it any longer."

"But you just can't seem to stop yourself from interrupting it, though… What's the big deal with it, anyways?"

"The ceremonial contract with a spirit—the forging of a covenant."

Subaru scowled in confusion in response to hearing a lot of unfamiliar words. Puck, as if trying to find the right way to explain it, started by saying, "Let me see…"

"First of all, a spirit arts user needs to form contracts with spirits before they can use spirit magic. And the content of the contract varies from spirit to spirit. Are you still with me?"

"So it's different from interest and collateral for a bank loan. OK."

"My name isn't OK, but I'll proceed. The content that the spirits ask for is different for each individual spirit, but when it comes to minor spirits, they only want simple things like direct access to the caster's mana. That's why it's rather easy to get them to cooperate with you."

"OK, got it. But based on what you said, true spirits are different, right? How about explaining that one, Mr. Spirit?"

"Smart kids talk fast and are helpful…but we won't get very far if you keep going off on tangents, though."

Subaru scratched his head in embarrassment. Then Puck looked at him warmly while stroking his whiskers. "As you said, spirits who have minds of their own are more demanding, like me for example. Although, I'd like to strike a good deal with the contract maker if I can. Even so, I'm still a powerful spirit in my own right, so the contract conditions with Lia are rather strict."

"I've been thinking about that for a while now, but Lia is a pretty cute nickname."

"Your Emilia-tan is even cuter. Maybe I'll call her that next time."

"—I'm begging you, please don't do that." Puck agreed with Subaru's choice of nickname, and then Emilia cut into their conversation with an angry look on her face.

While they were looking at her, the dim glow of the spirits that had been surrounding her disappeared as she glared at them.

—Looks like the Spirit Talk Show is over.

As Subaru stood up, he brushed the grass off his butt. "Is the party over? That felt like a piece of cake."

"I cut it short because you two were interrupting me and it was sooo distracting. You're able to get on people's nerves even when you're far away from them… It's quite the talent."

"Two people who shouldn't have met have now met… I have a feeling that something is about to happen. I can't stop thinking about it and my heart is pounding."

As Subaru pounded his chest to the rhythm of his own heartbeat, Emilia held out her hand to him, and Puck jumped up from where Subaru was and landed there. He looked up at Emilia with his round black eyes with a somewhat satisfied smile on his face.

"It's okay. From what I've seen so far, I don't sense any malice, hostility, or ill-intent in Subaru. His personality is a bit weird, but he's a good boy."

"Wha…?" Emilia was at a loss for words after hearing Puck's poor assessment.

She snapped at Puck in a hurried tone while she looked at Subaru to see how he reacted. "Why did you make that kind of comment in front of him… And even if it's true, wouldn't it be hurtful to be told that?"

"Oh, that's alright. I must be a complete stranger to you, so it makes sense. It's only natural to be suspicious of a nice guy like me whose name cannot even be verified… Though that part at the end really hurt, Emilia-tan!"

Emilia quickly covered her mouth with her hand, and Subaru chuckled bitterly at her honest reaction.

Subaru had expected this to happen, which was why he spent so much time with Puck in order to prepare for this exact moment. They were not so careless as to accept him, who hadn't given out a single piece of decent information so far, without caution. The sudden appearance of Ram and Rem earlier, too, was a trick that was probably due to the fact that they were keeping an eye on his movements from somewhere.

"Although, I'm really not sure how to explain it." The Subaru of this world existed in people's memories, but no preexisting records existed. It was difficult to explain, and there was a good chance he'd be treated like a lunatic. With that being the case, letting Puck give his own judgement was the best choice.

Subaru hoped that with the help of the exchange just now that Puck, being able to read minds to a certain extent, would be able to convey his situation more convincingly than he himself could.

It was a gamble of sorts, but Puck laughed after realizing what Subaru was trying to do. "It's alright, Lia. I mean, Subaru knows that too. You're a naughty boy for taking advantage of my mind reading skills like that, you know."

A look of shock appeared on Puck’s face after hearing Subaru address him like that. Then he burst into laughter and grinned. “It’s been a really long time since I’ve been treated like that. I like it.”

Subaru could understand why Puck was so happy, but before he could even mention it, Puck floated up in front of Emilia’s face. Then their foreheads met as she closed her eyes, which made for a strangely surreal sight.

“Eat this! Puck’s super mysterious technique called ‘Cat’s Forehead Impact’!!”

Subaru couldn’t help but feel lonely when the two of them remained silent, and in his own desolation, he tried to get their attention. But the two of them were in such a deep state of concentration that they didn’t react, so his loneliness increased exponentially.

“Damn it! I feel so helpless… I can’t think of any more ways to get your attention. I’m starting to tear up.”

“…Mhm, I get it. Wow, and I ‘ve been thinking a lot about you too… Why are you sitting on the ground crying like a girl?”

“Don’t—worry—about—it! So what was that, anyways?”

“It’s more like a shared consciousness. It’s easier to explain things to you if you just feel what I feel, rather than having to explain it with words, right?”

Having answered Subaru’s question in a straightforward manner, Puck sat next to the silver-haired girl. She put her hand on Puck’s shoulder and nodded with, “That’s how it is.”

“It was through Puck, but I got the message about you… I’m soooo sorry for doubting you. I know the truth now, and I feel reaaally bad about it.”

“The thought of being explored by a beautiful woman is rather exciting, isn’t it? Next time, by all means, you, not Puck, can enter my mind directly." Subaru gave a thumbs up and flashed his teeth, and Emilia looked so disappointed in him at this moment. Seeing her reaction, Subaru's inward regret began to run full speed ahead, and he thought, oh no…I've done it again.

Subaru had a bad habit of spitting out nonsense when he was in a good mood. "No, no, no, not in a perverted way, but yes…in our industry, that kind of pain is a reward."

It was also Subaru's bad habit to screw up his own follow-up.

With a tight smile, Subaru felt a cold sweat flowing down his face. Sweat, tears, rain, or slobber, a liquid that was sure to make him feel like a donkey in three quarters of a second, was now running down his chin.

Emilia tilted her head slightly at Subaru, who was a terrible actor. "—You are really strange, Subaru."

"Huh?"

"Playing with a real spirit as if it's normal, and…even setting your sights on a half-elf like me."

"It surprised me, even if it was just a joke," she chuckled quietly.

Would you be that surprised if it wasn't a joke? Subaru thought to himself, but he even forgot about that and just admired her charming smile in silence.

That smile was as clear and pure as the one he'd seen in that alleyway in the royal capital. It was neither fleeting nor sad, and he was very happy to see it.

—Subaru realized how much he loved her expression for the first time. "Oh no!"

"What?"

"No, I mean, I haven't felt like this in a long time… No, seriously."

Subaru's heartbeat quickened, his mouth became dry, and his breathing became labored.

Subaru's eyes began to lose focus and he had difficulty holding his head up. Then he lost control of his emotions and felt like he was burning up, which caused his neck and face to turn bright red.

"What's the matter? Are you okay?" Emilia, who asked Subaru that question, looked up at his face from below. That face, which wore a worried expression, looked absolutely adorable to him.
"Woooooohoooooo!"

After that loud shout, Subaru suddenly jumped backwards and tried to do a backflip to escape the situation. He landed on the ground in an upside-down position with his hand beneath him to break his fall, but his hand slipped due to the grass still being wet, and he fell on his head. He then slid across the grass on his head for a few feet before coming to a stop.

"Woah, what happened to you all of a sudden?!"

"Ow, ow, ow, ow, ow, ow. Holy crap, I'm not bald now, am I…? Oh…they're white."

Emilia rushed to Subaru, who was rolling on the ground holding his head, and fumbled with her hands trying to figure out what to do. He had said those words when he looked up at her from the ground.

Emilia's face, which had originally looked puzzled, instantly turned bright red as she realized what it meant. It was because she had walked in front of him wearing a short skirt while he was rolling on the ground.

"Force majeure, force majeure! That wasn't what I was trying to do!"

"Are you telling the truth?"

"—Thank you for the eye feast." Sitting in a seiza position, Subaru clasped his hands together and bowed his head to the silver-haired goddess.

When he looked up, Emilia smiled at him. —Unlike the smile from earlier, it had a sadistic nature to it. “That kind of face is also lovely—oh shit.”

“—Reflect on what you’ve done.”

Even considering what he had done, Subaru felt like the balls of ice that rained down on him were rather large.

2

“Ah, that hurt… I wonder if I’m really starting to go bald now. Is it gonna be okay?”

“It’s just a little bump on the head. —I think you should reaaaaally be thankful for my kindness.”

Subaru stroked his injured head while sitting on the ground. He was on the verge of tears, and Emilia, who had turned away from him, had responded in a cold manner.

They were separated by a distance of several yards now, and it was as if the gap created by his earlier actions was reflected in reality.

Subaru glanced at her white profile and then turned his face away.

Glance, turn away. Glance, turn away. Glance glance, turn away turn away.

“Don’t play around. I’m still mad at you.”

“C’mon, it was just an accident. It’s just a minor misunderstanding that got blown out of proportion.”

If he were to use manga terms, the bump was so big that you would want to put a band-aid on it.

Subaru felt like he really did see his life flash before his eyes at the moment of impact with the ground. It was so powerful that he thought he might get sent back the convenience store if he wasn’t careful.

Subaru felt fine now, but he had felt really dizzy after it happened.

It was possible that she thought she had overdone it, but Emilia was looking down at the collapsed Subaru, and he thought she looked like an adorable little animal.

When Emilia discovered that Subaru was looking at her out of the corners of his eyes, she became angry again. “Your personality is sooo hard to deal with. I wish you could make it easier for me.”

“I’m the type of guy who cuts corners in life to live comfortably. You’re too optimistic.”

Just ahead of Subaru’s envious gaze was Puck, who was relaxing in Emilia’s lap. He had been the size of a person’s palm just a moment ago, but was now the size of an infant, and she was petting him in her lap.

“Such disgusting feelings have nothing to do with me.”

“Shut up and don’t read people’s minds. It’s in the mind of a teenage boy, you know, and it’s a great thing. Emilia-tan is no exception.”

“If you have too many dirty thoughts about my daughter, I’ll erase you.”

“You would try to kill me just because I made you angry?!” Subaru was just joking, but he had a feeling that Puck was being serious.

Subaru looked at the two of them. “Even so…”

“Make sure you groom yourself every morning, okay? You know, it seems like the obligations of the spirt in this contract are too small.”

“Not really. Some spirits are more demanding than others. They may demand many times the amount of mana that a normal person has, or they may ask for one kill a day if it’s a really aggressive one.”

“That comparison is way too brutal…and you spoil your daughter too much.”

Compared with his example, the terms of the contract were way too good. Subaru wondered if it was the same in every world when it came to giving family members favorable terms in business contracts and such. Long live nepotism!

Subaru gazed at Emilia and Puck's playtime in a rare moment of silence as he thought about the concept of nepotism.

The reason why Subaru kept chattering on and on about whatever came to mind in the first place was because it was hard for him to be silent when he was around other people.

Subaru's silence in the presence of others gave him a "Since you've decided to stay quiet, then stay quiet" kind of feeling. It was strange how his usual personality was nowhere to be seen at this moment.

—It was just completely silent.

It was perhaps because of how heartwarming the scene in front of him was.

The movement of Emilia's fingers as she combed Puck's fur was very gentle. She seemed to be forgetting about her altercation with Subaru since her expression was starting to change, and the way she looked as she immersed herself in the grooming process was serious yet calm, and was absolutely mesmerizing.

Oh, I think I'm going blind, Subaru thought.

"Grinning"

Subaru really hated that mind-reading cat who was looking at him with a grin on his face. That cat, which could pick up on people's emotions without touching them, would know the true nature of Subaru's complex feelings that occupied his heart at this very moment. His weakness had been discovered unexpectedly, and he didn't think it was funny at all.

—Subaru felt as if he had chosen a very thorny path.

Her beautiful, flowing silver hair was as magical as dew in the moonlight. Her white skin was as pale as fresh snow, and her amethyst eyes seemed to capture his attention as if he were under a spell. He was also aware that her delicate body equipped with long, thin limbs was so fragile that it might break if he were to hold her in his arms, but he also knew she had a heart of gold wrapped around an unbreakable core. She was noble, beautiful, and an ideal woman.

No matter how Subaru looked at it, there was no way she would show interest in a smelly shut-in from another world. “Just doing this is a luxury, isn’t it?”

Subaru began experiencing strange emotions that left him in a stupor just thinking about them. Soon after, he stood up and started swinging his wooden sword again in an attempt to shake those feelings off.

The last time Subaru had felt an emotion like this was in elementary school. What’s more, even after 10 years, he had kept his feelings bottled up and never told anyone about them.

Every time he thought about those bottled-up feelings, the speed of his swings became quicker. “Disappear! Fuck you, stupid regrets! I don’t care if there are a 108 of them! I’m gonna destroy them all! Bring it on!” Subaru cut down his invisible regrets and made a bullish comment after each strike.

It wasn’t like Subaru to have regrets. It was in his nature to make choices without looking back. That was what the man named Natsuki Subaru was all about.

“Ohhh, this boy. Hee-hee-hee, I never get tired of watching him.”

“Yes, yes, it doesn’t seem to be working… But you can say that again.”

The two of them looked at Subaru, who continued to cut down his invisible enemies, and made such comments.

Emilia gently loosened her lips as she looked at his back. On that face of hers, the awkward anger from earlier was nowhere to be seen. The reason she seemed to have forgotten about it was because of Subaru being Subaru. “Huh. What’s going on with those two?”

At the sound of Emilia’s voice, who seemed to have noticed something, Subaru stopped his mock battle and looked in the direction of the manor. The twin maids with their prominent pink and light blue hair came towards them from the mansion. They both calmly gave formal bows.

““Master Roswaal, lord of the manor, has returned. Please come to the mansion.””

They spoke in perfect unison without making a single mistake.

Their perfect combination surprised Subaru, but what surprised him even more was their change in demeanor.

Unlike before, when they had joked around with each other, the two girls standing in front of him now looked like proper servants of a mansion. In short, they went from private-mode to work-mode.

“I see. Roswaal… Then we had best go see him then.

““Yes, and he said to bring the guest as well, if he is awake.””

Puck shrank and dived into Emilia’s silver hair. She patted down her hair and accepted it, and then got up with a slightly calmer expression on her face.

Subaru, who had been brought up in the conversation, wiped the sweat from his face due to being uncomfortable with his appearance. Shortly after, the blue-haired maid quickly moved closer to him, brought out a handkerchief from her bosom, and finished tidying up his appearance for him. “Sorry.”

“No, as a servant, it’s my duty, sir.”

“No, as a servant, it’s my job, sir.”

Even though it was the blue-haired maid that did it, the pink-haired maid butted in as well as if it were only natural. Subaru felt relieved that their demeanor had returned to what he had seen earlier, and then said, “So, who’s Roswaal?”

“The lord of this manor… Ah, I guess I never explained it.” Emilia put her palm to her mouth as if realizing her mistake. Then she frowned and wondered how she should respond. “Well, yes. Roswaal is… You’ll understand when you meet him.”

“You’re giving up too soon! What, he’s too plain to describe?!”

““““No, just the opposite.””””

After that four-person rebuttal, Subaru was so shaken that he dropped his wooden sword.

The blue-haired maid kicked the wooden sword up with her foot and caught it and then solemnly bowed before meeting up with her sister. Then the pink-haired maid standing next to her motioned towards the mansion. “There’s no point in trying to describe him with words. You will understand Master Roswaal’s personality once you meet him, sir. It will be okay.”

The pink-haired maid and light blue-haired maid looked at each other and nodded, and Emilia reluctantly agreed with them. While Subaru was still in a perplexed state, Emilia lightly tapped him on the shoulder as she headed towards the mansion. “—I’m sure you two will get along just fine, Subaru. He’s just a bit of a headache, though.”

Subaru could only murmur a “yes” with a depressing tone of voice in response.

Chapter 6:
The Return of the Lord

“Ohhh, you’re awake. That is good, quite gooood.” The tall man with long, dark blue hair running down his back let that out cheerfully as he looked at Subaru.

He was a tall man. His height surpassed Reinhard’s at around six feet tall. He had a slender body, as if he never did any sort of physical labor in his life, and it was not so much slender as it was delicate. He had different colored eyes, with yellow and blue on either side, and they matched his ghastly pale skin that made him look like a sick person.

His appearance was beautiful, as far as beauty standards were concerned. However, no matter how beautiful he was, if he got too close it would surely make anyone feel uncomfortable. “Your face is too close!”

“Sorry, soooooorry. You seeee, the first time I saw you was when you were deaaaathly pale, covered in blood, and on the verge of deaaath. I’m deeeeeply moooved to see you walking around like this.”

He patted Subaru’s shoulders in a friendly manner and bent down to look at him at close range once again—this was the owner of the mansion named Roswaal.

Subaru thought he looked to be in his mid-twenties and gave him the impression of a ‘prodigal son’ based on his appearance alone.

“No no, even like this, I’m sure you’re a pretty sharp guy…”

“Is that sooooo, that’s a nice assessment. Stare at me to your hearts conteeeeeeent. Do I look shaaarp? Weeeellll?”

Posing in front of Subaru, he spun around and stood as a model. The imposing manner in which he stood caused Subaru to be astonished when his own feet took a few steps back.

“N-No way…have I been outmatched here?! It’s not normal for someone to be more of a character than me… Isn’t that a hindrance in your daily life?!”

“Well, it reaaally doesn’t matter to me, either way.” A sigh arrived from behind them, and Emilia stepped forward as Subaru stepped back in shock. She turned to face Roswaal and said, “Welcome back. How have you been?”

“I’m fiiiiiine. I feel quite pleeaaaased. It’s been four days, 3 hours, and 19 minutes since we last spoooooke. I’ll have to write it down in my notebook.”

Roswaal was handed his notebook and a pen to write with by the pink and light blue-haired maids who had been standing to his right and left. They bowed reverently while doing so. With the notebook and pen he had just been handed, he began to write furiously, and —

“On the fifteenth day of the month of Tadmus. —Lady Emilia spoke to me herself. I am very happy. I feel like we are starting to get along, and…”

Roswaal closed the notebook with a look of satisfaction on his face, handed it to the maid, and then turned around. He was then greeted by Emilia who had a slight smile on her face, and—

“No, seriously…that was just…CRINGE.” After a quick side glance at Roswaal’s notebook that was in her hand—well, more like a planner—Subaru could see that it was well-used, and almost half of its pages had been filled with the same type of content he had just written down not too long ago. If it were filled with similar things, it would be the notebook of nightmares.

Roswaal slapped his knees at such an answer, which even overpowered Subaru’s response. “Cringe! It’s a nice wooord. This is my first time heaaaaring it, and I loooove it! Mmmm, the feeling of not being able to understand a different sensibility… oh, it’s woooonderful.”

“Wow, I hate that I can kinda sympathize a bit. Hey, did you really say I could get along with this?"

In front of the weirdo who was grabbing his shoulders in a strange way, Subaru waved the subject with frustration to Emilia with, "Am I regarded as the same thing as this?!"

She put a finger to her lips and let out a slightly annoyed "Hmmm."

"As expected, not even you are a match for this country's top pervert, Subaru…or are you?"

"Not even close! Is it really that fine a line?! With that?!"

"One man's fault is another man's lesson," or so they say, but being put on the same level as the weirdo in front of him was a real disappointment for Subaru. From now on, he was intent on being careful about what he said and did.

"Anyways, come back, come back. Now let me thank you. Thanks for causing me so much trouble, and thanks for letting me use your bed. Sincerely, Subaru."

"Oh, it's sooo messed up already…"

Subaru was too prideful to show real gratitude, but Roswaal didn't seem to care about that and simply whistled in response. Emilia, who was sandwiched in between the two of them, held her head in her hands. By the way, the twins chose to quietly refrain from getting involved, as if they had no intention of intruding in the first place, and Puck was still hiding in Emilia's hair without making a sound.

"A-n-y-w-a-y-s…"

Roswaal sullenly looked at Subaru from top to bottom after he had returned in an extremely awkward way. He frowned at him, who was uncomfortable. "You looooook like a normal person. And that's a bit disappointiiiiing."

"Hey, hold up, you think I'm just a normal guy? Normal is neither good nor bad… That evaluation is insulting to me! Take back what you said!"

"Why get angry about something like that, I suppose…" Beatrice commented.

He had responded to the question with defiance.

It was a line that could not be crossed for Subaru. Due to his courageous attitude, Roswaal waved his hand. "Aaaaahhh, sorry, sorry," he began. "I meaaaaaaan 'normal' in the 'racial' sense. You seeeee, I'm a perveeerted nobleman with 'Demi-human Tastes'."

"You must be pretty devilish to be able to say that about yourself, huh? Oh, man, I'm starting to like you a little bit, but I hate myself for that!"

Roswaal looked amusedly at Subaru, who had his head in his hands, and then hugged the shoulders of the twin maids standing on either side of him. "The same is true of these children, and is also the reason why we support Lady Emilia. Weeeelll, I feel like we are birds of a feaaather, which makes you suspicious, doooesn't it?"

Roswaal stroked the chins of the twins he had been embracing with his fingers, and at the same time created a strangely immoral-ish atmosphere. The twins did what they were told, and their faces turned bright red, as if they had already been bitten by his poisonous fangs. Subaru couldn't help but look at Emilia with a bad feeling in his gut.

Perhaps sensing the intent of Subaru's gaze, she hurriedly waved her hands. "Don't get me wrong. I'm not the type of person who is attracted to perverts."

"Normal is A-OK. When I graduate from high school, I will go to college, and once I graduate I will find a job and work to take care of my family like everyone else does."

Subaru reversed his previous opinion and thought about the typical normal life. However, he was reminded of the fact that fathers who lived a normal life in the world all had a hard time.

Then Subaru suddenly picked up on a disturbing part of Roswaal's statement. "I mean, what do you mean by supporting Emilia-tan?

That's why I don't understand the relationship between the two in the first place."

"Oooh, you don't know what's going on? Hmmmm, that's straaaaange." Roswaal released the twins and walked up to Subaru with his hands behind his back. He once again looked down at him from up close, but this time he didn't back down and just stared at him.

Their gazes clashed and sparks began to fly—it was uncomfortable to be peered at purely as if to explore his intentions. However, looking away was also irritating because it was akin to admitting defeat. In response to the gaze that seemed to be looking through him, Subaru, too, was prepared to fight back resolutely.

They stared intently at each other, and the distance between them gradually shrunk. Don't lose, don't you dare lose. With that kind of feeling, he put his eye strength into it, glare, glare—

Mwah

"Hoagyahhhhhh!" Subaru couldn't help but release a reflexive uppercut at the tall man who had accidentally kissed his forehead.

The tall man was blown away by his unrelenting blow, and the twin maids hurriedly attempted to catch him as he fell. Subaru, not seeing the result, rubbed his forehead as hard as he could. "Wh-What the hell, this…what is this really aboooooout?!"

"Aaaaaahh, it huuuurts, it huuuurts. —Weeeelll, I can't help but notice that you're looking at me with the innooooocent eyes of a treeeeembling maiden, and it makes me a bit arooooooused."

"I can't help but clench my butt! Stop looking at me with that eye! Seriously!"

His forehead felt as if it had been burned, and then he made a fist with the hand that had rubbed it and stood in front of Roswaal, but he was intercepted by the twins, who looked at him with animosity in their eyes.

As one would expect, they would never laugh at their employer if he were beaten up. Seeing their clear animosity, Subaru reflexively took a step back, but then Roswaal intercepted them with a "Stooooooooop, stop, Ram and Rem. It was my baaaaaaad joke. He's not at fault, I guess it's my fault for being toooooo girly."

"If you're treating me like a maiden because of the way I look at you, your eyesight is failing, nobleman. I was pretty as a flower until kindergarten, but from that point on the hair on the back of my head was cut off."

Subaru didn't want to be mistaken for a girl, and the answer his parents gave him was simply to have a shaved head. Nowadays he would only feel comfortable as long as the back of his head felt jarring to the touch, but back then it made him cry a lot.

—Subaru's parents had a strong influence on the development of his personality. His mother influenced him by never listening to others, and his father influenced him by being a complete go-getter.

Although disgruntled by the treatment of their lord, the twins took a step back. And then, while rubbing the jaw that had been struck, Roswaal stood up. "I apoloooogize for that just now, I was the one at fault. On top of that, to show my apology in a real way, how aboooout we have breakfast together? My treaaaat?

"Let me warn you, I'm not gonna work for it. If it's free, I'll make sure to eat to my heart's content."

"That's a gooooood thing. Eaaaaating well is connected to liiiiving well. Hmmm, that was a pretty good ooooone. I'll have to put it in my notebook." The twins gave the notebook and a pen to Roswaal, who was holding out his hand, once more.

Seeing how he had begun to write smoothly and expertly, it appeared that the contents of the notebook did not contain the weird writings of the 'Diary of Love with Emilia-tan'.

"If you were to write about your daily liiiife, wouldn't it be something like a collection of poems? I feel like I'll agoniiiiiize over it if I read it aaaall again in the future, buuuuut if I'm stiiiiill going on at that aaaaage, then there will be no hope of recovering from iiiiiiit."

The inhabitants of a flower garden would not think it sad that they were in a flower garden. Subaru convinced himself of this, and then gave an answer to the breakfast invitation he had previously received.

"Anyway, I accept the invitation to breakfast. I haven't eaten anything since before noon yesterday, let alone breakfast."

"That's splendid. Weeeeellll then, I'll have them show you aroooound. Ram, Rem, take care of it."

""You can count on us, Master Roswaal."" The twins responded in perfect sync whilst moving to both sides of Subaru. Then they each took charge of one arm, keeping him tightly restrained.

"Hey hey, what's with the atmosphere of being escorted away? Even if you don't do that, I won't run away, and neither will the dining table… Hey, hey, that hurts a little."

"So, let me show you around, sir."

"Well, let me show you around, sir."

"Hey, listen, that's as far as my elbows can go… So you guys still haven't forgiven me for that uppercut earlier at all?! But no matter how much I think about that thing from before, that guy was the one in the wron-ow-ow-ow-ow-ow. My elbows! My elbooows! You two, they don't go that way, hey!" Causing a racket with all of his "ow's," Subaru was dragged to the dining table with his arms held in a joint lock.

Emilia watched them go with pitying eyes, and when the three of them were out of her sight, Roswaal asked, "Weeelll, hoooow was it reaaaally, Lady Emilia?"

The question was spoken in his usual way of speaking, but gave off a different feeling. Emilia accepted the change without a hint of surprise. "It's the same as yours. Puck has the same opinion. Right?"

At her request for consent, the cat nodded, with only his face peeking out from behind her silver hair. Roswaal's eyes narrowed as if satisfied with the answer, and Emilia gently held her own chest in slight guilt.

With his face sticking out from under her silver hair, the cat nodded, seeing that she was looking for his agreement. Satisfied with that answer, Roswaal narrowed his eyes, and Emilia pressed her hands to her chest, feeling slightly guilty. "I'm reaaaally not sure if I should be suspicious of my benefactor. —I know it concerns me, but it's just awful."

She spilled that out as if ridiculing herself.

Chapter 7:
The Harmonious Get-Together at Roswaal Manor

"You know, watching that from above, I felt…that you are completely out of your mind, I suppose."

In the dining room where the twins had led them to, where breakfast was being held, the curly-haired girl who had sat down earlier said that in place of a greeting.

Subaru frowned grandly at her while turning his still-aching elbows. "What are you talking about on such a fine morning, loli?"

"What is that word, I wonder? I've never heard of it, yet it gives me such an uncomfortable feeling, I suppose."

"I mean, you're way too young for my tastes. I never go after girls who are younger than me."

"…To be so rude to Betty is also rather pitiful." With a pitying expression on her face, the little girl sighed as she rested her weight on the chair. As it was, she picked up the glass on the table and quickly let the amber liquid pass down her throat.

The shape of the glass was similar to a wine glass, and Subaru couldn't help but wonder if it contained alcohol inside. The girl smiled meaningfully under his suspicious gaze and pointed the glass toward him. "What, do you want to drink it, I wonder?"

"Yep, but that would be an indirect kiss. The event would be progressing way too quickly."

"I was trying to tease you out of spite, but what is this naive feeling, I wonder! It's more embarrassing for me!" The little girl got angry at Subaru, who tapped his fingers together in embarrassment.

At this point in time, there were only two people in the dining room, and they were free to do whatever they wanted. There was a large table covered with a white tablecloth placed in the center of the large dining room, and there were about 10 chairs arranged around it, starting from the seat of honor in the front with the rest of the chairs along the sides.

There were several seats that were already equipped with dishware, so Subaru could sit at any one of those seats. Simply put, one of the lower seats would be the one he'd go for.

"I'm gonna take one of the best seats."

"That is a great choice. But it's obvious that it is the wrong one, in fact."

"Heh-heh-he, this is where Emilia-tan usually sits, right? Right now, the thought of our butts touching indirectly is making me giddy with excitement…"

"Are you a high-level pervert, I wonder?! It's not just creepy, it's disgusting, in fact!"

Subaru had a lot that he wanted to say, but the little girl, whose attitude was essentially like a straight man, was really worth teasing. He couldn't help but want to see how she'd react to him suddenly acting in a perverted way. "So, I'm not actually doing THIS on purpose, gee-hee-hee."

"That last chuckle wasn't very convincing… I can't take anything you say seriously, in fact!" As the little girl pressed her forehead and shook her head, Subaru moved his butt around on the chair, heating it up in the process.

"I guess it's alright since nothing bad happened in the end, but it was damn tough!" Thinking back about their first meeting where he'd ended up fainting, Subaru rotated his hands and feet in order to let his dissatisfaction be known. "Oh man, I suddenly realized that the number of times I've lost consciousness has reached a scary level in these past two days. Rather, I haven't had many opportunities to get up, have I? …But that…isn't much different from the time when I was a shut-in, huh."

On the other hand, it would've been great if I could've lazed around more!

Whilst gazing at Subaru and craning her neck, the little girl had the expression of one who was holding back a yawn. “Your gate had been wide open and spilling out mana, and it would have been a waste to let it all escape, so I absorbed it, in fact. It would be best for you to be thankful.”

“It was YOUR fault that it was leaking out like that! Shouldn’t you be thankful that there was a hole in it instead? Don’t make me laugh! You’re just ridiculous! And aren’t you acting a little too sassy?!”

Ignoring the incessant complaints of Subaru, the little girl once more tilted her glass. Drinking without hesitation would make her lose the willpower to respond to him.

It was only natural for the little girl to drink at the sad and wretched state of the world.

“The young girl then became acquainted with nighttime amusements, spent way too much money, and then, at the end of it all, got knocked up as a teenager… As your Big Bro, I can’t help but weep!”

“Don’t just go and make Betty the heroine of a great tragedy like that!”

“In my mind, you’re just the shitty protagonist of a shitty cell phone novel!”

There had been a time where he had killed time by checking those things out, but finding a good one was a matter of luck, a hit or a miss. He had been learning the Gyaru alphabet at around the same time as well.

She probably didn’t even understand the meaning of what Subaru had just said, and, with a scowl on her face, the little girl lightly tapped her fingers on the table. “Well, so be it. Are you going to give Betty words of thanks, I wonder?”

“Thanks? Giving words of thanks to the drill loli that berated me?

That’s not any kind of reward in my industry!”

“Why are you getting mad, I wonder! The one who should be angry is Betty! The one who saved you when you were on the brink of death was…”

But as the little girl’s voice trailed off, Subaru let out a “Huuuh?” However, before she could complete her answer, the door to the dining room opened.

“Please pardon me, sir. Allow me to set the meal.”

“If you would excuse me, sir. I will set the table and serve the tea.”

Pushing trollies into the room were the twin maids. The blue-haired maid was pushing a trolley with food from an orthodox breakfast menu on it, such as salad and pastries. The pink-haired maid, on the other hand, was pushing a trolley with tableware and forks on it.

The two of them moved to either side of the table and began quickly and expertly setting it. In perfect sync, the table was decorated, the warm scents causing Subaru’s stomach to growl unintentionally.

“Woah, not too shabby. It really is a breakfast fit for the nobility… I was worried it was gonna be some bizarre different world stuff.”

He had considered the possibility that the makeup of a dining table in a different world could be totally different. If he had made any mistakes, he might have found himself eating bugs every day by now.

And if that were truly the case, Subaru would have had no choice but to sever his ties to the world, thus liberating himself from an earthly life and obtaining nirvana.

“For real, bugs would be way too much. Why do those things even exist? Godddd, just look at them and the way they live their lives. Isn’t their purpose in life simply to be killed and teach us the importance of life in our early years?”

“If you oppress the weak, when you yourself have become weak, you shall be oppressed by the strong. You should learn the significance of those words, in fact. Silence, I suppose, you weakling.” As if putting on an act in order to hold him back, the little girl gave a deliberate reply whilst elegantly tilting her glass.

His irritation was reaching a breaking point, his hunger was increasing, and he was pissed off because of that sense of elegance she’d just displayed. “H-u-r-r-y-u-p-a-l-r-e-a-d-y! I’ve can’t take it anymore!”

“You are quite lacking in refinedness. Can you not wait in a more refined and elegant manner, I suppose?”

“I don’t wanna be talked down to by a drunk little girl! C’mon, let’s eat! Let’s eat!”

Subaru rudely and furiously grabbed his knife and fork and placed them together, causing the little girl to take action. With her hand still on the glass, the space around it began to warp, and, with a finger, she attempted to direct a paranormal-like energy at him. However, before that sinister technique could reach him… “Ooooohhhh myyy. You seem to be doing weeeell. That is good, quiiiite good.”

What had just appeared was the smiling face of a perverted man. He seemed to have completely changed from the outdoor clothing he’d worn before to more formal clothing. The collars of his outfit were excessively large and colorful, the model change seemingly reflective of his poor tastes. He indeed had the appearance of a clown, his eccentric behaviors the same as usual.

—Oh yes, he is a total pervert.

While jovially watching Subaru chop up some beets with his silverware, Roswaal suddenly noticed the little girl quietly tilting her glass, causing him to raise his eyebrows. “Ohhh myyyyy, it is rare to see Beatrice here. Is it not woooonderful that you decided to have a meal with me after such a looong time?”

“That’s enough. There’s a guy right there who’s happy-go-lucky, in fact. Betty is only here to share a meal with Bubby, I suppose.”

Brushing off Roswaal's buddy-buddy statements, the little girl—Beatrice—shifted her line of sight to his rear. Entering the room behind him was the figure of Emilia, and the one nestled within her silver hair was, "Bubby!"

The little girl seemingly sprung up from her seat and zipped over to him, her long skirt fluttering in the wind. Her face was adorned with a smile, like a blooming flower, so charming that it made him forget about how he'd just evaluated her as being "cheeky."

The little girl had suddenly behaved in such a way, her little run having been a reaction to the grey cat nestled within the silver hair. His face came out, and with a relaxed expression, said, "Hiya, Betty. It's been like two days. Have you been well and acting like a lady should?"

"I have been waiting eagerly for your return, Bubby. Would you like to spend the day together, I wonder?"

"Yeah, sounds great! How about we just relax for the day, then?"

"Oh, how wonderful!"

Puck leapt out of her silver hair, landing in Beatrice's outstretched hands. Now in her grasp, she twirled around and around on the spot.

As Subaru was struck senseless by the happy and carefree scene occurring right in front of him, Emilia walked over to him with a wry smile on her face. "You must've been surprised, right? Beatrice and Puck are suuuper close."

"It's a surprise, or maybe I should ask what the hell is up with that loli's attitude. Isn't she quite cunning by putting on airs in front of a cat?"

"I'm sorry, but I have noooo idea what you're saying."

Cutting Subaru's words off, Emilia let out an "Mm?" with a look of wonderment on her face as she pointed at where he was sitting. "That seat is…"

“Oh, yeah! Uh, you know how a freezing cold chair can make you feel down in the dumps, right? I’m running a campaign to become your blanket to cure and enter your heart and bridge the gap between us. That’s why I thought I’d keep your seat warm for you! It’s not like I was trying to go for an indirect sit-down or anything!”

“Sorry, but I have nooo idea what you’re saying…but, you know that’s Roswaal’s seat, right?”

After his excuses were all dismissed with ease, Subaru fell into despair, his knees buckling. Realizing his blunder as he crashed down, he clenched his teeth.

If he thought about it, it would only be natural for the owner of the mansion to sit in the best seat, the seat of honor.

And the Greenhorn of the Year award goes to…

“But I’m a man who turns adversity into opportunity. Under these circumstances… Yes, under these circumstances, I’ll bet on another chance tomorrow!”

“And there’s no need for you to sit in my seat, okay? Because it’s a biiiit unpleasant for me.”

“God is dead—!”

Subaru then finally fell to the ground, crying a river.

No longer having hope in this world, no longer seeing a future for himself, he was wrapped in an aura of helplessness. But then, he felt the tender touch of someone’s hand on his shoulder. That hand, giving him warmth, put him into a state of bliss, as tranquil as could be, and, as he raised his face upwards, saw that the shining beacon of hope was actually—

“I will prooooperly savor your warmth as best I caaaaan.”

After Subaru heard what the tall man had uttered, he immediately spat on his seat without a shred of hesitation. “You can enjoy the warmth from where my ass was after it’s been dirtied like THIS!”

“Ohh myyyyyy, such a quick action was rather unexpected. How splendid. But, no matter.”

Roswaal chuckled, as if he were feeling intense pleasure, and speedily raised his finger, pointing at the seat. Checking that the spit was there, he then thrust his finger out, creating a sound.

—Immediately afterward, the spit vanished right in front of Subaru’s eyes.

“What the?!”

Without thinking, Subaru stretched his hand out towards the seat, unable to believe that the spit had just vanished. Not a single trace of liquid could be felt upon touching it, and the only thing that remained was a slightly warmed seat.

“Did it, evaporate?”

He guessed that there was a relationship between the heat of the seat and the disappearance of the spit.

Roswaal whistled in admiration at Subaru’s conclusion. “Ohhh myyyyyy, you’ve hit the bulls eye. I messed with the scale of flame, using an extreeeeeeemly small amount of mana so that only that part of the seat would be heated up for buuut a moment.”

“WHAT? The way you said that made it sound as if this feat-like thing were easy… Could it be that you aren’t actually a perverted idiot?”

“Actually, he’s the Kingdom of Lugunica’s Head Court Magician.” Answering in the proximity of Subaru was Emilia, who’d given him a bit of a surprise with her words. Unable to process what she’d just said, he looked at Roswaal, muttering the words ‘Head Court Magician’ to himself.

“N—o—w—a—y, I totally believe you! Yep! I totally believe you now! I believe you!”

"I'm not that convinced, but I'm not going to keep talking about it." Emilia quickly gave up trying to convince him. In the short time she'd known him, she'd learned to ignore him so as to calm his seemingly boundless energy.

Subaru, awakening a new kink by being ignored like that, saw that Emilia was now sitting in a different seat, rather than the seat of honor. This is probably where she usually sits, huh.

Seeing that no one else would be joining them in the dining room, other than the seat of honor, Emilia's seat, and Beatrice's seat, Subaru thought about where he was sitting in relation to the rest. He was quite a way away from the seat of honor, and a bit separated from Emilia's, making it feel incomplete.

If one were to try to use all the space at such a large table, it would probably end up being arranged in an unbalanced way.

"Anyway, this isn't fun like…" Muttering that, Subaru grabbed the food that'd been placed at his assigned seat, then began moving everything, clinking noises from china hitting china. The place he was moving to was naturally—

"Hey?"

"Don't mind me, don't mind me, believe in Terry."

"Who's that?" Emilia asked.

After Subaru moved himself next to her, Emilia looked at him in bewilderment. Even after listening to her response, he'd moved his salad and pastries over there. Having successfully wiggled his way next to her, he said, "Aw, come onnn. Instead of eating separately, why don't we eat next to each other and be friendly? Hey, if you don't like vegetables, you can just put them all on my plate. pat pat How about it?"

"Then, you can have my green beppers… No-No-No, that'd be…bad manners."

"Isn't not eating yummy food like getting your priorities backwards? Besides, eating next to a girl totally makes the food taste better, and I'm never gonna compromise on that. How about you, Rosy?"

Perhaps Emilia doesn't like green vegetables?

When Emilia drew near to his plate, he said that with a smile, then waved the topic over to Roswaal, who'd been observing him with great interest.

At that manner of address, he pointed at himself. "Are you perhaps refeeeering to me by any chance?"

"Who else would it be? Rosy. It's really the perfect name for you."

Affirming it with a nod of his head, Roswaal laughed cheerily, then turned his face towards Emilia, who had an astonished look on her face. "Don't beeeee upset, Lady Emilia. Decorum maaaay be important, but you won't be able to enjoy your meaaal if you are too fixated on that even when you are with those you know well. Ohhh, his words are correct."

Since it was the decision of the lord of the manor, that was that.

Emilia sighed, her feelings on display, then Ram and Rem, who'd been in waiting, began serving the dishes one after the other. Steaming dishes were lined up on the table, and, soon after, the breakfast space was ready to go.

"Well then, let us eat. —To the trees, the wind, the stars, and to the earth." Palms together, Roswaal closed his eyes and muttered that. Emilia and the twins quickly followed suit. Beatrice also returned to her seat and then closed her eyes. Realizing that it was a pre-meal prayer, Subaru hurriedly imitated them.

To be honest, he was pretty surprised that Christian-like prayer was common even across worlds.

Based on how they were so adamantly praying, it was shockingly clear that Roswaal and Emilia were deeply religious. And the twins seemed to have grown accustomed to it, paying close attention to their behavior. Beatrice, on the other hand, was simply roughly going through the motions.

“Weeeell then, Subaru. She may not look it, but Rem’s cooking is really quiiiiite something, is it noooot?”

At Roswaal’s encouragement, and with the prayer ending without him noticing, Subaru joined in on the meal with great haste. The menu seemed to consist of salad, as well as ingredients for bread, such as something like ham, which was comparable to toast. Though it was a little unclear, it seemed to have the appearance of a Western-style breakfast.

Subaru was relieved for now, seeing that nothing near him appeared to be unusual. He was grateful that none of the ingredients looked exotic or went beyond human knowledge, and, putting something that was like toast in his mouth, said, “Mm, this is way better than usual.”

After raising his face and giving that impression, the blue-haired maid standing next to the table made a fox with her fingers. He wasn’t sure what it meant, but it could be a V-sign-like thing in this world. Subaru replied by making two frog signs with his hands. “Was this food made by the blue-haired…um, or can I call you Rem? Did you make this?”

“Yes, it is just as you said, sir. Rem is the one who handles the cooking in this household. Sister is not really good at it.”

“Oh-ho, so it’s like you twins are good at different skills? So, the pink-haired one is good at cleaning but not cooking?”

“Yes, that is correct. Sister is especially good at cleaning, doing laundry, and other domestic chores.”

“Then, since you are good at cooking, does that mean you are bad at cleaning and doing laundry, Remrin?”

“No, Rem excels at all of the domestic chores, including cleaning and doing laundry. Even better than Sister.”

“Why’s the pink-haired one even here, then?!”

So, one of them exceled at all domestic chores, while the other was only good at cleaning—totally different twins was a novel thing.

Ram, who was next to Rem, did not seem to care much about what had been said. And it seemed to be true since she'd never even spoken up about it. So, that being the case, why was she not bothered by it at all?

"So perhaps they're in different fields, then? Ramchi is great at combat… No, is she responsible for 'nighttime services'?! Oh shit, I'm itchin' for a bunch of things tonight!"

"Sister, Sister. The guest seems to have doubts about you!"

"Rem, Rem. The guest seems to be undressing me in his mind!"

The twins clasped their hands together, acting as if something terrible were occurring, in response to the lewd thoughts of the indomitable Subaru. Viewing that exchange, Roswaal chuckled softly. "Veeeery goooood, you. Though because of their strong idiosyncrasies, Ram and Rem appear distant when meeting a guest for the first time, do they nooot?"

"You don't care about the flaws of your servants, because even the master is so full of flaws, huh? But, because it's fantasy, I'll tolerate anything. Now, I…"

"There is no doubt that he is competent. At least, that's what many people have said." Cutting into their conversation was Emilia. After bringing a little bit of soup to her mouth, she continued, a hint of displeasure in her voice. "Actually, those two are amazing, you know. They handle nearly all the maintenance around this huge mansion. For a race like theirs, it's sort of trivial."

"I'm not sure how I feel about that. Isn't that difficult?"

Having said that to Emilia, whose pupils lit up with righteous indignation-like emotions, Subaru gathered up his words and raised a question. "Just now, did Emilia-tan say that there were only two servants working in this mansion?"

"Ohhh yeess, thaaat is certainly the case as of this moment. Ram and Rem are the only ones left."

"Are you an idiot? How can two people handle such a huge mansion like this? No matter how great those two are, even they might die of overwork. —Or do you have something like a “I can’t hire more servants” kind of restriction holding you back?”

Hearing Subaru’s question, Roswaal remained silent for a time, crossing his hands on the table. On his face was a smile, yet there were clear emotions in his eyes as he looked in his direction, altering the atmosphere.

Subaru heard the rising sound of a flag, perceiving that something had gone wrong, then brought out his dessert, the ringa he’d been yearning for, and began munching on it.

He shuffled the delicious fruit into his mouth, satisfied by the tenderness that excited his tastebuds.

Chapter 8: The Situation of the Country and That Girl's Circumstances

1

"You truuuuly are mysterious. Having come to the residence of Roswaal L. Mathers in the Kingdom of Lugunica, yet not knowing the circumstances? And somehow making it through the kingdom's exaaamination process upon entering the country?"

"Aaaah weeeeell, I guess I'm something like an illegal immigrant in a sense, huh."

By the time he'd realized it, he had entered this country, but was there anything wrong with that? That was pretty much how he felt.

Subaru's casual response surprised Emilia, and then she glared at him with righteous indignation, as if scolding a young child. "You're unbelievable. Have you ever thought about what would happen if we reported this to the authorities after saying such a thing so easily? You could be carted off to jail without warning and turned into mincemeat there."

"Nobody uses mincemeat these days."

"This is no laughing matter. Hey, Subaru. Are you really ok? Is everyone where you come from like this? Or do you just stand out?"

Subaru, feeling sorry because Emilia was feeling truly worried about him, scratched his head and reflected on his own behavior. "Err, it's just that I have a bit of a bad memory. So, if you wouldn't mind, I would be most grateful if you could fill me in on this matter."

"It seems like you come from a good family based on how you're using words like that, but…"

Subaru's social life would have been completely screwed if he used proper language in a very halfhearted manner, such as this instance, when going out and interacting with others. And Emilia seemed like someone who was easy to fool, which made him worry about her. “Could it be…? Could it be that you don’t have an in-depth knowledge of these things as well, Emilia-tan? Right now, your sentences were a mess with humble language and respectful language jumbled up together.”

“Err… I can’t really deny it,” Emilia replied, shrinking into herself after hearing Subaru’s observation. Seeing her like that was rather surprising for him, since he thought she looked like she was knowledgeable on everything, but it was not the withering girl who followed up from that, but the silent Roswaal, who’d been sitting in the seat of honor.

“I doooo understand what you have pointed out, howeeeeever, Lady Emilia is currently studying such things.”

“Studying, huh,” said Subaru. “Wait a sec, is it connected to what we were talking about earlier?”

“Ahaaaa. How excellent. Quite thoughtful, aren’t you. And iiiit is because of that thoughtfulness that you can spill out such thoooooughtless-sounding statements.”

“It’s just common sense to think while you live. Even if your limbs feel heavy, and snot drips from your nose, and the contents of your stomach spill out, a person has a responsibility to think, right?”

“Such a distuuuurbing example. It’s almost as if you have experienced these things youuurself…”

Those words were, of course, based on things he had actually experienced himself.

Perhaps due to Subaru’s words leaving a deep impression on him, Roswaal held out his hand, which the maids placed his notebook and pen in.

After quickly putting down the things that had just occurred, Roswaal once more turned to face Subaru. “Veeery goooood. Iiit’s great how you're just brimming with ideas."

"How many times do you write in that notebook in a single day? How many volumes have you written in your life?"

"As far as that question is conceeeerned, it is a sacrament of the House of Mathers. Too baaad, but I'm not telling."

Subaru wearily averted his eyes at the sight of the refined older man who suddenly acted with a bit of an attitude.

Subaru was increasingly perplexed about what to do about someone who had a stronger character than himself. Coming in at just the right time was Emilia, who cleared her throat in an attempt to steer the conversation back onto the original topic.

"Now then, let's get back on track. Subaru, do you know what's currently going on in this country—in the Kingdom of Lugunica?"

"I totally have no idea what's going on here. Not even a little."

"It's refreshing to hear you saying that without any hesitation to that extent. The way you've been acting until now has done nothing but surprise me, Subaru. Stuff like that was reaaally making me worried about you." Getting over her astonishment, Emilia began to look at him as if he were a child.

He wasn't trying to execute a plan to arouse her mother-hen-like instincts or anything, but in consequence, it seemed like the growing distance between their hearts was like one between a Mother and Child.

Trying to somehow reconcile their widening difference in age, Subaru pestered her with a "So what! So what!".

"You're such a baby. Umm, martial law is currently being enacted in Lugunica. And it is especially strict when it comes to going in and out of the country."

"Martial law… That doesn't sound very good."

"—Aaahaaa, it doesn't sound very goooood, indeed. —In any case, the Kingdom of Lugunica currently lacks a king." Roswaal ended up answering for her. Scrutinizing what he had just said, Subaru gulped silently, having figured out the significance of those words.

He glanced at the expressions of Emilia and the twins, and then Beatrice and Puck. They didn't appear to be shaken up about it at all, which meant this fact was common knowledge here. On top of that, he felt cautious at the fact that he, someone equivalent to an outsider, was informed of such a thing, but…

"No need to worry! This grave truth is already well-known by the public, you see."

"Oh, that's good. Well, I figured you guys would go, 'We won't let you make it out alive', because I just learned a secret that would threaten your positions or something."

"That's just sad if it were to happen, since we were the ones who revealed it… Anyways, the whole nation is preeetty unstable right now," Emilia interjected.

"This is where the martial law thing comes iiiin. In such a situation where there is no ruler, it wouldn't be desirable to carry sources of conflict into other countries, nor would it be good to do the opposite."

I see, thought Subaru as he grasped what had just been said.

A kingdom without a king would be a lethal blow to its operations. Whether they died from an illness or otherwise, the country was shaken to its core by the sudden Death of a king.

"Mmmm, wait a second. Isn't it usually the case that everything gets solved when the children of the king take over? Or like, they'll have a regent with them if they're too young?"

"Oh-ho, it seems that you can keep up with this conversation. Anyhow, that iiis usually the case. Howeeever, something happened half a year ago. It has been said that at the same time His Majesty passed away, a disease ran rampant within the castle…"

As Roswaal told it, it was announced that the epidemic was one that only affected a particular bloodline. And so, the king and his descendants that had lived in the royal castle perished.

“Then it’s true that there’s no king, huh? And if that’s truly the case, then what’s gonna happen to the country, then? If there is no royal bloodline, then what are you gonna do, start a democracy and elect a prime minister?”

“I dooo not understand the second half of what you said, but currently, the country is managed by a Council of Elders who oversee its affairs. It was formed from distinguished families who have left their mark in the kingdom’s history. Iiiit won’t have much of an effect on the operation of the government itself.”

After pausing for a moment, he let out an “However—” and with a stiffened expression, said, “—A kingdom must have a king.”

“Yeah, of course.”

Even if the person at the top didn’t manage anything and was just a mere figurehead, no organization came into existence without someone heading it. Even more so for something like a country.

Even in Japan, where a lot of importance was placed on democracy, a prime minister existed at the top. That applied even if the position came with heavy responsibility and was frequently replaced by another person.

“Then, since the kingdom lacks a king, a new one needs to be selected. But the bloodline was pretty much destroyed. So a new king needs to be selected in a way that everyone finds acceptable.”

“—Really, you’re such a strange boy, Subaru. Even without knowing anything, you can come up with such things, can’t you? I feel like you’re something like a clever fool.”

“Don’t praise me like that! I’m not used to being praised, so if you praise me like that, I think I might just fall in love with you!” Subaru turned his gaze away from Emilia and said that over his shoulder so that he might hide his embarrassment.

He slapped his reddening face, so as to justify why it was like that, then turned towards Roswaal. After organizing his thoughts, he raised his finger up at him. “I see. I think I’ve got the gist of it now. In other words, the country has no king and is in a bit of a rut trying to select a new one. Your relations with other countries are diminishing in significance and you’re basically in a state of mini isolation. So a mysterious foreigner like me showing up is—totally suspicious!!”

“Fuuuurthermore, by coming into contact with Lady Emilia, you have become associated with the House of Mathers. If they were one with a hasty disposition, that’s all they would need to…” With his eyes closed, Roswaal mimicked a guillotine by ‘cutting’ his neck with his hand, as if it were a blade. Giving that gesture a sidelong glance, Subaru broke into a cold sweat due to having an ominous feeling.

“H-Hey! I think I can imagine what’s going on from the pervert’s words just now! Looking at the House of Mathers, I feel like it has such a fine lineage. Perhaps you’re connected to the Council of Elders, or maybe even a possibility of something more than that—?!” Based on the current flow of the conversation, that was the best guess Subaru could make.

The way he was telling the story, as if he was relishing each big reveal he made, the way he crafted the flow of the story just now… It hardly seemed like what someone looking upon the situation from the outside would say.

Therefore, it would only be natural for him to think that the lord of such a large manor, who most certainly came from a fine lineage, would be associated with such things. With such thoughts in mind… “As an apology for my i-insolence, I would like to ask for your forgiveness by offering my whittle finger… at least my whittle finger to you.”

“For you who has such a frightening imagination, there is good news. You can be at eaaase, alright? I am nooot associated with the Council of Elders, nor am I in a position to be involved with the kingdom’s throne at present, you seeee. —Riiight, Lady Emilia?”

With Subaru’s finger presented on the table, Roswaal chuckled as if he'd just heard a great joke. He then looked at Emilia for her approval, who responded with silence while she frowned.

Subaru was about to explode at Roswaal due to his suggestive behavior in that moment, but suddenly felt that something was off and put a stop to such thoughts.

He had been really curious about something since awhile back.

“Why is…the lord of this manor calling Emilia-tan lady?”

The person who held the highest position in the household was always paid the greatest amount of respect.

Subaru turned his gaze to Roswaal to make sure of it, and his budding anxiety quickly began to bloom into a flower of complete dread. And—

“Is it not naturaaaal to address someone of higher rank than I with reeespect?” With his hands folded on top of the table, Roswaal uttered that with a gleeful smile.

Dumbfounded, Subaru froze with his mouth agape. He looked at Emilia so robotically that one could hear the sound of gears turning. The girl then sighed with resignation. “I don't want you to think that I was trying to trick you or anything, alright?”

“—Err, that is to say, Emilia-tan, you're…?”

Subaru had yet to be discouraged from using the ‘tan’ nickname he'd given her.

As if striking the finishing blow on him, who wanted to deny such a reality, she continued, “Currently, my title is Royal Candidate, one of those seeking to become the 42nd ruler of the Kingdom of Lugunica. With the backing of Margrave Roswaal, that is.”

Her words alarmed Subaru so much that he felt like the hurdle had risen to the height of a space elevator.

—The person I grew attracted to ended up being a queen.

A sentence like that crossed his mind. Well, she was technically a queen candidate.

“A phrase like ‘queen candidate’ has such an erotic feeling to it.”

“I reaaaally don’t know what that’s all about, but I’m talking seriously.”

“Waaaah, such a cold gaze is making me tingle… As one would expect from a queen. Don’t look at me as if I’m a lowly pig!”

“I’m not looking at you in such a horrible way, okay? I wish you wouldn’t say things like that, Subaru!”

Subaru threw himself down onto the table, trembling a bit, the rebuke of the very close-by beauty causing him to writhe in agony. So that he could hide his facial expression, he laid face-down on the table, but his heart was actually pounding hard, expressing his true feelings.

In any case, he didn’t want Emilia to see the pathetic look he had on his face now.

The Queen Candidate… If he were to be frank, other than the stuff he was familiar with in games and manga, he had no idea how a despotic world where kings ruled at the top worked.

Nevertheless, when it came to the potential ruler of a nation, he knew that such a person was one that was far-removed from the masses.

Not to mention that Subaru didn’t even have a family register in this world. To put it in a nutshell, he was in a position to be discredited from even being placed into the same category as the masses.

Not to mention his audacious feelings of love being quickly shot down, but knowing Emilia’s status on top of her being beautiful really knocked him down a notch.

He had no doubt that it was like climbing to the top of a space elevator with his bare hands.

“Oh Jesus, say it ain’t so! My path of love is surprisingly full of roadblocks, if I do say so myself. Romeo, who loves Juliet, surely feels for me!”

“Hold on, are you okay, Subaru? You became silent all the sudden, so…”

When he raised his teary-eyed face, Emilia was reflected in his blurred field of vision. It seemed like she was looking down at him with concern with her amethyst eyes.

Her skin was as white as untainted snow, and the sound she emitted from her thin pink lips was as lovely as a silver bell.

It felt like she was an existence that seemed oh so distant, someone he couldn’t reach no matter how far he went.

“…Here goes.”

Unable to take it anymore, Subaru tightly embraced the girl, who was right beside him.

“…E?”

“Wooooow, so petite. And sooo soffft, too. Oh, this smell is just amazing.”

For a moment, it didn’t register in Emilia’s mind that she had been embraced.

Subaru then relished in the sensation of holding her closely and embracing her to his heart’s content.

Subaru didn’t have a lot of experience when it came to interpersonal relationships, and absolutely zero experience with hugging a girl. He thought it was too bad that he hadn’t had enough time to enjoy it when he was protecting Felt at the Stolen Goods Warehouse, not to mention she was too skinny for it to count.

Whatever the case may be, Emilia, who belatedly became aware of what was going on, turned beet red and started struggling. “Wai… What?! What’s wrong?!”

“Er, it’s just that the fact you appeared in front of me suddenly brought out my bestial instincts, making it hard to resist. When I calmed down and thought about it, I realized I’d never be able to accomplish my goal from the get-go, so I thought, ‘I’ll never be able to reach it, so why bother!’.”

“I reaalllly have noooo ideaaaa what you’re talking about!”

“Weeell, hold on a sec. Allow me to calm down and analyze myself. —I mean, I thought about whether or not to reach out to you when you looked at me before, so I had an idea of making sure that I could reach you or not, and then out of my spinal reflex, my boy characteristics were activated, which then caused my libido to start going into overdrive, thus leading to me embracing you, and then after that, I concluded that I wasn’t gonna die or anything, so I thought I’d just keep enjoying this as much as I could, oh, and it was a pretty happy thing for me and fit the bill, but an unhappy surprise for Emilia-tan, I guess… and that’s it.”

“Even when you explain it in detail, I still have nooo idea what you mean!”

Subaru rambled on and on and on to drag it out, then Emilia, who was struggling in his arms, finally thrusted him away.

Subaru felt so lonely now that she had broken away from his embrace. Emilia, on the other hand, was getting red in the face and then pointed at him with tearful eyes. “Don’t just go and hug a girl sooo suddenly! It wasn’t really a big deal because I was the one you were hugging, but a normal girl would take it seriously, okay?”

“I didn’t really do it on purpose, though? Yes, I must’ve moved according to someone else’s command. Wait, could it be that you charmed me with magic, Emilia-tan…? You’re such an evil woman!”

“There nooooo way I did that. You’re laying the blame on me! And stop raising your thumb!”

His emboldening thumbs-up having been turned down, Subaru dejectedly lowered his right hand.

But it was true that his body had been stirred on because of his spinal reflex. And the words he’d said after that weren’t a lie, either, but he would be so embarrassed that he’d want to die if he said that out loud.

—The truth is, your eyes have stolen my heart.

“Ah, it’s embarrassing! If I heard you say that, I couldn’t help but say, ‘That’s so amazing! Hold me tight!’.”

“Myyyy ohhhh myyy, you really aren’t afraid of aaanything at all, are you?” Whilst Subaru was holding his cheeks with his hands, saying, “oh stoooop it,” hips swaying, Roswaal, spectating their conversation from the side, said that while looking like he was trying to hold back his laughter.

Emilia, still red in the face, very sternly glared at him because of the way he was speaking. With tears in his eyes because of laughing so much, Roswaal wiped them away and feigned ignorance. “She is a candidate to be the future queen, is she nooot? Peeeeerhaps she will long-remember this great disrespect towards her, and when the time comes that she takes up the throne, she will enact her judgment upon you, and…”

“Are you telling me to regret the happy things that’re happening right now, because no one knows what the future holds? Don’t underestimate a victim of a pressure-free education that advocates for instant gratification!”

With his middle finger up, Subaru rudely declared that. And with his free hand pointed at Emilia, said, “Even if Emilia-tan is a candidate to be the future queen, she’s just a girl at the moment. And I’m just a man. You don’t have any right to complain about whether the casual relationship between a man and a woman breaks down or not! That’s why…!”

With one foot on the chair and his fist clenched tightly, Subaru proudly made a declaration. "…Even if I were put to death tomorrow, I would still hug Emilia-tan tightly, sniff her hair, and use that as nourishment to keep on living—!"

The inside of the dining room was filled to the brim with deep silence due to Subaru's declaration, which made him sound anguished.

Everyone was at a loss for words at Subaru's fierce attitude. Gulping, they all took in the words of his extremely wild and boastful declaration. And then—

"Sorry for interrupting your breakfast. Then, let us return to our meal. Let us gather and enjoy ourselves once more, and forget about the quarrel just now…"

"You're churning out quite an exaggerated mantra to accompany a mere perverted remark." As Subaru pushed his hair back, putting on airs, trying to clear up the air in the room with his momentum, his intention of doing so was abruptly put to an end. The one who had done so was Beatrice, sitting in a distant seat, looking his way as if she were totally bored. Exhibiting bad manners, she placed Puck on the dining table and brushed his grey fur. "In the end, you were only fooled by that little girl's beauty, simple as that, in fact. How could you ramble on and on about her for so long, I suppose…?"

"You… really are my natural enemy, huh…" Subaru's shoulders slumped at Beatrice's words of exasperation, muttering that in response.

Beginning with Beatrice snorting at that, the other participants began returning to their senses one after the other.

In other words, the vilification of Subaru for his sexual harassment earlier was about to begin.

Chapter 9:
The Fruits of Dying Thrice

“So, in the end, why is it that you did those things, Subaru?” Emilia asked.

“I already told you the complete and utter truth. If there were to be another reason… Wait, could it be that the evil loli over there… messed with my mind…? You evil little girl!”

“You made a fool out of yourself, and now you’re just shifting the blame to another, I suppose! You’re the worst! The absolute worst, in fact!”

“Shut it! Can the words of a loli who drinks during the day even justify anything?! Aren’t you seeing and hearing lots of things wrong by getting drunk? In the first place, at what age is it hunky-dory to drink alcohol in this country?!” While he was having a spit-flying shoutout with Beatrice, he directed that question at Rem out of reflex, who was standing nearby.

Not shaken up one bit by the sudden change in subject, Rem gave a polite curtsy and asked, “What do you mean by ‘honky-dory’, sir?”

Seeing her skillfully tilt her head as she remained in her curtsy, Subaru scratched his head. “Oh, hmm… You guys aren’t even sure of the meaning of that, huh? Wasn’t expecting that, so I guess I’ll have to explain! It means something like ‘alright’.”

Comprehending what had been said, Rem and Ram shared a look.

“After you turn 14 years old.”

“When you turn 14 years old.”

“Are y’all serial?”

“‘Serial’?”

“Serial?”

"It means 'Are you telling the truth?', 'Are you being completely serious?', or 'it's mega amazing, isn't it?'."

""I see.""

The two of them gave a synchronized bow, as if they were impressed. In other words, when put into practical use… "Serial, is it really honky-dory to drink alcohol when you turn 14?!"

""That means, 'Seriously, is it really okay to drink alcohol when you turn 14?'.""

They managed to do a perfect translation here, their intention of coming to a mutual understanding having come true.

The three of them spontaneously looked at each other out of joy, and with their hands raised, shouted out:

"""Yeahhh!"""

They high fived each other one after the other. And then they started moving around in a circle, their hands still touching.

"…Have you finished your little performance, I wonder?"

"What do you want? You're such a killjoy, you drill loli."

"Hush with that lili, in fact! What the heck is up with you, I wonder!!" Beatrice leaned back into her chair and crossed her arms, looking quite angry. Subaru figured she was already through arguing with him, seeing as she chose to remain silent. He then saw Puck on top of the dining table consoling her, so he decided to let the little cat deal with her.

And then he once again faced the silver-haired girl, not having settled a single thing so far.

Perhaps because of her mood, she looked at Subaru with her white eyes filled with a chillier intensity than before, and—

"The fact that you're cute, even when you look at me like that, should be considered a crime..."

"…Sigh. Now I'm starting to figure out how I got involved with you, Subaru. All I need to do is pay no attention to the jokes you look like you tell everyone, and then just get to the point, right?"

"I feel offended when you think I crack jokes to everyone! I'd only say such a thing to you, Emilia-TAN! I'm being serious! Totally serious! Suuuper duuper SERIOUS!"

"Yes yes, just forget it. Let's just get to the point, then." Clapping her hands to reset the conversation, Emilia then quietly returned to her seat.

With no choice but to follow in her stead, Subaru settled back down, but while he was doing so, Roswaal said, "Though we strayed away from the subject quite a bit, nevertheless, let's just get to the point, shall we? Is that alriiiight with you, Subaru?"

"Weeell, based on how my head hasn't already flown off my shoulders, I'm going to pray for it to be nothing bad."

Roswaal whistled at Subaru's words. Emilia looked just as caught off-guard as him, since she assumed that Subaru had been acting in such a disrespectful manner in order to feel out their intentions, but they were looking way too much into it.

Of course, he had just been spitting out mere eloquent nonsense.

Subaru had put himself out there first, before they could figure it out and expose him, making sure to overwhelm them with the way he acted. He figured that if he took the initiative during the conversation, he would be able to decrease the chances of it being led in a dreadful direction.

"Alright, I suppose I'll make my guess then. So you brought up the whole talk about Emilia-tan being a candidate to be queen, right? I guess there's some type of connection here?"

"Really, are you a pervert, Subaru? Or are you not?"

"Those two choices are pretty extreme, you know?!"

With wide-open eyes, Emilia gave a light-hearted apology by saying, “Sorry, sorry.” While Subaru was genuinely offended by that, Roswaal followed up after her apology. “Neverthelееess, your guess was right on taaarget. The tale about her being a candidate to be queen from before is quiiite related to what shall become of you. —Lady Emilia?”

“Mm, I understand.”

After giving a quiet response to that call, Emilia put her hand in her pocket.

Subaru suddenly noticed that the merriness had disappeared from the atmosphere in the dining room. Though the same people were sitting around the dining table, they were now clad in a completely dignified presence.

Subaru spontaneously straightened his posture without thinking. Continuing from where she left off, Emilia brought out the object from her pocket and placed it on the table. That’s… “I-Isn’t that the insignia from…?”

It was the insignia adorned with a dragon motif that had been put through the bitter experience of being stolen, courtesy of Felt, something that Subaru had finally returned to its rightful owner after coming back from three whole deaths.

The deep, serene twinkle of the crimson jewel in its owner’s hands filled Subaru with a sense of awe, its prettiness sparking his curiosity.

“You seeee, the dragon signifies the crest of Lugunica. It wouldn’t even be too muuuch to call it the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica. It is a symbol that is often found on castle walls, weapons, and armor, but that insignia is especiaaaally important. Anyhoooow…”

Roswaal paused for a second. Subaru gave him a look that urged him to go on, which he nodded to, and then he shifted his gaze to Emilia to suggest that she continue. She closed her eyes, and then said, “It is one’s qualification as a royal selection candidate. —A test to determine if the person is worthy of sitting on the throne of the Kingdom of Lugunica.”

Her declaration of the truth, said in a strained voice, made Subaru's eyes go wide, and then his eyes once again darted towards the crimson radiance on the table. The insignia with a dragon with outstretched wings—the glittering jewel in the center of it supported the proof of her claim, and when everything that had just been said was put together… "N-No way… You lost the insignia that qualifies your entry in the royal selection?!"

"Don't put it so disgracefully! A light-fingered girl stole it!"

"That's the same thing—!!" With that loud shout, Subaru slammed his hands against the dining table as he rose to his feet.

The impact to the table threatened to make the tableware fall to the ground, but Rem's perfect follow-up managed to prevent it from happening. Paying no attention to that, he looked down at Emilia. Her face was turning crimson, her eyes brimming with humiliation.

"Even if you make a face that stimulates my sadistic heart, it won't work! Waaaait, seriously, like how the hell does this whole thing work?! If you lost it, could you just get a new one issued by a public office?!"

"Public office… I am not quiiite sure what that means, but it wouuuld be difficult to simply nonchalantly go and ask for another one, you seeee." Gazing at the flustered Subaru, Roswaal calmly adjusted the gargantuan collar of his clothing, and continued, "A king carries the kingdom on their shoulders. It would be outrageous if they could not even protect a siiingle small insignia. Why should people think they could entrust the country to such a person?"

"That's right. It's like how Lord Komon always left his work to the careless Hachibe, yet he was just as careless as him."

"Careless?"

"Hachibe?"

While the twins said the name of the mysterious person to themselves, Subaru digested everything that had happened.

The stolen insignia, their encounter in the alleyway, the fight at the Stolen Goods Warehouse, getting welcomed like this. The answers he could derive from this became united into a single one. “If the imperial guards got word that you’d lost the insignia, it’d seriously be bad. That’s why Emilia-tan was looking for it all by her lonesome, like a lonely wolf.”

“…Yes, that’s right.” Emilia replied.

“Felt was the one who stole it, but Elsa was the one who made her steal it. And she said someone had requested her to do it. So, to put it simply, someone is trying to stop Emilia-tan from becoming queen?”

“That’s probably the caaase here. If someone wanted to make you drop out of the royal selection, there is no simpler way that I can think of than to steal the insiiignia.”

After affirming what had been said, everything that had happened yesterday started to come together.

How Emilia was so stubborn; Felt and her client, Elsa. And how the value of the insignia was the direct cause of him getting into a mess and dying many times.

“Man, now that I think about it, I did a super good job! Whatever I did was seriously amazing, huh?! You were in danger of sayin’ sayonara to the royal selection, right, Emilia-tan?! And since you were about to lose the insignia, saying ‘I accidentally lost my insignia! Teehee! Sorry!’ won’t cut it, right?!”

“Wow, I couldn’t understand sixty percent of what you just said.”

“Waaaaaaaah, it doesn’t matter! What actually matters here is that, looking back, I did a super awesome job for you, didn’t I, Emilia-tan?!”

Subaru was in a state of ecstasy once he realized that he had unexpectedly accomplished a great deed by doing the things he did. Then he got up again, brought his face close to the still-seated Emilia, and took excited nasal breaths.

“Fu-fu-fu, how about it, hoooow aboouuut iiiiit, Emilia-TAN. This fool right here was nice and played a preeety active role in making you happy, huh? Maaan, I wonder if I can expect a nice reward or something, really! I wonder, I wonder, I wonder?!"

After speaking like someone from Higurashi at the end of that sentence, Subaru cast his gaze down at Emilia, placed his hand below her chin, and lifted it up.

Conducting himself with narrowed eyes full of lust, he appeared as a skilled, but wicked governor. With his feel-good mood already reaching greater and greater heights, he slowly waited for the time that someone might tell him to cut it out. He tightened his abs in anticipation for this very thing. But.

"…Yeah, you're right. You've been a great help to me, Subaru. So much that you saving my life isn't enough to describe it. So… you can ask me for anything."

"Huh…?"

"If it's something I'm capable of doing, then I'll do it. Err, no, I'll do whatever I can. Because what you gave to me means just that much to me."

The way she placed a hand on her chest, staring back at Subaru with a serious expression, rendered him speechless.

Thinking that the level of his excitement didn't fit the mood because the conversation became more serious than expected, he removed his hand from her chin.

—Oh shiiit, I'm seriously bad at reading the mood.

Since he had become a loner due to not being able to read the mood, Subaru was pretty good at reading the 'Mood when he couldn't read the mood'. Although ordinary people could read the 'Mood before it had gotten to the point where he couldn't read the mood', he couldn't. The result was him constantly being unable to read between the lines with his insensitive remarks.

Now being no different, since Subaru himself couldn't read the mood with his excitement that was out of place when it was compared to Emilia's serious gaze, he was at a loss as to what to do.

"Hey, a girl can't just say they'll do 'a-anything', you know? You might come across a bad guy like me who just wants to... Mwahaha!"

"…Even so, that's fine. If that's what you want to do, Subaru, I'll follow your lead. You can go 'mwahaha', 'fuhfuhfuh', or even if it's a umph-umph thing, or making whoopee, I… Hic."

"A girl shouldn't say such obscene things! Moreover, it looked like you were about to cry in the latter half of that!" Subaru was relieved when the nearly crying Emilia hugged her own shoulders.

If she had tragically resigned herself to such a fate, Subaru would've had a hard time dealing with it. Of course, he would ignore the fact that they thought he would try to pull something like that, which told him they had a somewhat low opinion of him.

Subaru placed his hand on top of Emilia's silver hair and began lightly caressing it.

Emilia was surprised by the sudden feeling of his palm, but when she saw him doing that in silence, she just remained quiet and went along with it.

Thinking her reaction was as charming as that of a little animal, Subaru turned his head to look at Roswaal.

Watching the two of them, looking as if he were having a ton of fun while doing so, Roswaal noticed Subaru's gaze, letting out an "Oh myyyy.", and with a raise of his eyebrows, said, "What iiis it? Am I perhaaaps interrupting something? Should we leave?"

"It's surprising because having my first experience at the dining table would be way too abnormal. What are you gonna make me use this silverware for? You filthy, perverted nobleman…!"

"Oh myyy, I didn't teeeell you to go that faaaar, though."

Subaru lifted his mouth at the sighing tall man who was smiling dryly, and then, with the hand that wasn't petting Emilia, he touched his chin.

His gesture was akin to something a young detective would do in a detective anime, with his thumb and index finger held around his chin, said, “Wait, wait, wait, hear me out, Rosy. It’s definitely true that you’re dangling favorable conditions right in front of my eyes, which is more than I deserve. It’s a situation where a carrot is held before a horse. But I’m not so empty-minded that I’d get led on so easily. I still have lots of stuff I wanna ask you before I accept any of your offers.”

“Oh-ho? Go ooon.”

“Alright then, here I go. Answer carefully and truthfully, okay? Emilia-tan is a candidate to be queen, right? So, what the HELL do YOU have to do with that?”

Subaru threw that question at Roswaal, thrusting the finger that he had previously been holding to his chin at him. The corners of the magician’s mouth distorted at that question, then changed into the form of a delighted smile.

Chapter 10:
A Two-Faced Negotiation

1

Facing the mismatching color of the blue and yellow pair of eyes, Subaru felt as if they were drawing him into their depths, preventing him from thinking. Swallowing a breath, he clenched his teeth so that the atmosphere wouldn't overwhelm him.

With his chin nestled on top of his clasped hands above the table, Roswaal said, "You appeaaaar to be raaather observant. You've done quiiite well by understanding what has been saiiid so far, for it iiiiis, quite frankly, uuuuncanny for an ordinary citizen to be able to do so."

"I am greatly honored to receive your praise, so answer my goddamn question, guy with long, indigo-colored hair. If you don't…"

"If I don't, then what?"

At Roswaal, who had responded provocatively, the frustrated Subaru retorted, his teeth making a sound, "Then I'm gonna caress Emilia-tan with my hands, and as gut-wrenching as it is… I'll devote myself to sexually harassing this girl! I'm gonna umph umph and make whoopie!"

"Eep!"

Said with such force that it seemed as if she were going to bite through her lips, Emilia flinched involuntarily, stimulating Subaru's sadistic heart.

In that moment, when his quick temper was about to erupt, and he might not even regret putting his words into action, he was interrupted by the clap of someone's hands.

What had brought Subaru's consciousness back to a state of balance when he was in danger of actually committing sexual harassment was the dry plosive sound of Roswaal, who had stood up.

“That was close, you saved me there, man.”

“Why are you expressing gratitude towards me…? Myyy ohhh myyyy, you are such a straaaange boy. I have never heaaaard of such an unuuuusual way of negotiating.”

“Ha, placing the best, highest-ranking girl here within my reach will be the cause of your downfall. No matter how much you scheme and plan, none of it will work. Even if it’s just a single moment, or a mere chance encounter, that alteration can infinitely extend that fleeting moment. —The genes that can do it, live within my people.”

“An eternal moment… Is that the highest level of Yin Magic…?!” Emilia asked.

He brushed Emilia’s head, who was at a loss for words because of how difficult his nonsense was to understand.

He had an undeniable feeling that he was being treated like someone with the ability to manipulate time, but it unexpectedly wasn’t really far off from the truth, so he decided to not explain.

Whether it be his ability to Return by Death, or the idiotic characteristics of the Japanese and their amazing quality of making insane modifications to their momentary delusions, neither were untrue.

Leaving the baffled Emilia be, Subaru hid such thoughts as he glared at Roswaal. Not forgetting to give him a fearless smile, he was quick to take on the role of a villain.

And yet, the countenance of the long-haired man remained unperturbed at him acting like a villain. He had a gentle smile on his face, free of all emotion, showing dignity aplenty, befitting one who was a great nobleman.

They exchanged gazes in silence, almost as if sparks were flying between them, assessing each other, and trying to get a read on one another. The victor of the stare-down was Subaru, who made Roswaal avert his gaze downwards.

Looking at Subaru, who had dry eyes because he had been reluctant to close them, Roswaal raised his hands slightly. “I concede, I concede.”

“I lost this one. Your gaze was rather impreeeesive. Right, if I don’t make my position clear, it wouldn’t be faiiiir to you, now would iiit?”

“Ow, Ow, my eyes hurt like hell. Rub them a bit more gently, Emilia-tan.”

“Are you fine with that being what you want as a reward?” Emilia asked.

“I’ll do it myself! That was super dangerous! This girl is unexpectedly pretty shrewd, huh?!”

In danger of losing his edge in the negotiations, Subaru jumped away and rubbed his eyes. He blinked, confirmed that the pain was receding, and then got ready to confront Roswaal once more.

“Weeeell, it’s not as if it was something that needs to be concealed, you seeee. I may have let a few things sliiiip, but I am in a position to support Lady Emilia’s candidacy to be queen. I am her backer… or perhaaaaps it would be better to say that I am her patron?”

“Patron, huh.”

So, the person right before his eyes, Roswaal, was the representative of Emilia’s supporters.

Subaru once more tried to confirm the unknowable nature of the tall man, and then nervously asked Emilia, “I’m not sure if I should be saying this, but…shouldn’t you be more careful with your choice in people, Emilia-tan?”

“It can’t be helped. There was no one in the royal capital I could turn to, and, in the first place, Roswaal was the only one with strange enough tastes to cooperate with someone like me, so…”

“I see. It was the process of elimination, huh.”

“You two must be unbelievaaably confident and without fear to be saying suuuuch things right in front of your patron, yes?”

Despite receiving such insulting comments, Roswaal didn’t seem to be unperturbed at all, the gentle expression on his face unchanging. Perhaps he was immeasurably tolerant of others, or… “He might be one of your typical M’s (masochists), huh.”

“‘Em’?” Emilia asked.

With both arms held in a circle, he made the shape of an M by having them meet on top of his head.

As Subaru was displaying a letter that couldn’t be understood by anyone in this world, Emilia tilted her head as he tried to come up with an explanation, “No, if I calm down and think about it, this is the second time I’ve made this joke. It’s going to lose its freshness, so saying it to the same person again would be a little…”

“Don’t just accept the situation in such a weird way. Can you tell me what you mean?”

“The you from yesterday knew it. That’s it! Live strong.”

Pat Pat Lightly patting her head as if to comfort her, Subaru chuckled emotionlessly.

Leaving the flabbergasted and confused Emilia to herself, Subaru felt his heart lighten up since he didn’t necessarily tell a lie.

Though, the Emilia of the world that knew it was no longer here. She was silently sleeping within his heart, along with a debt of gratitude he couldn’t repay.

He gave a thumbs up to the pouting Emilia, who seemed to be discontent, and then used the same hand, still held in the same position, to point at Roswaal. Afterwards, when he turned it upside down, Roswaal said, “Hmmm? All you did was turn it upside down, but it feels like a humiliating gesture. I wonder why?”

"Really? Where I come from, it's a sign of deep affection that means, 'I love you so much that I wanna make you lick my shoe'."

"Subaru, in your hometown, licking someone's shoe is an expression of deep affection…?" Emilia asked.

"It's the ultimate expression of love, meaning, 'Everything that represents you is precious'. I wouldn't even hesitate to eat your hair or something if I feel like it, Emilia-tan."

"I'm begging you. Definitely DON'T feel like it, alright?"

Seeing as she had found fault with what he'd said, Subaru shrugged. Roswaal unintentionally burst out into laughter after hearing their exchange, and Emilia was in a bad mood because of the way they reacted.

As the three of them each did their own thing, they didn't make any progress at all with the conversation from before.

"Hey, we're having a serious conversation, so can you stop sidetracking us?"

"You're the last person I wanted to hear that from!" Emilia replied.

Emilia's lamentation was dodged with an easygoing "Yeah, yeah," and then Subaru once more directed his gaze at Roswaal to start things over again, getting to the main point. "So, about the main subject. I get that you're Emilia-tan's patron, Rosy. And it's pretty cute how I could catch glimpses of her 'bumpkin-ness' from every aspect of her behavior, but her acting all on her own in the royal capital is a bit rare, right?"

"I doooo suppose this is the first time such a thing has happened, you seeee. Though Ram should have been with her…"

Roswaal made a strained smile as he fiddled with his collar and shifted the topic over to the pink-haired maid. When Subaru turned to look at the maid behind him with suspicion in his eyes, she remained nonchalant, having disguised herself as the blue-haired maid by flipping her bangs to the opposite side. Though he immediately noticed it because their hair color was different.

"Man, that face that says something like 'I got away with it, just like I'd hoped' really pisses me off."

"Sister, Sister, the guest said such a thing like that."

"Rem, Rem, the guest said such an empty-minded thing."

"Hey, I can still tell who's who based on Ram's crude way of speaking!"

After having an exchange where they seemed like they had zero intention of glossing over their words, Subaru yelled that out angrily and let his shoulders droop. However, the one who nervously responded to that angry voice was Emilia.

With an awkward look on her face, the girl raised her hand slightly. "It's not like it's Ram's fault. About that, I…guess I sort of gave in to my own curiosity. I wandered around aimlessly and then got separated from Ram."

"What's up with that Moe-character-like reason? What an unbeatable defense. That being the case, it's true that she couldn't fulfill her lord's orders, right? Is that really okaaay?"

As he asked that question with good pronunciation and his lower lip jutted out, Roswaal responded with the turning of his neck. Prefacing it with a "You dooo have a point," he continued, "Perhaps I maaaay share a responsibility in Ram's failure to supervise. Hoooowever, on another note, what are you trying to say to me, I wooonder?"

"It's simple, really. Emilia-tan forgot how to get back to where she was and then started wandering around aimlessly, and the fact that her attendant couldn't find her is the most regrettable. And then, as a result… I, the villainous character, had taken advantage of that. So the right bad thing to do would be to wring as much as I can wring out of you, right?"

Grasping what had just been said, the facial expressions of everyone in the room changed.

Emilia's face stiffened, the twins glared at Subaru with eyes that held both animosity and remorsefulness, Beatrice had an uninterested look on her face as she tilted her glass to drink, and Puck plunged head-first into the egg dish in front of him as if he had slipped, resulting in a total disaster.

And then Roswaal nodded over and over again while smiling, looking like he had understood.

“I seeee. On the topic of private funds, I, the patron, am more suited for you to ask for a reward from, rather than Lady Emilia, who is essentially penniless, is it nooot?”

“Right? And you shouldn’t be able to refuse me, either. A-f-t-e-r-a-l-l, I saved Emilia-tan’s life and contributed greatly to preventing her from dropping out of the royal selection! In short, I’m something like a savior for the Emilia-tan Camp in the royal selection!”

“I muuuust admit that it is the truth. Well then, allow me to ask you a question in addition to that.” Roswaal stood up, looking down at Subaru from his superior stature.

Not to be defeated by being below him, Subaru turned his gaze upwards. The way they looked now was similar to when Roswaal had surprised him with a kiss to the forehead at their first meeting, but the weight of the atmosphere they were now clad in was in a completely different league.

Anxious, Emilia clasped her hands together as she feared where the negotiations were headed. Feeling something like a prayer being directed at his back, Subaru nodded. “Say it. I’m all ears.”

“Whaaat do you desire from me? As it is, I cannot refuse your request. Even if you wish for any sort of treasure. Or perhaaaaps, even if you preferred something else… such as a luxurious banquet set up for yourself. If it is to conceal the truth of the lost insignia, then I am willing to do anything.”

“Hee-hee-hee, as one would expect from a great nobleman. You really speak my language.”

With a lewd smile on his face, Subaru tenderly poked his thin chest with his elbow.

It was painful to hear the sound of his popularity falling to pieces behind him, but this had all been for the sake of preparing for this. Bearing the image of a villain, he extended both hands out. “I will ask for any reward that my heart desires! And you cannot refuse me! This is a promise between me and you. If you break it, you’ll have to swallow 1,000 needles.”

“Seems like I’d be on the briiiink of deaaath by the 100th one. Well then, it is a promise.”

“A man doesn’t go back on his word, right?!”

“I must say, that iiis quite a saying. I see. A man mustn’t make excuses. I will not go back on my word.”

It was a negotiation with both of them presenting their strong-mindedness as a man.

Believing that it was worth placing his trust in a promise that was made on top of that, Subaru proudly crossed his arms. “Then, hire me to work in this mansion.”

Compared to how long he had built it up, Subaru’s declaration was said easily, without hesitation.

The girls behind him were dumbfounded by his request. The twins’ expression changed to that of slight bewilderment, whereas Beatrice was truly disgusted, her face adorned with a frown. Emilia, especially… “I-It isn’t really for me to say, but isn’t that a bit…”

Her beautiful face was restless, an astonished expression overtaking it, and she was opening and closing her mouth like a goldfish. The fervent discomposure was peeling away at her mystical disposition, making it fade away.

Looking back at the girl, Subaru shrugged in disappointment. “No, to be frank, I knew that you wouldn’t find the joke funny a second time, Emilia-tan. However, from my experience, there was no other way but to go with a method that already worked well, so…”

“That’s not what I’m saying…! No, it’s that you want so little!” As if feeling angry for him, Emilia slammed her hands against the table and advanced on Subaru. She then jutted her finger out at him and started poking his chest repeatedly. “Listen, It’s not just the thing with Puck, okay? I’m also talking about…something different. To begin with, it’s just like when you asked me for my name back in the royal capital.”

The girl listed off the times where Subaru could’ve claimed a reward to the best of her knowledge. Emilia was aware of everything he’d done to get those rewards; she shook her head as if she truly didn’t understand. “You don’t understand just how grateful I feel. Such a… such a thing isn’t enough to repay you at all for saving my life…”

As she ended her sentence weakly, the strength behind her pokes lessened, and then she left her palm on Subaru’s chest and hung her head.

Hearing her silent lamentation, Subaru cursed his own thoughtlessness.

She had always felt indebted to him, because of how disproportionate what he’d asked for in return for saving her was.

However, the same could be said of Subaru.

Subaru had always felt indebted to her. And it was a type of debt that he could never ask from her, ever again. And then there was Puck, too.

Near the two people who were presenting their inner thoughts to each other in silence, Roswaal sneakily moved over to where Beatrice was. Well, he was actually aiming for Puck, who was beside her, in order to strike up a conversation.

“Whaaat? Did you give that boy a reward, O’ Great Spirit?”

“Yeah. He just wanted to be able to pat my fluffy body as much as he wanted. He’s a first-class lover of fluffiness,” Puck replied.

“Bubby’s?! What an awful boy, I suppose… He should be driven out at once, in fact!”

Intentionally ignoring the “Operation: Drive Subaru Out” that was somehow making needless progress, Subaru placed his hand on the delicate shoulder in front of him. She looked up at him with her wet amethyst eyes, giving him an inquisitive look, her lips quivering.

—Oh no, she’s crazy cute.

He was in danger of unconsciously going with the flow and completely giving in to his urge to snatch away her lips, but he miraculously got himself under control by beating the urge to a pulp. And then he brought out his most sincere attitude to tell her how he truly felt.

“You don’t understand, Emilia-tan. At that time, at that very moment, that was what I truly wanted from the bottom of my heart, you see?”

“—Huh?”

“At the time, I wanted to know your name. So much that I could write down that it’s a ‘serious’ thing and read the word as ‘critically important’. I was super-duper hungry, I was anxious about this new world, my feet were unsteady beneath me, I was on the verge of losing it, and I think there were a lot of things I had to obtain. That’s only if I stopped to think about it, though. —But I’m a man who won’t lie to himself.”

He had died three times, just for that.

He had done so merely for the sake of seeing the smiling face of the silver-haired girl in front of his eyes and to know her name.

At that moment, there was no greater reward he could have wished for.

“My request to Roswaal is just like that as well. To be honest, I’m completely and utterly broke! I wouldn’t really be right in the head, and my financial status wouldn’t be faring much better if I were to just trade it for temporary pleasure. So as far as I’m concerned, this is the best option, right?”

"…You could have lived here as a guest instead of working, you know?" Emilia added.

"—Why didn't I think of that?! How about it, Roswaal?!"

Upon hearing the teary-voiced retort, Subaru turned around as if he had bounced to look at Roswaal, who became his ray of hope. However, he crossed his hands in front of his face, forming the shape of a big X. "Your first request has taken effect. A man doesn't go back on his word, now doooes he?"

He tearfully found his request denied because someone just had to open their big mouth earlier. Backing down reluctantly, Subaru gave up and thought about his future work life. "I really wanna go back to that moment and say, 'Take care of me!' instead."

"You know, for a moment, I thought that you were actually serious…but I guess it was just my imagination."

"And then you just give me a lower rating like that, Emilia-tan! That's kicking me while I'm down!"

Subaru realized that he had missed his chance to set up the perfect environment for a shut-in in another world because of his slip of the tongue. He had nothing to pick back up if he also lost his popularity with the beautiful girl on top of all that.

Emotionally anguished as if tears of blood were running down his face, Subaru bit his lip as he glared at Roswaal pitifully. "Anyway… That's just how it is, so. Remrin and Ramchi must be having a hell of a time taking care of this mansion, so I'd like you to give me a suitable position under them, something like a manservant."

"It iiiis true that this is a pressing issue… Though I beliiiieve it is as Lady Emilia said. Isn't iiit asking for rather little?"

Placing his hands in the sleeves of his clownish clothing, Roswaal's gentle expression darkened, showing a strained smile for once.

In response, Subaru stood up and wagged his finger at him with a "Tsk, tsk, tsk."

"I'm a super greedy guy, you know. —You know that, right? I obtained a position where I could live under the same roof as the super adorable, super beautiful girl I like, through rational means. And by being in a servant's position, I might even get blessed with chances to get lucky. There are infinite possibilities, and my heart is swelling with sooo much excitement about what might happen in the near future that it might burst!"

"…I see. It iiiis indeed as you say. It iiiis rather difficult to get to work close to the girl one likes, is it nooot? Sounds like quiiite a sweet deal for you then."

"Well, and besides…"

He stopped wagging his finger and then used it to scratch haphazardly at his black hair. Averting his eyes away from everyone else, he looked up at the ceiling and continued, "And besides, with a guy you know nothing about, you should keep him close instead of leaving him alone without knowing anything about him. Furthermore, please make sure if I can be of use to Emilia-tan, or if I am a source of danger to her."

He was declaring his belief that nothing good would come of it if he were to just leave the manor without any way to defend himself.

If he were to be honest about this, it wasn't above his expectations, and he also felt slightly bad about testing Roswaal's humanity like this.

There was no mistaking that Subaru was picking a quarrel, the type that would make Roswaal be at a loss for words if he had no idea of what Subaru was saying. However, contrary to Subaru's awkward feelings about it, he said, "Then it shall be done. —I hope we can get along well together, alriiight?"

He couldn't really get a read on what emotion was being exhibited in his different-colored eyes after that immediate reply.

2

Incidentally, Subaru was super embarrassed on the inside after unintentionally professing his love so strongly, but when he nervously turned his head to get a peek at Emilia's expression, "You're reaaally hopeless, Subaru… Is something the matter?"

He was somewhat puzzled by her calm response.

As one would expect from a beautiful girl, she was probably used to being flirted with, including people cracking jokes at her and behaving like a philanderer, so he trembled in trepidation in front of one who had so much experience.

"I'm not sure if I, have it in me to keep hitting on you, Emilia-tan."

Subaru couldn't help but sigh at all of the many difficulties in store for him.

While Subaru was feeling uneasy about the uncertain future of his life in another world, worrying about it from a more peculiar angle than one would expect, Emilia let out a quiet murmur. "How impure, wanting to work in the same workplace as girls. But I wonder which one is more of your type, Rem, or Ram?"

Emilia, who'd put a finger to her lips and inflated her imagination, had completely taken it the wrong way.

Chapter 11:
The Harmonious Post-Meal Get-Together

—The prolonged breakfast had come to an end. I thought it was the norm for everyone to go about their business as soon as breakfast ends, Subaru thought. But…

“For the time beiiing, Lady Emilia, please follow your usual schedule. And Ram, show him—Subaru—around the manor. Rem, you can follow your usual routine… But before that.”

As the master of the manor, Roswaal gave orders crisply, his posture and gestures full of dignity, though the size of his collar tended to obscure his grandeur. He then grinned widely at Subaru as if he had read his mind. “Buuut before that, you neeed to introduce yourself first. Luckily, all of the residents of the manor have gathered here.”

“That’s lucky alright…” Subaru commented. “But seriously, the number of people here is super small! There are only five people and a cat living here, excluding me!”

“Counting Bubby as a cat is extremely disrespectful, in fact.” Beatrice interrupted Subaru’s surprise, clearly unhappy with him.

Subaru raised his hand in a cumbersome manner and responded to her words. “Alright, alright,” he replied. “Excluding me, there are four people living in this mansion along with a furball and a drill… Are you happy now?”

“...I’ve heard you say that several times, but what’s that “drill” you speak of, I wonder?”

“A drill is a man’s soul, a man’s dream.”[1]

“It was stupid of Betty to ask you that, I suppose. Roswaal, is it fine for Betty to return now? She wants to relax with Bubby.”

Beatrice rubbed her eyes and turned towards Roswaal, her gestures not matching her age. In front of her was Puck, still on the dining table. He placed his hand on his hip and threw his chest out. “I’m super fluffy, yes.”

Just looking at him is kinda pleasant.

“I knooow you two aren’t veeery compatible,” said Roswaal, “but you guys are going to be working together from now on, so be a bit friendlier, please.”

“Betty has made all the possible concessions, I suppose,” replied Beatrice. “Asking for more wouldn’t leave even the head of the Mather’s family unharmed.”

Suddenly, Beatrice threatened Roswaal in a quiet tone. The sudden change in atmosphere made Subaru feel like the air in the room had become heavy. The cause was, of course, Beatrice, but the change was unnatural.

He’d felt it when he met her for the first time, but there was more to this young girl with chestnut-colored hair than met the eye.

It wasn’t just that she spoke in a sarcastic tone or the fact that she drank, it was something on a completely different level. Something was fundamentally off about her. So, he asked, “Sorry for interrupting your fun time, but what are you? You seem like you belong here, but as far as what your role is, I don’t have a clue what it could be.”

“Betty is in a bad mood at the moment, I suppose. You’d better watch your mouth, human. Betty could turn you into stone and shatter you into pieces if she so desired, in fact,” she replied with lowered brows after Subaru failed to read the mood and questioned her.

Subaru gasped at the little girl’s intimidating aura that made him almost reflexively get in a defensive position.

“Betty is the caretaker of the Forbidden Library in Roswaal’s manor.”

“Bubby?!”

However, such an atmosphere was dissipated by the comment of the grey cat who had leisurely intervened. The kitten was biting on a corner of something close to a rusk made by frying the bread's crust with sugar-like seasoning sprinkled on it.

"Sweet! Delicious! Meooow!"

"Sorry to bother you when you've lost your sanity due to the sweetness, but can you tell me about that in detai…oh, you're just so soft and fluffy." Subaru had approached Puck to question him, but his hands reflexively went towards his ears and began petting them. Puck gobbled down the rusk speedily while he petted him to his heart's content.

"Roswaal is 'somewhat' of a magician," Puck explained. "The Mathers have a long history, so there are books they don't want others to see. So, Betty is guarding the Forbidden Library according to her contract with him so that such books stay away from the public eye. Is that right?"

"Yes, that's right," confirmed Beatrice. "Everything Bubby says is always right, in fact."

"Communicating becomes easy when Puck enters the frame, fluffy," added Subaru. "All are equal in front of a fuzzball, after all, fluffy."

"Your sentences are ending in fluffy," Emilia informed him.

Subaru hastily let go of Puck's ears after Emilia coldly pointed out that his sentences were ending in a funny manner. He had just proved how addictive petting could be.

The tragedy of loving a fuzzball. How ironic.

"The addictiveness of a fuzzball has backfired on me… Hey, wait!"

As Subaru was acting like a tragic character, Beatrice ignored it and fearfully reached out her hand, touching Puck's ear. The sensation surprised her, and her cute face drooped as the feeling on her fingertips sent her into a state of bliss.

Subaru gasped at how adorable she looked, her expressions now befitting her age. Puck gobbled down the rusk, not paying any mind to her fingertips playing with his ears.

Subaru turned his head away and looked at them from the corner of his eyes. “Hm-Hmph. I’m not jealous that Puck is cheating on me.”

“Stop being so cold, Subaru,” said Puck. “It’s between you and I, isn’t it, meow? I’ll throw this girl away after she gives me all the money she has.”

“Bubby, you are being so mean, in fact…but you’re so soft.”

“Oh, sorry, my lovely Betty. Of course, it is a lie. It’s obvious you are the most important to me. You, and you alone, are special.”

Puck was just a palm-sized pet cat, but he was acting like a player playing with their feelings. They both felt all fuzzy inside looking at him do his bad-guy act, but Emilia, who had placed her hands on her hips, came in between them.

She pinched Puck’s head between her fingers and picked him up, making him scream like a cat in bliss. “Meowh!”

“Puck, don’t get carried away,” Emilia chided. “And stop eating that many sweets. I won’t let you stay on my shoulder if you get really fat because of it.”

“Hahaha, are you jealous? You want to be the most important person, don’t you, Lia? Worry not, for the place where my heart returns to is always you. Even if I waver like a floating cloud during a windy day, I’ll always return to…meow, meow, meow, meow!”

The force pinching Puck’s head increased as he said his cheesy pick-up line, making him give up. She looked at the limp Puck and sighed, then begrudgingly looked at Subaru. “My child got this bad influence from you, Subaru…” lamented Emilia.

“Is it, though? Isn’t this how he naturally is? And you tamed him by doing an iron claw. I feel like I just witnessed the dark side of a Journey to the West-like household.”[2]

It’s like watching Master Triptikia and Sun Wukong from up close, he thought. Although, I guess their parent-child role did a complete 180 here. —Well, that's just how Puck usually is if the situation isn't serious. It isn't much of an issue as long as he's serious when he needs to be, though.

"But then, you were useless yesterday when you were needed… Hey, you'll end up being a useless cat who's all talk and no bite at this rate."

"Bubby is fine like that, in fact!" retorted Beatrice. "He just needs to exist and that makes everything better! The rest of the things are just a part of Bubby's charm, I suppose!"

"Your worship of him is extreme, isn't it?!" exclaimed Subaru. "That being said, "Guardian of the Forbidden Library" stimulates my nerdy mind. More about that in detail."

He held both hands in the shape of a pistol and pointed his fingers at Beatrice. She played with her drills while looking disgusted by his gesture, then spoke up softly, though she looked reluctant. "What Bubby told you is everything about it. If Betty has to spell it out for you… It is that room you entered, I suppose."

"Oh, that place filled with books."

That reminds me of the room that made me worry the floor might give out due to the large number of books in it. On the other hand, if all of them were Librorum Prohibitorum that weren't supposed to be in circulation, it would be criminal, wouldn't it?

Librorum Prohibitorum—it was a wonderful word that grabbed a man's heart, shook it, and forever remained.

Come to think of it, when he was in middle school, when he was mentally unripe and was in the middle of his youth, he referred to books that stimulated and released his young desires as Librorum Prohibitorum.

For some reason, the kendo club that Subaru belonged to boasted an overwhelmingly large number of such books. There was even a special storage room under the floor of the kendo club room in the club activity complex.

The information regarding it got leaked due to a dispute with the baseball club—during the cultural festival when students from other schools visited—and the book depository got caught up in cancel culture before graduation.

The story goes that the kendo club room was closed down because of that. The obscene literature survived, but they had no place to store them and were thus scattered all over the place.

“Come to think of it, we did our juniors dirty,” Subaru reflected. “They were passed down from one generation to another and had a rich history. They were sorted out orderly by era and genre. It’s really nostalgic…”

“Betty answered your question, but Betty feels that you are thinking of the dumbest thing in the world, and that’s making her flare up with rage, in fact.”

“Don’t let the anger consume you. Eat some small fish. Consuming calcium will make you calmer, and who knows, you might grow a bit taller. I think the height difference between Emilia-tan and I is perfect for hugging and doing stuff from love-comedy’s…”

He pretended to give the indignant Beatrice a piece of advice, dropping hints of him liking Emilia, but Emilia ignored Subaru’s fantasies and pointed her finger at something else entirely.

“Wait a minute, Subaru,” Emilia began. “Did you just say you’ve entered the Forbidden Library?”

“Yeah, I did enter it. I was on my way back to my room so I could sulk in my bed and sleep. But that drill loli had turned my room into her workplace. On top of that, she took my energy from me… It’s the shitty yakuza way.”

Subaru’s sanpaku eyes turned even sharper while complaining, but Beatrice turned away and ignored him. Emilia now turned to her to ask something. “Beatrice…you didn’t invite Subaru into the Forbidden Library, did you?”

"Not in a million years, I suppose. Why would Betty want to invite a lowlife like him? …He got the right answer to the Door Crossing, in fact."

"The elegance is slipping from your tone, my lady," teased Subaru. "Ohohohoho."

Subaru placed his hand on his mouth and started laughing elegantly, making Beatrice silently furious with him. In the background of their heartwarming conversation, Roswaal, who had been silent until then, touched his nose and exclaimed in surprise.

"It takes me a whiiile to reach the Forbidden Library if I try opening up the doors randomly, but you were able to enter it without her permission. You two must be quiiite compatible with one another."

""Haaah?!"" they both exclaimed simultaneously and turned towards Roswaal while frowning. They looked at each other, mirroring each other's movements, and started glaring. They followed the same flow and curved their lips into a pout.

"Your faces are mirror images of each other, you two," commented Emilia.

"Adorable, adorable Betty and this thing?" huffed Beatrice. "That's a bad joke, in fact."

"Same here," seconded Subaru. "I'm not into lolis to begin with. I can't laugh at it either. I wouldn't be able to laugh…"

"Why do you have to act so serious? Betty has had enough of this, I suppose! I'll leave you guys on your own, in fact!"

Beatrice had finally lost her patience with Subaru and had completely erupted after witnessing his masterful acting skill of making himself look gloomy.

She stood up, walked to the door of the dining room, and violently pushed it open.

But Subaru noticed something there. "What? Where's the hallway?" he wondered.

It couldn't be helped that he asked such a question. That's because the door was supposed to be connected to the corridor that led to the center of the manor. Instead, he saw the library behind the door; the very same library he'd visited previously.

Beatrice, who had stepped into the forest of jam-packed bookshelves, looked triumphantly at Subaru. "This is Door Crossing. Burn this noble sight into your eyes and tremble. —I don't want to see your face for a while."

The door slammed shut, and the small girl disappeared behind it. Subaru was bewildered by it, and he was surprised further when Ram opened the door again after it had been shut.

The door that had gotten violently slammed shut opened slowly. Behind it was a vast corridor that Subaru had walked through to reach the dining room. It was hard to believe it had been connected to the library a moment ago.

"I see, so her magic can connect any door in this mansion to her room," Subaru observed. "Seems perfect for a shut-in."

"You are quiiick at understanding," replied Roswaal. "Though I'm not sure what "shut-in" means."

"They are parasites that don't come out of their room except when they need to eat and bathe."

"I seeee. Then yes, Beatrice is a shut-in."

"I can hear the both of you, in fact," said Beatrice, who had creaked the door that Ram had just closed open and was peeping her face out from behind it, looking at them.

This happened right after she said she didn't want to see his face for a while. Subaru placed his hands on his hips. He moved his arms, mimicking the flapping of a bird, and hopped here and there from time to time.

"Well, well, well. What happened? What happened? You just went away quite energetically, so why are you here again? Did something happen? Did you forget something? That's quite unfortunate. Hey, how do you feel? How are you feeling now?”

The HHN (Hey, how are you feeling, now) dance exploded right in front of Beatrice.[3]

The reply to it was simple yet powerful. In short, he got blown away by Beatrice’s magical power after she had extended her palm from behind the door.

“Buon giorno!” he yelled.

Subaru got hit by an invisible mass of air, and his body, which wasn’t light in the slightest, was easily blown away. He lost his sense of direction and collided with the wall after flying over the dining table. The two maids, who had rushed there immediately, did an excellent job of keeping the pictures and furnishings on the wall in place after they had begun to shake.

As they did so, they kicked Subaru, who was lying near their feet, without mercy.

Chapter 12:
The Compatible Yet Incompatible Duo

1

Beatrice sighed after blowing Subaru away and smiled gently in satisfaction. She then looked at the palm she'd used to violently blow him away before softly gazing in Puck's direction. "You deserved it… Bubby, here."

"Alright, alright. I'll see you later, Lia."

Puck, having gotten invited by the girl, floated towards her. Upon welcoming him into her palms, the door slammed shut for good this time. The opponent's turn now over, Subaru's came up, but he was badly wounded already and didn't have any energy left to do anything.

Subaru begrudgingly looked up at the twins, who were carefully adjusting the angle of the furnishings while trampling on him. "It's obvious that furniture is higher up on your list of priorities compared to little ol' me, who isn't worth a dime, but..."

"Oh my, did you hear what he just said, Sister. He is saying something absurd."

"Yes, I heard it, Rem. We can assume how dumb he is from his words."

"Verbal abuse!" shouted Subaru. "And if it's fine now, can you guys get off?! It seems like your panties are pink and blue, too. That's the only thing I'd rate…pankration!"

The two of them had stepped on his face, interrupting his words.

""Oooh, noooo,"" said the twins in unison in an indifferent tone while they moved away.

As they watched Subaru stand up with shoe marks on his face, they held hands and brought their faces together.

“But sir…no, Subaru. You are going to be our colleague, right?”

“But sir…no, Barusu. Aren’t you going to be a servant just like us?”

“Hey, one of you turned my name into a blinding spell.”

It’s a reference that kids make in elementary or middle school once in their life, and the pink-haired one pulled it out without knowing.

But they do have a point, and that is… “So my position is that? That of a manservant?”

“It wooould be best if you follow Rem and Ram’s instructions and help them out with the work around the manor,” said Roswaal. “Are you dissatisfied?”

“If there’s something I’m dissatisfied with, it’s with myself who mixes ‘take care of me!’ up with ‘hire me!’ …but it might not be so bad! Who knows, the girl I like might fall for me if she sees me working hard!”

I feel like a man can truly be a man by working and contributing to his community.

Subaru gave Emilia a quick glance, anticipating something, but she replied to it with a vague smile. “Well, I don’t know much about that, but, best of luck?”

“Sure,” replied Subaru. “You can be rest assured now that you are in the hands of a super professional! Though I have never worked before!”

He had never worked before and had never thought of working, either. He was an idler among idlers, thus he felt proud about his remarkable progress.

But those around him didn’t get why he was being so cheerful.

“Sister, Sister. Rem was stupid to think that the work would get slightly easier."

"Rem, Rem. Ram was a fool to expect that she could slack off a bit."

"Sister, you need to learn how to sugarcoat your true feelings, alright?!" complained Subaru.

The twins did not even attempt to hide their disappointment. Subaru tried his best to defend himself, but even Emilia next to him heaved a tired sigh. He felt like his heart was going to break. His face looked really miserable, too.

"But," Emilia hastily started speaking, "from the looks of Subaru's fingers, I guess we can't blame him. He is stubborn, so I wouldn't ask him about it, but he was probably in a position where he didn't need to work."

"That line makes me seem shady if you take it out of context, you know," said Subaru.

"I'm trying hard to defend you, so don't make fun of it."

She poked Subaru's forehead and as if she were saying, "Bad boy." Not one to let such an opportunity go to waste, he grabbed her extended hand.

"Ah," exclaimed Emilia in surprise. Subaru looked at Emilia's arm and was astonished by the slimness and beauty of her fingers. It didn't look like the fingers of a working lady at all.

"Comraaade," teased Subaru.

"I reaally hate the way you pronounce it," retorted Emilia. "And we are not the same. I am perfectly capable of taking care of myself. I'm in the care of the manor now, but I used to do everything on my own." She freed her hand, slightly pushing her chest out. "Hmph."

She's probably feeling superior to me since she can do chores. Though such childish gestures were something that made her look cute, Emilia thought she looked elegant.

"But I don't want to be treated as a useless person!" exclaimed

Subaru. "It's not like I'm incapable of doing domestic chores, I am good at some things!"

"I see, that's a bit unexpected," replied Emilia. "What are you good at? Cooking? Laundry? ...Or cleaning?"

"Sewing!"

"That's a surprise!" Emilia pouted to show that she wasn't happy with not being able to guess the answer.

It wasn't a lie or a bluff, Subaru really was good with needles. He could patiently pass the thread through the needle hole and mend things using it. It was one of his hidden skills.

"I can put buttons on things that have lost them, and I can mend things that got torn! I'm also good at…doing embroidery on accessories or clothes."

"It's hard to think of occasions where your skill could be put to use," said Emilia. "You are overly dexterous…"

I think so too, he thought. Unlike the old-fashioned household skills like cooking, laundry, or cleaning, sewing isn't that mainstream. It isn't a necessity unlike those three, which see daily use.

"I wonder what Subaru's family was thinking when they taught him that…"

"They probably weren't thinking of anything; and I didn't learn from them, I learned it on my own."

"I see?"

Emilia looked curious but Subaru dodged it with a wave of his hand. "Well, leaving that aside."

After that, Subaru turned towards the twins, pointlessly puffed up his chest, and pompously said, "Well, then. I'll leave it up to you two to decide what you want me to do since you guys have been working here much longer that I have! I will exert myself to the ut…something."

“““Utmost,””” said the three of them in unison.

“Yeah, that.”

The three of them had pointed their fingers at him and confirmed the word Subaru temporarily had trouble recalling.

Roswaal looked at the fine team play of the servants, then touched his chin and nodded in satisfaction. “Good,” he said. “It’s beautiful that you all are on good terms. Seems like there isn’t any tension between any of you, which is a great thing for an employer, wouldn’t you saaaay?”

“I feel like I can get along with them,” replied Subaru. “It’s like we have the same vibe or something? I’m definitely more compatible with them than with that loli!”

“It seems like you really didn’t like being compatible with Beatrice…” murmured Emilia pitifully, ending the long and noisy breakfast exchange with those words.

Roswaal clapped gently and drew the attention of the remaining four in attendance, and then pointed at something that looked like a picture frame hanging on the wall. Subaru followed Roswaal’s finger and looked at it, then frowned to show his confusion.

—The frame didn’t have paintings like the ones he had seen here and there in the hallway of the manor, it had a small crystal, slightly larger than a fist held within it. The crystal was giving off a mysterious, dim dark blue glow and was being gazed at by all five of them. The tall man spoke while pointing at the crystal. “Loook, it’ll be almost halfway through Water Time soooon. Let’s hurrry up… Ram and Rem: do as I told you before. Lady Emilia: do visit my room for a moment. Alright everyone, off you go.”

The harmonious breakfast had come to an end after Roswaal gave everyone their assignments.

Rem quickly began clearing the dishes from the table, and Emilia sighed melancholically, thinking about her upcoming schedule.

Roswaal walked over to Subaru, who had been left behind by the others, and tapped him on the shoulder. “Weeell then, I’ll be expecting a lot from you. Of course, I’ll pay you since I’ve hired you. You dooon’t need to worry about that.”

“I’ll ask you the details regarding the conditions of my employment later…but for now, thank you for your hospitality. Should I call you sir or something?”

“Ahaaa, you can call me Rosy if the guests aren’t around. It is somewhat refreshing being called by a nickname.”

Roswaal closed his yellow eye and winked, then waved lightly and left the dining room. A moment before leaving the room, he gestured lightly at Ram with his eyes, and the pink-haired girl nodded again and again, her face turning red as if she had been given some sort of instructions.

The twins were indifferent when it came to expressing themselves via facial or verbal means, but their nonchalant attitude crumbled away while interacting with Roswaal. The word ‘loyal dog’ crossed Subaru’s mind.

“Alright, Barusu,” said Ram.

“Oh, so you are gonna go with that.”

“Yeah, well, Barusu. Master Roswaal has instructed me to give you a tour of the manor, so kindly follow me and don’t get left behind.”

“Su-ba-ru!!”

Emilia puffed up her cheeks at Subaru’s playful words. It felt very fresh to him when she called out his name by pronouncing each syllable separately. He then pointed his finger at her while giving her a broad smile. “It’s a harmless party joke. You would not be able to turn into a wonderful queen if you cannot even take a joke like this, Fräulein.”

“What’s fraulein…?” asked Emilia.

"It's something you need to learn along with the rest of the stuff. Life is like climbing an endless mountain without any supplies. If you are lazy about collecting the items known as knowledge in between, you'll end up dropping out at the third station without reaching the top."

Emilia got quiet and widened her eyes. It seemed like she was impressed by what Subaru had said.

Seems like the statement from a dude that dropped out of school carries a different weight.

Subaru was hurt by his own self-deprecatory thought. "Well then," he said, then glanced at Ram. "I don't want to leave, but I guess we have to. Let's go, boss."

"Yeah, let's do that, Barusu. Lady Emilia, we'll be seeing you later."

Subaru started following the girl heading towards the door after she had curtsied, her pink hair swinging here and there. Emilia looked at them. "Subaru, I need to give it my best, but…you can give it your best, too."

"What's up with that? It makes me really happy. I feel extremely motivated now. Are you a goddess?"

Subaru lightly 'curtsied' with his tracksuit and bowed, following Ram's example. He left the dining room after putting a peculiar expression on Emilia's face.

Ram, who had stopped after she was out in the hallway, turned her indifferent expression into a frown. "There's a difference between what's expected of a maid and what's expected of a manservant."

"I know, I know. But, if I were to do housekeeping, I wanted to do it with elegance and glamor. Wait, do you have a uniform for me?"

After all, it would be tasteless to start working as a servant in a tracksuit.

Of course, there's no doubt about it being the best when it comes to ease of movement but… "It's natural to long for prestigious clothing when you are sent to work in a nobleman's mansion. It might come as a surprise, but I look good in formal wear."

"I agree that clothes are important," said Ram. "Just the right clothes for you… Yes, I'm sure there are some."

"I see, I see. Then let's start with that. I am the kind of person who focuses on the aesthetics first! I start my preparations for an exam by cleaning the room so I can focus on my studies."

And then he didn't actually study after that.

Subaru gave her a thumbs up accompanied by a gleaming wide-toothed smile. Ram was looking at his entire body while lifting her fingers and muttering. "Hmmm."

It seemed like Ram was able to measure the approximate clothes size needed for Subaru just by doing that. She nodded in satisfaction and pointed in the direction of the upper floor.

"There is an anteroom for the servants upstairs. You'll find your clothes there. Considering your size, you'll fit into Frederica's, who left two months ago."

"Oooh, you left just at the right time, Frederica… Isn't she a woman, though?"

"Her size is almost equal to yours, Barusu."

"But the gender is different, right?"

Ram stopped walking and turned back, giving Subaru an icy look. She then sighed as if she were tired and touched her forehead. "You said that you wanted to do it with elegance and glamor, so I was kindly going to make your wish come true. What are you complaining about?"

"If it were Emilia-tan, it would be understandable, but who would benefit from me wearing a maid's outfit?! What would I do if it benefits me after I develop a weird kink?! There's a possibility of me developing such a kink and I don't want that!"

After entering this other world, various new kinks have been blooming vividly. If this opens a door for cross-dressing, then there would be no trace of a man named Natsuki Subaru left!

Ram reacted to Subaru's shouting by covering her ears, then looked at him breathing heavily and spoke up with a bored expression. "I can't do this without Rem. Let's go."

"It's amazing that your ability to go at your own pace surpasses mine."

I guess you need to be this unshakable to survive here.

Subaru became melancholic after realizing how high the hurdles were before his first job experience ever.

2

—Elsewhere…

"On the second floor, yes, any of the rooms on the west side…of the servant's anteroom would do. You can have any room you like. I'll leave your uniform there."

"Alright, roger that. Well, let's see…"

After getting escorted upstairs, Subaru started looking at the rooms that were candidates for temporary accommodation and where his uniform would be given.

However, the rooms will be the same inside and only the placement of the rooms will be slightly different. If that's the case, then it would be more convenient to move around if the room is closer to the stairs. With this in mind, he twisted the doorknob of his chosen room.

"Alright, I'll be having this…"

"Bubby, you are wonderful. Your fluffiness is the best. You're just so fluffy and soft, in fact."

He discovered a loli petting a kitten in the library.

Noticing Subaru's presence, the girl with vertical rolls slowly turned her gaze towards him. Subaru looked at Ram, who was standing in the corridor, and saw her shaking her head.

After that, he spoke to Beatrice, who was right in front of him, while scratching his head. "Congratulations. I bless the birth of a new Fluffist."

"Just close the door already!" yelled Beatrice.

He was blown away by a magical force and collided with the wall of the corridor once again. The door was violently slammed shut, not paying any mind to Subaru, whose eyes had rolled to the back of his head.

"Damn…you…" he cursed.

Subaru shook his head. His vision was still flickering, and he even seemed furious now. He opened the door that had just been shut. He was going to complain to the flirt inside, but… "How dare you flirt with someone else's fuzzball! Pay me the compensation, the compen…sation?"

He stepped inside while shouting, his spit flying here and there, but what he saw was a simple room with a bed and a wardrobe. There was no sign of the library that had been there before. This must be the effect of her 'Door Crossing,' he thought.

"Once Lady Beatrice hides her presence, we won't be able to know where she is. We won't be able to find her unless we open all the doors of the manor since she won't come out on her own," said Ram adamantly, as if she were telling Subaru to admit his defeat.

She patted him on the back as if to comfort him. Feeling that sensation, he decided to admit his defeat—not. "I'm really mad now. That attitude of hers that makes me seem like a bad guy is to blame!"

He shook off Ram's hand and ran down the corridor as fast as he could after turning back. Ram watched him with her eyes opened wide while he ran to the door at the end of the corridor. "This one!"

he shouted.

“So sof—?!”

“That’s amazing, Subaru.”

He was welcomed by the girl’s scream and the gray cat’s praise.

He observed the shock on Beatrice’s face caused by her door crossing getting breached again, then immediately rolled inside the library to avoid being blown away. He did a handspring followed by a headspring, a cartwheel into a roundoff, then a back handspring, and finally topped it all off with a spectacular backflip—landing right in front of the girl.

“Alright! 10 points!” praised Puck.

“You made the place very dusty!” Beatrice complained.

“It’s because you don’t clean properly! You shouldn’t bring a cat into the library to begin with! They’ll sharpen their claws using thick covers!”

“My claws have been cut short by Lia, so it isn’t an issue,” murmured Puck calmly next to Subaru and Beatrice, who were yelling at each other, but his words didn’t reach them since they were too busy arguing.

The two were exchanging shouts so loudly that it seemed as if their voices would echo throughout the manor.

Ram reached the door leading to the forbidden library a moment later. As she watched them arguing, she murmured, “Leaving aside whether you two have a good relationship or not, it appears to be true that you two are compatible.”

““—That’s not true!!””

Their combined scream that morning shook Roswaal Manor to its foundations.

Chapter 13:
The Promised Morning is Far Away

1

“Soooo, how did Subaru do?”

It was at night—the sun had already set in the western sky, replaced by a waxing crescent moon—when a secret report was being made.

The room was large, and in the center of it was a couch and table for welcoming guests. At the back was an ebony desk and a leather chair for the master of the room.

The desk was strewn with papers and quills, a still-steaming cup beside them giving off a slight, soft aroma.

It was a room in the center of the upper floor of the manor that could be judged as being an office at first glance.

Sitting in a leather chair, the one who’d kicked things off was a soft-looking man with long indigo-colored hair and blue and yellow eyes—Roswaal.

Though he’d asked it with something akin to a whisper, there was no doubt that it had reached the other party. And why wouldn’t it have? The person he was having a secret conversation with was sitting close to him. She was sitting sideways on his lap, making her petite body even smaller as she did so.

“It has been five days since that spiel…no, four and a half days. Isn’t it about tiiime you saw something?” asked Roswaal.

The one whose ears were being whispered into and was submissively allowing her pink hair to be stroked was Ram. Only her and Roswaal were in the room. Her twin sister, who was like her other half, was not there.

That was simply because it wasn't Rem, but Ram, who was Subaru's instructor. Roswaal looked surprised by her unequivocal rebuke, then broke into a fit of giggles. He even coughed a little.

"Ahaaa, I see," Roswaal said. "So he's no good."

"Barusu can't really do anything," replied Ram. "He can't cook, makes a mockery of cleaning, and starts breathing heavily when I have him do the laundry. I can't trust him with any of them."

"That's quite teeerrible for a servant, especially the last one."

Guess it can't be helped since he is of that age, Roswaal thought, smiling wryly. Ram looked up at her master as she thought about what happened over the past four days. Whenever she recalled those short, yet rich, moments, even an outsider would be able to tell that her beautiful face became strained as the mask of indifference fell away.

"It's rare to see such an expression on you," Roswaal commented. "Is he that bad?"

"He is absolutely no good," Ram replied. "It isn't that he is bad at them, it's as if he doesn't know how to do those things. He must have been brought up very well, but he lacks etiquette if that's the case."

"Oh, and I heard a bit about it that you gooot questioned a lot."

"His questions were also puzzling. I don't know what to do with him."

Ram gave examples of some of the questions to Roswaal, who had raised an eyebrow. He paid close attention to each of them.

"Hmmm." He put his hand on his chin, looking like he was pondering. "Indeed, the things Lady Emilia likes are a mystery."

"Master Roswaal, Master Roswaal, that pose of yours resembles Barusu's."

"Mmmmm, thaaat's embarrassing. It's frustrating…to think that I have fallen behind in the arena of being a freak, pervert, and oddball."

Ram sighed, trying not to be noticed by her frowning master, and was seriously thinking about what he had just said. She then changed her position in his arms and nuzzled herself closer. She fell deeper into his arms, then closed her eyes to savor his warmth, a large palm gently stroking her pink hair.

"Well then, Ram, let us get serious now. —So, what do you think about the possibility of him being a spy?" Roswaal continued without changing his tone, a smile still on his face. His question didn't specify who, but Ram knew who he was talking about.

Ram kept her eyes shut and recalled the face of a man, though not of the one whose warmth she was feeling. "I can't deny the possibility, but the chances of that are slim."

"Hmmmm, why do you think so?"

"For good or for bad…more like for bad…he stands out a lot. The way he infiltrated this manor and the things he did after that…and in the first place, he himself stands out like a sore thumb." Her answers came out in a stammering, yet coherent manner.

Despite Ram's reply coming in the negative, Roswaal smiled gently, as if he was satisfied with it. It was the smile of a master that said: I understand. And though he hadn't directed that smile at her, Ram felt her cheeks getting hot.

"Well, that makes sense. And if that's the case, then he truly is a third party with good intentions."

The chair creaked as he shifted his position on it. He had been facing his desk till now but was now facing the opposite side—towards the large window, where he could see the moon shining brightly.

He squinted his bicolored eyes, and the sight below made him smile as he spoke. “Buuut, it seems like he dooesn’t know when to give up.”

The view from the window was of the manor’s garden. It was surrounded by a slightly taller fence and trees. The garden was not visible from the outside, but it could clearly be seen from the manor’s window.

In a corner of the garden lit up by the moonlight, a silver-haired girl and a boy with black hair could be seen talking.

The boy was talking to the girl one-sidedly, as usual. But the girl listening to him didn’t look displeased at all.

“The sight makes me smile,” said Roswaal. “It’s the kind of passion I don’t have anymore.”

“It makes women happy to be approached that much,” replied Ram, even though it might have just been Roswaal talking to himself.

Upon opening her eyes, Ram noticed that her master was looking down at her from up-close.

Her lips quivered gently, her moist eyes meeting Roswaal’s. But he continued talking anyway. “Do you think highly of Subaru by any chance?”

“…He is no good, but I don’t think he’s bad. He’s not bad when it comes to learning household chores, since he’s simply not familiar with them.”

Ram’s eyes showed dissatisfaction. Roswaal laughed vaguely at her slightly cold answer, then gently brushed her cheek with the hand that had been combing through her hair.

Roswaal had answered the expectations of the girl whose eyes were fluttering in euphoria. He then quietly closed his eyes and thought about her answer.

It’s unusual for Ram to compliment someone. She did say that Subaru will improve if he gets the chance to learn things, though. It seems like the black-haired boy must be very much to their liking.

And that was making Roswaal happy.

“Considering my position, I neeed to be an obstacle for him,” muttered Roswaal while looking down at the garden with his yellow eye.

“Both of them are kids,” Ram replied, “so nothing will happen even if they are left on their own.”

Faint laughter resonated in the office as the curtains of the window that overlooked the meeting of the girl and boy were drawn back.

—Not even the moon could see what happened in the office after that.

2

It was at the time when the moon was proudly shining in the center of the sky and Subaru was in high spirits.

He smoothed out the wrinkles on the butler suit he was wearing and looked at the window to check his appearance again.

It’s been four days since I started wearing this—long enough for me to get used to it.

“Not too shabby, not too shabby at all, me. I’m fine, I can do this. They say people look fifty percent more handsome than usual in the mirror after taking a bath. I feel like I’m experiencing that phenomenon now.”

Whether I look 50% better objectively or not is a mystery, but telling that to yourself over and over is quite important.

With the aura of a good-looking guy, he took a deep breath and stepped forward.

Stepping on the low-cut grass of the garden, he walked towards a green corner of it—a place surrounded by tall trees, garnering most of the moonlight.

There sat a young girl, surrounded by a pale light, her silver hair shimmering in the moonlight.

A pale blue glow—a phenomenon similar to the light of fireflies—was surrounding the girl, and Subaru knew what they were: spirits.

Even taking that fact in consideration, the wondrous sight had a devilish charm that would not let go of the observer's heart.

Subaru stopped and gasped. The girl, who had been whispering with her eyes closed, abruptly opened her eyes as if noticing his presence. The two amethyst jewels caught sight of him walking towards her.

Subaru's heart slightly palpated after getting spotted before he was able to call out to her. He held his hand up, trying not to show how restless he felt.

"Su-Sup. What a coincidence! Who'da thunk that we'd meet up here like this?"

"You interrupt my routine every morning, so how can you say that? And how can this be a 'coincidence'… Don't we live under the same roof?"

The flow of the conversation went from Subaru not being able to hide his restlessness to Emilia replying with a sigh, which wasn't unusual.

Subaru took a sharp breath in the face of her attitude and said, "You can do this!" to himself to raise his spirits again. "Hearing 'we live under the same roof' really makes me horny."

"You say that sometimes, but what does 'horny' mean? It sounds really, really creepy."

Emilia hugged her shoulders and shivered as if she had felt a chill. Seeing her reaction, Subaru grinned and casually sat right next to her. The distance between them was three fists, and that iffy distance between them was a sign of him being a wuss.

It seemed like Emilia had gotten used to Subaru sitting next to her like that, so she didn't point it out. Given that he had been sitting next to her during her morning routine and at meals, it was no wonder she no longer had any energy to do so.

Subaru was pumping his fist inwardly at her unspoken acceptance. Therefore, his voice henceforth naturally oozed with uncontrollable joy. "So, so, what are you doing? What are you doing?"

"You are like a child… It's just an extension of my morning routine. I can meet most of the spirits in the morning, but there are a few that I can only meet during Darksun."

Understanding what she meant, Subaru responded with a nod. Darksun was an expression of time specific to this world, which went from approximately six in the evening to six in the morning for a total of 12 hours. On the contrary, the time from six in the morning to six in the evening was called Brightsun. They were used instead of the AM and PM used in Subaru's world.

On a side note, a day was 24 hours and almost as long as it was in his world. The time when people were active was the same, so Subaru was relieved that his internal clock hadn't gotten disturbed.

The time had further classifications, but Subaru hadn't learned much about it yet. This was because his senior, who had a harsh training policy, had given more priority to teaching him about job-related skills than stuff like that. It seems like she really wants to make things easy for herself.

His bottled-up feelings about his grueling four days of training spilled out internally. But as he was doing so, Emilia continued to talk with the friends she could only talk to during Darksun.

A friend that you can only meet during the night has a bit of a bewitching ring to it.

Subaru felt weirdly embarrassed and rubbed his nose. As he continued to watch the quiet conversation between Emilia and the spirits, he muttered, “They look like will-o’-wisps.”

The spirits, who had been calm until then, began moving swiftly, surrounding Subaru’s face—soon after, he suddenly felt a sharp pain. “Buwah! Ow, ow, ow! It feels like I’m being poked with toothpicks!”

“Don’t make them angry by saying something insensitive like that!” Emilia exclaimed. “They aren’t listening to me anymore.”

Bearing an indifferent attitude towards Subaru as he was being attacked by the spirits, it seemed like Emilia shared their feelings. However, she showed her virtue when she said, “It can’t be helped,” and cast healing magic on him, still in pain after the spirits had ceased their assault.

A pale glow alleviated Subaru’s pain, and once he finished rolling around on the ground, he looked up at Emilia. As he laid there, she continued her wondrous meeting with the spirits right in front of him.

Suddenly, Subaru noticed that he was gazing at the beautiful girl and spirits in awe. This is what had made him feel embarrassed before, leading to him making a snide remark, but when he cleared his mind, it didn’t look all that special.

His embarrassment faded away into nothingness.

I just need to empty my mind and look at it nonchalantly.

“It isn’t a fun thing to watch, is it?” muttered Emilia, perhaps because it was so unusual to see Subaru being so quiet.

Subaru sat up and gently waved his hand in denial at the slightly sorry tone of the girl surrounded by spirits. “No, there’s no way I could get bored when I’m with you, Emilia-tan.”

“Wha-.”

His straightforward answer made Emilia blush and choke on her words. Subaru looked at her and recalled what he had just said, making him redden up to the tips of his ears.

He had spoken from the heart, so it just sort of came out, but he hadn't been prepared for that.

A sudden silence fell between them. Subaru was embarrassed, so he deliberately made some noise. "Aah, aah," he began. "And you see, we haven't had a chance to sit down and have a laid-back chat in a few days, right?"

"Yes, that's right. You were busy learning how to do chores around the manor. Yes, you were giving it your all… Yeah, you worked really…hard…"

"Your supportive words make me so happy and miserable. It makes me want to cry."

He'd dug his own grave with the conversation he started to change the atmosphere, but now he was tweeting his sorrow.

Subaru started drawing circles on the ground after realizing how pitiful he was. Emilia's hand wandered about in the air, an awkward look on her face as she wondered how she could comfort him.

Subaru's reputation after starting his new life as a servant a few days ago was that of someone who was good for nothing. Even if there had been some sort of favoritism and they looked past his faults, or he had bribed his higher-ups with a lot of money, things wouldn't have changed.

Cooking, laundry, and cleaning. Subaru had none of these domestic skills, which were essential for a servant at a manor, and had to acquire them.

At present, the three skills mentioned above were all C-grade.

"I only got an S when I put a button on a loose apron."

"You really are dexterous when it comes to that one thing."

"I wanted to grow up to be different and quirky rather than simple and boring.”

It’s the result of being brought up in a household where ‘anything goes.’ I think it’s crazy that I managed to develop my sewing skills in all that.

“Oh, but I am confident about my bed-making skills. I dreamed of being a hotel worker when I was in the first year of high school. I used up half of my summer vacation to practice.”

“Is that the reason why my bedsheets have been reaally tight for the past three days…?”

“I made your bed with all of the love and energy I could muster.”

What happened was that he had been so moved when he saw it that he put in a great deal of effort into making her bed, to the point where Ram got taken aback by it.

“This is the room where Emilia-tan sleeps and this is the bed she sleeps in. And these are the sheets and blanket she gets wrapped into! Muhaaa!”

The amount of energy he’d put into it was so extraordinary that Ram had to give him a time limit when it came to making Emilia’s bed.

“Oh, I see. I’m glad there’s something you can be confident in.”

Emilia smiled happily at the fact that there was a chore that Subaru could do with confidence, oblivious of what had happened during that.

Subaru kept quiet, not saying a word. He was crying tears of blood while his consciousness was being stabbed again and again. “Besides...” said Emilia to Subaru before continuing. “It’s admirable that you have been able to keep up with your other work without giving up. Ram and Rem were praising you in secret. Did you know that?”

“Are you for real! My seniors get all soft when I’m not looking at them, huh. They really are doing ‘Tsunderation’. But they aren’t doing it right if they don’t do it in front of me!”

If tsundering is done wrong, then it can be mistaken as someone being spiteful. It’s not really something I can recommend if the person on the receiving end is a noob. It would be a double-edged sword in that case.

However, Subaru wasn’t an amateur and knew what a tsundere was from his vast romantic experiences (in dating sims,) so no one stood a chance if they tsundered in front of him.

But the only thing they seem to be interested in is that perverted noble.

“Well, the only one I am interested in is Emilia-tan, so we’re even.”

He shrugged his shoulders and tried to act like it didn’t bother him, but since he was too embarrassed to say it out loud, it had only come out as a whisper. Thus, it seemed like it hadn’t reached Emilia, either. She tilted her head with a bit of a confused look on her face and then changed the topic.

“But isn’t it hard working that hard every day?”

“It’s super hard and is seriously painful. I want to choose between your arm, chest, and lap and sleep on them.”

“I see, I see.”

Emilia casually dismissed Subaru’s remarks and then proceeded to extend her slender arm, making the pale blue spirits gather around it.

It looked as if her white arm was the thing that was glowing. After witnessing that sight, Subaru was awestruck, letting out a dumb sound.

She smiled wryly at that and spoke. “You seem fine since you can still joke like that.”

“Please sleep with me if I’m about to break.”

“I’ll think about it… Saying that kind of thing scares me, so I’ll say no.”

“I failed at making you say it!!”

Subaru held his head and fell on the lawn. He sighed while feeling the coolness of the grass as he looked up at the starry sky. A sudden gust of wind shifted his short bangs, making him reflexively look up at the moon.

“—Isn’t the moon pretty?” he asked.

“Yeah, because it’s out of your reach,” Emilia replied.

“Guhah!”

“What happened?!”

Her unintentional comment shot down the expression of love he’d taken from classic literature. Emilia hastily rushed towards Subaru, who was holding his chest and moaning in pain. And then…

“Ah…” Emilia was shocked after she approached him. He was on the ground looking up at her. She looked at his chest with her amethyst eyes—and saw the hand placed there to express his pain.

His mistakes had kept piling up, and as a result, his left hand was covered in bandages.

“Oh, wait. This is lame. Effort is something you need to hide.” Subaru hid his hand behind him, trying to conceal his embarrassment. He touched his head with his right hand and stuck out his tongue as a sign of reflection. “Tee-hee.”

But Emilia’s expression stayed serious.

Subaru was wondering what to do as he waited for Emilia’s response, but then she lowered her gaze slightly and spoke. “Everyone, is really, working hard.”

To Subaru, it sounded like she was admonishing herself. Upon hearing her say that, he let out an “Aah,” understanding what she’d meant.

It wasn't just Subaru who was learning things from scratch at Roswaal Manor. Emilia was also in the middle of learning various things that a candidate to be queen needed to know.

It was the difference between a mere servant and a Queen. The level and number of things that needed to be learned by a Queen were far greater. The pressure she was feeling from all that must have been so great that it would be rude to even compare the two.

It would get tiring sometimes to carry such a heavy burden. She may have problems she can't share with others.

Emilia suddenly extended her hand towards Subaru before he was able to react. Her hand took hold of the hand of the arm he had hidden behind him and brought it in front of her eyes. She looked at his hands covered in wounds, then narrowed her eyes painfully after looking at it and asked, "Should I cast, a healing spell?"

Her question was so gentle. The warmth I felt during one of her treatments is something that can't be described with words, Subaru thought, as his new, freshly born wounds were crying out for the first time. It feels like the wounds are complaining and giving off a faint, tingling heat when I focus on them, but…

"No, it's fine. You don't need to treat them."

"Why though?"

"Hmmm, it's hard to explain, but…it's like, they are proof that I made an effort," answered Subaru with a grin as he pulled his hand away.

He clenched his worn-out fist in front of the beauty whose eyes were wide open in surprise. "It sounds unusual, but I don't dislike making an effort. If I didn't like it, then I wouldn't have trained every day. The feeling of being able to do something that you couldn't do before is a pleasant sensation."

He moved his hips with the rhythm, spun around, then stood up. Emilia panicked since it forced her to suddenly look up at him.

Then Subaru pointed his finger at her. “It’s really hard and super painful, you know? But it’s kinda enjoyable. Ram and Rem are really strict teachers, that loli gets mad at me, and Rosy doesn’t say much, so his presence is pretty much non-existent.”

“Roswaal would fly into a rage if you said that to him.”

“Fly into a rage? Who says that in this day and age…”

In response to getting interrupted, Subaru bent backward and shot himself back into his original position like a spring-loaded toy with his hand held out in front of him, putting Emilia on hold. Then he spoke. “Well, solving problems one-by-one is the way to go. There’s no way I’d survive here otherwise... And if I have to do something, it’s better to have fun doing it, anyway.”

In my original world, it was fine if I could live an easy life, but a life of peace and calm isn’t something you can just wish for here.

If that were the case, then Subaru wished for it to be fun. It was him showing his stubbornness to the existence that had unreasonably thrown him into this world.

Upon hearing Subaru’s words of determination, Emilia froze in place, as if her time had stopped. She just kept opening and closing her eyes, and then her serious expression faded away. “Yeah, you are, right. I think so, too. Aah, Subaru, you idiot.”

“Hey, what? That wasn’t the reaction I was expecting! Isn’t this the part where you fall for me again?!”

“I haven’t fallen for you toooo begin with. You are such a dummy… I am, too.”

Subaru was using his body to form the Japanese kanji for ‘life’, and the last part of her sentence had not reached him.

Emilia was smiling as if some of the pressure she’d been feeling had been lifted. Subaru was enraptured as he gazed at her smile, unable to say a single word.

She’s turning into an existence that words like ‘cute’ and ‘pretty’ can't even begin to describe. Yes, she's an… "E.R.G (Emilia-tan's Really a Goddess.)"

"I was thanking you, but you are joking around as usual."

As if a little mad, Emilia gave Subaru's forehead a little poke, making him take a few steps back with his hand held to his forehead. His gesture was somewhat passionate, and it wasn't just her imagination. She burst into delightful laughter after seeing his reaction.

"Nevertheless… I know you are working hard, but what did you do to get your hand injured that badly?"

"Oh, this one is easy. This evening, I got bit by a small animal that was playing with the kids in the village when I was helping Ram out with the groceries."

"Wasn't it a result of your hard work?!"

"It's more like the bigger wound is more eye-catching than the others…though I'm not the type to be hated by animals that much."

In his world, he wasn't the type of person that small animals would direct killing intent towards. He wouldn't have called himself a pioneer of the Fluffists if that were the case.

However, his trait, which had manifested itself involuntarily back in his world and made kids either like him or treat him lightly, was still active here.

"Those brats… They kicked, punched, and wiped their runny noses on me. That was the worst, damn it. I'll make them pay tomorrow, mark my words…"

"You look like you are good at taking care of kids, Subaru."

"That's a misunderstanding, Emilia-tan. I'm planning on taming them now and 'plucking the fruit' once they've 'ripened'. This is my Hikaru Genjification Plan."

"You don't need to act mean; you can just be honest and accept it."

Not taking him seriously, Emilia said, “Well then,” then looked up at the sky and straightened her posture. “I’ll be returning to my room. What are your plans?”

“I need to sleep next to you, so I’ll head back, too.”

“That part of your job can wait until your skills as a servant have improved.”

“Woooaah, my desires are expanding!” howled Subaru while raising both arms up in the air. Emilia looked at him with a wry smile. He then twisted his waist and turned back. “Oh, wait. If it’s fine with you, would you like to go with me to get revenge on the kids…no wait, on a date…no, to see a cute little animal?”

“You corrected yourself several times, didn’t you…? But yeah, I…” muttered Emilia, having trouble continuing her sentence.

Subaru tilted his head at her reaction. That’s not the reaction of someone who doesn’t want to go out. If that’s the case, then… “Cou-Could it be that you’re embarrassed about your friends starting rumors about us going out…or something like that?”

“I’m not going to turn someone down by saying something so horrible!” Emilia exclaimed, putting a hand on her hip to show that she was angry. It was almost as if steam was coming out of her ears. After finishing her gesture, she looked down once again. “I don’t mind, and I’m curious about small animals, too…”

“Then let’s go!”

“But I might cause you trouble if I go with you…”

“Alright then, let’s go!”

“...Are you even listening?”

“I am listening! Do you really think I’d miss a single word that comes out of your mouth?!”

“I hate you so much, Subaru!”

“Aaaaa! Aaaaa! What just happened?! IIIII caaaan’t heaaar yoouuu!!” Subaru covered his ears and ran around to block out the sound.

Emilia laughed, as if taken aback by Subaru’s boldness in immediately contradicting himself.

“Guess it can’t be helped then,” she said. “But only after I am done with my current studies and after you are done with your chores around the manor. That’s the condition.”

Having made Emilia promise to go on a date with him, Subaru clenched his fist and raised it in victory.

Seeing how easily Subaru’s mood could change, Emilia shrugged her shoulders and shook her head. “Speaking of which, why are you still dressed like that after finishing your work?”

“Oh, I just figured I hadn’t heard what you thought about it. So how is it? Doesn’t this suit me?”

“Yeah, let’s see. You seem like you are really good at your job.”

“I feel like I’ll get crushed by the burden of your expectations!”

I’ll note down here that there was a conversation like that.

3

After picking a door at random, Subaru peered inside and casually spoke. “Yooo, loli, are you getting enough sleep? You’ll stunt your growth and forever be a pipsqueak if you stay up too late, you know.”

“…He has been breaking my Door Crossing like it’s nothing,” said Beatrice in a resentful tone.

He saw a girl sitting on a wooden step ladder in the back of the library, glaring at him. She was holding a thick, halfway-open book in her hands.

“You’ll end up wearing thick glasses that look like the bottom of a glass milk bottle if you read manga at night in the dark. And you'll end up failing the entrance exam again and again of the university you want to go to."

"This incomprehensible nonsense again… Shall I turn you into stone if you act stupid, I wonder?"

"Sure, sure. I got you, I got you. Well, then go to bed already, good night." He waved his hand roughly and proceeded to close the door.

"Wait." Hearing that before he closed the door, Subaru halted his hand and looked back. He saw Beatrice leaning over a bit.

"Were you here to ask for something, I suppose?" she asked.

"Nope, not really," replied Subaru. "I figured I'd come say hi since I was on my way to bed. I was going to give up after opening three doors, but I got it right on the first try."

"This boy… What kind of a hunch does he have?"

Beatrice seemed tired as she pulled on one of her vertical rolls. Once she let go of it, it sprang back like a spring. It made Subaru's mischievous heart tingle a bit.

"Can I do that too?" he asked.

"Only Bubby is allowed to touch Betty, in fact. Betty has had enough, so go away already, I suppose."

"What's up with that attitude? You were the one who stopped me. Ha, I don't mind it at all though! I'm in a good mood, so I'll forgive you!"

After showing off how good he felt, he left the room, putting a scowl on Beatrice's face. However, as the door was about to close, he felt like he heard a tinge of loneliness in her voice. "—That has nothing to do with Betty, I suppose."

And that concerned him a bit.

"Eh, guess I gotta open the door again to ask her what's the matter.”

The other side of the opened door was different; it had turned back into a simple guest room.

He felt slightly hesitant, but he didn’t feel like walking around searching for the right door. He needed to wake up early tomorrow and finish his chores as fast as he could.

“I need to go to the village and make up some excuses to get the kids out of the picture. Wait no, I need to do some research to find a place with a good view and figure out where the flower garden is… Preparation, that’s the most important thing when it comes to all kinds of war! They say your victory or defeat is decided before the fighting starts. I can do this,” said Subaru as he puffed his nostrils, his chest full of anticipation for the next day.

He skipped towards the room designated to him: a private room for servants. And then he took off and threw away the butler suit he was wearing and quickly changed into his tracksuit.

“This fits me the most when it comes to sleeping. The only thing that worries me is that it’s the only tracksuit I have… I wonder if Rosy will cast a duplication spell on it if I ask him to.”

Now it’s a rare, one-of-a-kind item in this world. It’s pretty important since it can be worn as casual clothing, but it needs to be treated with the utmost care.

If it starts falling apart, I can just get over it by saying that clothes can’t be worn forever. It’ll be sad to lose something that reminds me of my old world, but there’s no point in looking back at things.

“And that’s why I’ll live hoping for a better tomorrow, gee-hee-hee.”

Subaru grinned vulgarly and dove into the bed he had made. After being met with softness, he crawled under the covers, completely ready to hit the hay.

However, since he was too excited for the next day, he remained wide-awake, unable to fall asleep no matter what.

“Shit, you gotta be kidding me, body! Are you going to trample on my hopes for tomorrow?! Damn it, so my greatest foe was myself…”

Jesus. Subaru glared at the ceiling and sighed. But I have a trick for sleepless nights like this.

Subaru smiled provocatively at his restless body. “Take this, my secret trick—One fluffy Puck, two fluffy Pucks!”

A first-class Fluffist can imagine the furball he wants to pet and have a virtual petting session that feels like the real thing.

The gray, fluffy cat appeared inside Subaru’s head, and it increased in number with each passing second. Eventually, Subaru’s entire body was covered in furballs. His body was taken away to the far-off utopia, Avalon, a place of bliss and non-being.

“One hundred sixty…three…fluffy…Pucks…fluffy fluffy,” muttered Subaru as his consciousness drifted into the land of dreams.

While imagining Shangri-La, he petted within his consciousness until he could pet no further—and then the lights went out.

4

It feels like my consciousness is rising to the surface from the ocean’s depths. This is the second time I’m saying this.

As Subaru opened his eyelids, the sunlight burnt his eyes. He then woke his slightly sluggish body up.

My head feels a bit groggy. Maybe I’m still a little tired. I did just start a brand-new job, so something like this had a possibility of happening…

…But today isn’t the day to be saying such weak things.

Upon waking up, Subaru, who was someone who’d wake up in a good mood, immediately began going over the promise he’d made with Emilia the night before.

"Yeah, Natsuki Subaru—you will be a man today!"

He gave a thumbs-up to no one in particular, flashed his teeth, and struck his usual pose.

It was the day of promised victory. Rising up from bed was supposed to be the beginning of his wonderful day, but its beginning was thrown on its head by the twins looking at him in surprise.

Subaru covered his face and pressed it against the blanket, then swung his body in embarrassment. "Whaat iiis uuup wiiiith youuu guuuys! Sooo you were there all along! It's embarrassing! You guys should've at least let me know you were there! Woah, woah, woooah, it's really embarrassing!"

He floundered around, trying to banish his embarrassment.

As usual, the twins' expressions didn't change much in response to Subaru.

Being pointed at and laughed at don't feel all that good, but their reaction didn't feel good, either. It's like I failed at making a joke.

"No, wait a second. That reaction would hurt even a guy like me. You guys witnessed my delicate side, so can't you be a bit more… You know what I'm trying to say, right?!"

The twins looked at each other after hearing Subaru's desperate plea.

I was expecting to hear the usual cold, indifferent words from them… Well, that doesn't sound so good, either.

It was the moment Subaru thought that when they spoke up:

"Sister, Sister, he greeted us in a very friendly manner."

"Rem, Rem, he greeted us in quite a frank manner."

Something's off. Those were the words that crossed Subaru's mind.

Their indifferent manner of speaking was the same as usual—but something felt off about it.

“Hmmm, what? Isn’t something weird? Bosses, what happened to you guys? Even if y’all are pulling a prank on me, this isn’t the right time to do it.”

While saying that, he started realizing what was off.

—It’s their eyes.

The gaze directed towards Subaru—had lost the frankness it had till last night. It was as if they were looking at a stranger.

And the nail in the coffin was…

“Sister, Sister, it seems like the guest is a little confused.”

“Rem, Rem, it seems like the guest has gone crazy.”

—Subaru was rendered speechless after being called a ‘guest’.

Despite the graceful ring it had, the words were sharp and fierce, and it tore deep into Subaru’s heart. Feeling as if the pain were real, he grabbed his chest.

I don’t get it. Their reactions are as if…

“Both of you…your joke isn’t funny. Don…’t…say…something… like…”

He wanted to block their gaze that looked at him like he was a stranger, so he immediately lifted his left hand up and covered his eyes. However, at that moment, he witnessed something decisive.

—The first aid band had disappeared from his left hand.

The tips of his fingers that had turned coarse due to doing the laundry and dishes, the back of his hand that he had cut because he wasn’t used to using knives, the bite mark on his hand left by a small animal while he was playing with the kids—all of them were gone without a trace.

Subaru had to accept reality after seeing all that. Suddenly feeling something hot deep inside his eyes, he pressed the blanket for a different reason than before.

He didn't want anyone to see his current face no matter what. He didn't want anyone else to see it.

He didn't want to cry while being looked at like a stranger by the people he loved. People he could have loved. People that he would have definitely loved.

"Why…did I go back?!" he wailed. While pressing his face against the blanket and baring his fangs, he howled with rage at the incomprehensible unreasonableness.

—At that moment, the loop that had tormented Subaru greatly consumed him into its whirl once more.

For the second time, the first day began.

Chapter 14:
Declaration of Rebellion

1

—I can hear something that sounds like a bell ringing from far away. The sound of the bell rushes fiercely towards me, then recedes like a wave, over and over again.

Subaru, who was wailing continuously, didn't realize that the painful sound in his ears was a kind of tinnitus.

He felt a terrible ache in his temples and a burning sensation deep inside his nose. However, he bit his tongue and lip and used the taste of his blood to focus on that sharp pain.

He masked out all of it—the pain that made him feel like the contents of his chest were being scooped out, the sense of loss that didn't feel real, and the rage that made him howl at the unreasonableness—with the taste of the blood in his mouth.

"Sir, you seem like you are in pain. Are you okay?"

"Sir, you seem like you have a stomachache. Did you defecate?"

I can hear two people nearby calling out to me with voices of concern. It hasn't been long, but they were voices I'd gotten used to hearing. They are sometimes noisy, sometimes annoying, sometimes relieving, and sometimes it felt like I could trust them.

—But now they sounded completely different, ringing cruelly against Subaru's eardrums.

"—Yeah, I'm fine," he replied.

He gave a short answer while under their gaze, then raised his face while keeping his eyes shut.

The reason he'd pushed the blanket against his face was because the strong emotion that had been gushing out from within had somehow disappeared behind the curtains. If he opened his eyes, they might be slightly red, a remnant of his emotions.

But they won't figure it out if I keep my eyes shut.

Subaru breathed quietly, again and again. He tried to keep his mind calm.

He had survived the initial shock of being forgotten and gradually gotten over the despair that had been tormenting him, but his heart was still crying out in pain at the sense of loss.

But even so, I can at least take my fate into my own hands and find a way to move forward.

"I'm sorry, about well, making you guys worried. It's just that, I'm still half asleep."

Subaru had a glib tongue that could spit words out like there was no tomorrow. His dry lips had produced a frivolous lie that didn't reflect what was in his heart.

"Ha-ha." Subaru faked a laugh in a husky voice. —Still, he couldn't open his eyes.

I wish the world would go back to normal while I close my eyes and stare at the darkness. I'd be okay with it if this is all just a fleeting dream and none of this is happening, though.

Aah, how wonderful, annoying, and joyous is the thought that all of this is just Roswaal's plan to trick me.

Such excuses seemed like great ideas to Subaru, and he thought they had a possibility of being true. He felt the thing blocking his chest disappearing.

Now feeling relieved thanks to his excuses, Subaru let out a small, clear sigh.

"—Yeah, that's it."

He opened his trembling eyelids, and the world in front of him that had been temporarily blurred expanded, making him see things as they were.

The twins were standing at both sides of the bed with their hands rested on it, looking at him. Ram and Rem’s familiar faces were looking at him with indifference just like before. Subaru couldn’t see any sort of emotion in them. Everything he’d built up with them until now had all but disappeared.

““Sir—?”” they said simultaneously with a confused tone of voice.

Their gaze moved and followed Subaru as he jumped out of the bed. He put some distance between them, hastened by the fear he was feeling.

“Sir, you must not move so suddenly. You still need to rest.”

“Sir, it is dangerous to move suddenly. You still need to rest properly.”

Subaru twisted reflexively and dodged the fingers that were being extended towards him. The twins’ eyes narrowed in pain, but he wasn’t in the right state of mind to notice that change.

It was an unbearable sensation.

The feeling of being treated like a stranger by someone you knew. He had experienced the same feeling just the other day, in a crowded street, in a back alley, in an abandoned house. But it was most certainly different from those times. The situation was different, the time was different, the experience was different.

It isn’t like doing it all over again with people I barely knew. This is like a one-sided do-over with the people I’d definitely formed a bond with.

He felt nauseous and wanted to puke due to how odd it felt for someone he once knew to become somebody else entirely.

The twin maids had begun to notice something peculiar about Subaru, who was staring at them with a feeling similar to fear in his trembling eyes.

A slight silence fell in the room. Neither party could act, waiting to see what the other party would do. So… “I’m sorry—I can’t do this right now.”

Subaru’s action was only a split second faster than the twins, who tried to stop him as he got ahold of the doorknob and rushed out into the hallway. While feeling the cold floor of the hallway under his feet, Subaru exhaled loudly and ran furiously, blindly rushing forward.

He didn’t know what he was running from. He didn’t know why he had to run. But he kept running. His instincts told him that they would catch up to him if he stopped.

There’s just no way I can stay in that place. An alarm is ringing loudly in my head. My heart, my instincts, and my soul are screaming that I shouldn’t stay there. I don’t know why, but they just keep screaming.

He ran past a number of similar doors, haphazardly running through the hallway as if he was going to fall miserably at any moment.

While gasping, he placed his hand on a door as if he had been led to it and opened it.

—He slipped into the forbidden library, where a large number of books were lined up on shelves.

2

Once the door closes, the library will be completely cut off from the outside world. After which, people will have to open every door in the mansion to find the one that leads here.

Breathing heavily, he rested his back against the door and sank down to the floor. Even though he had sat down, his knees were trembling. He extended his fingers towards them to stop them from shaking miserably, but even his fingers were trembling uncontrollably as if they belonged to a drunk who’d run out of alcohol.

“I might be able to perform well if I play paper sumo, ha-ha.”

His self-mockery lacked sharpness, and the dry laughter only accentuated the emptiness he was feeling.

The air in the tranquil library was filled with the smell of old paper, and it flooded Subaru’s tense heart with relief. The only comfort he could get now was by clinging to it, even though he knew it was something that wouldn’t last. He took deep breaths repeatedly, again and again. And then…

“—You are truly rude to enter without knocking.”

A taunting voice reached Subaru, who was repeatedly catching his breath like a fish out of water, from far behind the shelves.

Sitting on a wooden chair in the back of the dimly lit room was a young girl with cream-colored hair. It was Beatrice, the guardian of the Forbidden Library at Roswaal Manor—she never changed, never budged, and maintained her distance from Subaru. She closed the book in her hand with a plop. Then, with the book that was too large for her tiny body still in her hand, she asked, “How did you break the Door Crossing, I wonder… Back then, and now.”

“I’m sorry but let me stay for a bit. Please.”

He pleaded by joining both his hands and started meditating without waiting for her reply.

—I need to face reality and myself in a quiet place where nobody can disturb me.

I need to calm down. Accept reality. I am Natsuki Subaru. This is another world. I’m in Roswaal’s mansion. The names of the twins are Ram and Rem and the girl in front of me is Beatrice. And this is the forbidden library of this mansion. I can enter it quite easily due to my intuition that I’ve named ‘Door Breaker’. I don’t have a wound on my left hand. I don’t have proof of my effort. The promised morning won’t come. The promise I made. That I have to go somewhere with someone—

“Oh yeah, Emilia…”

He recalled her silver hair shimmering in the moonlight and her shy smile. He recalled the promise he'd made with the girl under the moon, with the girl that shone equally as bright as the stars in the sky.

"Beatrice."

"...You aren't adding any honorifics, I suppose."

"What's today's month and date…? Do you know what the time is?"

Subaru, who had been quiet for a while, started asking questions one-sidedly without pausing. Beatrice seemed offended by it. She looked at his behavior with annoyance and then snorted. "Time, dates, and months are meaningless to Betty since she spends her time in a library with frozen time, I suppose."

"What's your point?" Subaru asked.

"It's none of Betty's business, I suppose."

"Damn it! You are useless! I was an idiot to have expected anything from you!"

"This boy, saying whatever he wants to…"

Beatrice crinkled up her nose after hearing Subaru's unfiltered words that lacked any sort of consideration for others.

"But," Subaru continued talking to the girl who had a frown on her pretty face, "at least you didn't treat me like a creep. And you mentioned how I broke the door back then. Shit, you are confusing!"

"What's up with your noisy monologues… Betty doesn't want you to be noisy in the library. It ruins the tranquil atmosphere, I suppose," Beatrice replied with a sigh, looking fed up with his attitude as he glared at her in silence. "It was just three or four hours ago that I teased you for being ill-mannered."

"What happened to the whole the library's time is frozen thing…?"

Subaru didn't forget to jump at her mistake even though he was completely spent. After acting upon his urge, he thought about what Beatrice had just said.

—Beatrice and Subaru's encounter three or four hours ago.

What it means is that this is when I first woke up in the mansion. I had just broken the infinite hallway illusion and found the right door on my first try.

Back then, Beatrice pulled out a huge chunk of something like mental power against my will, leaving me unconscious.

When I woke up the next time, I was on the bed and Ram and Rem were there—

"So, in short, this is the second time I've woken up in the mansion."

Things made sense after Subaru was able to remember the scenes in his vague memory. That was the only day when the twin maids came together to wake him up. On top of that, the first day was the only time he'd been in a position to use the guestroom bed.

So… "I went back four days from five days in the future. Is that what it means…?"

Subaru defined his current state after looking properly into the situation he was in. He had travelled back in time once again under the guidance of some mysterious power; in a way he didn't want, on a time axis he didn't wish to be in.

He could understand what had happened, but accepting it was a different story. Subaru held his head and started thinking of the reason why he had gone back like this. He had only been going back in time for a day, which happened to be the day he had been summoned to this word. Using the experience from his three deaths, he was able to save Emilia. He thought he had escaped the loop by doing so.

In fact, the phenomenon in which I travel back in time, which I named Return by Death, hasn't happened until now, and my five days in the mansion went by very peacefully.

And now I travelled back in time out of the blue—there wasn't any sort of a sign, either.

"The conditions are different from last time, huh? I just assumed I went back in time when I died, but does it actually occur after a week…? No, if that's the case, then…"

It wouldn't explain why it chose this day to return me to. I'm not sure what sort of theory is behind me going back in time, but if I think about the times I repeated things, then there must be some set of rules that it follows. And one of those deals with the place I return to.

If Subaru hadn't escaped that loop, then he'd have woken up in front of that scar-faced grocer again.

"But in reality, the view in front of me went from a middle-aged guy with a scar to two angelic maids. But I, on the receiving end, experienced hell instead of heaven."

While saying that, Subaru touched his body here and there, making sure everything was in order. If it was following the same rule till now, then the reason why he had travelled back in time was clear. Which is—Subaru had died.

But the problem with that is… "Suppose I did die, but then how did I die? Nothing was out of the ordinary before I fell asleep. Even after I fell asleep, I never felt like I was going to die or anything."

Even if I was guided into a deep sleep, is it even possible to get killed without you knowing?

There was a possibility that he had been killed by a poisonous gas while he was asleep. But in that case, it would mean that he had been assassinated, and it didn't make any sense if there was no reason for it.

I don't think I'm worth that much at the moment at all.

"If that's the case, then perhaps it's a forced loop due to failing to meet the clear conditions."

If we consider this a game, then it's the effect of not triggering the necessary flags. But I don't know who planted them, so I have no idea what the trigger is for this one. Beating a game with unclear triggers is hard. Without caring much, I'd always end up relying on strategy sites to beat games, which was a bad aspect of the internet.

"Talking with friends, exchanging information by word of mouth, sometimes getting false info, and then moving forward step-by-step… That's how it's supposed to be done."

"I thought I heard you mumbling a while ago. Now the atmosphere has been ruined, in fact," muttered Beatrice in an unamused tone as she watched Subaru sink into a sea of thoughts.

Subaru lifted his head up and saw the girl, her lips curled as if to say she was frustrated at him for ignoring her. "Life and Death—such dull, insignificant things are only measured in human terms. All that resulted from your incessant mumbling was a bunch of delusional ramblings. It is not even something worth discussing, in fact."

The girl shrugged her shoulders and brushed him off dismissively. Subaru stood up, somewhat relieved by her unchanging hostility towards him.

He brushed the dust off his bottom and reached for the doorknob, but then heard a voice from behind. "You are going, I suppose?"

"I have something to confirm," he replied. "I'll do the sulking after I'm done with that. Thanks for the help."

"I didn't do anything… Hurry up and leave. I need to shift the door again." Her tone had no sign of gentleness, but it felt quite pleasant for Subaru now.

Beatrice hadn't intended on doing so, but Subaru felt like her words had given him the push he needed to take a step forward. He turned the doorknob and took a step into the cold breeze blowing his way. The wind jostled his short bangs, and his eyes hurt a little, so he shielded them with an arm. After the wind died down, he felt the grass under his bare feet—and the thing that came into his view was…

“Ah, she really is beautiful.”

My heart has been beating out of my chest ever since the silver-haired girl panting in the garden came into my view.

How very thoughtful of her, Subaru commented sarcastically at the cocky girl internally. And then…

“Subaru!”

Upon noticing him, the girl widened her amethyst eyes and rushed towards him without a second to lose. The word that spilled from her lips made up of three syllables and rang like a silver bell made Subaru’s heart tingle no matter how many times he heard it.

Naturally, Subaru’s legs gravitated towards the girl rushing his way. They were now facing each other, and the girl lowered her eyes in relief after looking his whole body up and down. However, she quickly regained her composure and straightened her posture.

“Hey, you made me worry. Rem and Ram were in a panic searching for you all over the manor, saying you had disappeared not too long after you woke up.”

“Mm, sorry. I got caught by Beatrice for a bit.”

“Again? I heard she pulled a prank on you not too long ago…”

Subaru almost reached his hand out at Emilia involuntarily at the sight of her beauty. She was leaning towards him in a concerned manner, but he restrained his weak heart.

If I do this here, it would be far too thoughtless of me. It would mean that me disturbing the tranquility of Beatrice’s room was meaningless. My objective wasn’t just to frame her.

Subaru could only respond to Emilia’s sorrowful face with a vague smile. Despite his uncharacteristic attitude, she was somewhat distant and didn’t press him.

It was obvious since there was no way a girl who had only spent less than an hour with Subaru would know that it was uncharacteristic of the current Subaru to do so.

There is an unfillable gap of four days between her and I. There are obviously four days that only I know of.

“It seems as if my thoughts are being influenced by extraterrestrials,” Subaru commented.

“Extra, terrestrials…?” Emilia asked. “What, what does that mean?”

“It just means the poet in me got a little too carried away. Leaving that aside, well, I’m glad you’re safe.”

A skirt above the knees and black knee socks. It was a sporty style with black as the base color; it was the same as the one that had delighted him on the first day.

Naturally, the body beneath her outfit made it through the whole loot house fiasco without getting a scratch on it.

“‘Body beneath her outfit’... The thought of that really gets me going, if you know what I mean.”

“Thank you for saving me… That’s what I wanted to say, but I reaaally don’t like those eyes.”

Being glared at by Emilia, Subaru was able to put on a natural wry smile.

His condition was returning to normal, albeit gradually.

I need to rev up the gears, lick my lips, and get off my ass and move forward. Come to think of it, I am a lucky guy. I didn’t start over from the grocer this time. There’s no dying a dog’s death flag by the hands of Ton-Chin-Kan, and neither is there starting from the point where Emilia’s likability for me is at its lowest because I said something stupid to her. Elsa’s gutting festival end is also out of the equation. After overcoming the battle in the loot house and sharing a life and death situation together, we must have developed a passionate, fiery bond that no one can interfere with. Though only a tiny flame now, it won't take much for it to instantly burst into an enormous blaze.

"I am a positive thinker."

And so, looking back at things with a positive outlook made the current situation feel like an opportunity.

Unlike last time, in that loot house where I had to make it through an absolute life or death crisis, there is nothing at stake this time until I come across the direct cause of this loop.

In other words, all Subaru had to do was calmly follow the route that he had already experienced and modify it so that it became his ideal route. By taking the same steps as before, he'd be able to make the promise of that moonlit night.

—If that's the case, then how much more promising would the promise of the moonlit night be if I took a far better route?

"Ha, this time I am at the climax from the start," Subaru said.

"Seems like you are getting pumped up, but is your body fine?" Emilia asked.

"Hm? Oh yeah, I am in my super dooper best condition. I am a little short on blood, my life force has been taken away from me, my mental power and physical strength were greatly drained when I woke up, and I feel like my mind was beaten with a bat, but I'm fine!"

"Isn't that called being wounded all over?"

"A pinch is an opportunity, and a baseball game only really starts when there are two outs in the ninth inning and you're the last one up to bat."

Subaru snapped his fingers and gave a thumbs up. In the face of his attitude, Emilia relaxed her shoulders as if her worries had melted away.

"Anyway, it's fine if you are well. Well, do you want to go back inside? I've got a bit of business to attend to here, so I'm staying."

"Oh, talk time with the spirits, right? I won't disturb you, so can I stay? Wake up Puck, too. I want to pet him in that state."

"I don't mind, but you really shouldn't interrupt, alright? Since it isn't a game." Emilia tilted her head at Subaru as he wiggled his fingers, telling him not to interrupt her like she was speaking to a child.

Subaru found her elder sister-like gesture endearing—lighting the fire of determination up in his heart.

"Alright then, let's go, let's go. Time is limited and the world is vast. And mine and Emilia-tan's has just begun."

"That's right… What? What did you just say? Where did 'Emilia-tan' come from?"

Although Emilia objected, she said, "It's alright, it's alright." Subaru then pushed on her back and led her to the usual place. He knew she would lose her will to correct him after he called out to her like that. And even that was one of the bonds that had been formed during the four days that had been lost.

"—I'll take it back," Subaru murmured as he followed the back of the girl who was moving deeper into the garden with a disgruntled look. He stopped and looked at the silver-haired girl as she moved away, then gazed towards the sky.

—I can see the despicable sun rising, still low in the eastern sky.

I gotta do this all over again. And I don't mind one bit as long as I can make it to the time of the promise. It'd be great if I could see the sunrise with the girl I made a promise with, with the girl that looks good under the moon.

—I have time, and I know the answer.

"I don't know who's harassing me, but I'll take everything back and make you cry. Never underestimate a modern teenager's temper."

He clenched his fist against the sky and declared war on an unknown entity. It was a clear declaration of rebellion for the first time since he had come to this world, against the being that had thrown him into the loop and had summoned him here.

The second loop, and the battle to get past the week at Roswaal Manor and see where those days would take him, began. In order to fulfill the promise made that night—

“Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!”

Chapter 15:
The Second Misjudgement and a Betrayal of Expectations

1

The rising sun set things into motion and the second first day in Roswaal Manor began.

I just need to watch the sun rise and set for five days. And I obviously need to follow the flow of the previous loop as much as I can. That was the policy Subaru had taken.

True to his determination in the garden, Subaru intended on fulfilling the pre-loop promise he'd made with Emilia. In order to do so, he had to make it to that moonlit night again and make that promise with her.

There was one conclusion that could more or less be established as a general rule in loop-style stories: if you follow the same route, the story will end up in the same place. This was only natural since it would follow the same sequence of events as the previous one. The thoughts and actions of those involved would overlap, resulting in the same end result.

What Subaru cared about was changing the end result alone into a future he desired, as well as doing everything that happened in between again to create the same memories. In other words, his ultimate goal was to get the most out of the loop.

By making use of quick save and load, let's make the conclusion more to my liking. Such was the noble, yet somewhat evil, plan Subaru had, but… "—It seems like, things took a turn for the worse for some reason," he complained listlessly, blowing bubbles as he sank into the tub.

Everything had been going against Subaru's expectations from day one.

Subaru looked back on his day while floating in the tub with his arms and legs spread out.

The morning filled with determination and the great tragedy that followed with tremendous momentum.

Right after the morning routine with Emilia, Subaru had secretly made up his mind to follow the steps of the previous loop.

To be honest, I don't think I was able to trace the details of what I had said in the spur of the moment, but the general flow of the conversation must have been the same as last time. The right to pet Puck, Emilia's nickname, and the first interaction with Roswaal. And knowing the value of the insignia and Emilia's status.

I'm not sure if I was able to present my reactions to them naturally in between, but I want to praise myself for doing it well. I feel like giving myself a star and saying, "You did a great job."

"If I had to grade it, the result would be pretty pathetic though, so I'll pass on that."

Leaving aside the criticism of his acting, things were going according to Subaru's plans, at least a little.

After that, the topic naturally shifted to Subaru's reward, and just like last time, he changed his class from 'Shut-in from Another World' to 'Apprentice Servant of a Perverted Nobleman.'

What followed was Ram being appointed as his instructor, and then his first day of work began after he was shown around the manor. —Things took a strange turn from here.

"I don't know why, but it's different from last time. I felt like I was already prepared for everything, too… I was totally gonna go all 'I learned the answer to this question in my Shinken classes!'" muttered Subaru as he poked his head out of the bathtub, resting his chin on the edge of it.

While his entire body was getting warmed up, he could feel his joints aching as the memories came back to him. What made Subaru have second thoughts about his policy of following the actions he took in the previous loop as closely as possible was the nature of the work Ram had assigned him. He had to do things like kitchen work, basic room cleaning, and sometimes washing and folding clothes. The tasks were the same as the previous loop's, but…

"The work content had become much more difficult…"

I should simply say that the amount and quality of work I was entrusted with had both increased. If I had to put it in a bad way, then the amount of work I had been forced to do had increased.

"I was exhausted with the work last time, but it was also hard this time… Damn it, I thought it'd be a bit easier to do since it was the same stuff as before."

Subaru complained about the unexpectedly harsh situation while at the same time concluding inwardly that his situation wasn't all that great.

This was the result of trying to follow the previous loop to a T. If the content had changed so much from day one, then there was no way he could match the flow of the second day onwards with the previous loop's.

On one hand, he thought he didn't need to worry about the small differences, but on the other, he feared the possibility of such small changes accumulating and creating a huge change at the end.

"Especially in this case since I don't know why I went back…"

The situation this time was that I had gone to bed normally, but when I woke up, I realized I went back in time... Thinking of a countermeasure this time is a pain since, unlike the last time I died and went back, it's not as clear since I don't even know why I went back.

"I wonder if I can trust my memory if things are this different…?" Subaru couldn't help but whine, then sank into the warm water to regain his composure.

He then recalled the immensely rich day when he first met Emilia in the royal capital. Although Subaru had taken a different path each time when it came to the finer details, the main events that occurred each time were the same.

I won't be able to tell if I messed up until I miss a big event. One such event that had left a lasting impression on Subaru recently, besides his first day here, was his promise with Emilia.

As long as I can get to it, I'll be able to do the same things as last time. And after I do that, all I have to do is figure out what happened after that.

His thoughts, which he had been unable to formulate during his hectic workday, somehow managed to come together in the solitude of the bathroom, allowing him to create a firm course of action. Naturally, Subaru noticed how good he was feeling in the warm water, but due to running out of air, he emerged from its embrace. After emerging, he coughed out the water in his lungs and took a deep breath while feeling the cool air on his skin, but then regretted doing so since—

"—Hey, may I accompany you?"

Right in front of Subaru's eyes was a naked nobleman with a hand on his hip. A cool breeze blew between his legs, reaching him. Naturally, since they were in the bathroom, the tall man was naked. Whether it was just how noblemen were, or because it was only natural to do in a bathroom, he was buck naked and wasn't even trying to hide his Excalibur. He was standing there at an arm's length, looking down at Subaru with his Excalibur swaying in the wind. It feels like a penis is looking down at me, which feels pretty damn humiliating.

"It's all reserved. I refuse."

"It's a facility in my mansion, so is it not myyy property? I'll dooo as I wish."

“Then don’t ask. You can take a bath on your own.”

“Oh, that’s harsh. And youuu don’t seem to understand. This bath is indeeeed my property, but…” Roswaal knelt and got closer to Subaru, who was looking up at him with disgust from inside the tub, and then extended his arm and gently pulled the vulnerable Subaru’s chin up. “Would iiit not also be correct to say that you are my property too since you are my servant?”

Chomp

“You didn’t hesitate!”

Subaru took a big bite of the unpleasant fingertip holding his chin, making Roswaal yelp, then backstroked away from him.

The bathtub is half the size of a twenty-five-meter pool. The huge, pointless, and spacious bathtub is lame, and it shows off that nobleman’s taste for indulgence, but it’s a pretty cool place where you can feel like a king while soaking in the tub alone.

Thus, Subaru’s bath time after work had been a time of respite for him all throughout the previous loop, but… “An unexpected event again…” he muttered as he did a backward turn inside the tub. As his back drifted on the surface of the water, he curled himself into a small ball by pulling his knees in, executing a special technique he’d named the Warm Water Coconut Technique.

He let himself become one with the waves, as if he’d become an inorganic object, and started thinking as he stared into the hot water.

In the last four days, there hadn’t been a single occasion where I had to bathe with Roswaal. Above all, Roswaal was extremely busy during the last loop, and I almost never had a chance to interact with him while I was in the manor.

It seemed like Ram and Rem were meeting him on a regular basis, but as for Subaru, he could count the number of times he’d interacted with him after the first day on one hand, excluding meals.

I haven't changed my routine of taking long baths to relax after a long day of work, so I guess that means he's the one who's changed.

"...Is thaaat, fun?" Roswaal asked.

"I'm pretending to be like the Coconut Boss, a tropical fruit and a lethal weapon. It's also known as the drifting killer of the beach. Despite its idyllic appearance, it can fall straight down from above the heads of unwary tourists, right on the back of the head."

"You really are good when it comes to babbling… Oh excuse me, I'll be occupying the space next to you."

Roswaal sat next to the floating Subaru, sank into the bathtub, and let out a long sigh. It went without saying that taking a hot bath was a universal pleasure. Subaru started putting some distance between him and the large, overly thin man that had drawn close to him, then stretched his body without a care in the world.

"Well then, Master. Isn't it a bit late to be taking a bath?"

"I've been a little busy with work, you seeee. It got laaate while I was dealing with it. Buuut, I'm glad I got the chance to talk with you like this. How was your first day?"

"It was productive, if anything. The muscles all over my body wanna do pillow talk. Wanna listen? I'm sure they'll whisper their woes into your ears until morning."

"It's a tempting proposal, buuuut my bed has already been reserved for the night. Maybe another time."

He started talking about it like it was nothing. "Damn it," Subaru cursed in frustration at his inability to do anything.

Even Subaru could guess that the relationship between the nobleman in front of his eyes and the twin maids was beyond shady, and it was an undeniable fact that they had such a relationship. Although Subaru was only interested in Emilia, and actually took it seriously by not showing interest in other women, he didn't have some warped sense of pleasure at the sight of two pretty girls becoming someone else's like, "Hee-hee, this kinda feels like being cuckholded!”

But he couldn’t even be mature about it and say, “Please make them happy no matter what!” All Subaru could do was envy him.

“Oh yeah, are Ram and Rem doooing well? They’ve been working at the manor for a long time, so I’m sure they know how to treat their juniors.”

Roswaal mentioned the names of the girls Subaru was thinking about, whether he was aware of Subaru’s inner thoughts or not.

I feel like Roswaal is playing me like a fiddle, but… “Yeah,” Subaru said with a nod before continuing. “Not so well with Remrin, but I’m getting along with Ramchi. Rather, isn’t Ramchi too unaware of social boundaries? She’s been treating me the same way since I was a guest.”

“It’s fiiine, Rem will assist her in the things she lacks. Sisters should help each other. Both of them are doing really well in that regard.”

“From what I have heard, Rem is the one who helps out with everything, and that Ram is the inferior version.”

There’s a clear distinction between the sisters when it comes to who was better in every household chore. The elder sister lags a step or two behind the younger sister in all of the skills. If you think about it normally, it’d totally end up making her develop a crazy inferiority complex, but... “But I asked her about it, and she immediately answered that she was the better one since she was older. That kind of brazenness scared me.”

“If we were to talk about brazenness, then you are also quiiite something… But I see. So, she answered like that. That’s really…”

Roswaal shook his head sentimentally and leered at Subaru. Being stared at by his emotionless, heterochromatic eyes made him feel like his thoughts were being read by them, so he turned his body away slightly. And then…

“Being nosy aaand unreserved. Thaaat’s a good thing.”

"This isn't something I should be praised for, yet I'm being praised for it. It feels kinda strange! I take everything literally, so be careful if you're being sarcastic, alright? I'm the kinda guy that goes home when the teacher shouts at me to go home."

Natsuki Subaru was the kind of guy who would stir things up and then leave. He had a solitary nature and was born to be alone.

Roswaal let out a little chuckle at Subaru's words. "School, I seeee," he muttered, then closed one of his eyes. "I'm not being sarcastic or anything. I truly believe it to be a gooood thing. Siiince those two live in their own little world, something might change if someone stiiired things up a bit from the outside."

"Is that sooo."

"Thaaat's how it is."

There the two were, neck-deep in the bathtub, facing each other and exchanging sighs while feeling the warm, relaxing sensation, and sharing in their admiration for it. But then Subaru suddenly raised his eyebrows, as if he had just thought of something. "Hey, Rosy. I have a question. Can you reply with an answer?"

"I'm nooot used to nicknames, but it makes me happy to have one. And you have a question? Well, if it iiis something I can answer using my broad and deep knowledge, then I don't mind answering it after giving it some deep thought."

"It's my first time hearing a guy say, 'I know a lot' in such a roundabout way… Leaving that aside, how does this bath work?"

Subaru knocked on the bottom of the bathtub and asked the question that had been on his mind for a long time. The tub that Subaru and Roswaal were in was made of stone. It was polished and smooth to the touch, and while it looked a little rough, it wasn't. The bath was located in a part of the basement, and the bathing area was unisex.

However, the hot water gets exchanged each time someone uses the bath, so going in after Emilia and drinking the bathwater won't give me any sort of satisfaction.

“It… It’s not like I actually drank it. I noticed it before drinking it.”

“Your adventurous nature neeever ceases to amaze me. Is iiit because you are young…? But then, I wonder if that idea would have occurred to me when I was young?”

Roswaal looked distant as he thought of the past, and after pondering for a few moments, he returned to reality. “Anyway, the answer is simple. There is a layer of magic crystals of the fire element beneath the tub. When it’s time to take a bath, mana activates the crystals, which heat the water. The same mechanism is used in the kitchen toooo, no?”

“Yeah, so the kettle and the other things follow the same principle. No, like there weren’t any gas stoves or induction heaters, so I was wondering how things were done from time to time.”

While Ram and Rem were handling things quickly, Subaru was in the background, timidly peeling a carrot-like vegetable.

But then I have no idea how the whole mana activation thing that he just casually explained to me works, and as long as I don't know how it works, I won't be able to help with the cooking or warming up the bath.

"Hey, can you do any of that mana hocus pocus if you aren't a magic user?"

"Thaaat isn't the case. Every living thing has a gate. Even animals and plants are no exceeeption. If this wasn't the case, then our civilization that relies on magic crystals wouldn't haaave developed to thiiis extent."

Subaru silently showed his lack of understanding at the appearance of the new word. Roswaal laughed at his sulky childlike attitude and started explaining. "The way you interact with spirits and what you did at breakfast this morning make you a biiit mysteriously out of touch with what is considered normal. Ram was also complaining about it, you knooow?"

"Huuuh, whaaat, reaaally? She was talking behind my back? That's really sinister. Oh nooo."

"She waaas covering up for you as much as she was complaining, and that's pretty rare."

"I was thinking bad about her, but she was just being a tsundere! I'm sorry, Boss!"

It's her growing soft on me, just like Emilia told me in the previous loop. But she's like falling for me on the first day, so isn't she a bit too easy to get as a heroine? I'm strangely concerned for her even though I never viewed her as a love interest to begin with.

"Hm." Roswaal touched his jaw and sighed while looking at Subaru who was shouting. "Alright. I'll give you a lecture heeere. You are a little ignorant, so let me teach you what it means to be a magic user."

"Hold on there buddy, I can't unhear that now. Are you saying that while knowing that I'm the guy who lived next door to Kawasaki, who was unrivaled when it came to fighting, and was no doubt the manliest of men, and whose knowledge and looks were in a different dimension, and who'd receive barrages of fancy words praising his greatness?"

"Who is this Kawasaki?"

"An old classmate of mine who's four grades ahead of me. His fiancée left him recently, near their wedding date due to the pre-wedding blues, and now he's heartbroken. Such a wonderful thing."

Although Roswaal didn't understand what Subaru meant, he must have sensed that it was something worthless, so he casually ignored what he was saying about Kawasaki and continued his lecture.

"Weeell then, leeet us start from the basics. You certainly know about Gates, don't you?"

"No, even if you start off with something like that as if I'm supposed to know it, the natural response from a person who doesn't know what it is would be like, 'What's that…?'"

"Your tooone dropped suddenly. So, you don't even know about Gates… If I had to put it mildly, it would be like, 'Huh? No cap?'"

"Did I use it correctly?" Roswaal asked Subaru to grade his usage of 'No cap' and Subaru replied with a thumbs up to show that he had scored an A, then they went for a high-five.

They pointed a finger at each other, as if saying 'Eyyyy', confirming that it had been used properly.

They then continued with the lecture.

"So, so, what is a Gate exactly? What happens if you have that, and everything is like 'who are you now?!' Shit, I'm getting high!"

"To put it simply, a Gate is a doorway that allows mana to pass in and out of your body. You absorb mana through the gate, and you release the mana through the gate. Whether you are going to utilize mana or store mana, it is essential."

"Gotcha. So it's like some kind of MP faucet…"

Roswaal's simple explanation made sense to Subaru.

I've heard the word 'Gate' a couple of times before, and it was affirmed that it was approximately what I had imagined it to be, so that means—

"If everyone has a gate, it means I have one too, right?"

"Well, of cooourse you have one, as long as you are sure that you are a human being. Are you human?"

"I haven't seen a more human-like human than me! —Puny and weak… An ordinary human."

"Well isn't thaaat a cool line? Thooough it doesn't suit the situation."

At least, it wasn't something a man should say to another man in the bathroom while buck naked.

But Subaru didn't care since this was possibly the second happiest he'd felt since getting summoned to this world after obtaining that information. He felt like his heart was going to burst due to the immense excitement he was feeling.

"Of course, meeting Emilia-tan was the happiest thing, but this one is also pretty amazing! So, I can finally become the magician I'd always dreamt about… I thought I had to wait 13 more years!"

"It's true that you need time to get good, but…thirteen years is too much, dooon't you think?"

"It's just a figure of speech, and the magicians I know of turn into one automatically on their birthday. Though that title is within my reach!"

If I still felt the same as I did before getting summoned into this world, then that would have been my fate, but here I have a girl that I am interested in who I can approach with my passionate heart burning with love.

I can say this now: This is why I was summoned here.

“I’ll just go in and pew pew and graduate—that’s the ending!”

“I’m happy you can get that excited about the topic of magic users, but even if you have a Gate, talent still plays quite a big role, you seeee. Though I know I’m just boaaasting, not many people are blessed wiiith as much talent as I from birth, you know?”

Beep!

Subaru heard the sound of a flag being established.

Roswaal was speaking confidently, but little did he know that the buck-naked man floating in the tub in front of him was the ‘Invited One’ that got summoned from another world. Subaru was no good when it came to strength, no good when it came to knowledge, and his luck was zero, or rather, in the negative, but a new hope appeared for him now.

—And that’s, magic.

Subaru, feeling really sure about it for some reason, clenched his fists. And, unable to resist the urge, he swam towards Roswaal. “Hey, hey, Rosy. Magic, magic, let’s talk about magic. I can feel it in my bones. There’s no way I’m missing this big wave!”

“Is that sooo?” Let us continue then. Magic has four basic elements. Do youuu know what they are?”

“I dooon’t.”

“Ah-ha, pointless, purposeless, and innocent ignorance. How wonderful. I’m in a good mood, so I’ll explain. The four elements are: fire, water, wind, and earth. Did you get thaaat?”

“All clear! And now continue, pretty please.”

Though neither of them had drunk any alcohol, they were drunk on the mood and on a high. Roswaal, in a good mood due to being relied upon, nodded, then spoke. “The fire element is related to heat. The water element is related to life and healing. The wind element is related to the divine protections outside the bodies of living things. The divine protections within the body are related to the earth element. They are mostly divided into these four, aaaand on top of that, if a normal person has an affinity for one of them, it's considered good. Oh, and as a side nooote, I have an affinity for all four, you seeee."

"Woah, what a cocky bastard! But we won't be able to move forward if I get bothered by that, so I'll just pay you some lip service! Oh yeah baby, so amazing, fuck me, and that's all she wrote, folks! Now bring on the rest of the lecture! So, is there a way to find out your element?!"

Roswaal nodded magnanimously. "Ha-haa," he laughed and smiled gleefully at Subaru, who was splashing his hands in the water like he had some sort of plan in mind, then extended his palm. "Ooof course. When you are a magic user of my level, you can teeell with a mere touch. Well, in reality, I neeeed to enter the Gate itself to check."

"You serious?! No cap?! Woah, it's here! My expectations are through the roof! Come on, cop a feel and tell me all about it. Tell me about what, you say? About me!"

Subaru, forgetting that they were both naked, inched closer, wagging an invisible tail quickly enough to leave an afterimage. Roswaal looked at him as if he was looking at an untrained dog and smiled, then placed his palm on his forehead.

"Alright, now please give me a moooment. Oh, and do tell me if you feel an itch somewhere."

"My ass feels itchy! But I'll scratch it myself! I'll save you the effort, so just focus on finding out my element! Woaaah, my heart is shaking with excitement!"

I want to forget all my worries for the time being and think about the wonder that lies ahead. I have hope, I have a dream, and I have a sense of certainty.

—That magic is going to be my fangs in the world I'd gotten summoned into.

Subaru wore a twisted smile, his sanpaku eyes glowing and making him seem belligerent. He waited for the result as his eyes glowed brightly. And then…

"—Alllright, I gooot it."

"Finally, I was waiting. What could it be, what could it be. Is it fire, reflecting my fiery passion? Or is it water, reflecting how cool and levelheaded I am? Or is it wind, which blows through a grassland in a cool and fresh manner like my temperament? No, no. Maybe my nice-guy nature that likes to take care of younger people and is easygoing and reliable came out, so my element might be earth, I guess?"

"Yeah, it's Yin."

"All rejected?!" Subaru reflexively exclaimed, as if he'd been diagnosed with a bad disease, not believing what he was hearing. And he wasn't acting, either. He truly was disappointed.

Roswaal opened his mouth slowly and spoke. "I have no doubt that iiiit is indeed Yin. Your connection with the other four elements is raaather weak, though that is pretty raaare."

"What the heck is Yin, anyways? Aren't there only four classifications? This has gotta be a classification error or something!"

"I didn't tell you this, but aside from the four main elements, there are the elements of Yang and Yin as well. Howeeever, as there aren't many people who have affinities for them, I decided to omit them from my explanation."

It seems like I'm one of the rare few, huh.

After hearing about it, his slightly panicking mind started to calm down.

Yeah, it's a super rare element—which means… "I'm sure it's a somewhat amazing element, right? Like it's something that only appears once every 5000 years?! Like you can use magic that people with other magic affinities can't use?!"

"Let's seee, Yin Magic is famous for...blocking an opponent's sight, cutting off sound, and slowing others down—those are the kind of spells that can be used, I suppoose."

"It specializes in debuffs?!"

I was expecting to be able to use some super destructive magic, or to be able to drag my enemies into a realm of darkness and rip them to shreds, or something powerful like that.

Judging from the way Roswaal was talking, it seemed like he really was feeling bad for him since he was taking his time to explain interference and debuff skills to him.

I wasn't given strength, intelligence, or any cheat skills… "And my element specializes in debuffs…"

"Byyy the way, you don't seem to have any talent for magic at all. For instance, if I'm a 10, the highest you can reach is 4."

"That's the last thing I wanted to hear! There's no God or Buddha in this world anymore!"

Subaru splashed the warm water violently and made a desperate pose. Roswaal looked at Subaru, who was floating on the surface of the water with his arms stretch out, with pity. However, Subaru, who was seriously disappointed, didn't feel like coming up with a witty comeback.

Roswaal still tried to cheer Subaru up, nonetheless.

"There, there. Yin-type magic can be handy, too. You can turn off people's sense of sight when you don't want to be seen, and you can stop sound from getting out if you don't want something to be heard."

"I see, so it's meant for holding secret talks, or rather, secret meetings. This is good, ha-ha-ha!" Subaru replied as he got up and started patting Roswaal's shoulder. And… "...Is that…cool?"

"Leaving aside it being cool or lame, girls who want to hold a secret meeting would suuurely find it useful. It all depeeends on how you use it. Either way, you are cuuuurently unable to wield it."

"That's right. Magic, magic I see… Even if debuffs are its specialty, not using it would be a waste. Shit, what should I do?"

Although thinking about it was making Subaru feel troubled, Roswaal made it sound as if it was no problem at all. "If you want to use it, then you can leaaarn it from someone. Luckily for you, we have a specialist of Yin Magic here."

"Oh yeah! That was an option! I don't even care about the type of magic and such anymore! As long as I have an excuse to learn magic, I don't care if I'll be able to use it or not! In other words!"

He emerged from the water, splitting it as he pointed one hand towards the ceiling and placed the other on his hip. He then jumped out in the nude, splashing water everywhere, and while Roswaal was looking at him, he struck a pose.

"I'll learn magic from the girl I like, yo. She can hold my hands, yo, feel my legs, yo, and grab my waist during the lesson, yo. It'll be a lesson with many such amazing options after I get off work, yo. And then we can sail towards the future together and eventually get visited by a stork, yo! Yippee ki-yay, yo!"

He decided his future plans with an impromptu rap.

If this is the case, then it's already decided. It's time to immediately act upon it.

His original goal of doing the previous loop over again had already somehow disappeared into the recesses of his mind. However, a wrench was soon thrown into his plans.

"I think you've misunderstood me, so I'm going to correct you. The specialist in Yin Magic iiisn't Lady Emilia, alright?"

"What-the-hell-yo? Do you have a grudge against me, yo?! Do you like playing with people's hearts that much, yo?! Yo!" Subaru exclaimed, still in rap-mode, as he pointed his finger at Roswaal.

“So, who is then? Is it you?! The respected court magician?! Yeah, since you have an affinity for all the elements, right! I’m disappointed!”

“That’s more disappointing!!”

The loudest scream of the night exploded from his mouth with a massive splash of water.

3

“Ah shit. The hot water made me feverish. Curse that Rosy. He kept lifting me up and dropping me. It was like he was the Buddha’s palm,” Subaru blurted out in the changing room as he passed his arms through the sleeves of the clothing he’d been provided.

Subaru had just come out of the bath after taking a short break upon concluding their disappointing conversation, leaving Roswaal there.

Subaru was never a fan of taking long baths, but nowadays, he often took them due to being tired and needing a place to think. However, getting in and out quickly was how he originally did things. Thus, he was feeling lightheaded because of it. He felt that way today especially since he had yet to recover and was still low on blood.

There was a slight, peculiar difference between what his mind and body wanted. It felt like the gears were a little out of sync, which created a discord that made him feel uncomfortable.

“On top of that, I think my muscles might be sore tomorrow. Damn it, Ramchi. Just you wait. You’re only working me like a horse because I’m a little better at doing things compared to the last loop…”

“She shall kindly wait, just like you wished.”

“Woooooah!!”

While Subaru was heading out with the basket filled with his dirty clothes, someone responded to his complaint, startling him enough to make him jump in surprise. And just like that, his underwear flew from his hand and landed at the feet of Ram, who was standing in the hallway outside the changing room.

“Haa, you are no good.”

She bent down and picked up Subaru’s underwear, which was soaked with the sweat from his hard day of work, and tossed it into the trashcan right next to her.

“There’s a dude right in front of you holding a basket who intends on doing his laundry, ya know?!”

“Ram is sorry. The moment she lifted it up, she felt an instinctual disgust for it. Ram wanted to get rid of it as soon as possible, so it ended up that way.”

“Despite that, your movements looked refined!”

Subaru reluctantly retrieved his underwear from the trashcan and put it into the basket, then faced Ram again. The maid was leaning against the wall of the changing room, waiting quietly.

I wonder what she wants? Subaru tilted his head. And, as if reading his mind, Ram spoke. “It’s unfortunate for you, but Ram has already taken a bath, so she won’t start undressing even if you wait there.”

“You didn’t get me at all?! Isn’t that fatal for a maid?!”

“Ram is only kidding. She’s here to help Master Roswaal get dressed. It is Ram and Rem’s duty to wait on Master Roswaal when he takes a bath.”

“Aren’t you spoiling him too much? I think he can change on his own.”

But then there are people out there who have their socks put on by a maid and have never put them on themselves. Considering how vast the world is, Roswaal might be one of them, which really is an eye-opener for me.

"That just opened my Roswaal Trust Bottle, too, which didn't have much in it to begin with, but now there's even less in there."

"Kindly refrain from making any disrespectful remarks about Master Roswaal in front of Ram. Ram will use force after the second warning."

It sounds like a gentle suggestion, but she means it, so I'll keep that in mind. In fact, she teaches things in a polite and respectful manner the first time, but if I ask her the same question again, she looks at me like I'm just some pig in a pig farm.

Subaru thought that it would bring unnecessary trouble if he stayed there any longer, so he decided to leave immediately.

"Alright then, excuse me, Boss," said Subaru as he tried to leave, but…

"Barusu, do you have any plans after this?"

"Other than going to bed, nope. It should be obvious since I have to wake up early tomorrow, damn it. Boss, mornings are such a pain."

"I see." Ram gave a short response to Subaru's words, which made him sound like he was both complaining and expressing an attitude of defiance.

Subaru kept looking at her as she stood there without saying a word, then... "Alright," Ram said, as if she had decided on something. "Then Ram will come to your room later, so wait for her."

And that's all she had said.

"—Huh?"

Chapter 16:
The Confusion of the Second Loop

1

I'll keep declaring over and over again that I, Natsuki Subaru, am an advocate of only being into Emilia.

Ever since he came to this world, he has had the opportunity to encounter many beautiful women one after another, but she stood out from the rest.

It was partly because of her beauty, but the real reason was simple: it's because he fell in love with her. As long as he continued to feel that way, his attraction to her would only increase.

Therefore, no matter what kind of beauty was in front of him, there was no way that Subaru's heart would fall for anyone else.

It's just not possible.

"So, this perfect bedmaking doesn't mean anything more than me wanting to sleep soundly," he said, making an enthusiastic excuse to himself as he poked his finger into the bed with lightning speed.

After taking a bath, Subaru had gone back to his room and spent all his time making the bed, which he was currently looking at. He even left the basket of laundry unattended. He'd put a lot of effort into it, sweat dripping off his forehead like a waterfall, even though he had just taken a bath.

It's been a while since I've done such a satisfactory job.

"It doesn't have any deep meaning behind it. It isn't anything like that. I need to calm myself and empty my mind. One Emilia-tan, two Emilia-tans, three Emilia-tans… Is this Heaven!"

"You are making too much noise, Barusu. It's night already, so keep quiet."

“Faaar awaaay!” (Gackt: Faraway) he sung as he leapt back towards the wall. He could see Ram, who had opened the door without making a sound, standing at the room’s entrance.

After entering the room with a knock, she scolded him. “You do this right after Ram told you to keep quiet. You are no good.”

“What’s up with you making your own rules?! It makes me feel nervous since your rules make me question my common sense! What and how do you want me to do things?!”

In response to Subaru shouting, Ram abruptly sneered. “Hah.” Even Subaru could do nothing after being struck with the contempt that hadn’t even put into words.

Ram crossed in front of such a Subaru with crisp noises and headed towards the bed—no, she headed towards a small wooden desk in front of the bed. Each room had a space of its own for reading and writing, but for Subaru, it was useless since he could not read or write in this world. Of course, he could write in Japanese though.

“Maybe I should do that at least. Even though I can’t carry it to another loop, it might make it easy for me to remember things if I write things down…”

“What are you mumbling on about? Come here, Barusu,” Ram said in a tepid manner, as if she were disciplining her dog.

Blue veins appeared on Subaru’s forehead after hearing that. But it would only be a loss for him if he let her take control of things. Subaru could only show his true ability when he had the other person in the palm of his hand to begin with.

Anyway, I’ll train my unyielding heart so that it won’t be shaken by anything she says, no matter how surprising it may be.

He stood in front of Ram with a battle-ready mindset.

“Now what? What kind of recklessness have you brought this time?”

“What are you talking about? Ram is telling you to sit down so that Ram can teach you how to read and write."

"That's my first time hearing of it?!"

His unyielding heart shook immediately.

He felt like his hardened heart instantly became soft and broken, and then, unable to hide his unrest, he looked at his desk and gasped when he saw a notebook with a white page, a quill, and a book with a reddish-brown cover. It seemed like she wasn't joking or playing a prank on him but was genuinely trying to teach him how to read and write.

"But then, why all of a sudden…"

"Barusu, you can't read or write, right? I know that from watching you work today. If you can't read or write, then you can't note down things that you have to buy or write down the things that you are told to do."

Ram gave a perfectly reasonable answer to the confused Subaru's query. Subaru's mouth reflexively kept opening and closing slovenly like a fish.

However, seeming indifferent to his reaction, Ram pointed her finger at the book with a red cover. "We'll start with an easy collection of children's fairytales. Ram and Rem will help you out every night, so study hard from now on."

It's a good offer, but frankly, I'm more confused by it than anything.

This situation was the same as the one in the bathroom, a situation that never happened in the previous loop. And according to Subaru's own estimation, the distance between him and the twins was still much greater compared to the fourth day of the previous loop.

In spite of that, why is there a bona fide study session happening?

"It's obvious. —It's because Ram wants to work less."

"You don't change, do you?"

"Of course. The more work Barusu is able to do, the less work Ram has to do. If Ram's workload is lessened, then Rem's work inevitably gets reduced, too. It's a win-win situation."

"Wouldn't I be overwhelmed with work instead, though?!"

"…?"

And now she's tilting her head as if she didn't understand what I am complaining about.

Subaru lost the energy to talk back since she responded in a way that made it seem like she didn't get his point. On one hand, he was baffled by it, but on the other, he was happy about it.

"Ok, alright, understood. Let's staaart studying then."

"Barusu, in your case, your conversational grammar is fine, so it shouldn't be too difficult. The language skills you were born with shouldn't be blamed."

"Aren't you insulting me by making it seem like you are praising me?" Subaru said as he sat in front of the desk and grabbed the quill, fully prepared to get started.

Subaru never had the chance to hold a quill before, but it was light, and when you slid it over the paper, it produced beautifully written words.

It was the memorable first stroke in this world. Subaru faced the cover of the book and started writing with a large stroke of his quill. "Natsuki Subaru has arrived… Alright."

"Sorry to interrupt you, but we don't have time to play around drawing things like that. You need to make up early tomorrow, so time is limited."

"No, this is my native language… I knew you wouldn't get it."

I was hoping that the things I write down would be translated too since I can have conversations normally, but I guess things aren't that convenient. To me, the script of this world looks like hieroglyphs, so to them, Japanese probably looks like fancy-looking scribbles.

And so, Subaru couldn't go on a rampage with his knowledge of idioms that he loved so much.

"But on the other hand, it means that nobody will notice it no matter what kind of obscene fantasies I put into writing. That kind of situation is useful…libido-wise!"

"First, we'll start with the basic letters, which are E letters. You can move on to Ro letters and Ha letters after you master E letters."

"There are three types? Just hearing about them makes me want to give up."

It's so painful that my heart feels like it's about to break before learning a new language. I can relate a bit with the feelings of the foreigners trying to learn Japanese. There are three types: Hiragana, Katakana and Kanji, so they would be bewildered once they realized how long it would take them to learn.

"We'll move on to the fairytales after you get the hang of E letters. We can study until 1 AM Darksun since we also have to do this tomorrow, and Ram is sleepy, too."

"Showing a glimpse of your true feelings at the end there… I don't dislike that, boss."

"Ram likes that about Ram," she replied without hesitation, thus making it harder to determine whether she was joking around or being serious. Subaru felt that the former had a higher probability, and his alphabet learning lesson began.

When learning a new language, the first thing you need to do is to figure out what kinds of letters it uses. In the case of hiragana, there are 46 characters, and just like that, there are basic characters in other languages, too, and the meanings are formed by combining those basic letters.

Therefore, learning a language begins with writing the letters, but…

"It's more painful than I imagined… It's like the time I was learning how to write in cursive."

Subaru wrote down the basic letters that Ram had written for him at the rate of around 400 letters per page. The accumulation of it was something that could cause Gestaltzerfall, but he accepted that working steadily was the necessary way to get the job done, so he devoted himself to that.

To be honest, my eyelids are heavy due to fatigue and drowsiness, but I can't fall asleep since Ram's been keeping me company. That she is being friendly from day one of the second loop is really important to begin with, too. I can't let the chance slip out of my hands.

"I know that you said that you were doing it to make things easy for you, but it still made me happy," Subaru admitted, conveying his honest feelings while holding back his embarrassment, to Ram, who was behind him.

When he wasn't writing the same letter over and over again, producing a soft sound as the quill ran over the pages, Subaru recalled the four days from his previous loop.

Come to think of it, I spent my days chasing Emilia's ass whenever I had time, but the person I spent the most time with was Ram when I wasn't doing that.

It must have taken a lot of effort to train Subaru, who was an amateur in all the work around the manor—such as cooking, doing laundry, and cleaning. It was tougher for her since that wasn't her only job, she did it while performing her regular work.

Obviously, the burden would have fallen upon Rem as well, but the time he spent with her in the four days of the previous loop wasn't much. Ram and the others said that Rem, who was excellent at everything, did the work that didn't get done, but Subaru felt bad for indirectly burdening her.

"To be honest, I wasn't liked much."

She was as busy as she was, and then a useless newbie came in. She had to teach him various things, utilizing her time after she was done with her work. Just thinking about it was painful for someone like Subaru, who had little experience in dealing with people. To be thought of that way was something he was used to, too.

Thus, Subaru was happy with the current situation where he wasn't being rejected.

"I know I'm going to keep causing trouble, but please take care of me," he told Ram, who was silently observing him, as his chair creaked when he gently turned back.

He had suddenly bared his heart and true feelings to her, but Ram silently responded with "Zzz."

She was sleeping soundly in the bed that had been neatly made. She had taken her shoes and apron off, her headdress was put on the side of the bed, and the covers were pulled up to her shoulders. It was a proper sleeping position.

The quill snapped with a crack.

2

Following the sudden urge, Subaru opened his mouth wide and yawned. He couldn't hold back his sleepiness. It appeared as tears formed at the corners of his eyes, so he violently rubbed them and straightened his posture. The evening sky was dyed orange with the parting gift of the sun, and the clouds were flowing slowly, welcoming the end of the day. Subaru looked up at all of that and moved the joints in his body to check its condition. He still felt the effects of overworking, but it wasn't as bad as before.

"But even so, the strength of my body remains the same even after I go back in time… I guess it means that I learned how to move my body, so it doesn't get as tired."

It wasn't that his body was getting used to it, but rather that he was getting used to the work, which improved his efficiency. He predicted that it would lead to a slight reduction in fatigue.

If there's a possibility that the loop will occur again, then I can't expect to strengthen my body through repeating things. The only thing I can do is revise the events that are going to occur and practice household chores.

I can't continue with this if I don't think like that. Since…

"Subaru, sorry for making you wait. —Are you fine?"

"Hm, yeah, I'm fine, I'm fine. Remrin, are you done with your shopping now?"

"Yes, it went without a hitch. You looked like you were having a lot of trouble, Subaru."

The blue-haired girl holding a handbag with goods inside in front of him—Rem—tilted her head and appreciated Subaru's effort.

She was in her usual maid outfit, her hair swaying in the wind as she looked at Subaru with a slightly relaxed expression. At Subaru, who had stained his butler's uniform with mud, dust, snot, and tears.

"You were quite popular," she said.

"I don't know why, but I've always been a kid magnet. Maybe it's because there's a maternal instinct inside me that can't be suppressed and is irresistible to kids, so it keeps attracting them to me."

"Children are like animals in that they assign ranks to humans. They know instinctively whether they should take a person lightly or not."

"You aren't complimenting me, are you?!" Subaru exclaimed, putting a hand on his chin to show his dissatisfaction, but Rem didn't respond.

Subaru nodded his head thinking that Ram and Rem were indeed sisters after getting such a harsh comment. With Ram, who was direct, and Rem, who said things in a reserved manner, one needed to be tough mentally to keep up with them. Of course, he needed to be physically tough too or else he wouldn't be able to keep up with the work in the first place.

With a wry smile, Subaru turned his hips and looked around while moving his neck. The high-pitched voices of the children could be heard from the square behind him. He had been in the group of children a few moments ago, struggling against their blows and drool. Everyone had been relentless, and it was a lonely battle without any allies.

Currently, Subaru and Rem were in the village closest to the manor. Roswaal, even if he was like that, had the status of Margrave, so naturally he was a nobleman that ruled over quite a bit of territory in his fiefdom.

This village near his house is no exception, and the people who live here know us as a matter of course. The two maids in particular since they probably go out to buy groceries often, and that's why the rate of people greeting them was high as they passed by.

On the other hand, it seemed like the villagers knew about Subaru's existence. Although it was actually his first time going there, he was welcomed amicably, and it made him feel uneasy yet happy at the time.

However… "What's up with those kids being over-familiar… Can't they recognize my hard-boiledick aura that can burn them if they touch me?" Subaru blurted out the title that he wanted to say in a deep voice while lighting a cig. (Totally imagining it)

Hard-boiledick, short for hard-boiled and adultic.

Rem, who was walking in front of him, gave him a sideways glance. "You said you had a maternal instinct, and now you are pretending to be an adult. You are a busy person, Subaru."

"If I was busy, then I wouldn't be in such a bad situation. Shit, I should've gone shopping with you, Remrin."

Even if Subaru had gone shopping with her, he would have been useless since he didn't know how to distinguish between ingredients or even know what they were called. So, he had stepped back from that to not bother her. But then the children from the village found him and kidnapped him, which was something he hadn't expected.

"I don't have any complaints in general, but… I can't accept that."

"What are you talking about?"

"Never mind, it's something that has to do with me. I'm glad that I can have a conversation with you without being cautious. In Ramchi's case, I can't predict the angle from which she'd look down at me."

"Isn't my sister wonderful?"

The conversation was slightly out of sync.

Rem looked slightly proud as she bragged about her elder sister. Subaru assumed that they were honest words without a hint of deceit in them, but…

"To be frank, aren't there a lot of problems with Ramchi's personality? It seems like it would often cause conflicts."

"It isn't as bad as you, Subaru, who is still new to being a servant."

"That's, what, I, thought."

Learn wisdom from the follies of others.

It was obvious that Subaru's critique of Ram's ability and personality would be mocked since his current contribution was half that of Ram's. The person hearing it was the upgraded version of said Ram as well.

The destructiveness of her sarcasm was also a few steps higher than Ram's, making up for it not being direct.

Subaru scratched his head and pondered as he followed behind Rem as she walked ahead of him. —I'm sure I was accompanying Ram during the village shopping trip in the previous loop.

“Speaking of which, Subaru, how is your study progressing?”

“Steadily…is what I want to say, but things aren’t that easy. Everything must be nurtured slowly, over time. It’s the same as love!”

“I hope it doesn’t wither halfway.”

“Remrin, the love in your comment just now is withered!” Subaru screamed, changing Rem’s expression into a slight smile that made him smile too.

—Four days have passed already since Ram volunteered for the private lessons at night. She said that she would take turns with Rem while teaching me letters, but in all that time, Rem has never been the instructor. From the standpoint of the situation, it probably means that Rem couldn’t afford to leave her work, and it seems like she was feeling guilty about it.

Subaru continued smiling at Rem, who couldn’t even come up with a response like she usually did, and then…

“Youuu dooon’t neeed tooo worrrry about it. It isn’t like I’m being neglected, and I am not complaining about Ramchi being the instructor. No, wait, it definitely demotivates me when she falls asleep on the bed while teaching me, but still.”

“Sister is acting like that on purpose to raise your motivation.”

“That’s some positive thinking that far exceeds mine. The way you worship your sister is out of this world. You really are possessed by a demon.”

“Possessed, by a demon…?” Rem tilted her head at the word that was trending inside Subaru lately.

“It’s the demon version of being possessed by a god, being possessed by a demon. Doesn’t it sound nice?”

“Do you like demons?”

“I like them more than God. Since God usually does nothing, but I’ve heard that a demon laughs with you when you tell them about your vision of the future.”

They get especially excited when they hear the things about the coming year.

Subaru thought of the scene where the Blue and Red Demon had their arms wrapped around each other’s shoulders and were laughing loudly, and then, suddenly, he saw a definite smile on Rem’s face.

“Oh…”

He had seen her smile faintly several times before, but it was the first time she had shown an expression that could be described as a proper smile.

Subaru didn't know if it had struck a chord with her, but he snapped his fingers and said, "That smile is as bright as Pikachu's million-volt thunderbolt."

"I'll tell Lady Emilia."

"It wasn't like I was hitting on you?!"

He straightened his posture, thrust out his hands and did the pose of meekly begging for forgiveness.

Suddenly, Rem raised her eyebrows slightly, looking at Subaru taking that pose. "What happened to that hand?"

"Hm? Oh, the dog that the kids were playing with took a big bite out of it."

The scar on my left hand has a prominent teeth mark on it. It bled a little, but it stopped already. I remember that this happened to me in the last loop, so it means that I have gotten to the weird part of the loop.

By the way, someone blew their nose on the back of his butler's uniform, so it had a great amount of snot on it, but the time he would notice it would be the same as the previous loop, which was after he returned to the manor.

"Shall I heal your wound?"

"Huh? What, Remrin, are you the type who can use healing magic?"

"I can do easy things, like simple treatments. Or do you want Lady Emilia to do it?"

"Mm, it's an attractive offer that can't be denied. Bu…but…I'll pass."

Subaru denied her offer while looking at the toothmark of the canine on the back of his hand. It was because he had decided that the scar was, in a sense, a good mark to know where he was in the loop. It was the disappearance of the scar that made him the most aware of the fact that a new loop had begun the moment he had started a new one.

Whether there is a scar or not is a good indicator. If I hadn't been bit coincidentally by the dog, then I would've ended up hurting myself with a quill or a random knife.

"Hah, I grew out of the phase of wanting a sword scar on my cheek when I was in middle school. Now that I think about it, I was covered in scars, so that makes me…"

I miss the days where I longed to have scars on my face, and I worked hard to leave scratch marks on it. One scar was not enough for me, so I made a lot of them, and it was bad luck that the scars got filled with pus since it landed me in a disastrous situation where I was called the bandage-man. I was the only mummy-man in the graduation album of middle school.

"Oh my, I am, cute…!"

"It's said that a scar is a man's badge of honor. Come to think of it, Master Roswaal also brags about a scar that he doesn't erase. —Around his chest."

"This seems like the topic is going to be graphic, so can I pass?"

The topic was going to stray towards the suspicious relationship between the maid and her master without Subaru noticing it, so he hurriedly put a stop to it.

Rem tilted her head curiously as if she didn't understand what he was talking about, and Subaru pushed her on the back. "Never mind, never mind," he said, then hurried on home.

Subaru wasn't confident that he could keep up with a graphic topic like that and was also a bit nervous.

—Since he was on the fourth day of his second loop in another world.

"I'll see if I can make it to tomorrow morning in one piece. But before that.”

Whether I’ll be able to make that promise with Emilia or not is just as important.

“…Anyway, I’m worried about Ramchi and Remrin’s sexual knowledge. I’m worried that they are being tricked by that master into doing things while being none the wiser.”

These questions have begun to creep into my mind as I have begun to know things in more detail than the previous week of the previous loop. I’ll make a little inquiry after I’m done with taking care of my situation.

Subaru secretly made up his mind to do so.

3

Natsuki Subaru’s second first week at Roswaal Manor was now facing its greatest problem. He wasn’t able to follow the steps of the previous loop that he had revised, so it wasn’t smooth sailing to begin with, but now it was facing its greatest crisis.

Which was…

“I can’t go meet Emilia-tan because I have to study.”

Whispering their love to one another in the moonlit garden and making a pinky promise; Subaru held such hopes for the second night, so this situation that interfered with his promise event was the worst thing that could happen to him.

It was only the fourth day of study, and before dinner, I casually asked the twins directly, “Wouldn’t it be ok if I took a break today?” But…

“Sister, Sister. A spineless guy called Subaru has given up already.”

“Rem, Rem. A pathetic dog that’s inferior to humans and animals is saying something in dog language.”

And thus, I was dismissed with an unprecedented blank stare.

He wanted to rush to Emilia's side even if he had to skip the lesson, but…

"If Emilia-tan finds out that I have skipped the lessons through Ram or Rem, then, knowing her personality, she will definitely cancel our promise!"

It would be useless even if I'm able to make the promise if it gets reneged upon later. The promised couple's rendezvous. And the two burn passionately in the flower garden and disappear into the nightlife district.

It would be a Happy End, according to Subaru, if it reached that point.

"But then, if I study properly, then Emilia-tan will fall asleep before I can meet her."

Therefore, there was only one best answer for Subaru.

Which is: Finish the assignments as quickly as possible and go down to the garden before the moon disappears behind the clouds.

This is it.

"Or I can lure Ram into falling asleep with my ultimate bedmaking skills and make the promise while she's sleeping and then come back and finish the assignment... I'd be able to kill two birds with one stone!"

In other words, you could say he was stuck between a rock and a hard place. It was a sad man's heart wavering between the assignment and the promise.

I've prepared plan B and have already adjusted my bed. The bedding is in great shape, having soaked up the sunlight, and the warmth you feel just by touching it is powerful enough to make you fall into dreamland in no time.

There, Subaru concentrated all of his hidden hotelier abilities into it, and the masterpiece of bedmaking was complete.

“I don’t think I’ll ever be able to make a better bed than this...”

It was literally a masterpiece in which he put in everything he had.

It’s really captivating workmanship even though I’m the one who did this. I usually hate Ram for lying on my bed without my permission, but now I can’t wait for her to come into my room.

“I feel as if I’m waiting for a cockroach to enter my newly purchased roach trap as fast as possible—I’m the worst!”

I’m not gonna rephrase it since that’s how it is.

However, the fact that he was waiting for his opponent with such dutifulness could be said to be a sign of his Japanese temperament, which was the reason why he couldn’t be ruthless.

He stood in front of the desk, tapping on his knee with his finger, and waited for her. But…

“Why does she have to be late today? If it begins late, then consequently, it will end late too. Unlike lessons in school, there’s no bell that rings when it’s over.”

In schools, if the teacher is late, then it would be a ‘I was waiting for this!’ situation, but in the current situation, it’s a pure waste of time that keeps me stuck here longer. It’s not like I don’t like the idea of putting extra time into revising stuff, but I have to say that keeping my mind calm and going for the letters in this state of mind is pretty harsh.

Subaru himself didn’t realize that it was a ridiculous resolve to try to finish his assignments early with such feelings.

As the time was ticking by, he became more and more impatient, so he rushed towards the door and violently opened it the moment he heard a knock. And then, he lashed out. “You’re late! Every second of this may have been nothing to you, but to me, it was equivalent to chipping away at whatever sanity I had left!”

“…I didn’t know that you were waiting that much, I’m sorry? I was late because I haven’t been on this floor much.”

He felt like his face had turned as white as a sheet when Emilia, who was waiting outside the door, said that.

Chapter 17:
The Sound of Chains

1

“So, since Ram or Rem can't come see you tonight… I took over the role of supervising your studies.”

“I see! Wow, I’m glad, a real surprise! Oh, please, sit. You want tea or something, right? Oh, I snuck out some special tea snacks.”

Subaru invited Emilia into the room, and started to prepare to welcome her in a rush. He rushed through the hall, went into what seemed like an employee-only hot water supply room, prepared tea and tea snacks, and then dashed back. This feat of agility was done in a matter of two minutes.

Perfectly displaying the skills he had learned while living in the mansion as an employee, Subaru showed a working attitude he had not even shown to Roswaal himself.

“Thanks for waiting! I’m back! Brought special tea leaves and tea snacks, we can feed each other!”

“I feel like you may have forgotten the main reason I’m here… Do you mind?”

Subaru, still holding the tray, tilted his head with question marks at Emilia, who had been standing there in the room like she was out of place.

She slowly pointed towards the bed and asked Subaru, “Is it just me, or is it way too neatly arranged?”

“Ah! Nah! It’s not like I had a plan or anything, just thought I’d let Ramchi sleep there! It’s not suspicious!”

“What were you going to do having Ram sleep in your bed?”

“I feel like the misunderstanding suddenly made a quick turn?!”

He put the tray down on the table, and dove onto his bed under Emilia's suspicious gaze. He took his time to mess up the bed all he could.

"Seee, now it's all wrecked. Right! A naughty girl like Ramchi deserves to sleep in a messy bed!"

"So you still intend for her to sleep here."

"I can't win this by myself! Puck, come ouuuuut!"

"It's already his bedtime so don't wake him up… I mean, it doesn't matter."

Emilia crossed her arms as she watched Subaru turn to the gray cat for help, and looked away. "It's fine that you're friendly with Ram and Rem, but you need to do it in moderation. Not to mention those two are still young…"

"I personally like that you have strong virtues. I mean, isn't there a more suitable person to receive that comment in this mansion? I'll give ya a hint, he's a pervert with long hair."

"Ah, whatever… I've given up on trying to fix that."

"So much so that you look super gloomy, Emilia-tan! It's kinda giving me goosebumps!"

With resignation in her eyes, her behavior was like an abandoned puppy, which activated Subaru's protective instincts. To cut a long story short, Emilia was cute to him, whatever expression she was making. In short…

"E. M. T. (Emilia-tan is seriously an angel!)"

"Your face tells me you're reaaally speaking nonsense. Maybe I've finally come to understand you, Subaru."

"Aw, that's a delight to hear. But don't think you can see through me so easily. Oh, here's some tea."

"Oh, thanks." Emilia took the tea from his hands and softly moistened her throat with it. Offering her the chair in front of the desk, Subaru sipped tea while sitting on his bed.

Sharing the treasured tea snacks, they enjoyed a calm and peaceful time together. Maybe this is what they call happiness.

“This is, how, I feel,” said Subaru.

“You’re saying something very ordinary but it kind of resonates with the heart,” Emilia admitted.

“It’s a word trick. The trick is to pronounce them like they’re katakana. It’s just saying normal things like they are normal.”

Emilia reacted naturally, probably because she had gotten used to Subaru talking nonsense.

She was also somehow glad that he was enjoying their peaceful time together.

“A-Actually, I didn’t come here to fool around,” Emilia declared, “so you shouldn’t be relaxing.”

“Who comes to a man’s room alone at night and doesn't expect some happenings! Don’t you know it’s dangerous?!”

“You know that I can use magic even without Puck, right?”

The air started to crack apart with a dry sound, and the temperature in the room decreased drastically.

Seeing the steam from the tea becoming more forceful and thick, Subaru came to the conclusion that further delaying this study session would be impossible. “Ok ok, got it. Let’s study, it’s study time. A heart-racing lesson in a private room at night with Emilia-tan… I got excited just saying that!”

“Fine, fine, I got it. Anyways, what do you usually do?” asked Emilia from the side with her hands on the back of the seat after Subaru had moved to the chair. Feeling her breath on him, Subaru nervously opened his notebook and textbook.

"I'm currently learning the basic E letters," he replied. "It seems like the fairytales are mostly a collection of stories written with E letters, so my goal at the moment is to be able to read them."

"Huh, a collection of fairytales."

Emilia took the book with the reddish-brown spine and flipped through the pages to check its contents. She suddenly stopped turning them, and Subaru looked up at her. "Huh? Was there a story that caught your attention?"

"Hmm not really, but kinda. Well, once you're able to read this, you'll come to understand."

Emilia closed the book with a sound, then walked to the bed and sat down. Looking at her sitting on the bed that he had messed up made Subaru slightly excited and restless.

However, she stretched her body as though not noticing Subaru's animalistic urges.

"I was actually supposed to meet with the ones I can only meet during Darksun but then I was requested by Ram and Rem. So I'll prioritize you for today. You should thank me."

"I'm super thankful! Truly is Buddha's guidance!"

"Th-That's a bit much, you're making me blush."

"Thank you! Ramchi! Remrin! I'll never let your considerations go to waste! I, Subaru Natsuki, will become a man!"

"Huh?! What about me?!"

He shouted out his thanks to the twins who had created this situation for him, then turned back to the dissatisfied Emilia and put out both hands. "Of course, I'm blown away by your kindness and deeply moved, Emilia-tan. When we finish studying and stuff, would you like a massage or something? With my cherished gratitude towards you, I'll relieve your daily fatigue real attentively. Ge-he-he."

"That sounds kind of dirty, so I'm good."

"Shit, why am I so honest! Though I don't hate that part of me!"

Emilia sighed at Subaru, who was leaning on the desk fake crying. She then clapped her hands to change the direction of the conversation. "Now, don't be playing around forever. We have work tomorrow too, so let's finish this before it gets too late. Okay, let's continue."

"Ok, got it. Oh, Emilia-tan, you can have the rest of the tea snacks, ok?"

"Whatever, thanks…hm, but it's a snack."

I guess it's even common in this world for girls to refrain from eating snacks between meals, huh.

Gaining such useless knowledge, Subaru began his daily practice of writing letters with Emilia behind him.

Once he threw himself into it, Subaru could focus on studying. While he was conscious of Emilia's existence, as long as he felt that he could still make that promise, it was something he could ignore. So there was no need to be anxious.

From that peace of mind, Subaru calmly copied the letters. After a while of silence, Emilia suddenly called out from the back. "I see. You don't get sidetracked as much as I imagined."

"Cuz I'm focusing. I'm the type of guy who hyper-focuses once he gets into it. That's why I'm so devoted to the girl I love!"

"I hope so. Though maybe not when you're making eyes at me."

Subaru was a little overwhelmed by Emilia's teasing. It seemed likely that his past attempts hadn't been taken seriously.

Perhaps she could believe him a little bit since he was saying it so straightforwardly.

"But like, with my skill, it's impossible to flirt without teasing. The shame would literally give me an unnatural death. Shortening my life as I fall in love with love, just like Heian nobles!”

“Whatever, no fooling around… You should be as serious as this on a regular basis. Ram and Rem are going to give up on you.”

Emilia, on the bed with her arms around her knees, mumbled to the troubled Subaru. Her skirt was short and suggestive, but she seemed to be subtly unaware of how unguarded she was.

Subaru focused on the edge of his vision as he tilted his body slightly. She would obviously notice if he turned his head, so he only secretly looked.

“This, indeed, is the Yin family of magic’s art of concealment!”

Subaru burned with an odd sense of mission. Not knowing his objective, Emilia had a cloudy expression on her face, as she lowered her gaze in her sensational position. Then she muttered, “Hey Subaru. I don’t really want to ask you this but…why aren’t you usually more serious like this?”

“It’s my policy to seriously be unserious and…guess that kind of answer is not what you want to hear right now, huh. Um?”

“Yeah, I’m serious. —Ram was also complaining a little bit. That you seem like, hmm, like you’re cutting corners here and there in your work.”

Maybe because it seemed like she was telling on him, Emilia spoke hesitantly. However, all Subaru could do was internally frown in pain that she was right on point.

I gotta admit that it’s a totally accurate evaluation to say that I’ve been cutting corners here and there while on the job.

In fact, Subaru was not seriously devoting himself to his work. Rather, you could say he was making adjustments to gain the same results as before.

Compared to when he hardly understood his work, Subaru now more or less had gotten used to it. You could say that if he had an employee skill of all Cs, he currently had all C+s.

In reality, he had just begun to climb the tall tall hill of an employee, but maybe that slight difference didn't manage to deceive the eyes of those senior to him.

Naturally, the sense of guilt slowed down Subaru's mouth.

Seeing Subaru who could not utter another word, Emilia murmured "I thought so," before continuing. "Well, it's not like you don't feel guilty. You're faithful at strange moments, Subaru. Like how you aren't slacking off while studying."

"Well, I guess I have my reasons, studying benefits me… I realized it when I said it, but I kinda act in my own self-interest, huh."

Thinking back, that was a terrible thing to say.

He had been causing trouble for the twins due to his own circumstances, working hard for the things that would only benefit himself, and cutting corners even outside of that. I messed up big time, huh.

"Ah, I will attend to it with a renewed attitude starting tomorrow, please forgive me, my queen."

"Hmm, that's alright… Wait a second." Emilia tilted her head, as though she'd felt something was off about her response.

While feeling at ease at her softened attitude, Subaru promised himself that he would make his words reality starting tomorrow.

At any rate, it was a good place to restart. After that, he wouldn't have to retrace his previous work, and he wouldn't have to intentionally cut corners at his work either.

He would be able to return the debt of gratitude to both Ram and Rem.

Of course, just because I stop cutting corners doesn't mean that my level of ability is gonna immediately rise either.

"Your mentality is important for these things. My dilligentness has a value that can't be bought. Indeed, it's priceless."

"You fool around at your convenience again… Did you finish studying?"

"Yeah, today's share! Oh ya, I have a favor to ask you, Emilia-tan, can you hear me out?" Fiddling with his fingers, he glanced up at Emilia using his secret technique: puppy-dog eyes. It was a gesture targeting her maternal instincts, but she looked slightly disturbed.

"No, I have a reaaally bad feeling about this one."

"Such a negative impression that you are disgusted?! It's nothing like that! I just wanted a reward for working hard starting tomorrow."

"A reward! Just to let you know, I don't have any spare money, alright?"

"I was also completely and utterly broke till I received my salary. Ju-Ju-Ju-Just hear me out. So since I'm gonna work seriously starting tomorrow… Let's go on a date!"

Putting his thumb up with shining teeth, he made his signature pose, content with the results.

Emilia blinked her eyes at Subaru's usual posing and said, "A da-te, what do we do?"

"Ha, simply, if a man and woman go out alone, that is a date. Only the goddess of romance knows what happens during that time."

"So, you went on a da-te with Rem today, Subaru."

"My date-virginity has been taken?! I lost my chastity!"

Emilia wryly laughed with an "Ok, ok" at Subaru, who had broken down into tears with his arms wrapped around himself. Waving her hand, she said, "I get that you want to go out together, but where do you want to go?"

“Eh, there’s actually a super lovely dog right near this mansion. There’s also a field of flowers and it’s really pretty. I wanna forever commemorate our co-starred scene amongst the blooming flowers with my magical item.”

His initial equipment had also been collected after the battle in the loot house and stored in the corner of the room.

The contents in the plastic bag were untouched, and not to mention the cell phone, the snacks and instant ramen were also in good condition.

“If I had a charger and an outlet, I would fill up the storage with pictures of Emilia-tan…and change my phone wallpaper everyday. Aargh, I really wanna do that. Why was I summoned to another world, Thomas!”

Calling the name of the great inventor, all he could do was lament the gap in the level of civilization of this world. His cell phone battery showed one less bar, and it was only a matter of time.

Eventually, I may have to bet on charging it with lightning magic or something.

“That’s like a solution in a children’s manga…”

“Hmm, so a village.”

Emilia looked deep in thought with a hand on her cheek, while Subaru talked to himself. That reminds me how she was troubled like that before, he recalled.

Based on his memory that it was not something negative like not wanting to go out with him, he tried to recreate his memory of how he had pushed through in that situation. Right…

“The dog is super cute, let’s go!”

“But I might cause you trouble, Subaru, and to the village people…”

“The kids are also innocent and like an army of real angels, let’s go!”

“...Uh, Ok. I got it. I’ll go with you.”

“The field of flowers is really colorful and wonderful, let’s go… Wait, r-really?”

He almost felt tricked, as there was less pushback than last time.

“If that’s going to make you motivated from tomorrow, I’ll hang out with you. You can’t fool around, alright?”

“I won’t, I won’t! I’m super speedy! If anything, I have the energy to abandon the dog and the kids and the field of flowers so that it can just be the two of us!”

“That defeats the whole purpose of the da-te!” Emilia skillfully countered Subaru’s comment.

After that, the two continued to exchange joking comments, then as she realized it was getting late, Emilia stood up and said, “Well then,”

“If you’re tired,” Subaru interjected, “you can just sleep in that bed?”

“You seem to be panting and the sheets are messy so no thanks.”

“Shit! Why is it so messy… It’s Ramchi, getting in the way even when she’s not even here.”

It seemed as though Ram’s face, who had been the number one person he was thankful for a moment ago, was floating in the night sky, looking down at him in disdain.

Next to Subaru, who was imagining a scene of him being a corpse under a sky full of stars, Emilia walked towards the window and also looked up at the sky. “Yes, the stars are pretty tonight… I’m sure the weather will be nice tomorrow.”

“—Yeah, and it will be an unforgettable day.”

“Can’t believe it…” Turning around with her back facing the windowsill, Emilia was about to reprimand Subaru for his jokes yet again. However, her lips stopped moving when she saw him.

It was probably because she saw that his expression was unusually serious.

Noticing Emilia who suddenly went quiet, Subaru blinked. “Huh, what happened? If you take your time too much, sleepy me will irrationally make you a body pillow, Emilia-tan.”

“After all, you are a weird boy, Subaru.”

“A sudden and outrageous assessment?! Did I do something?!”

Subaru was surprised by the unexpected comment. Leaving the window behind, Emilia crossed the room and passed by Subaru’s side with an adorable “Nothiiing,” before looking back at him with her hand on the doorknob. “Well then, Butler Subaru. Work hard tomorrow. Rewards are rewards because they are given to only those who worked hard.”

She raised her hand like she was saluting, and flipped her silver hair, leaving a wry smile behind. Her shadow disappeared outside the door before hearing his response.

Even if he reached out his hand, he couldn’t reach her anymore. The door shut with a light sound, leaving Subaru alone in the room.

However—

“Hey-hey-hey-hey, are you kidding. I’m so motivated now. Like really.”

The promise he wanted to make was again made.

And Subaru could face the night again.

Will I be able to get through the fourth night and pick her up on the morning of the fifth day?

The duration of the battle would be approximately six hours.

“Well, let’s get on with it, dear destiny—”

2

Subaru sat on the floor with his bed against his back, instead of sitting on the bed, waiting with hope that the night would gradually turn into morning.

The cool floor had become warm with Subaru’s body heat after sitting there for over two hours, which did not help with keeping him awake.

However, his drowsiness had yet to catch up to him. In fact, he was as alert as could be.

The reason is obvious.

“Who could sleep with their heart beating this fast?”

His heart was pounding quickly, loudly, and sharply, with the sound ringing in his ears. He could keenly feel the blood rushing through his body, and his fingertips felt slightly numb.

“I’m like this because I am impatiently waiting for my promised plan with Emilia-tan. Whoa, whoa, am I an elementary schooler who can’t sleep before his field trip? Don’t remember oversleeping on the day of my graduation trip.”

Surely the whole family overslept. They must’ve been so excited that they forgot to wake up. The sadness of being the only one who brought a convenience-store lunch box still haunts me at the back of my mind.

Reflecting on the painful memory in his mind, Subaru looked up at the sky as he distracted himself.

The stars shined like always, and only the placement of the moon moved gradually to the west.

Could it be around four hours before the sun rises from the east? thought Subaru. It’s a long time indeed.

Although not sleepy at all, he had to continue to be alert as he didn’t know what could happen. It was hard to kill time thinking of the possibility of an attack, so all Subaru could do in that moment was listen to his body's pounding sound while he kept on thinking.

He reflected on the past four days, or rather, the second round of four days.

Being out of shape at the beginning, and the difference with the first week. The impact that had on tonight must have been pretty big.

However, on the other hand, he thought that he was able to get past some of the memorable events. There were also subevents added to the second week.

If I assume that the reason for going back was due to failing to trigger a flag, is there a possibility that an event like this study session would count as that?

“I can't deny it as a possibility, but…”

Hypothetically, if there was an existence that was leading Subaru to a loop, it would be difficult to draw the conclusion that this study session was an important thing.

Having said that, there didn't seem to be a big change outside of that. His relationship with Emilia did not change, and he felt like his relationship with Ram and Rem was better than before.

“If I were to have a regret…”

It would be that I wasn't able to meet Beatrice this evening.

In the previous world, Subaru had trespassed Beatrice's room by “door breaking” right after making the promise with Emilia.

He didn't remember talking about anything significant, and he would have to say that the possibility of it being the flag was very low, but compared to last time, he had had an even worse relationship with her.

As a result of his crammed schedule, Subaru barely had any opportunities to encounter her in these past four days.

"Although we were just throwing insults back and forth last time we met."

Though he complained, there was something that Subaru couldn't get off his mind.

It was true that he didn't recall talking to Beatrice, but what had unmistakingly saved his heart in the last loop was her attitude.

It's because her hostile yet straightforward attitude towards me helped me get back on my feet.

"I should have thanked her at least."

It probably won't ring a bell for her in this world, and I can already guess what she'd say if I said it, too.

Although they would insult each other when they met, Subaru's face loosened up when he thought of Beatrice.

Even the same old exchanges were memories that made him laugh when he remembered them like this.

If he could see tomorrow, the next morning, he could do much more of what he wanted to do.

Not just to Beatrice, he also had much to say to Ram and Rem, and even Roswaal.

Of course, they'll have to forgive me since I'll have to shower Emilia with ten thousand words first. "Wait, maybe ten thousand words won't be enough to express my feelings for her. I'll express the rest with actions then…"

In his daydream, he hugged the shy Emilia in his arms, and his lips met hers as she looked up with rosy cheeks. He got worked up upon imagining that game-like scene.

He laughed out loud when looking back on last time and this time —a total of eight days.

As if being taken in by his inner peace, his eyelids started to become heavy, even though there were still more than three hours till morning.

“It seriously wouldn't be a joke if I fall asleep now. It’s not like I’m just playing an online game…”

He rubbed his eyelids as he said that, chasing away the sleepiness that was bubbling up. However, his sleepiness was accompanied with a slight chill, and he laughed at himself as it made him shiver.

He crossed his arms around his shoulders and tried to warm up his body. Yet, no matter how much he did that, the chills did not go away. Rather, there was no sign that they were going away.

—This is weird.

Subaru realized the change in his once optimistic situation.

—Cold is an understatement, it’s more like pain.

When he looked under his sleeves, he saw goosebumps rising on his arms, and it was apparent to him that he was shivering internally.

This was abnormal. This other world had warm weather, and he could usually maintain the perfect temperature by rolling up his sleeves.

Then why is it so cold that my teeth are chattering now?

“This is bad, no way, could it be…!”

He began shaking, though from terror rather than the chills, and fell to the floor. He tried to brace himself with his arms, but the chills could already be felt throughout his whole body, and no matter how hard he tried, he couldn’t find the strength in his arms to get up.

After trying for nearly 30 seconds, he somehow managed to finally stand up. But both his knees were shaking, and he felt that he could fall to the ground any time if his attention wavered.

He could feel himself growing weak. He felt a sense of fatigue in his hands and feet. His once-loud heartbeat weakened, and he slowly felt his thinking becoming dull.

He could find no strength left in his entire body, and he could even forget to breathe if he didn't focus on it.

Lips shaking as he tried to gasp, Subaru crawled out into the hallway to call for help—dragging his feet behind him.

"...S-Someone." He tried to shout for help, but his voice trembled, as if something was blocking his throat.

His throat dried out, only allowing air to pass through, and his breathing slowed, as if his lungs had been overcome with fatigue.

This is bad. That single thought overtook Subaru's mind.

He could not think of a single solution, and he could not understand what was being done to him.

The only thing he knew was the fact that the current situation was threatening his life.

Groaning, he aimed for the stairs with uncertainty. Even though it was a path he was used to walking and the distance wasn't very far, his destination seemed so distant.

His breathing became hoarse, and walking from there to the upper floor was mortifying as each step wore down his soul.

"Aaah… Aaah…"

Subaru finally made it up to the top floor crawling one step at a time using his arms and legs. He headed further back into the hallway—to where the person who he longed for was.

He felt like the inside of his body was melting, and there was a discomfort as though everything was being mixed together. He dragged his feet onward as he failed to contain the nausea and tears that swelled up.

I have to go to Emilia, to where Emilia is.

A sense of mission, of obligation, of an emotion he could not spell out was driving Subaru.

There was nothing like the desire to be saved, which would only reaffirm the misery that was his life, but while ungraceful, there was simply a pressing sense of absoluteness that he had to go there.

Emilia’s room was at the end of the hall on the upper floor of Roswaal Manor’s west wing.

When he arrived at that floor, Subaru was only faintly breathing. If there was someone looking at him from the side, they may have looked away due to how pathetic he looked.

Leaning against the wall, dripping feces and urine, face dirty with tears and vomit, his figure failed to maintain its basic human form.

His whole body felt exhausted, and none of his muscles obeyed his commands. To Subaru, the place he was approaching seemed as far away as the clouds.

He was breathing heavily, and his ears were ringing with high-pitched and loud noises.

Therefore, it was simply a coincidence that he noticed that odd sound.

It seemed like the clinking of a chain.

The strange sound stopped Subaru’s step. At that moment, his body leaning on the wall began to slide down. He stood firmly. But, unable to resist, he fell to the floor and…

“—Huh?”

The next second, the impact struck Subaru.

He completely lost his balance and was blown away instead of just falling down.

Subaru only realized that he had taken a big blow after he had bounced off the ground several times and wiped the floor with his face.

But there was no pain.

There was just a lingering discomfort running from the tip of his hands and feet to his stomach. A sense of fatigue was controlling his body, similar to that of the numbing sensation when your blood flow got interrupted.

“What, ha…”

Happened, he murmured as tried to lift himself up while lying on his stomach. However, his shaking arms held no strength in them. No, that’s odd. I cannot balance myself. First of all, why doesn’t my left arm appear while my right arm is working so hard?

The hallway was already dim, but it felt like it was refusing to help by not even giving any light. In his blurred and distorted vision, Subaru looked at his right arm struggling in vain, then shifted his eyes to his left arm that had stopped listening to him and…

…realized that the left side of his body had been torn off.

“—Aaa?”

After pushing his lying body to the side and positioning the left half upward, Subaru was stunned with shock.

He needed both of his arms to get up, but the left half simply didn’t exist. His left arm had been blown away from the shoulder, and you could see his flesh and bone sticking out of the wound. The peach-colored inside was vibrant as ever in the night air, and vivid red blood was gushing out of it.

The wound was not limited to the left shoulder but continued around to the ribs on his left side, and some internal organs were peeking out where flesh had been ripped apart. How many times have I seen my own intestines now? He thought half fascinated, until it was promptly followed by pain coursing through his body once he realized the damage.

It could neither be described as painful nor hot, and it blocked Subaru's throat like a fish on land, taking away the opportunity to scream at the top of his lungs.

"Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaah—"

His vision started to flicker, and red and yellow lights flashed before his eyes.

It crossed out the familiar view of the mansion, and took Subaru's consciousness to a different place not of this world.

I wanna die.

I wanna die I wanna die.

I don't know the meaning of life.

I can't call this living.

I'm just not dead yet. I will only die soon. I will die soon.

I don't know anything. Everything is far away.

I can't remember what I was trying to do. I can't remember what I was. Nothing matters. I don't care, I just wanna die.

The wish Subaru made with the entirety of his being…

"The sound of… a chain…"

…came true as his skull was crushed, that whisper being the last thing he heard.

Chapter 18:
The Third Reunion

1

“...!” Waking to the sound of your own screaming is one of the worst things you can experience. Subaru sent the blanket flying as his hand immediately shot up. He gasped haggardly as he absorbed the shock. “My left arm…is still there…right?”

His left hand was raised in the air as if reaching out for something. His previously obliterated left side was again intact. Despite having lost a limb for only a short time, the feeling of loss hit Subaru like nothing else.

He raised himself up and rotated his left shoulder to make sure it still functioned as normal. No trace of damage remained on his left side, and there was no sign of the dog bite on his reattached left hand. If my scars were still there, I could’ve passed off this terrible feeling as a nightmare after passing out, but…

“I came back… No, I made it back.”

That’s what the missing scars mean. Fate got the better of me and I was forced back in time. In that case, it's better to say I lost but was given another go at it.

With all that squared away, Subaru realized he needed the day and time. According to his experience with Return by Death, he should have returned to his first day at Roswaal Manor. But it was possible he’d been sent back to a different point in time, so he first had to confirm this detail.

“Ah, sorry. Good morning.”

It was at that moment he noticed the presence of the twins holding each other’s hands off to the side of the room. An unconscious man had suddenly awoken screaming; of course they’d be scared. Even with his relaxed greeting, the twins didn’t respond. They remained huddled together like small animals protecting each other.

Scratching his head, Subaru wondered what he should do. The twins probably forgot all about me, huh? The thought pierced his heart, but he suppressed the pain and formed a smile. He'd have to first show goodwill in order to get along with them. Even if they had forgotten him, he remembered them clearly.

"Sorry for the trouble I've caused. Natsuki Subaru, ready to go!"

Subaru leaped up from the bed and raised his arms and leg into a flying crane pose. It intimidated the twins, but he remained like that as he asked, "By the way, could ya tell me the day and time?"

And so began his first day at Roswaal Manor for the third time.

2

Subaru thought back to what happened on the night of the fourth day. It was after I made my promise with Emilia, and it was most likely in the dead of night. Suddenly I got hit by chills and my strength totally drained away. The effect was potent enough to rapidly trigger asthenia. And that was while I was awake. Meaning...

"The first death was from asthenia while I was sleeping…"

Like a thread slowly curling around your neck, it was a slow but certain method of killing. If that's what had happened while asleep and defenseless, then his consciousness would be swallowed up and he'd never wake again.

But still…

"The sound of a chain…"

The possibility of asthenia is merely conjecture for now, but this new mystery is far more important. The peculiar sound of a long chain clanking about. He clearly remembered that dreadful sound reverberating in his ears. It was immediately after he heard this that he was attacked and lost half his torso.

Just remembering that scene caused his left side to throb. Though his present body hadn't experienced it, his soul fought against that painful memory.

Without knowing, he grabbed his left arm. "Meaning that there was an attacker. I don't know if they were the same person who weakened me, but they're probably working together at least."

Subaru reasoned that there was at least one person involved during an attack on the mansion on the fourth night, and he just happened to be another victim. There's no proof that the other inhabitants of the mansion were targets, but…

"If I was targeted, then everyone was probably a target. This is probably related to Emilia-tan's royal selection, like with the loot house."

I don't know if the surrounding nobles have developed a grudge against Roswaal, so I should ignore that for now. If I'm going to get involved, I'd rather be involved in a cute girl's business.

Subaru clutched his head as he gathered his thoughts. I've figured out there'll be an attack and that Emilia will be targeted. That should be a big step forward. But…

"Even knowing that, I have no proof to explain it with and no real way to prevent it either."

One problem with Return by Death was that it couldn't be explained to others. That was the same for this attack on the mansion. If I desperately plead with Roswaal and get him to prepare for the attack, will the attacker see the preparations and just call it off? Where would my proof be in this case?

In the worst case, he was prepared to be branded the boy who cried wolf if it meant protecting Emilia and the others.

And facing the attacker himself was definitely not an option. Firstly, Subaru knew that he didn't have that sort of power, and on top of that, he didn't know anything about his attacker.

It would probably end with him crying like a baby while being brutally killed. A poor way to go.

“And I didn’t even see their face or their weapon. A completely meaningless death.”

If he didn’t know anything about his attacker, then there was no way to even begin a counterplan.

He folded his arms, tilted his neck, rotated his hips, and began to moonwalk around in a circle.

At the center of the room, in the middle of Subaru’s moonwalking circle, a young girl spoke up in irritation. “You’re irritating Betty to death, so either leave or Betty will kill you.”

Subaru turned towards the volatile girl and said, “Sorry, sorry. When I get things moving around other than my head, for some reason makes my brain works better. So let it slide, okay? We’re friends, aren’t we?”

“Betty doesn’t recall creating that relationship with you, I suppose. This is only the second time we’ve met.”

“Actions speak louder than words, and you did just let me in here.”

“You just broke through the Door Crossing on your own. What’s going on here, I suppose? Unbelievable.”

As always, Beatrice did nothing to hide her animosity towards Subaru. He initially came to the forbidden library because of this, in fact. He felt he would find some safety and solace in her reliably cold demeanor.

Part of the reason was to clear things up and organize his thoughts, but he also found it difficult to handle Ram and Rem keeping their distance from him like strangers. Unlike before, he properly excused himself before leaving the room this time and came to the only place he felt he could rely on.

“Well, I’m not here to cause any trouble. Just serve some tea and let me chill here.”

"Betty will do no such thing. You are truly irritating, in fact." Playing with one of the curls in her hair, Beatrice's lips curled up in annoyance.

A thought occurred to Subaru. "Come to think of it, you're a magic user, right? Even though you don't look it."

"What do you think magic users are? And being compared to those second-rate users is troubling, I suppose." Beatrice pouted with her nose pointed upwards.

She must have real confidence in herself. Based on that haughty attitude… "You don't have many friends, do you?"

"Where did that come from?!"

"Well, I don't have any friends either so I can tell, but that's not good for you. Being so high and mighty at that age is gonna cause all kinds of trouble going forward."

Beatrice just sighed at Subaru's constant teasing. Seeing that reaction out of her made him cut off that topic and switch to the main issue at hand. Right, what I wanted to ask a magic user to begin with…

"Is there magic that can weaken someone until they die?"

Subaru's sudden asthenia. He wanted to confirm whether it was by poison or disease, or perhaps by magic. My current theory is that the cause for my sudden chills and fatigue was magic. After all, there was no obvious source for a disease to spread that quickly, and the effects were too delayed for me to have ingested poison. Especially in the case of poison, I can't think of a time I could have ingested it. Dinner was served communally; for example, the soup was served in one bowl and split between all of us. The other possibility is that it was laced in the tea and snacks I had with Emilia.

"In that case, the perpetrator can't predict when I'll have the snacks or the tea. "

That method can be crossed out by running a probability check.

Taking the existence of the intruder during the second loop into account, they'd have to have known about my weakened state, so there'd be no reason for them to use poison.

Beatrice frowned at Subaru's question. She most likely wondered about the reason behind such a question. But seeing the rare seriousness in his expression, she sighed slightly and replied, "If it was a question of whether it exists, then it does."

"So it does."

"It is closer to a curse than magic, I suppose. There are more shamans that are familiar with it than magic users. It is a more nefarious method, I suppose."

Subaru became confused by the appearance of this new job by the name of shaman. In response, Beatrice raised a finger as if presenting a lecture. "Curse-users, or shamans, come from the northern country of Gusteko. It is a subvariant of magic and spirit arts. However, it is full of defective techniques and not something to take seriously, I suppose."

"But they can still curse someone to death, right?"

"That's the defective part. There are many paths, but all they can do is cause harm to others. Out of all the mana users, they are the most irritating, I suppose."

The hatred Beatrice showed towards the curse arts was so deeply ingrained that she showed no signs of willingness to compromise her point. Subaru held no appreciation for curses either. Right now he just needed more information.

"Anyway, so with that curse art thing, you can do what I said before?"

"You can, I believe. But rather than learning a curse, there's a much simpler method, I suppose."

Subaru furrowed his brows, at which Beatrice smiled amusingly. She then opened up her small palm and covered Subaru's eyes. The next moment…

"...Gah?!"

Subaru's upper body quivered and collapsed at the sudden feeling of loss. He fell down to one knee, dangerously close to losing consciousness. His eyes fluttered as he felt the fatigue coursing through his body.

"How was it? Feeling it with your own body?"

Beatrice looked down at Subaru, giggling condescendingly. The back of her hand was elegantly placed at her lips, but Subaru couldn't laugh it off and call her pose adorable with her actions still fresh in his mind.

"Dammit, what did you..."

"Simply put, Betty just drained the mana from your body. Simply drain some more and you would reach the same condition, I suppose. Rather than relying on some curse, this way is much easier."

Subaru could do nothing more than look up maliciously at the triumphant Beatrice. This triggered a sudden thought for him. In the current timeline, I received my first mana-drain from Beatrice right before I passed out. Meaning I was mana-drained right before sleeping, then mana-drained right after waking up.

"Are you trying to kill me?!"

"Betty held back. If you were to turn into a husk here, then Betty would have to deal with your husk every time she wants a book."

"Husk? What am I, a bug?"

When seeing her expression that seemed to confirm this, Subaru began to question why he thought this was a safe place. Confirming that he still had feeling in his arms and legs, he mustered his strength, stood up, and lightly tapped his foot against the floor. "Don't tell me that you're the one who killed me."

"If you died then we wouldn't be having this conversation, and it would be more peaceful. Unfortunately, Betty is busy and doesn't have time to kill you.” She folded her arms behind her and moved away from Subaru to a bookshelf. Her gothic lolita dress fluttered as she struggled to grasp a book just barely out of reach. And so…

“This one?”

“...The one next to it. Hurry and hand it over, in fact.”

“Yeah, yeah.”

He grabbed the surprisingly thick book off the shelf and passed it to the sulking girl. Remaining displeased as she took it from him, she again moved away from him and towards a stepladder. Her small stature looked more suited to sitting on that stepladder than on a chair, and without fail, whenever Subaru wandered into the Forbidden Library she was sitting in that same spot with a book in hand.

“What book are you reading there?”

“A book that mentions how to get rid of bugs.”

“You have bugs in the library? That’s the worst. What kind?”

“It’s big and black, with a foul expression and mouth. And it thinks highly of itself, I suppose.”

“That’s a very peculiar bug there.”

Something you'd wanna check for and get rid of as quickly as possible. Most of the books here are probably way beyond me, but as a book lover, I can't forgive anything that damages books.

That’s what Subaru truly thought.

Upon seeing that, Beatrice sighed lightly. “Do you have any other business, I suppose? If not then please leave.”

“Ah, um…right. So that thing where you slurp out someone’s mana, can anyone do that?”

“That term feels inappropriate, I suppose… In this mansion, only

Betty and Bubby can use that. Roswaal doesn't have the talent for it, I suppose."

"Really? I heard he was all-powerful." Maybe he was just putting on a show? Subaru formed a rude thought about the manor's lord. He gave himself a pass, however, since he technically hadn't met him in this timeline, yet. "Anyway, about that. Could you not just take so much when you do that mana-drain? Both you and Puck."

"...I suppose Bubby has extracted mana from you as well?"

"Yeah, that bastard. He said I was full of mana, and he just kept asking and asking and forcefully… What's wrong?"

As Subaru continued his rant, a bit of crimson appeared beneath Beatrice's eyes. She placed both hands on her cheeks and muttered, "Ah, what a thing, I suppose. Betty and Bubby had an indirect mana-drain."

"What's with that bittersweet, indirect kiss-like reaction!" Stop that! I feel like a can that's been passed around!"

"With that in mind, it was quite a rich flavor… Can Betty do it again, I suppose?"

"I'll shrivel up like a prune! I don't have much blood right now!"

"Ah, right. Everything important was put back, but your blood wasn't returned, I suppose. Well, even Betty isn't that all-powerful."

Beatrice sighed in disappointment, but Subaru could only tilt his head in confusion. Her statement didn't match up with his memory.

"That makes it sound like it was you who patched me up. It's not good to try and steal credit from Emilia-tan."

"That half-blooded girl doesn't have the power to fix fatal wounds yet, in fact. She and Bubby closed the wound, and Betty healed it… What's wrong, I suppose?"

"I just don't know how to feel."

A hidden side of what happened back then had just unexpectedly come to light.

He assumed that Emilia had healed him, just like she did back in the alleyway. He glared at the girl in front of him suspiciously; she didn't falter and eyed him back just the same. Unless she's a big fat liar, her words can be taken as truth. That means that Beatrice is…

"You big fat liar. You have the worst personality!"

"Says the one who can't take kindness from another person!"

The verbal battle began and quickly escalated to the verge of a physical one. But before Subaru could grab her, he found himself flying through the air by Beatrice's magic. She played with one of her curls as he found himself hitting the now upside-down door.

"It's about time for you to leave, I suppose. The shaking in your hands has stopped, so your fear must've left you."

"…You noticed it?"

"You were trying to hide it, I suppose? It's vexing to be treated so conveniently."

Beatrice turned her nose up and waved her hand as if to shoo away a bug. Subaru accepted this gesture, righted himself, and stood up. He then brought his hand up to his face—the shaking had indeed stopped.

It may have been his fifth death, but it wasn't something that he could get used to. In fact, as the number rose and his experiences increased, he could feel his legs shaking at the thought of feeling that terror again.

On top of that was the way he died this last time. Who could blame him for feeling terror deep in his soul—so deep that no trace of courage remained in his body once he returned?

"I guess the time for excuses is over. Jeez, you're not kind at all." He smiled bitterly. With that last excuse over, Subaru raised his head. Placing his hand on the doorknob, he turned back to the girl one last time. “Sorry. But thanks. I’ll come again.”

“Your payment was the indirect mana-drain. Next time Betty will drain the rest of it, I suppose. So don’t come here again.”

Beatrice cut him off with that curt line as she dropped her eyes back to her book. Smiling so that she wouldn’t see it, Subaru turned the doorknob and passed through the Door Crossing.

“Wait, was that bug you were talking about me?!”

“Hurry up and leave! You wish to be blown away, I suppose!”

And thus he was blown past the Door Crossing.

3

“Umm, can I ask if you’re okay?”

“Damn, that kindness is my only solaaace. This is so great.”

Meeting the silver-haired girl in the garden, Subaru relaxed. He had been struck by Beatrice’s magic and launched out the door. From there, his body kept going past the second-floor terrace until finally landing in a flower bed below. Luckily the ground was soft enough to cushion his fall, but depending on how he fell he could have easily had to restart for the third time. The reason? His smart mouth.

“It keeps seeming more likely that she’s the one who killed me…”

“Can you stand? Is your tummy ok?”

“For now my stomach doesn’t appear to have reopened. It wouldn’t be very funny if the one who closed it up just opened it again. Man, sorry, but could you give me a hand getting up?”

“That’s the flower bed that Rem spread manure over yesterday, isn’t it…?”

“Aaaaaah! Abnormal Play!!”

He quickly withdrew the half of his body that had been dug into the flower bed and rolled out. Emilia, strangely far away, came closer as Subaru frantically wiped the mud and what might not be mud from his clothing.

“That doesn’t count! That doesn’t count, right?! It was yesterday, so it’s just dirt by now, right?!”

“Um, well, Subaru… Good soil grows good plants, so maybe you can take this as a sign of good luck…”

“Emilia-tan has already shifted into consideration mode?!”

Meaning it definitely counts.

Subaru wanted to cry at his pitiful state as he wrung out his sleeve. Meanwhile, Emilia watched that figure with a pained smile before reaching up to her chest. “Puck, wake up.”

In the palm of her hand lay a brightly shining green crystal. The light coming from the crystal formed a shape, and soon after the light solidified, a small gray cat appeared on top of her hand. The cat stretched, yawning widely. “Umm, morning, Lia. Ah, Subaru, you’re awake.”

“Morning, Puck. Sorry to ask this of you when you just woke up, but could you wash Subaru for me?” Emilia asked as she raised Puck in front of her face, one eye closed.

Subaru found himself enchanted by her demeanor. Puck nonchalantly turned around, noticed Subaru’s state, and nodded in understanding. “Alright, I’ll wash him. Here!”

“Wash me? What does that—ughr?!”

Puck turned both of his palms towards Subaru. From his palms appeared a magic circle, from which a continuous burst of water erupted. The water blasted Subaru’s right side with enough force that it seemed like Puck was trying to wipe all filth in the world from existence.

“Is this a flash flood!!” cried Subaru, as the force of the water caused his body to spin.

“Oh sorry, I should balance it,” Puck said, before changing the direction of the water. With the water now hitting his left side, Subaru began to spin in the opposite direction.

Puck fine-tuned the direction from there.

“There, now you’re all clean,” declared Puck.

“Right to left…my heart…goes round and round…” Falling to his knees and arms on the water-soaked ground, the overwhelming urge to vomit came over Subaru. But with an empty stomach, all that came out was spit.

Despite the torturous treatment, he did feel a little better. Wiping away the spit from his mouth, he slowly got up. “My first flash flood was dangerous… I thought my arm was going to come off. Hey, you aren’t actually the culprit here, are you?”

“I have no idea what you’re talking about, but do I look like someone who would do such an evil thing? That hurts,” Puck pouted in defiance, his hands on his hips, despite having just nearly drowned Subaru.

In response, Subaru just flicked him on the forehead and turned back to Emilia. It was the worst reunion yet, but his negotiating power going forward depended on how well he could recover from this. Despite everything, he had managed to make it work the first and second times, so he decided to push forward based on that. But as he was thinking about how to make the first step...

“Puh.”

“Heh?”

“Ahaha! Sorry, no, ahahaha! What are you two doing… Ahaha! Ah, I’m dying.”

In the face of such laughter, his resolve went flying away. Pointing towards Subaru’s soaked figure, Emilia burst into uncontrollable laughter. If they weren’t outside she’d be rolling on the floor.

Subaru could only stand there dumbfounded. Then he faced Puck, who had at some point started flying. “Anyway, first contact: success! Thanks for the assist, Father!”

“Who are you calling Father? I won’t hand over my daughter so easily,” Puck declared, puffing out his chest.

Upon hearing that, Emilia burst out into laughter once again.

Chapter 19:
The Results of Reading and Writing

1

“Ram and Rem said you’d be right over. I wondered what was keeping you,” said Emilia, her laughter subsiding. She stood at the edge of the garden, her eyes fixed on Subaru. As she spoke, traces of laughter lingered in her eyes, turning into teardrops that she gently brushed away with her fingertips.

Subaru, the cause of her hysterical outburst, toyed with Puck in his hands. “Let’s just say I wanted to give our reunion some impact and didn’t want to leave anything to chance!”

“Yeah, but isn’t leaping from the terrace straight into the flower bed a bit much?”

“Sorry, I just couldn’t help myself. I’m not usually that much of a brat,” Subaru said. He didn’t want her to see him as a pain in the ass who threw himself out of windows just for fun. Getting stuck in the flower bed, not to mention having Puck wash him off with a deluge of water, wasn’t exactly something he enjoyed.

“Anyway, you said you wondered what was keeping me,” Subaru continued. “Were you waiting for me all this time?”

“Huh? No, I wasn’t,” Emilia replied. “Certainly, I did want to thank you, so I didn’t want to step away and miss you, and I didn’t want to make an injured person go around looking for me, either. But it’s just by coincidence that I’m still here.”

“Right, a coincidence, Subaru,” Puck interjected. “She made up a bunch of reasons and took an extra long time grooming my fur, and bored the lesser spirits by talking about the same things over and over again… Sure, she was doing that, but that doesn’t mean she was waiting for you. Right?”

Puck hijacked the conversation in response to Emilia’s self-destructive reply. Emilia looked at Puck, unrelenting in his teasing, with a smile on her face. “Puck?”

“Just be honest!” Puck continued. “That’s what makes you so charming, dear daughter. I’m sure Subaru would agree, too. Right?”

“Of course I do!” Subaru beamed. “Emilia-tan is the absolute best! I’m already head-over-heels!”

“Subaru, don’t join in on Puck’s shenanigans…” Emilia chided. “By the way, what does ‘tan’ mean? Where does it come from, and why?”

The question of Subaru’s names for her became a topic of discussion each time he spoke one.

Previously, he was able to simply brush it off. But this time, Subaru would join forces with Puck to cover it up. They looked over at each other, eye to eye.

“Didn’t you know?” Subaru began. “That’s one of the highest forms of endearment one could use to show affection for another person. Especially when said slowly and deliberately, like this. Emilia-taaaan.”

“Oh, is that so…?” Emilia asked quizzically. “But I’ve never heard of it…”

“Well, it’s an old, long-forgotten expression of the past now,” Puck explained. “So it’s no surprise that you’ve never heard it before. Actually, I had forgotten about it for a while, myself.”

Looking off to the distance, Puck piled his own made-up story on top of Subaru’s tall tale. Subaru nodded solemnly at his words. “Yes, it’s an old and moldy term, long forgotten like a fairy tale that’s been lost to history. However, its meaning lives on in our hearts, ever so faintly.”

“Nowadays, though, there seem to be less and less people who remember it…” Puck started. “Hold up! Subaru, don’t tell me…you don’t happen to be…involved with that lost kingdom?!”

“Involved with…” Subaru paused. “Well, not exactly, but you could say I’m part of it. Didn’t you know? The royal family of that lost kingdom was said to have black hair and dark eyes…!”

“You’re both laughing way too much!” Emilia cut them off.

Subaru and Puck erupted with a surprised “Gaaahh!!”

Just as the conversation was heating up, blocks of ice hurtled from Emilia’s direction, forcefully shutting it down. Although each ice block was no bigger than a lump of sugar, it was a big enough quantity to block his field of view, making it the perfect prank. It struck true, sticking to Subaru’s face.

Removing the ice block plastered to his face by force was far too painful an endeavor, so all he could do was wait until it melted from his body heat. He’d have to endure the painful frostbite in the meantime.

“So annoying and painful! Critical hit! It’s super effective!” Subaru rolled on the ground, raising his body temperature in an attempt to speed up the thawing process.

Looking down at the figure rolling about on the lawn, Emilia let out an exasperated sigh. “Oh, come on. You always turn everything into a joke… You won’t even let me say a single word of thanks; that’s simply unfair.”

Emilia didn’t seem to grasp the severity of the situation. “You really look like you’re in pain… Oh, don’t pick it off like that, you’ll bleed!” Meanwhile, Puck was getting a kick out of Subaru’s humiliation.

Why hasn’t Puck received any damage? He was in on it too, huh.

“You see, I’m more than capable of deflecting Lia’s magic with a single hand,” Puck boasted.

“Hm, I see,” Subaru replied.

“So I simply diverted the attack that came my way to the person next to me.”

“Thereby resulting in me receiving the brunt of a critical hit! Your cuteness really belies your cunning, y’know!”

Subaru continued rubbing his face until the last of the ice melted away. Standing before the angry Subaru, Puck laughed sheepishly and put a hand to his head. Continuing with these antics would only tire him out. Knowing this, Subaru decisively turned toward the mansion.

“Oh, there’s Ram and Rem,” he announced.

Emilia thought aloud, “No kidding, is it breakfast time already?”

It was an unusual sight, both twins out and about in the garden in the middle of the day. Subaru was gazing at Emilia, head tilted in contemplation, when he realized what was going on. It was at this precise time on the first day that Roswaal would be making his return. The twins must have come to get us.

They approached the group and bowed politely, announcing in unison: “Master Roswaal has returned. Please return to the mansion.” Subaru would never tire of their synchronized stereo sound. It was a sound he loved.

Emilia, having no say in the matter, simply shrugged. Subaru stood up and stretched, assessing his own condition, before turning to the twins. Looking him up and down, they gave a comment.

“Sister, Sister. We look away for but a moment and our guest has become a wet, muddy rat.”

“Rem, Rem, it’s only been a minute, and our guest is now a filthy rag.”

“Yeah, yeah, I know,” Subaru responded to their insulting observations. “Have you seen my jacket?” Looking up at the mansion, he prepared to change his clothes, clean himself up, and face Roswaal once again.

This time, I’ll try a different approach.

For what would be his third round of meeting Roswaal for the first time, Subaru headed to the main hall to greet him. And just the same, it would be his ‘first time’ joining them in the dining room for breakfast.

For Subaru, having already been welcomed to this mansion three times, it was a familiar flow of events. Subaru suspected that Roswaal’s strong will was causing these events to persistently unfold.

The first day Subaru was summoned to this other world, that is to say, the day he met Emilia, was also an event that repeated itself four times over the course of four repeated days. It could very well be that situations that involved such strong intent would never fail to occur.

For example, Felt stealing Emilia’s insignia, and Subaru getting mugged by the Ton Chin Kan trio in the alley. The fact that the story itself never deviated from that general flow, despite minor changes in between, such as people’s whims and Subaru’s actions, was perhaps also attributed to such strong intent.

Therefore, it was only inevitable that the conversation over breakfast would lead to talk of Emilia’s insignia, of her candidacy for Queenship, and ultimately, of Subaru’s reward. Though he couldn’t deny the fact that he had nudged the conversation in that direction.

“Aaas Lady Emilia’s patron,” Roswaal began, “I am willing to pay a reeeeasonable price to keep the information you obtained about the insignia robbery under wraps. Okaaay?”

“A price, huh…” Subaru repeated thoughtfully. Having successfully brought the conversation back to this point, he contemplated how to reach his ideal conclusion.

In his previous two loops, Subaru settled the matter with an appeal to work in the mansion as their butler. The last time, he only did so on the assumption that the day would unfold in the same manner as the first. But this time he had no intention whatsoever of traveling down the same path. In order to guarantee a different outcome, the reward from Roswaal would also have to be different.

“Okay, Rosy,” he said conclusively. “Let me crash at your mansion for a couple of days. And after that, I’ll get out of your hair. Just lend me a bit of pocket money for the road.”

Puzzled by this request, Roswaal replied curiously, “Hmmm, sooo, when you say a liiiiittle bit…you mean enough to buy a couple of hooouses?” He narrowed his eyes as he spoke, perhaps reading too deeply into Subaru’s request.

Subaru, however, waved his hand with a chuckle. “No, no, I wasn’t being roundabout,” he said dismissively. “I just wanna kick back and eat well for a few days. I can live on my own after that.”

“Lady Emilia was riiiight,” Roswaal pondered. “That is indeeeeed a rather… mooodest request, isn’t it?”

“No biggie, it’s not like I did much…” Subaru continued, before suddenly changing his tune. “Unless you didn’t want to separate from me, Emilia-tan! Now that’s a different story!”

Emilia chimed in. “That’s a very selfless offer, but I’m sure you have your reasons, and I’m sure it must be very important to you. So, Subaru… I don’t want to hold you back.”

Subaru gasped at her unexpected input. “I've been rejected because my words were interpreted positively?!” Well, I don’t know what kind of image of me Emilia has made up in her mind, but at least the negotiations have ended with a rather fine impression of me.

Roswaal adjusted the collar of his kabuki-looking outfit. He observed Subaru, who appeared to be wracking his brain. “Weeeellll, if you really insist, then so be it. I’ll oblige. I’ll have Ram and Rem prepare what you neeeed. Is three days enough? If you need anything else, just aaaask.”

“Right,” responded the relieved Subaru. “Well, then…lend me some paper, a quill, and a book of fairy tales!” Roswaal raised his eyebrows slightly at Subaru’s unusual request. Subaru scratched his head, glancing over at the twins.

“I promised to keep practicing reading and writing every night,” he said. “Don’t be fooled by my looks. I’m a man of my word!” He gestured at the twins with a wink. They could only look at each other blankly at his one-sided promise.

3

In effect, this would be Subaru’s third week at Roswaal Manor. And in this third iteration, Subaru set his focus on one goal above all else: learning the cause of his death and the identity of the assailant in question.

“My only leads are ‘magic’ and ‘chain’…” pondered Subaru. “But that still doesn’t tell me what I need to know!” All he knew was that on the night of the fourth day, someone would appear and make an attempt on his life.

If only I could tell Roswaal. Then we could put some countermeasures in place! But I can’t prove where I got the information, so that would be a huge gamble… If only I knew what the assailant looked like, or what they were after… That alone would make a world of difference!

“So this time around, I’ll focus on only one thing. It’s a one-point wager to gather information. If the conditions for Return by Death are still the same, then…” That would guarantee at least one more chance for me to restart. That was the only conclusion Subaru could devise at this stage.

Subaru had experienced a breakthrough before on his fourth iteration after three deaths. On that basis, he should be able to return at least once again. All he needed was to gather enough intel to make said breakthrough for his next fourth run.

“Though honestly, I’d prefer not to go with a plan that guarantees my death from the start…” he lamented. But as long as Subaru was so limited in the measures he could take, some sacrifice would be necessary. Besides, it’s not like I’m just gonna sit around and do nothing. He was prepared to restart once again, but despite that willingness, he’d like nothing more than a conclusion that avoided another agonizing death. It was only natural to be so hell-bent on breaking through this loop if the opportunity arose.

“I’ve already told Puck to look after Emilia-tan,” Subaru affirmed to himself. After their exchange in the garden, while Emilia’s attention was drawn elsewhere, Subaru pulled Puck aside. Without getting into details, he warned Puck to look after Emilia during the night.

At first, Puck was skeptical due to Subaru’s lack of specifics. But being a feline with the ability to read into people’s emotions, he ultimately determined that Subaru’s concern was not misplaced. “I don’t know what’s going on, but you do seem to genuinely care for Lia,” he’d said.

Puck readily accepted Subaru’s persistent request. So it was safe to assume that Emilia’s safety would be secured to some extent. Although I haven’t known him very long, I can tell Puck is a cat of his word. Subaru was even willing to go so far as to give up his right to pet him, something he normally wouldn’t have done so easily.

I’m just glad he didn’t ask too many questions. It sure takes a load off! But why Subaru was so relieved by this did not even cross his mind at the moment. “All that’s left is that loli and Roswaal…but how do I get them to take a hint? That’s a lofty goal for a guy with no social skills.” He gruffly scratched his head, tucked the quill under his nose, and straightened his posture. The sheer number of challenges ahead is making my head pound.

Regardless of his ability to start over if he failed, using the girls as sacrificial pawns in his plan was far from a painless decision for Subaru. If possible, I’d like both Ram and Rem to survive. Heck, even Roswaal and Beatrice deserve to be there, too. Even if the hurdle is so high that I can’t see the top, I can’t use this as an excuse not to jump. “Now, where to begin…?”

“Pardon me, sir.” A voice from outside interrupted his thoughts as he leaned his weight back into the creaky chair. Before he could reply, the door opened to reveal one of the maid sisters—the pink-haired Ram.

Holding a tray of tea in her hands, Ram furrowed her brows at the sight of Subaru, seated at his desk. “Well, well. So you really are studying, sir.”

“Ram is aware that you’re a freeloader in the name of a guest, sir.” Apparently unfazed, Ram barged into the room, placed the tray on the desk, and offered Subaru a cup of steaming hot tea with a courteous “Here you go.”

The tea in this world was similar to the ‘black tea’ of his own world, both in appearance and taste. But Subaru, who wasn’t particularly a fan of tea-based drinks, half-resigned himself to the fact that colas and soft drinks in this world were out of the question.

Subaru had spent a total of ten days at Roswaal Manor. Over that period, his roles changed from injured patient, to honored guest, to servant. But one thing that hadn’t changed over the course of events was the taste of tea. And Subaru had been there long enough to sense that Ram’s bluntness would not allow for cutting corners.

Which is why, once again, Subaru found himself hesitantly lifting the cup to his mouth. “Yup. Still tastes like shit.”

“What a loathsome impression for the finest tea leaves in our mansion,” Ram scolded. But Subaru held fast to his opinions.

“It’s bitter. It’s gross. It tastes like a mouthful of grass. I don’t even wanna try to look sophisticated by drinking it, especially not if it’s you I’m drinking with. It tastes like plant water.”

“You’re being incredibly curt, sir,” Ram said as she lifted the other cup on the tray as if it were the most natural thing in the world. She helped herself to a seat on the bed behind the desk. This maid has some nerve, coming here to slack off on her duties, Subaru thought as he stared at the unconcerned Ram.

“You got some balls, lazing around in front of your honorable guest,” Subaru scoffed.

Ram replied coolly, “Pay Ram no mind, sir. She’s not asking anything of you. She's simply using tea as an excuse to kill time."

Subaru continued his criticism. "You must be a maid of pretty high status to have a sister who does all the work while you slack off."

"Not as high as the honorable guest who gives my sister all that work." Ram raised her hands to cover her mouth on her expressionless face as if to suppress a giggle. While exchanging insults with Ram, Subaru couldn't help but feel that something wasn't adding up.

The progression had already unfolded into what would've been his second night from the third loop. Within that time, Subaru had remained confined to his own guest room, hyper-focused on his studies, with the exception of the time spent chasing Emilia's ass. Although on rare occasions, he also made time to pester Beatrice, too.

In other words, I haven't advanced beyond a mere 'guest' and 'servant' relationship with Rem and Ram in this loop. One would assume that would mean a more distant relationship between them, especially in comparison to the first and second loops.

Yet despite this, for some reason, Ram had been visiting Subaru's room. She would visit to see how he was doing, to serve him tea, even to interrupt his studies as if checking on his progress, followed by them bickering before she left the room. It had become a recurring theme.

If anything, I've gotten even closer with Ram compared to the previous loops. For Subaru, this was a relationship that brought both gratitude and remorse. Having already prepared to use this loop as a strategic sacrifice, it was a shame to have to let this world pass him by.

"I just don't get it…" Subaru muttered pensively. "Can it be that your heart's been so moved by the sight of me, a 'man of literature', scribbling away at his work?"

"A man of literature…" Ram reacted to Subaru's musings. She watched him from her corner on the bed, taking in the sight of this boy from head to toe, and let out a “Heh.”

“You do that sometimes, but that’s not really nice, y’know.” Subaru’s cheeks twitched as Ram snickered with a condescending look on her face.

She shrugged her shoulders, not once breaking her usual calm composure.

“A young boy with an athletic build, a face that screams pure evil rather than intelligence, and a mentality without a hint of sensibility. If that’s what you call a ‘man of literature’, sir, Ram must question if you may not, in fact, be delusional.” Ram continued the insults.

“Oof, that’s harsh!” Subaru flinched at her words. “Although it is true that I was famous in my neighborhood because people in my town frequently said things like, ‘Subaru from the Natsuki family is fit like an incredible athlete but is a shut-in!’”

Indeed, anytime someone brought it up, his mother would report back to him from outside his room, stifling a laugh. The humiliation of the past rushed back to him. He wanted to sink through the floor. Subaru fought back the urge as a blush flashed across his face.

Ram stood up and approached him, peering over at the notes on his desk. “What disgraceful handwriting. You dare call yourself a ‘man of literature’, sir?”

“You dare call yourself a maid just because you use the word ‘sir’?” Subaru retorted. “Even maid cafe maids are nicer than you.” Not that I’ve ever visited one myself. I’ve only heard about them through word-of-mouth, but their hospitality sounds amazing! Though I have no way to confirm that.

Subaru’s bitter remarks were casually brushed aside. Ram continued flipping through the pages, unimpressed. Staring at her motionless profile, Subaru suddenly held up the book of fairy tales. I almost completely forgot about this! “Well, this book’s written almost entirely in E-letters, so it’s about time I got around to reading it.”

The book's reddish-brown spine was marked with a simple title: A Collection of Fairy Tales. The book itself wasn't much different from those in Subaru's world, complete with a table of contents in the beginning, followed by stories written in chapters. A quick glance at the contents revealed about ten fairy tales in total. It wasn't very thick, and looked easy to finish. It shouldn't take me an hour.

Subaru grinned. "I mean, it's about time I taste the fruits of my labor."

"Reading these stories is nothing to brag about," Ram stated, shutting him down. "It would be more embarrassing if you didn't know them. As a 'man of literature', it's only natural that you should know them, sir."

"Oh, come on, don't give me that. Why're you so offended by me claiming to be a man of literature? You got a fetish or something for well-read guys?" Ignoring Subaru's sexual harassment disguised as a question, Ram took the cup that was still on the desk and tilted it to her lips. That was my drink.

"Hey, what kind of maid drinks her honorable guest's drink?" Subaru gasped.

Ram replied nonchalantly, "Well, it's not like you were enjoying it. This tea is more suited to a person with a decent palate, anyway."

"You call liquified grass a 'decent palate'?" Subaru groaned. "You know what, never mind. I'm gonna bury myself in my book now, so go home. Or, I dunno, kill some time. Or whatever it is you maids do."

Subaru waved his hand dismissively at Ram, leaning back his chair as he finally opened the book. It began with a preface by the author who had compiled the collection of fairy tales. But before he knew it, he stumbled onto written characters that were definitely not the 'E-characters' he was familiar with. I'm already lost.

"Let's see… this says… 'Circle-circle, square-square, blankety-blankety-blank'… Shit. I can't read this part at all. I mean, I guess I could skip over it, but it doesn't feel right." Subaru grimaced. What if I come across words I can't read at the best part of the story?

Closing one eye, Subaru flipped through the book, trying to see the letters while also trying to avoid spoilers. After quickly confirming the difficulty of the text, he returned to the story. "Now where was I… 'Once upon a time…'"

Subaru continued reading, slightly amused to know that even fairy tales from another world began with the same cliche. Fairy tales as they were, their beginnings and ending were quite clear and concise. They were no different from those back in Subaru's world in the sense that they left plenty of room for imagination.

"They're just like those children's stories with some kind of moral in them. There's even one nearly identical to The Red Oni Who Cried." If asked what his favorite fairy tale was, Subaru would have to say it was that one. If asked what his least favorite fairy tale was, he would also have to say it was that one.

The Red Oni Who Cried was a story that Subaru both loved and hated. He had fond memories of scribbling his own ending into every copy of the picture books when he was in kindergarten. "The Blue Oni deserves happiness too, Buckaroo. Why should he stay sad?"

Ram's voice interrupted his flashback. "Ram doesn't know what you're talking about or why you're crying all of a sudden. But it's not a good look. So please stop crying in front of her."

"How could you be so cruel to a boy's tears?!" Subaru wailed. Snapping back to reality, he rubbed his eyes and let the tears fade. He lightly tapped the cover of the book he had finished reading in front of Ram, who was still in the room.

"I did it," he bragged. "I read the whole thing. It was more interesting than I expected. I was able to enjoy the subtle difference in our values…kinda like a cross-cultural exchange, huh? Maybe I should study art here and share knowledge about the other side of the world. Do you think they'll come after me to a different world for copyright violation?"

"Ram didn't understand half of what you said, sir… That's your impression after reading the book? Wasn't there anything memorable about the stories?"

Plagiarism is bad, though. Subaru's beliefs as a creator wavered at his question. Looking up, he flipped through the collection of stories. "The story of the dragon in the middle of the book, and the witch story at the end. They're the only two that really caught my attention. I mean, anyone can tell these two are treated completely differently from the others."

Of all the tales in the collection, the two that made the strongest impression on Subaru were those two in particular. One was made to appear like it was truly exceptional, while the other was completely…

"The witch story seems like a throwaway. Like the editor just included it because he had to. It's just an outline without any real plot." Subaru critiqued the tales.

Ram added her thoughts. "The witch story is something else," she began. "The dragon story is revered because this is Lugunica, after all. It's only natural."

"Oh, right," Subaru recalled. "Lugunica is known as 'the Dragon Kingdom,' isn't it? Now I know where the name comes from." With a nod, Subaru placed the book of fairy tales back on the desk and put his hand on the cover.

Lugunica, the Dragon Kingdom. A fairly large country, and the country where Subaru lived for the moment. There was a good reason why this country, located in the easternmost part of this world according to their map, was known as the 'Dragon Kingdom'. Simply put, this kingdom's prosperity had long been dependent upon a covenant with a dragon, which allowed the country to flourish.

"Famine, pestilence, war… The dragon has protected Lugunica in all kinds of situations," Ram continued.

"And the name they gave it was 'Dragon Kingdom'. How profound," Subaru noted. “According to the story, it was a covenant between the royal family and a dragon. Sounds more like an origin story than a fairy tale.”

“Yes, it’s true,” Ram confirmed. “To this day, the noble dragon watches over our land from afar. From beyond the Great Waterfall. Until the promise made to the royal family is fulfilled.”

Subaru let out a thoughtful “Hmm” as Ram somberly spoke. An age-old pact with a dragon. The story never mentioned the nature of the pact, but it was a pact that had saved the kingdom from crisis on many occasions. It must’ve been some kind of contract between man and dragon.

After some thought, Subaru came to a realization. If it was indeed the royal family of Lugunica with whom the dragon had made a covenant, that would mean… “Wait a minute…by any chance, the family that made a pact with the dragon…didn’t they just die the other day?”

“Yes,” Ram confirmed his suspicions. “It was rather sudden.”

Subaru started to fret. “Isn’t that bad? I mean, I don’t know anything about the situation, but still…”

This is a dragon that promises and provides so much. So the compensation would be substantial. But if the royalty is eradicated before paying that compensation, wouldn’t the dragon get pissed?

“No, no, no, cut the negative thinking crap,” Subaru scolded himself. “A better theory is that the royal family had already paid up. The dragon’s happy, the country’s safe, everyone wins.”

Subaru pushed away his fears. Ram, however, dismissed his hope with a single shake of her head. “Nobody knows what the dragon wants, as the story goes. And what the dragon will do in the present situation, nobody knows this either…” Ram paused, then breathed out a “No. The only one who knows what the dragon wants, sir, is the dragon himself.”

Subaru gulped. Sweat trickled down his forehead. It’s not even hot in here. He chewed on Ram's words, swallowed them, and digested them. Finally, he spoke. "Then, isn't that an insane amount of pressure on Emilia-tan?"

"Indeed," Ram agreed. "An entire country's fate on your shoulders, and negotiations with a dragon who can choose to protect or destroy it on a whim. The thought alone makes it seem like a fairy tale."

It was the last night of his second loop that Subaru saw Emilia look at this book with uncertainty. It was only after his death that he realized why her hand had stopped turning the pages. The size and weight of the pressure she carried was beyond his imagination. Just thinking about the burden she bore on her slender shoulders and the toll it took on her mind made his heart want to scream in a fit of rage and sorrow.

"There's nothing we can do," Ram said.

"Huh?" Subaru questioned, but Ram continued speaking.

"Everyone is born with certain qualities and the responsibilities that come with them. Lady Emilia was born under such a star. And that is why she must endure these hardships. She must persevere uphill, no matter how steep that road may be."

"Isn't that too much to place on one girl's shoulders?" Subaru asked, his voice quivering due to an unidentifiable anger.

"I suppose it would be nice to have someone to help carry the baggage. But even when she reaches the summit, she must ultimately face that on her own," Ram replied, her voice cold and her response rational.

Subaru noticed her strenuous effort to stay rational, allowing him to regain his composure before he exploded in anger. There's no point taking my anger out on Ram. She's not the one responsible for this. She's only stating her readiness to accept the situation.

"Oh, right, Ram," Subaru said, changing the subject. He didn't feel that apologizing was the right thing to do at this time. "About the other story…” The story of the witch at the end of the book was only a handful of pages in length, and its treatment paled in comparison to the dragon story, which was placed smack-dab in the middle of the book. A story called, The Witch of Envy.

“So about that witch story—”

“Ram doesn’t want to talk about that story,” Ram cut him off abruptly. She hastily collected the cups and put them on the tray. “Ram has overstayed her welcome. She doesn’t want to leave Rem with too much to do, so she will go back. Ram will return when it’s time for dinner, sir.”

“Y-Yeah…” Subaru gaped at her.

“Good day, sir.” Turning away with an air of nonchalance, Ram’s petite body exited the room. Once the door closed silently behind her, Subaru flopped over onto the bed with an exhale. “Somebody’s moody…”

Subaru grumbled, lifting the book of fairy tales to his face and thumbing through the pages. The last one, The Witch of Envy, was a relatively concise tale, spanning no more than four pages.

“A frightening witch, a dreadful witch. The very mention of her name was enough to fill someone with dread. They called her the Witch of Envy, and…”

There was no beginning, middle, or end. The story only conveyed the horrors of this witch. It was written in simple language that even a child could understand, underscoring the bleak and simplistic eeriness of the tale. “I’ve worked my ass off to learn how to read this book, and yet…”

The sense of accomplishment and satisfaction, indeed even that freshness one feels after reading an entire book, had all gone to waste in a single moment. Subaru rolled over in bed and, for once, detached his thoughts from the story. He pondered the trials and errors of this loop, with only two days left in its run.

Subaru’s mind raced. The same thoughts swirled over and over again through his brain. Before he knew it, his consciousness had melted into a muck all over the soft bed and sheets, until it had all but faded away.

Chapter 20:
Struggling Alone in the Dusk

1

“Er, right. It was only a short while, but thanks for everything.”

Standing in the entrance hall, watched by everyone in the mansion (which amounted to just four people, excluding Beatrice), Subaru fought back the itch of embarrassment and bowed his head.

The three-day stay, the limit he had been promised, had come to an end. The day for Subaru to leave the mansion had arrived.

Subaru’s outfit was simple: the jersey and convenience store bag he had on when summoned to this other world, plus a tool pouch provided by Roswaal’s generosity.

The pouch was heavy, apparently containing a decent sum of money, though given the monetary sense of aristocrats, he was a little terrified to look inside. Especially for Subaru, who was currently woefully lacking in means of self-defense.

“Are you really sure you’re okay? You really should just ask Roswaal to call a carriage here for you.”

Among those seeing him off, Emilia stood in the center, the worry on her face showing no sign of fading. Happy that she was so concerned for him, Subaru waved his raised hand.

“Nah, nah, nah, I’m good. I’m gonna take it slow and easy. I can’t cause you guys any more trouble than I already have, honestly.”

“…I know you’re capable, Subaru, so I probably don’t need to worry, but…”

“Whoa, getting high marks like that is actually kinda pressuring. But, but, I’ll be fine. Someday, when I’ve become a stronger, smarter, richer man, I’ll come on a white horse to sweep you off your feet.”

“Got your handkerchief? Drinking water? And… right, lagmite for when it gets dark. And then, and then…”

“You’re in full-on mom mode?!”

Emilia’s worry knew no bounds; she had even gone so far as to ask, “Will you be able to sleep alone without getting lonely?” Just how desperate for companionship did she think he was?

Or perhaps, her intuition had sensed the uncontrollable anxiety Subaru held deep in his heart.

“Well theeeen, stay safe, Mr. Subaru. It was short, but it was fuuuun, wasn’t it?”

The tall man extended a hand. Subaru shook it and smiled back.

“Yeah, thanks to you too. You even gave me souvenirs and everything; you really rolled out the red carpet.”

“Glad to hear it. Oh, yes, try not to lose that souvenir. I added a liiiitle bonus to match the memories of your three days with us.”

Roswaal winked one eye as a signal. Sensing his intent, Subaru nodded firmly and shook the tool pouch on his back.

“Right, right, hush money. I got it, I won’t spill the beans. I’ll swear on the Dragon if you want.”

“Talking to you, I feel like I might lose sight of the true nature of my schemes. Besides, in this country, swearing on the Dragon is the highest form of oath. I don’t doubt you, but… see that you don’t forget that.”

Despite the reminder, Subaru raised his hand, then turned that hand toward the twins standing behind Roswaal. As the two stood silently still, Subaru patted them on the shoulders with his raised hand.

“You guys took super good care of me, too. Especially Rem-rin—thanks for the tasty meals. And Ram, well, uh… you're pretty good at cleaning toilets, right?"

"Sister, Sister. Our guest is hopelessly crap at flattery."

"Rem, Rem. Our guest has a fatally poor sense of flattery."

"Oh, shut it. I seriously just couldn't think of anything else. But thanks."

Having said his goodbyes to everyone, he turned his back before the reluctance could set in.

The twins quickly opened the doors to the entrance hall, and the road leading straight to the nearby village spread out before Subaru's eyes.

Walk about twenty minutes to the village, then move on to another village from there. Take a carriage from there to the Royal Capital —that was the plan Subaru had explained to everyone.

"Well, thanks for everything. See you again someday, maybe."

"Yeah, be careful. Don't get hurt, okay?"

Leaving a smile for Emilia, who worried for him until the very end, Subaru stepped out onto the road just as he was sent off.

The silver-haired girl waved her hand in front of the entrance until the mansion was out of sight.

That distant gesture was infinitely endearing, causing the flame in Subaru's chest, which had been nearly extinguished by anxiety, to blaze up once more.

Alone on the road, he stopped walking after awhile.

Subaru surveyed his surroundings, confirmed there was no sign of anyone, and suddenly stepped off the path and into the forest. The forest flanking the road was deep and connected to the mountains; Ram had strictly warned him not to enter it due to the abundance of wild animals.

Ignoring that warning, Subaru pushed through the vegetation, heading deeper into the woods. He climbed several slopes, maintaining his pace even as protruding branches left scratches on him.

He must have proceeded through the mountains for about fifteen minutes.

“Alright, this is the spot.”

Suddenly the forest opened up, and the high sky filled his widened field of vision. After climbing several slopes, Subaru had arrived at a place like a small, elevated hill nestled in the mountains.

This was his destination. Miming the action of wiping sweat from his brow, Subaru then brought the cliff before him into view—and specifically, the building that existed directly below it.

It was a familiar mansion. None other than the majestic Roswaal estate.

By circling around the road and going through the forest and mountains, he had reached a perfect peeping point from which he could monitor the Roswaal manor from a high vantage. Specifically,

“I can see the west side, where Emilia-tan’s room is, really well. If anything strange happens, I’ll know right away.”

From this distance, Subaru’s eyesight could just faintly make out the window of her room. Even setting that aside, it was a position that allowed him to grasp the full view of the mansion, including the west wing. He judged that if anyone visited the mansion from the outside, he would definitely be able to see them.

It was already past the morning of the fourth day in his third loop. In Subaru’s experience, there were about sixteen hours remaining until the time of his previous death.

Which meant, presumably, that any anomaly at the mansion would occur around then as well.

“Now, I just wait for something to happen.”

If it was only sixteen hours, a stakeout was possible even with Subaru's mental fortitude.

Ideally, he had wanted to create this situation three days ago—right after the loop started—but he gave himself a three-day buffer, fearing his concentration wouldn't hold if he acted too hastily.

Thanks to that, his energy, stamina, and motivation were all topped up.

To detect any abnormality at the Roswaal manor in advance, or to create conditions where he could rush in no matter what happened —that was the prerequisite Subaru had prepared.

If he stayed at the mansion and was included in the attacker's targets from the start, his consciousness would be muddled by the same magic as before.

In the current situation where he wanted even a single fragment of information about the attacker, such a thing would be fatal.

Therefore, Subaru chose a strategy of using Emilia and the others as decoys to lure out the attacker.

Of course, unable to be completely heartless, Subaru had set up several safety lines and intended to dash into the mansion the moment anything happened, running around to warn of the enemy attack.

"It'd help if the enemy is the cautious type who gets spooked and runs when I scream."

Voicing his optimistic observation, Subaru lowered his tool bag and searched its contents. What he pulled out was a long rope he had "borrowed" from the mansion's warehouse. From his experience as a servant, he knew exactly where such supplies were kept.

He had sneaked it out when no one was looking, carrying it for just such an emergency.

Tying the rope to the trunk of a nearby thick tree, Subaru secured the other end of the rope to his own body. Of course, using it as a lifeline just like that would kill him from the g-force, so he tied several knots at various points to act as shock absorbers first.

“Now for the small knife to cut the rope… hopefully cutting the rope is all I’ll need it for.”

With a blade length comparable to a fruit knife, he was also considering its role for self-harm in a worst-case scenario.

As a means of resisting the magic from the last time, he could probably crush the initial weakening of his consciousness before it took hold. Though he didn’t think he could counter the debilitation that followed.

“Better than having no plan at all… After all, this time is for preparing countermeasures for the next time.”

Muttering as if to convince himself, Subaru shook his head to banish his timidity.

Suddenly, the faces of the people at the Roswaal manor he had just bid farewell to crossed his mind.

This time, Subaru was trying to use them as sacrificial pawns to prepare for the next loop. Even though, just like the times before, he was supposed to have formed a genuine bond with them.

If he closed his eyes, he could recall the days of these last four days.

He didn’t think he had built as close a relationship with the others this time, but he still had many opportunities to interact with Ram and Rem, and he had actively gone to see Emilia. All while predicting that right now, in this very moment, it would cause his heart to ache like this.

This is a punishment. This is just desserts. This is a penalty he deserves to take.

It is the kind of judgment that Subaru, who planned this strategy on the premise of loss—deciding that he had to use them as pawns at least once—must absolutely accept.

He interacted with them thinking it was painful.

He interacted with them thinking they were dear to him.

Subaru spent these three days enduring the agony of sticking his fingers into an open wound, tearing the flesh further and breaking the bone.

So that he would not forget any of it.

“I told myself this, Natsuki Subaru. When you repeat it, even if everyone else forgets… you will remember.”

That’s why he mustn’t think it’s okay to forget what happens this time.

Until the very, very, very last moment, he must continue to seek the happy ending he desires.

No one has the right to decide that their existence is just bubbles disappearing into the rift of time.

Keeping his body low, clenching his jaw, Subaru hid himself between the trees and grass, monitoring the Roswaal manor through gaps in the forest.

His breathing was shallow, and though his body should have been tense, his heartbeat was strangely slow; he could feel his entire being affirming the resolve Subaru had set.

A sensation of his body obeying him like never before.

While grasping that rare sensation, Subaru waited silently for the time.

2

He lay low, waiting for the time to come.

Tension stiffened his body, anxiety shook his heart unevenly, and impatience caused extraneous things to flicker in his vision.

Quietly avoiding such unconscious interference, Subaru continued to hold his breath.

Six hours had already passed, and the sunset was pouring a brilliant orange into a world that had been before noon.

Thinking back, this was the time when, in previous loops, he would have been heading to the village for shopping with either Ram or Rem.

However, this time he hadn't confirmed either of them leaving the mansion. Did that mean without Subaru, the shopping event didn't happen?

"Maybe since there's one less mouth to feed, purely practical, they pushed the shopping to tomorrow… or something. Weird that I can look at it objectively."

Because he had been silent for over six hours, the voice he suddenly murmured was hoarser than he expected. Giving a wry smile, Subaru took out the tool bag—and the tube of water inside it—moistening his throat with the cold water. It was simple, like a bamboo tube, but it was a mysterious tool that kept the water inside cold indefinitely. He figured this, too, must be a tool related to magic.

"Just six hours and I'm already this pathetic. It isn't the time to lose focus. Get it together, man!"

Slapping his cheeks as he spoke, the dry sound snapped his consciousness back into clarity.

There was still nearly half a day left until the predicted time. If he was breaking now, the road ahead looked grim.

He had to shore up his slackening spirit and return to his watch.

Fortunately or unfortunately, it was at the moment Subaru switched his mindset that it happened.

"—!"

The instant he felt a faint anomaly catch on his eardrum, Subaru's body leaped to the side without a shred of hesitation.

An evasive maneuver executed exactly as planned, with all senses fully engaged.

It certainly bore fruit, spectacularly saving Subaru's body from the threat of that surprise attack.

Immediately after, what he heard was the crushing sound of a heavy object snapping a tree in half. The toppling trees swept up everything around them; leaves, branches, and the sound of snapping wood danced wildly.

Subaru bolted through the chaos, instantly throwing himself toward the cliff.

"—Whaaa!"

Unable to be fully stifled by his clenched teeth, a scream leaked out as he tasted the floating sensation of his insides flipping from the high fall. However after falling only a few meters, his momentum came to an abrupt halt. The rope tied tightly around his waist dug in, and groaning in pain, he gasped,

"Emergency… escape…!"

Saying that, he cut the rope with his knife. His liberated body resumed its fall; where his shoe soles bit into the sloping cliff, and he practically slid down, landing violently on the ground.

Without a moment to catch his breath, Subaru chose to flee, abandoning all appearances. He threw away the tool bag to lighten his load and ran down the mountain with literally just the clothes on his back.

Running out of breath, he shouted,

"I saw it! Haa… Aah! I saw it!"

The object that had mown down the trees—it was a spiked iron ball as big as a person's embrace. You could call it a bowling ball equipped with killing functions; a romantic weapon connected to its user by a long, long chain—its name: the Morning Star.

The anomaly that had occurred in the mountains was the timbre of the chain connecting that iron ball. That sound, which he remembered hearing, was unmistakably the weapon that had taken Subaru's life that night.

Having witnessed its power and intimidation, Subaru's teeth were chattering with belated terror.

If that mass flew at him with sharpness, it wouldn't be strange for a body taking a direct hit to be blown to pieces. It made perfect sense that his left side had been ripped off.

"But… they came this way!"

Stepping on branches, jumping over ditches, spitting as he conquered the poor footing.

This was an outcome Subaru anticipated. The possibility of him being attacked after he left the mansion was about the same as an attack on the mansion itself.

If they intended to kill everyone involved, Subaru, who had stayed for three days, would hardly vanish from the list. And the fact that they chose Subaru as a target meant,

"Basically, it means they've been watching me in that mansion for days."

The attacker had been monitoring the mansion for several days.

Therefore, they didn't remove Subaru from the target list even after he left the mansion. Above all, finding Subaru where he lay hidden was the greatest proof.

How could they do that without following Subaru after he left the manor?

"—Wah!"

It was the moment he grew so lost in thought that he neglected his footing.

A tree root caught Subaru’s foot, sending his momentum-carrying body into a spectacular tumble. He rolled across the ground, sliding down the slope. Just then, the iron ball passed overhead as if it had been aimed perfectly.

If he hadn’t been rolling just now— a shiver raced through Subaru’s heart.

He rolled to the side, stood up, spat out the dirt that had gotten into his mouth, and resumed his escape. He had completely lost the path, but he couldn’t stop.

He was out of breath. His lungs hurt. To begin with, Subaru lacked endurance.

He was confident he was above average in all other athletic abilities, but his stamina was truly hopeless. A game of tag on a mountain path—just thinking about it meant he had no chance of winning. If he had no chance just thinking about it, he had even less chance actually doing it.

In other words,

“Being cornered… was inevitable, huh…”

Before him, a cliff towered up as if to imprison Subaru.

The stone wall, revealing hard, sharp fragments, was a natural fortress that refused to be climbed or used as a foothold. Naturally, the current Subaru had no means of overcoming it.

He turned around, took a deep breath in and out, steadied his breathing, before bracing himself.

In front of him, the darkness in the forest had deepened before he knew it, and this place, where the trees obscured the sunset, was filled with a sense of desolation as if cut off from the world.

“If you’re coming… then bring it on…”

Driving away his whining with bravado, Subaru unzipped the front of his jersey and took off the jacket. He spread it out with both hands, taking a stance, and quietly waiting for the attacker to arrive.

He is cornered. He is trapped. Subaru is now nothing more than powerless prey caught in a predator's trap.

But he won't just let himself be eaten.

He has sacrificed this much. At the very least, he's going to get compensation to match.

—In that instant, dragging the sound of chains from beyond the darkness, violence flew at high speed.

"Have you got… the guuuuuts?!"

Faced with a certain-kill blow, Subaru's body displayed reflexes that defied common sense.

Lifting the jersey jacket he held in both hands, he wrapped up the incoming iron ball from directly underneath, slightly deflecting its momentum and dodging a direct hit to his torso by a hair's breadth.

However, the jacket was ripped from his arms, and his body, unable to fully kill the impact, was slammed into the rock wall; he was not unharmed.

But the moment he looked up and saw the iron ball that had missed its mark embedded in the wall, Subaru smiled a smile of supreme satisfaction and firmly grabbed the fully extended chain.

Then, looking toward the opposite end of the stretching chain—the direction where the attacker holding it stood—

"Now show yourself, you piece of shit! I spent a whole week trying to see your face, dammit!"

He raised a roar of anger, emboldening himself by shouting foul curses.

No matter who came out, he strained his eyes and glared into the darkness so he would never miss them.

It was a desperate situation, but somehow he had picked up his life.

Perhaps, without making this loop a sacrificial pawn, it might even be possible to repel the attacker who revealed themselves.

His racing consciousness made Subaru picture thoughts that were indistinguishable from optimism.

In a situation he had once nearly given up on, he desperately reached out for the light he saw.

In that light were Emilia, the twins, the cheeky little girl, and Roswaal. A sensation where he almost forgot the situation and his cheeks nearly relaxed, and then,

“—I suppose it can’t be helped.”

The sound of chains rang out, and he felt the slack as the owner approached.

However leaving such trivial sensations behind, Subaru’s eyes were wide open.

His lips trembled, and a voiceless voice leaked from his throat as a groan.

Unconsciously, his fingers let go of the chain they grasped, and his head shook slightly, weakly from side to side as if rejecting it.

Treading on grass, stepping over branches, her figure slowly emerged from the darkness.

An apron dress based in black, a pure white headdress adorning her head. Gripping the handle of the chain connected to the iron ball—a weapon that completely mismatched her petite frame—

“It would have been best if you had simply met your end without realizing anything.”

Swaying her blue hair, tilting her head with that familiar expressionless look,

“You’re kidding… Rem.”

The girl he thought he wanted to protect was raising a flail before him.

Chapter 21:
Tag at Nightfall

In that instant, the only thing dominating Subaru's mind was a complete blank.

He couldn't even conjure a clinging plea to deny the spectacle before his eyes. Subaru's thoughts were simply, utterly buried in a landscape of white.

A stagnation, as if his throat had frozen, his breathing forgotten, his very heart stopped. What broke the spell was the sensation of a single drop of sweat caressing his skin as it trickled down his forehead.

With the feeling of the sweat dripping from his chin to the ground, Subaru's consciousness returned from the void.

However, facing reality meant there was no denying that the person standing before him was the one person he hadn't wanted to believe was there.

—This is bad. Badbadbadbadbadbad.

Following the blankness, what filled his thoughts was a chaotic litany born of impatience and confusion.

He couldn't think straight. Was the person standing before him really the Rem that Subaru knew? Or could it be an impostor? No, there was no possibility of an impostor. There was no point in doing such a thing.

"Maybe you're actually triplets…"

Subaru himself knew best that even if that were true, it would offer no comfort at all.

Watching Subaru, whose fighting spirit had evaporated, Rem gently stroked her short blue hair with her free hand.

“If you do not resist, Rem will make the end painless.”

“Do you really think there’s a human alive who’d hear that offer and say, ‘Yes, that’s right, please do, hihihi!’?”

“Rem apologizes. You are right; you were indeed that sort of person, esteemed guest.”

The way she bowed so politely was far too divorced from the atmosphere of the scene. Her demeanor was so unchanged from her usual self that one might mistake this for a casual scene inside the mansion.

That only made the alien presence of the rugged weapon gripped in her hand all the more tremendous.

“A girl wielding a savage weapon is definitely a romantic trope, but…”

An iron chain and a spiked iron ball—a lethal blunt weapon that would mince anyone it hit directly. The gentleman who chose this for her must have had terribly bad taste.

Subaru had already tasted its power once and had his life scattered by it. He knew from firsthand experience that she could manipulate it at will.

Involuntarily swallowing his breath, turning his panic into drops on his forehead, he formed words.

“Can I say a cliché line like… ‘Why are you doing this?’”

“It is not that difficult. Punish the suspicious. It is a maids duty.”

“Don’t you have the phrase ‘Love thy neighbor’?”

“Rem’s hands are already full.”

Perhaps she had no intention of playing along with his stalling; Rem’s gaze never once softened as she answered him.

He couldn’t read her next move. But there was one thing he did know.

That if he moved now, he would definitely die.

Subaru's instincts, having died five times in one way or another, were screaming that alert at him.

It was too one-sided a checkmate to call it a stalemate. Subaru spun his wheels frantically, struggling to squeeze out even a little bit of information.

He had to avoid stepping on a landmine, pique her interest, and drag out the conversation. telling himself this, Subaru tried to avert his eyes, if only temporarily, from the despairing fact closing in on him.

Because if he faced it head-on, he wouldn't be able to stop himself from collapsing to his knees.

"—Does Ram know about this?"

The name that slipped out of his mouth was that of the older sister who looked exactly like her.

Unfriendly, foul-mouthed, with a bad attitude, and maid skills that fell short of her sister's across the board—a hopeless stat sheet—but she was the one Subaru had spent the most total days with at the Roswaal Manor.

If even that girl, with whom he had enjoyed bickering, had turned into Subaru's enemy—just the thought made his body tremble. But,

"Rem intends to finish this before Sister sees."

The answer Rem gave was, unintentionally, the very answer Subaru had been seeking.

The situation remained bad, but he was saved from plunging into the absolute worst mood just in the nick of time.

He let out a long breath, surprised that it came from relief.

To find something to be optimistic about in such a cornered situation—just how lukewarm was his way of thinking?

Raising his head, Subaru looked straight back into Rem's eyes. And, watching Rem furrow her brows slightly at his glare,

"So, you're acting on your own? Not following Roswaal's orders?"

"Rem will eliminate with her own hands anything that could be an obstacle to the fulfillment of Master Roswaal's dearest wish. You are merely one of those things."

"Can't he even discipline his pet dog? Try thinking about how a passerby feels getting bitten, huh?"

"Rem will not allow insults toward Master Roswaal."

Subaru had lightly provoked her to probe her true feelings, and his cheek burst open.

His vision shook from the impact of the blow, and his hand involuntarily touched his cheek where the sharp pain was—it was wet with bright red blood.

She had used the chain—the connection to the iron ball still embedded in the wall—like a whip, striking the side of Subaru's face with iron. His cheek was torn in the distorted pattern of the chain, and blood flowing from his forehead entered his left eye, stinging with pain.

All this damage from one smart-assed remark. But it was worth it for what he gleaned.

At least her loyalty to Roswaal was genuine. And it was likely true that she believed disposing of Subaru was for Roswaal's sake.

It was judged that Subaru's departure from the Roswaal Manor would be detrimental to Roswaal, who was supporting Emilia in the Royal Selection.

In short, when you put it all together, the heart of the matter was—

"Ah, so that's it. —Did you really trust me that little?"

"Yes."

She nodded without hesitation, and Subaru felt a pain as if a sharp blade had been thrust deep into his chest. That answer stirred up unpleasant imaginings for Subaru, and affirming those imaginings changed the color of every scene from the days leading up to this.

Therefore, Subaru did not voice the suspicion that had sprouted in his heart.

He merely twisted the corner of his mouth in self-mockery at his own comical stupidity.

"Serves me right. Thinking I was getting along so well… what a misunderstanding."

"…Sister is…"

"I don't wanna hear it! —Eat this!"

Screaming, the moment Rem showed a slight hesitation, Subaru thrust the cell phone he had hidden behind his waist forward—immediately, a white light tore through the darkness-sunken forest, creating a stagnation in Rem's movement for just a split second.

"—Raaagh!"

"—!"

He dashed out, slamming a shoulder tackle into her small frame to blow her away.

Whatever the trick, Rem swung that violent device with impossible strength, but in a simple collision, Subaru had the advantage in physique and weight.

Hit by the full-force charge, her small body flew backward; she lost her balance and fell to the ground. He ran past her without a single glance, sprinting at full speed.

Gasping, forcing air into his lungs, he raced his thoughts and his legs.

If this was Rem's independent decision, he could still formulate a plan to save his life. If he could run back to the mansion and negotiate directly with her employer, there should be a possibility.

But if Roswaal's opinion aligned with Rem's, then this was nothing but a foolish act of escaping the lion's den only to run into the wolf's.

"Even so… if it's… Emilia."

If it was that silver-haired girl who shone more brilliantly than anyone in his memories, there was no room for doubt.

If it was her, if it was her, if it was her—

—She, who was a central figure in the Royal Selection, and who might find Subaru's existence the most troublesome of all?

"—?!"

The manifestation of anxiety suddenly surfacing in his heart. Realizing that it was his own voice, infinitely dark and cold, Subaru was struck by a shock like lightning.

Unmistakably, he himself, with his own voice, had doubted Emilia's heart.

Subaru himself, who knew how straightforward she was, how hard she tried, and how she never hesitated to suffer loss for the sake of others, had doubted her.

If positions change, thoughts change.

Just as Rem was now, how could he say for sure that the other people in that mansion weren't gunning for Subaru's life?

In the first place, it was a mistake not to suspect an inside job at the time of his second death. It happened inside the mansion. Naturally, the easiest people to pull it off were those on the inside.

Blinded by superficial relationships, this was the result of overlooking the obvious.

Running frantically through the mountains in this unsightly state, unable to come up with a single decent breakthrough.

—What happened to strictly gathering information this time?

When the threat actually appeared in a form different from his expectations, he had no choice but to cling to life while coughing up his life force like this.

He had been arrogant. He had been naive. He had been shallow.

Breathing roughly, conquering the slope as if tumbling down it, what filled Subaru's head was not a method to break the deadlock, but simply words of regret.

"What on earth… was I doing this for…!"

A whimper spilled out, and tears involuntarily blurred his vision.

His steps faltered, and as the forest suddenly broke, Subaru saw the night closing in on the open sky.

And then—

"—Huh?"

A blade of wind from a super-high altitude flashed—and blew away everything below Subaru's right knee.

Watching the tip of his right leg bounce away with momentum, Subaru's body completely lost its posture. His balance destroyed, the momentum of his run caused his body to tilt and crash into the ground. The impact caused the wound on his cheek to bleed again, and he slammed his shoulder hard against a tree; a dull sound echoed, and pain raced through him as if electrodes were jabbed directly into his brain. Above all,

"Aaaaaaagh! M-My leg, my leeeeeeeg!!"

There was no pain—that was the terrifying sensation.

His right leg was gone from the knee down, the blown-off fragment having flown beyond the bushes. The wound vividly displayed pink flesh, and fresh blood sprayed out with a delay, as if only just realizing the amputation had happened. Simultaneously, the pain invaded his nerves with a delay.

"—!!!!"

He clawed at the ground, screaming a grand agony that became voiceless.

Holding the wound, thrashing his body, his free right arm beat the ground, punched the tree, his fingernails peeling off magnificently, his consciousness boiling from the heat of it all.

He suffered, and suffered, and suffered, and suffered through it.

A sensation of himself being eroded, as if the pain were filing down his nerves and planing his brain directly. Blood was being lost at a tremendous rate with every second, which meant the direct disappearance of the source of Subaru's life.

And there,

"Ah, Rem finally caught up."

Swaying the skirt of her maid outfit, Rem appeared dragging her weapon.

She looked at Subaru rolling on the ground, took note of the missing right leg, and after a moment of silent contemplation, she nodded.

"It must hurt; it must be agonizing. Please wait a moment."

Crouching down, Rem turned her white palm toward Subaru's wound.

His throat was already parched from voiceless screaming, and the writhing pain had exhausted his stamina, leaving him no will to move.

Subaru moved his clouded vision, silently watching Rem's movements. Then,

“Oh Mana of water, grant healing to this one.”

She murmured, and suddenly a soft, pale light was released from Rem's palm.

The light gently covered the stump of Subaru's right leg, and with that pale glow, it began to compensate for the pain and sense of loss.

Feeling the sign of healing in a sensation akin to an itch, Subaru dragged back his consciousness that had started to drift away, and stared at Rem's face in astonishment.

The pain hadn't vanished completely, but a surprise greater than the pain dominated Subaru.

At this stage, he didn't understand the reason why Rem would heal him. Receiving Subaru's gaze, a hint of a faint smile floated onto Rem's features.

Finding a tiny, meager hope in that—

“If you were to die easily after surviving all that, Rem wouldn't be able to ask what she needs to ask.”

Her following words made him realize that it had been a fleeting, overly foolish optimism.

Rem's arm pulled back, the sound of chains rang out, and the iron ball flew.

It slammed into the ground right next to the upper body of the fallen Subaru. Seen up close, it was rugged, crude, and simply a violent device specialized solely for threatening life.

Rem had deliberately placed the iron ball where he could see it. Her true intent was conveyed clearly enough.

It was an easy-to-understand demonstration to let him know that she held his life in her hands.

Seeing Subaru's eyes harbor resignation, Rem prefaced with "Now then," and said,

"Rem will ask you. Are you part of a camp belonging to a candidate hostile to Lady Emilia?"

"…My heart is always on Emilia-tan's side."

The moment he said it, the slack chain struck Subaru's upper body violently.

His undershirt, torn by branches along the way, ripped all too easily, and the skin beneath was carved with identical lacerations; Subaru's scream echoed through the forest.

"Who hired you, and for how much?"

"For Emilia-tan's smile… Priceless."

With a flick of her wrist, the same treatment. While physically experiencing the skill to strike the exact same spot without a millimeter of error, he praised that proficiency with a scream of agony.

After that, similar questions and similar answers.

The sound of the chain rang out as many times as there were questions, followed by a grand chorus of groans and screams.

Every time his consciousness was about to be blown away, he was treated by Rem's own healing magic—Subaru was put through an infinite hell loop of healing and violence.

His spirit was worn down, and his consciousness cut out sporadically many times. Yet, his heart alone did not yield to Rem's treatment.

Perhaps tired of Subaru's obstinate attitude, Rem suddenly looked up at the sky and muttered, “Rem must return soon. Preparations for dinner will be delayed.”

“…Dinner, huh. I wonder… what’s on the menu… today…”

“Let’s see. How about a minced meat pie?”

As Rem pointedly rattled the chain to flaunt the iron ball’s presence, the best Subaru could do was respond, “Please spare me from being on the dinner table.”

At Subaru’s posture of cracking jokes to the very end, Rem finally expressed emotion with a sigh. She then fell silent, looking down at Subaru with eyes more devoid of emotion than ever before.

“—Are you affiliated with the Witch Cult?”

A word he had never heard before jumped out, and Subaru furrowed his brows in confusion.

What kind of situation here did that word correspond to? Not understanding Rem’s true intent, he withheld his answer. To such a Subaru, Rem said,

“Answer me. You are ‘one ensnared by the Witch,’ are you not?”

“…By the… Witch?”

“Don’t play dumb!”

Raising her voice as if enraged, Rem pierced Subaru with a gaze that felt somewhat sharp. Through all the scenes from their true first meeting to this taking of each other’s lives, that was the moment Rem bared her emotions for the first time.

On that white face that usually never lost its composure, a slight vermilion of anger appeared as Rem looked down on Subaru with evident murderous intent.

Targeted by a killing intent he had no recollection of earning, Subaru shook his head weakly.

“I don’t… know… To begin with, my family has been… non-religious for generations…"

"Still playing dumb. —Reeking of the Witch's scent like that, claiming you are unrelated is beyond transparent."

Rem swung her arm down in front of Subaru, twisting the corner of her lips into a look of rage. At that unprecedented expression of emotion, Subaru opened his eyes wide, feeling as if he had touched slightly upon her true nature.

"Even if Sister and everyone else doesn't notice, Rem notices! That stench, that lingering scent of a sinner—Rem harbors nothing but disgust and revulsion for it."

In front of the silent Subaru, Rem bit her lip so hard she looked like she might grind her teeth.

"Even when peeking at you conversing with Sister, Rem felt like she would go mad with anxiety and anger. The source of what happened to Sister, someone related to that… carefree and nonchalant, in a place important to Rem and Sister…"

Incoherent words were muttered like a grudge, and sighs of resentment were showered mercilessly upon Subaru.

"Because Master Roswaal said to treat you with hospitality, Rem watched and waited as well… But even just monitoring you is now too painful to bear. Even knowing Sister was only pretending to look after you, while she acted like you two were so close!"

As if spewing out all the hatred she had bottled up, Rem slammed her passion into Subaru to make up for her lack of emotion until now.

Having said her piece, shoulders heaving, she glared at Subaru with wrath in her eyes. Then, suddenly, those eyes widened in surprise.

That was because,

"—Why…?"

In front of Rem, who had voiced her hatred, Subaru was quietly shedding tears.

“I knew… it. …I kind of, guessed it.”

His throat hitched, and the hot things welling up passed through his eyelids one after another, falling to his cheeks. While shedding tears he couldn’t stop, Subaru spoke in a broken, tearful voice.

“I’m going through this, after all… I knew there was a catch to being treated so kindly. But… I didn’t want, to hear it.”

The two who had taught the basics of housework to Subaru, who couldn’t do anything.

Ram, who mocked Subaru for not knowing how to wear a butler’s uniform. Rem, who helped him get dressed while chiding her.

He was crap at handling knives and couldn’t even peel vegetables properly, but for some reason, Ram had patiently stayed with him and taught him. And Rem, too, would offer a share to Subaru, who struggled in the kitchen, every time a menu item was completed.

“I stopped cutting my hands when peeling veggies. I learned that you wash clothes differently depending on the material, and I’m still in the middle of learning how to clean…”

In just four days and another four days, he couldn’t hope for much more improvement than that.

But he had thought that if he overcame several four days, he could still learn more in the days beyond.

“Reading and writing… just the simple stuff, but I learned how. I read a fairy tale. Thanks to you two…”

“What… are you talking about?”

At Subaru’s voice, which sounded like delirium, Rem lowered her tone as if feeling creeped out. Subaru squeezed out a breath and looked up into her eyes.

“I’m talking about the things… you two gave me…”

“Rem has no memory of such things.”

“—Why don’t you remember!!”

At the sudden outburst of passion, Rem’s foot involuntarily took a step back.

Lifting his prone body, scratching the ground with his unbalanced upper body, Subaru howled, baring his teeth.

“Why do you all gang up and leave me behind…?! What did I do…?! What are you telling me to do…?!”

He couldn’t control his emotions. He knew it was an extreme misplacement of anger, but still, Subaru’s heart, his soul, couldn’t stop screaming.

Summoned to another world, driven into unreasonable corners, he had still gritted his teeth and gotten through it. But he was at his limit.

“What was wrong… what did I do wrong? …Why do you guys hate me so much…?”

“—Rem is.”

“I… lo… you guys—”

—An impact did not allow him to continue the words that followed.

His body tilted from the power of the surprise attack, and Subaru’s body slowly bumped into the tree behind him.

Hearing a rasping breath and the sound of overflowing water close by, Subaru’s gaze wandered. And he found the cause immediately.

His throat.

The right half of Subaru’s throat had been gouged out by something, and air and blood bubbles were gushing fiercely from the middle of his windpipe.

Before his eyes, he saw Rem’s face looking at the wound in dumbfounded wonder.

Seeing only that, Subaru’s eyes lost their light, rolling back into whiteness.

His voice did not continue. His consciousness, too, shut down as if the power was cut.

Fading away. There was no pain. Anger, sadness, even emotion vanished somewhere.

Only, at the very end,

“—Sister, you are too kind.”

He felt as if he heard just that, murmured in someone’s sorrowful voice.

Chapter 22: Beyond Words

1

"—!!"

He cannot perceive the moment his consciousness returned.

A ringing in his ears like torrential rain falling right beside him; his vision flickers alternately between red and white, and the world is tilted distortedly, unpleasantly.

Sensation does not transmit to his limbs, and his throat is straining with a scream thick beyond thought at the agony of his entrails being wrung out.

He twists his body which will not obey him, making it bounce, using every movable part of his whole body to convert the incomprehensible passion welling up within his chest into destruction.

He doesn't know what is what.

Where did the pain vanish to? Why is his consciousness not clear? Where are the wounds that were ravaging his whole body? Blood is draining away, life is draining away, he is dying.

I don't want to die. I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die I don't want to die.

Pain and hardship and suffering and sadness and fear, he hates it all.

He wants to push it all away, yet those are the only things he can find within reach. So, surrendering to impulse, he tries to protect his own heart by striking, crushing, tearing, throwing away, and discarding those negative emotions at random.

"—!"

He can hear something. He can hear someone's voice.

Mixed into the beast-like roars, he can hear the voice of someone clinging to him desperately.

The meaning doesn't get through. He doesn't understand the meaning. He doesn't want to understand the meaning.

It's useless even if he listens. Listening will only hurt him. It's not as if listening will change anything. Nothing will change even if he listens.

Even so, gradually, gradually, the colors of the world become clear.

Blood circulates to the tips of his limbs, and the sensation of his thrashing body is transmitted correctly to his nerves.

His arms, having rampaged and rampaged, seem to have struck something hard repeatedly; his nails are broken, his knuckles split, and they seem to be bleeding terribly.

Sharp pain stabs his brain, and his wailing slows its momentum ever so slightly.

And then he notices. That something warm is clinging to his aching arm, around the right upper arm, as if wrapping it up.

There was a similar sensation on his legs. Something small is covering his legs, which he had raised to strike the floor over and over again, from directly above, sealing their movement.

Color returns to his vision. Spreading out before his eyes is a white ceiling he remembers seeing several times.

From the circulation of his blood and the weight on his back, he realizes he is lying face up. The soft sensation belongs to a bed; he had been sleeping with his limbs thrown out.

And, the ones who had physically restrained his thrashing limbs in that posture were, "Guest, Guest. Have you calmed down yet?"

"Guest, Guest. Are you done going completely mad?"

The moment those two familiar voices struck his eardrums, Subaru's brain stopped thinking and selected only one thing: a scream.

2

For Subaru, the morning of his first day at the Roswaal manor, totaling the fourth time, opened its curtains in the worst form yet.

Subaru has already lost his life six times in this world and returned.

None of the ways he died were ever easy, and each time, he has tasted the agony of having what he gained spill from his hands once more.

He never gets used to the pain or the suffering, and the sense of desolation and loss that arises every time he returns is not something anyone can share with him.

Even so, Subaru intends to have lived looking forward earnestly, simply clenching his teeth. He has resolved that he would not bend his knees, that he would not lose in spirit alone.

However, this instance cannot be compared to anything before.

The sense of loss, the sense of desolation, the pain, the suffering—all of it gouged deeply and sharply into Subaru's heart, proportional to the bonds of the days spent until now.

There is no way he can stand. The will to stand does not even well up. He cannot even think of a reason why he must stand. It is that kind of situation.

"—Okay, all done. The wound should be closed, but you mustn't be too rough. If it happens to bleed again, just call me."

Gently stroking the back of Subaru's right hand, the girl sitting in the chair next to the bed smiles at him.

Tying her silver hair into a single bundle, wearing faint blue light on her palm, is Emilia.

She had rushed over and was healing Subaru with healing magic after he suffered lacerations on his hands from thrashing about immediately after waking up.

The only ones in the room are Subaru and Emilia.

The other two who happened to be there the moment he woke up had bowed their heads and disappeared, never to return, upon seeing Subaru's unsightly behavior right after he noticed them.

"I heard from Ram and Rem, that… you said some terrible things to the two of them?"

At the mention of names he didn't want to hear, Subaru lifted his face as if flicked.

Emilia opened her eyes slightly at that excessive reaction, but upon recognizing the expression of agitation running across Subaru's face, she pursed her lips,

"They were unusually down, thinking they might have done something rude. So next time you see them, please say something to them."

"Something rude, huh. No, there was noth—ing. …Between me and those two, there was noth—ing at all."

His somewhat throwaway voice was hoarse, and Emilia's well-shaped brows furrowed softly at the aftereffect of the ill feeling contained within it.

Even seeing that, no apology or comfort comes from Subaru's mouth.

What slipped out instead was a question that couldn't quite be called sarcasm.

"Hey, Emilia-tan… don't you think I'm a nuisance?"

"Tan… you really…"

Emilia shows a rejection-like reaction to the address for a split second as usual, but Subaru's attitude in asking the question does not lose its seriousness for a moment.

She contemplated silently for a while, prefaced with "Not really," and held up a finger,

"There's no way I'd think you're a nuisance. Besides, Subaru is my lifesaver, right? If my lifesaver disappeared on his own without me repaying that debt, I'd sleep poorly. So, for the sake of my pride, I'd be troubled if you disappeared before I repay the debt."

Speaking fast, Emilia asserts this as if to gloss over some kind of emotion.

Listening to it intently, Subaru watched her every move. Was there any falsehood there? Did it contain any reactions or gestures hiding something?

"Oi oi, seriously…"

Realizing that he was gauging her reaction with eyes of suspicion, Subaru muttered the sound aloud, unable to hide his discouragement and disappointment in himself.

Unexpectedly, hadn't Emilia just said it? If he can no longer even think of his lifesaver as such, then that is truly the lowest behavior.

Emilia was supposed to be the only oasis where Subaru could entrust his heart in this other world where he had no one to rely on.

The possibilities that he should have been able to think of in the same way, even if not to her extent, have now disappeared from before Subaru in a merciless form.

If he loses even his absolute trust in her at this point, that would be nothing other than Subaru walking through pitch darkness by touch alone.

Suddenly, a thought crossed his mind.

If only he could confess the despair occupying this chest, and the situation he has tried to redo and challenge over and over again, to her and no one else.

Thinking back, Subaru has continued to struggle to manage all the mortal crises that have visited him time and time again with his own hands alone.

But the situation has reached extreme destitution, and it has already come to a point where neither advancing nor retreating allows Subaru any easy choices.

In that case, wouldn't confiding the matter to a third party—a trustworthy person—and begging for assistance be the brilliant move to play to reach the best outcome?

As if fog were clearing, the emotions of anxiety and bewilderment that had been hanging over Subaru's head were blown away.

Once he realized it, it was such a naturally acceptable method that he didn't know why he had removed that option from his candidates until now.

"—Emilia-tan, there is something I want you to hear."

Lowering the tone of his voice, Subaru turns to face Emilia.

She must have sensed the change in atmosphere. Emilia, too, floated tension on her sorrowful face, corrected her posture on the chair, and looked at him from directly in front.

Watching his reflection in her violet-blue eyes, Subaru slowly begins by choosing the first word.

What should he speak of? About "Return by Death"? Or should he speak nakedly from the point that Subaru is not an existence of this world in the first place?

It is a story likely to be laughed off, and the probability of it being taken as a joke is far higher. Even so, surely she alone would not treat Subaru's serious plea casually.

That expectation, that hope, was everything supporting Subaru right now.

—I will speak about "Return by Death." And, if possible, I want you to lend me your strength.

While feeling ashamed of his own wretchedness in seeking it again from someone he had received a debt from, Subaru swallows his breath and forms the first voice. From there, the situation will begin to move.

Extremely confused, forced to throw in the towel saying it's helpless. The light to the situation he had almost given up on opens from there.

—That, is what he thought.

"…"

The moment he thought to put it into words, to form his voice, it visited.

A sense of wrongness; receiving it, Subaru hesitates on the first word in bewilderment.

Thinking something is wrong, he immediately realized the reason. Sound. Sound had vanished. From the world, suddenly, sound had disappeared. The sound of his own heart beating fast, which he could hear just moments ago. The faint breathing of Emilia in front of him. The quiet coloring of the morning breeze sneaking in through the slightly open window and circulating in the room.

All of it had vanished completely from the world.

A world without sound—it is an isolated space where even the word "silence" is lukewarm. An absolute state of silence, no questions asked, where even the sound of ringing ears is erased, where even the sound of blood flowing through the body cannot be heard.

Just by having that done to him, chills run through his whole body, and an unbearable discomfort rampages as if stirring up his entrails.

And that was merely the beginning of the anomaly.

—What, is this?

From the world where sound had vanished, next, the movement of all existence vanished.

Time is stretched out, an instant becomes eternity, and one second later changes its arrival point greatly to the distant yonder of time.

Before his eyes, Emilia's expression does not move from her serious look. Her eyelids do not twitch, and her lips remain tightly sealed.

Remaining in her dignified appearance, Emilia is distanced from her next movement eternally. And that is the same for Subaru; the length of his thoughts that he was supposed to voice will likely never be delivered to anyone if things stay this way.

Sound vanishes, time stops, and Subaru's earnest wish is distanced.

A phenomenon beyond understanding that arrived suddenly. His body, through which nerves do not pass, cannot be moved a fragment, and Subaru simply continues to race his thoughts while holding onto his confusion.

Incomprehensible. Incomprehensible. Incomprehensible. Incomprehensible. Incomprehensible—

What is the reason for this? He doesn't even have the mental leeway to guess.

Simply, in the domain of non-understanding that comes in waves, Subaru can do nothing but continue to scream his lamentation inside his brain as if overwhelmed.

And, the end of that sensation revealed its form abruptly.

—What is this?

A voice of doubt floats in his mind, and Subaru tilts his head in image only.

Ahead of his gaze, within the fixed, unmoving field of vision, he could only think that it had arisen suddenly.

It is a black haze. For Subaru, who didn't even have the freedom to blink, its appearance could only be described as abrupt in the truest sense.

Cutting into his consciousness, It was drifting in that spot.

What was even more singular, however, was that only that black haze slowly changed its shape.

In a world where everything has stagnated, only the black haze changes shape at a gentle speed. A haze of a mass about enough to be held in both hands makes its outline clearer little by little, and finally reaches its target shape taking over ten seconds in perceived time.

—To Subaru, it looked like a black palm.

The haze that changed shape had taken the form of an arm.

A floating black arm possessing five fingers and only length up to the elbow.

And It trembled its fingertips as if checking, then closed in on Subaru with clear intent.

Watching it helplessly, Subaru swallowed his breath in sensation alone.

The black fingertips sneak into Subaru's chest smoothly, as if there were nothing to obstruct them. And, the sensation of those fingertips clearly caressing his internal organs was transmitted to Subaru.

Touching his entrails, stroking his ribs, the palm proceeds further in, and eventually delivers its fingertips to the most important organ in the human body.

—Oi, wait.

A voice that does not become a voice. A body that cannot resist. Without being able to make a single movement, not understanding the black palm's motive or anything else, fear races through Subaru's whole body.

—This is seriously, not fu—

Before he could finish saying it in his heart, a shock shook Subaru's existence from the foundation.

Is there a human alive who can explain why it hurts to have one's internal organs damaged? The answer to that is simple; it can be summed up in one phrase: there is no need to think about such a thing.

In that instant, the intense pain that assaulted Subaru did not have a fragment of necessity for reasoning.

Just simply, earnestly, the pain of having his heart crushed without mercy continued to batter Subaru.

He cannot raise his voice. He is forbidden even from trembling in pain.

With no means to gloss over the pain, who other than Subaru in this moment could understand the pain of feeling nothing but pain?

Only agony was there. And bringing along something that was not just agony, it left a warning for Subaru that was grateful enough to bring tears to his eyes.

The existence known as Subaru was torn apart by the pain, his consciousness distorted as if treated roughly, his thoughts shredded to ribbons so badly he couldn't remember their original shape—

"—Subaru?"

"—Huh?"

"Subaru, are you okay? You went silent suddenly, you're making me worry."

Placing a hand on his knee, a silver beauty was staring at Subaru with eyes harboring sorrow.

The moment he became conscious of that, Subaru leaked a long breath as if deflating. Then he confirmed that his fingers moved according to his will, and touching his own chest with a delay, he confirmed from the outside that his heart was carving out a quiet rhythm.

His body moves. His voice comes out. He feels no pain in his heart.

But, the fear was carved into him.

His fingertips tremble, his voice refuses to come out, and his body remains shrunken and frozen.

Proportional to the hope that had arisen, the fact brought about by It made Subaru despair.

Just thinking in a corner of his head that he would muster his courage and challenge It again, the illusion of a black haze crossing the edge of Subaru's vision floats up.

And, Subaru is finally forced to admit it.

To Subaru who covers his face with his palms as if yielding to the welling despair, shrinking atop the bed, Emilia floats bewilderment and opens her mouth,

“Wh-What’s wrong? You’ve been really strange for a while now, you know? If there is something…”

“—I have a request.”

Interrupting the voice concerned for him, Subaru turns his palm toward her.

He cannot lift his face. Surely, he is making a terrible face. If he looks at her in this mental state, he cannot trust himself regarding what he might blurt out.

Mobilizing all his self-control, Subaru creates just a single phrase.

Discarding the words he intended to say, the feelings he wanted her to hear, the passion he truly wished to confess from the bottom of his heart—everything.

“Emilia-tan.”

“Y-Yeah. Tell me anything.”

“Don’t concern yourself with me.”

Conveying only that feebly, he collapses onto the bed without looking at her reaction.

Unconsciously his palm touches his chest, and while feeling the beat beneath it through his thin skin, Subaru clearly realizes the reality that has been thrust upon him.

—Confessing is not forgiven.

—That Subaru has no choice but to continue struggling alone.

Chapter 23:
A Temporary Contract

Driving even Emilia out of his room, Subaru's fourth loop got off to a bleak start.

On the morning of the first day, after hurting Emilia with a heartless remark, a confrontation with the returned Roswaal awaited him.

His mocking attitude hadn't changed, but Subaru felt ill at ease, feeling as though he were being looked upon with appraising eyes. Whether that was limited to this time around, or if it had been the same in the previous loops, the Subaru of now had no way of knowing.

Their conversation was brief, and its contents barely remained in his memory.

He only vaguely felt he'd received words to the effect that he would be treated as a guest.

He also felt like Roswaal had said something convenient, like he should stay as long as he pleased.

That could be said to be a wish come true for Subaru, but it could also be said to be a matter that was already of no importance.

If he wandered out of the mansion now, he would surely be killed to silence him. Yet, even if he stayed and was judged as nothing but baggage for the Roswaal camp, it was obvious that a future where he was turned into mincemeat awaited him before long.

To leave is a BAD END; to stay is a BAD END.

It felt like he had saved in a position where the approaching BAD END could not be avoided. Even though it was an auto-save, what an absurd setup this was.

While spouting such curses, Subaru spent the day crouching in a corner of the room, idling the time away. Since coming to this parallel world, this was likely the first day he had done so little.

Come to think of it, the current Subaru was in the position of the “kept man” he had longed for. Meals were served without him working, and no one complained even if he holed up in his room.

Despite being in a parallel world, he was leading the same shut-in life as he had in his original world. That should have been what he looked forward to, yet he felt not a speck of deep emotion for the time he had so craved.

Unable to even choose the attractive option of indulging in lazy slumber, Subaru could not even sleep on the guest room bed, spending his idleness holding his head in his hands.

In his hand, he gripped a quill pen in a reverse hold; its tip was stained with blood that had been dipped into and dried countless times. Whenever he lost to drowsiness and his eyelids began to droop, he stabbed the back of his hand, forcibly bringing his consciousness to an awake state through pain.

Though he barely moved atop the bed, breathing through his mouth, Subaru’s breaths were rough and rapid. His heart continued to beat fast and short in unbroken tension, and his eyes darted about, captive to paranoia, constantly doubting if there were any abnormalities in the room.

He had already died three times, and his days at the Roswaal manor were entering their fourth iteration.

In Subaru’s experience, his death count as of the first day of summoning had been three. For Subaru, who had broken through that day on the fourth attempt, a fourth death was unknown territory.

—If he died here and now, he might not be able to come back next time.

He could find no method to avoid death. Even so, he did not want to die.

But living here was also so painful and agonizing that he could hardly bear it. All that Subaru, who felt like he was losing his mind, could do was choose a conclusion that made it seem like he had lost his mind.

Namely: to doubt everything, to resist everything, and to cling single-mindedly to life.

He had already entered the afternoon of the second day of the fourth loop; the time he had spent in idleness was too different from the previous repetitions, so his memories from before were no longer reliable.

He didn't know what would happen, and it wouldn't be strange for anything to happen. And even if something did happen, it would all surely be to Subaru's disadvantage.

Disappointed in reality, despairing at the situation, and resigned to the future, Subaru's heart had broken and shattered.

Now, only the remnants of it continued a disgraceful, futile struggle.

Unable to perceive day as day or night as night, even the passage of time became vague, and the boundary between consciousness and unconsciousness wavered like a heat haze.

Only the pain of stabbing the back of his hand was vivid; the fact that the sensation was so sharp made him just a little happy, and he gouged the wound again and again. Gouge. Gouge. Gouge.

"—You're wearing quite the spineless look on your face, I suppose."

Suddenly hearing that voice, he raised his head as if he'd been struck.

At the end of Subaru's beast-like, glaring gaze, gripping the doorknob and leaning toward him, was the girl he had not yet met even once in this loop.

Beatrice's visit—it was a first within the four repeated worlds. And Subaru instantly heightened his vigilance.

An abnormality that could only occur this time—it was bound to lead directly to a result that threatened Subaru's life.

"…So this time, it's you."

A low, hoarse voice came out, surprising even himself.

His throat, which had remained silent for over two days and had only passed rough breaths, was parched and raw. It contained more hostility than he had intended, and the girl who received that malice head-on said,

"How can one rot so much in just a day or two, I wonder? Humans are hopelessly foolish creatures, in fact."

"I've got no intention of listening to your lecture. —What did you come here for?"

Beatrice laughed scornfully at Subaru's shameful state. She furrowed her brows in displeasure at Subaru's way of speaking, which lacked any tact, and said,

"Bubby and that little girl told me to, so I came to see your face, in fact."

"Puck and… Emilia?"

"Since you've been acting strange since you woke up, they suspect Betty might have done something when you first woke up, in fact. It's a rude story, I suppose."

Emilia, who should have been hurt by Subaru's heartless words, was even now worrying about Subaru's heart. She had thought the cause of Subaru's change might be Beatrice, whom he had contacted just before, and had appealed directly to Beatrice.

Beatrice, who for some reason could not stand up to Puck, had been supported by Puck—who was overly soft on his daughter—and had thus reluctantly shown her face at Subaru's place.

Emilia's concern—it left a warmth, however slight, in Subaru's desolate heart. However, her worry was grossly misplaced.

The cause of Subaru's sudden change was unrelated to Beatrice, and this was not a problem that could be solved no matter what anyone did for him anymore.

"I get it. That's enough. I understand what you're saying, so just get lost. You came to apologize. That's enough."

"Why must Betty apologize, I wonder? Unless we start by correcting that, I can't go back even if I wanted to, in fact."

Beatrice pressed on as Subaru waved his hand, trying to drive her away roughly. Then she stepped further into the room, moving as she dragged the hem of her long skirt, and…

"—Ugh?"

Suddenly, she wrinkled her nose and stopped.

Her profile, which would be adorable if she kept silent, turned its neck like a dog tracking a scent, sniffing around the area.

Eventually, she glared at Subaru, her eyes harboring grand displeasure, and said,

"Not only has your face become gloomy, but it's become quite thick, in fact."

"—Huh?"

"I'm talking about the smell, I suppose. It stinks; it's the worst scent, in fact. It would be wise not to meet those twins for a while, I suppose."

Beatrice pinched her nose and waved her hand to emphasize the stench.

Not even noticing her gesture, Subaru's thoughts turned to a memory corresponding to the keyword "smell."

The smell, surely that was what someone said when the third loop ended—

“What do you say smells on me?”

Raising his head, Subaru asked the question, imbuing his voice with the color of emotion for the first time.

At the question, Beatrice raised one eyebrow, crossed her arms, and said,

“It’s the smell of the Witch, in fact. It’s enough to make my nose crooked, I suppose.”

Muttering the keyword “Witch,” a corner of his mind suddenly began to throb.

He remembered that word. He should have seen that word just recently. That was—

“The Witch of Envy.”

“In this current world, when one says Witch, What else could one mean, I wonder?”

At Beatrice’s mocking manner of speech, Subaru instinctively leaned forward. Reaching his hand out toward her, he asked,

“Why are you smelling that from me?”

“Who knows? Maybe the Witch took a fancy to you, or maybe she made you her enemy. Either way, you receiving special treatment from the Witch makes you a nuisance, in fact.”

“Being given special treatment by someone whose face and name I don’t know gives me the creeps.”

Beatrice shrugged, her attitude implicitly showing that even discussing it further was unpleasant. At her stubborn stance of refusal, Subaru shut his mouth and began to dive into the sea of thought while organizing the current fragments of information.

The Witch. The Witch of Envy was a globally famous figure remaining in fairy tales, hated and feared by the entire world, whose name everyone avoided even mentioning.

The only knowledge Subaru possessed regarding her existence was what was told in stories that lacked even a story.

Naturally, he had no memory of meeting her, nor did he recall having any contact with her whatsoever.

It was an absurd story that the lingering scent of the Witch would stain him when he hadn't even experienced such a thing.

—I feel like Rem said something like that to me, too.

If a part of her excessive murderous intent lay in that, then Subaru had once again bought resentment for a fact he had no recollection of. Since all his crimes were false accusations, Subaru's bad luck in being killed repeatedly was truly top-tier.

Realizing that helpless facts were simply helpless, Subaru let out a long sigh of fatigue. Seeing that, and perhaps judging there would be no further development in the conversation, Beatrice smoothed down her long hair with her hand and said,

"If there's nothing else, I will be going, in fact. I will properly tell Bubby that Betty came to see you, I suppose."

"Wait a sec."

He called out to her back as she reached for the doorknob to perform "Door Crossing," stopping her movement. To Beatrice, who looked back at him only with her neck,

"You feel bad for me, don't you?"

Subaru threw the question at her maliciously.

It was a move that might be somewhat of a gamble, but he followed his heart's plea that it was better than doing nothing.

To Beatrice, who wore a look of disgust, Subaru tapped the sheets lightly and asked again,

“You. Feel. Bad. For. Me. Answer Yes or No.”

“I don’t, in fact.”

“I’m telling Puck.”

“Gh… I might occasionally think so just a liiiiittle bit, I suppose.”

Turning her whole body back toward Subaru, Beatrice crossed her arms and looked away haughtily.

Looking at her small body from top to bottom, and then recalling the time he had spent with her until now—Subaru agonized over it, then made a decision.

“If you want me to forgive you, listen to just one request.”

That was—

“One night… no, until the morning after next is fine. Can you protect me?”

It was nothing other than a truly shameless choice, to beg a girl who looked younger than himself.

Beatrice fell silent for a moment at the request Subaru had broached, and said,

“That’s a vague way of putting it, in fact. Is there a reason you’re being targeted, I wonder?”

She returned a perfectly natural question.

Beatrice began to walk around the room while looking coldly at Subaru, and said,

“In the first place, I want no part of trouble being brought into this mansion. This mansion is an indispensable place for Betty, I suppose.”

“…I don’t intend to start anything myself. I just want to brush away the sparks falling on me.”

“For leaving even that to others, that’s quite the noble ambition, in fact.”

“Just this time, I’ve got no comeback.”

Beatrice sighed at the downcast Subaru.

For a while, a time of silence flowed through the room.

Head still down, Subaru thought he would hear the sound of the door closing before long. The sound of Beatrice casting aside his plea and fluttering back to her Forbidden Library.

When he heard that, it would be the moment even the single drop of hope Subaru had managed to connect with would be crushed.

To Subaru, filled with such resignation,

“Put out your hand, in fact.”

Beatrice had walked up to the side of the bed and was holding her small hand out toward him.

Subaru was taken aback. She impatiently took Subaru’s right hand, looked at the scar-covered back of it, grimaced, and said,

“Disgusting. To think you even have a habit of self-harm, you’re a hopeless pervert, I suppose.”

“That is Roswaal’s identity… I’m just a delusional teenager with a bit too much youth leaking out.”

“I don’t understand what you mean, but I know your hopelessness has only deepened, I suppose.”

Sighing, Beatrice turned Subaru’s right hand palm up to hide the wounds, and placed her own small palm over it.

Naturally, as if invited, they clasped hands, fingers intertwining with fingers, and…

"—I shall heed thy wish. In the name of Beatrice, the contract is hereby sealed."

Subaru was lost for words at the sight of Beatrice speaking so solemnly.

And then, an overwhelming heat transmitted from their intertwined palms. It traveled through his palm to spread throughout Subaru's entire body, suddenly shocking vitality into his drained frame.

Bewildered by his body's sudden heated reaction, he looked forward to see Beatrice glaring at him with eyes that seemed to say she was thoroughly reluctant, saying,

"Even if it is temporary, a contract is a contract. Formed in accordance with the ritual, it is absolute, in fact. I will listen to your incomprehensible request, I suppose."

"You should be grateful"—concluding with that, Beatrice stared boldly at Subaru with a superior gaze, despite looking from below.

Receiving that gaze, Subaru instantly looked away, trying to endure a wave of inexplicable emotion that suddenly visited him.

A welling passion, a sensation beyond words.

Not knowing how to handle that, extended from such an unexpected place, Subaru closed his eyes to the heat of the palm being held, and said,

"For real…? I almost got made to cry by a loli."

"Don't call me a loli, in fact. —Also, if you tattle to Bubby, I will absolutely not forgive you, I suppose."

"You're so desperate. That's seriously demonic."

Being on the receiving end of a gaze filled with genuine hostility, Subaru responded with a bitter smile.

It was the first smile, however small but certain, to appear in this fourth loop.

Chapter 24:
The Morning He Yearned For

1

Having formed a contract with Beatrice, Subaru obtained a very small measure of peace.

However, regarding the essential point that he was cornered, the situation hadn't improved one bit, nor was a solution even remotely in sight.

As usual, Subaru continued his shut-in life, unable to leave the guest room, and Beatrice wasn't sticking to Subaru twenty-four seven either.

In fact, because he had negotiated for her to allocate her guard duties to the critical time—from the night of the fourth day to the fifth day—Beatrice, who didn't want to be by Subaru's side if she could help it, hadn't come to his room even once since that incident.

Instead, the one visiting Subaru time and again was,

"I see, that's good. Beatrice properly came to apologize. I'm impressed, impressed."

Emilia, nodding with a smile on her face beside his bed.

Her frequent visits pricked Subaru's conscience, and at the same time, she seemed like a goddess without exaggeration, bringing a single ray of light to this world that was nothing but darkness.

Despite being pushed away with such harshness, Emilia still walked toward Subaru. Even when he voiced a succinct apology out of guilt,

"You were surely just on edge, right? Everyone has times like that, so it can't be helped. Though I'd be happy if you said that to Ram and Rem, too."

She gently let Subaru's rude remarks slide.

Regarding her modest request after that, Subaru couldn't return a clear answer.

Purely speaking, if they judged him as an untrustworthy element who knew the circumstances, Subaru's mouth would be silenced by them. On the other hand, it was also the honest truth that even after tasting their excessive loyalty, he couldn't bring himself to hate the two of them completely.

Although, perhaps that was a cardboard hope born from the optimistic thought that only one of them was definitely involved, and maybe the other knew nothing.

Day by day, Subaru wore down his spirit between hope and the disappointment that outweighed it.

Emilia stared intently at Subaru as he grew gaunt, then glanced at the meal placed beside the bed, and said,

"As I thought, you haven't eaten your food."

"…My bad."

Subaru was a guest who was nothing but trouble. Despite not allowing the mansion's servants to see his face, and on top of that, greeting their first meeting with abuse, they did not commit the injustice of cutting corners on his meals, as was proper.

Even though the meals served went almost untouched every time, and he knew he was clearly unwelcome, they fulfilled their duties without changing their expressions or voicing a single complaint.

He knew that one was blunt and the other was politely rude, but neither had a personality that would cut corners on work. Subaru knew that. And yet, —Isn't there poison in it?

Every time he looked at the food, such anxiety crossed his mind.

He didn't think they were the type of opponents to use such methods. If they were going to do that, there should have been any number of chances in the loops so far.

But their actions had always visited Subaru directly. Therefore, he was half-convinced that when they came to kill him this time too, they would come gripping a weapon.

The reality that people he knew had many good points were definitely trying to kill him. Subaru's despair began from the point of acknowledging that.

Because he was in such a mental state, the reason he couldn't stomach food was purely that his internal organs couldn't fully suppress their trembling due to tension and anxiety.

He thought the food was surely delicious. It was a taste he had realized was good again and again. He might have even thought that eventually, he would be able to cook just as well.

"If you don't eat even a little, it's poison for your body, you know? It might be hard, but…"

"My stomach won't accept it… If Emilia-tan feeds me with an 'aahn', I might be able to eat."

Throwing a worthless quip at her sorrowful face, Subaru cursed his own unsalvageable nature.

At himself, a failure who could no longer even feign his usual frivolity toward someone who was likely genuinely worried about his well-being.

However,

"Okay then, here, aahn."

"—Huh?"

"Come on, aahn."

Placing the tray with the meal on her lap, Emilia was looking at Subaru with a spoon in her hand.

Soup was scooped into the spoon, and still barely retaining warmth, it aimed for Subaru’s mouth, slowly approaching him.

Not understanding Emilia's intention, Subaru frantically waved his hands,

"No, no no no, wait a sec, Emilia-tan. What are you doing?"

"What am I doing? Subaru, you said you'd eat if I did this, didn't you? So, eat. I'm doing 'aahn' for you."

"Uhh, regarding this sort of thing, there's a certain aesthetic beauty in the fact that somehow or other you can't actually do it in the end, or even if you do do it, there's something moving about the girl turning bright red and reaching her limit after one time, you know?"

"There's no way I'd be embarrassed just feeding a little bit of food to a boy saying such childish things. Come on, stop talking nonsense."

Against a flustered Subaru, Emilia forcibly enforced the 'aahn'. Eventually pushed by her vigor, Subaru felt his ears heating up with shame as,

"A-Aahn."

"Okay, gulp. I'm keeping them coming, okay? Here, here, here, here, here."

"Too fast?! It's my first aahn, yet there's no lingering sentiment or anything?!"

Mechanical and efficient movements, as if they were holding a speed-eating championship. Instinctively putting the spoons thrust out one after another into his mouth, Subaru, who had fallen into Emilia's trap, reached the point of finishing the meal by her hand.

Splendidly emptying the tray, a satisfied-looking Emilia deepened her smile with a "Yep," and,

"Come on, what do you say when you finish eating?"

"Thanks for the grub."

"Bad manners. Correctly, once more."

"Thank you for the meal."

"Okay, you're very welcome."

Emilia bowed politely to Subaru, who bowed his head deeply.

As for Subaru, a strange sense of fullness was pressuring his internal organs because he had suddenly stuffed food into an empty stomach that had endured for over two days.

To Subaru, who tilted his head wondering since he didn't recall eating a significant amount,

"Since you haven't eaten anything proper for a while, this is so your stomach won't be shocked. Ram suggested it, and Rem made it. Because they're good girls."

Emilia's words, sounding as if she were boasting of sisters, pierced sharply into Subaru's chest.

Consideration that should have surely made him happy enough to cry if it were true, now became nothing but a painful delusion to the current Subaru, enough to make him cry for a different reason.

Behind the kindness, behind the friendly behavior, there is a reverse side that is not as it seems.

Yes, once he had been made to realize that.

"Now then, I've fed Subaru, and if I stay too long I'll probably tire you out, so I'll head back."

"If you like, you can sleep next to me, you know?"

"I'm glad you seem to be getting your energy back. But I have a lot of things I need to do, too. Since I'm sneaking out, I can't really."

Emilia closed one eye, apologizing for her playfulness.

Suddenly recalling her schedule for this time of day up until now, Subaru realized how blessed he was.

At this time, she should have been constantly chased by studies in her own room.

To shoulder a country, to aim for the future, she should have been piling up diligent efforts.

To waste even a second paying attention to a loser of fate who had nothing but his body, couldn't advance to the future, and kept repeating the present—it must be precious time.

Suddenly, someone whispered in Subaru's heart, asking if he was fine with keeping on losing to fate.

Raising his head as if pushed in the back by that competitive spirit, which sounded exactly like his own voice,

"Hey, Puck."

"…I was keeping quiet because my loveliness doesn't fit the atmosphere, so what's uuuup?"

The silver hair holding the tray was about to leave the room. He called out to her back by another name, and watched as a small kitten appeared, parting the long silver hair.

Looking firmly into those black eyes, Subaru pointed at him and said,

"Nothing will probably happen to Emilia-tan, but… protect her properly and thoroughly. Even if you have to use that small body as a shield."

"Saying I can protect her with my size, that's quite a small crisis, isn't it?"

"Shut up. Just, I'm counting on you. This time, I'm full up just dealing with myself."

He didn't think a crisis would reach Emilia.

At least, Roswaal had no reason to harm her, and if Roswaal didn't, those twins wouldn't birth a reason either.

The only one in danger of their life in this mansion was, frankly, Subaru alone.

"Worrying only about your own life, huh? That's simple… No, wait. Thinking about it carefully, I feel like I didn't do anything that big last time either."

He had a premonition that the summary of the last loop was that while he was weathering the situation on momentum, a handsome guy swept everything away.

Last time and this time, wasn't Subaru just being jerked around?

"I'm sorry to interrupt while you're confused in a good way, but I'll properly accept your advice. —Yeah, since it doesn't seem to be a lie or malice."

Softly, slightly lowering the tone of his voice, Puck nodded.

Wondering what he was thinking behind those pitch-black pupils where no light entered, Subaru pulled in his chin as that emotionless look seemed both eerie and reliable.

At the exchange between the two, Emilia, who had been left behind despite being the subject, pursed her lips in dissatisfaction,

"Reaching an understanding just between the two of you, what is it? Are you thinking of something bad?"

"No way, no way. It's talk about how since you're a girl, let's be careful about various things. Watch out for cars, watch out for men!"

"Cars… do you mean carriages or dragon carriages? What does 'watch out for men' mean?"

"Since not all men are single-minded and sincere like me, it's talk saying listen well to your father's stories, and judge whether they're someone you can trust, Emilia-tan."

At Subaru's words, where his usual tone had emerged, Puck nodded deeply,

"That's right, Lia. From now on, don't think of my opinions as annoying nagging, and listen seriously. First, black-haired men with nasty looks in their eyes are a no-go. If you bring home someone like that, I won't let them in the house anymore, okay?"

"Brutus, you too agaaaain!"

A roar at Puck, who had slashed at the back Subaru had entrusted to him as if it were natural. One person and one animal tilted their heads at the unknown name. Subaru cleared his throat as if to pull himself together, and said,

"Anyway, that's all. Be especially careful at night. Since Emilia-tan is cuuute, I think you're always fighting the fear of unwanted night visits, though."

"I hear the floor my room is on is set up so that if someone trespasses, it's conveyed to a scary guardian."

"Close one. Good thing I'm too exhausted to do anything but sleep like a log after work. I can't even do a night visit in peace, geez."

"I'll leave the lock open, so if you have the courage, you can try it, you know?"

Raising her hand slightly, Emilia left the room leaving only that behind. As she left, the kitten on her shoulder greeted him with a wave of its paw as well.

At least, he was able to call out a warning to her and her guardian.

At this rate, the two of them would probably be fine.

"Ah, crap…"

Suddenly, the moment relief pierced into his heart, drowsiness trampled over Subaru's consciousness with a thud.

The sleep demon, which he had deflected with pain, dominated his consciousness seizing this opportunity, stripping away Subaru's will to resist from the roots.

The fact that his hunger had been inadvertently satisfied might have also been one of the indirect causes that left him without the energy to resist it.

Thinking he couldn't afford to sleep, as if biting his lip, Subaru's consciousness fell sinking into a slumber.

2

In the rift between dreams and reality, Subaru's consciousness drifted like a cloud.

He had heard somewhere before that the act of dreaming during sleep is a byproduct occurring as a result of the brain organizing information.

Then, the fact that scenes hindering Subaru's peaceful sleep continued even while he slept like this made sense as the organizing of vivid memories.

The sensation of half his body being torn off, the moment his skull was smashed, the pain of his leg being blown away, the sense of loss of his throat being bored through, the despair of his stomach being slit open; they tormented Subaru, standing on the edge of dreams, even as he escaped from reality.

Groaning, having nightmares, twisting his body while soaking his whole body in sweat, spilling tears from the corners of his eyes, Subaru continued to fight the emotions welling up from within him.

It's suffocating. It's painful. It's sad. It hurts. I don't want this anymore. I want to end it.

Whining, complaints, overflowed endlessly, and each time, his soul was whittled down. Whittled down, whittled down, and in the end, it would be completely worn away and surely nothing would remain.

His mind and body were completely exhausted, enough to make him think that way.

Suddenly, the stiffness in Subaru's body vanished.

As if the chill, the horror, that made his body tremble from the core had suddenly been swept away.

The reason was a hand.

Someone was holding Subaru's hand.

Someone was touching Subaru's existence, which drifted in the rift of unconsciousness within the bed, from the side of reality, trying to anchor him.

It was a warm sensation. It was a gentle sensation. It conveyed that he was being cherished.

He felt as if he had been saved. A gentle breeze blew into his desolate heart.

His pained sleeping face became peaceful, and his breathing forgot the hardships and returned to something quiet.

Who was it, he wondered. What was it, he wondered.

Was it reality, or was this also a convenient dream?

Feeling the faint warmth remaining on both his right palm and left palm—

3

"—How long you're going to sleep like a log, I wonder?"

"Bunder-sree-gah!"

Subaru's cry of anguish as he was violently kicked off the bed and forcibly awakened.

Roused by the hard sensation of the floor, Subaru grabbed the bed and lifted his body; before his eyes, Beatrice was standing on the opposite side across the bed.

Crossing her arms with an attitude that didn't hide her displeasure in the slightest, she snorted haughtily and said,

"It became the promised time, so I came even though I hated it, in fact."

"There's such a thing as hateful words without needing to hit someone, you know. It feels exactly like that right now."

Throwing his upper body onto the bed, Subaru told her so in a tired tone.

Suddenly, he realized that he had been sleeping and his blood ran a little cold. Even though he had brought his consciousness to wakefulness so much and hadn't lacked vigilance.

"Falling asleep on the crucial fourth day, am I seriously a reckless moron?"

"You're noisy with your grumbling, I suppose. Come on, we're going, in fact."

Ignoring Subaru lamenting with his face covered by his palms, Beatrice guided his attention with a beckoning gesture and headed for the door. At her back, Subaru panicked,

"Going… where are we going?"

"Are you telling me to spend a night in a room filled with your smell, I wonder? I refuse, in fact. The place for Betty is inside the Forbidden Library; that is non-negotiable, in fact."

Beatrice snapped her fingers lightly and touched the door.

No abnormality could be seen, but presumably, with just that, the preparations for "Door Crossing" were complete.

It was an unexpected offer from Beatrice, but Subaru was grateful for this stroke of luck. Beatrice's "Door Crossing" could be said to be a troublesome item for attackers as it prevented them from pinpointing the location for a surprise attack. Although for some reason it didn't work on Subaru, he had confirmed that Rem had no effective means of “Door Breaking.”

“You, you’re surprisingly thinking about various things for me, aren’t you?”

“If we don’t hurry the tea will get cold, so return quickly, in fact.”

To Subaru’s impressed voice, Beatrice gave a curt reply. It seemed that her being considerate was a misunderstanding.

Grimacing that he had wasted his breath, Subaru suddenly looked at both his hands.

There was nothing particularly different about them, but for some reason, he was terribly curious.

Come to think of it, while he was sleeping, someone, his hand…

“Beatrice. I don’t think it’s possible, but you weren’t holding the hand of the sleeping me or anything, were you?”

“That really is an impossible story, in fact. Even if Bubby asked me to, I would politely decline, I suppose.”

“You’d go that far, huh… But with a guy like me—If we die, we die together![4]”

“Absolutely NOT, in fact.”

Subaru gave a thumbs up, his teeth gleaming weakly.

It was his usual pose, but his condition hadn’t returned yet.

Leaving a sigh of amazement at such a Subaru, Beatrice went through the door. Hurriedly fixing his appearance here and there, Subaru also crossed the door to the Forbidden Library.

As always, Subaru thought it was a room where he couldn’t wipe away the impression of both serenity and clutter.

This room, where bookshelves packed to the brim with books stood endlessly, never changed its appearance no matter how many loops he visited it in.

Beatrice, who had entered the room first, went to the side of the stepladder that was her designated spot as usual. Opposite the door, she sat on the stepladder that was abandoning its role by being treated as a chair, and,

“You should kill time appropriately, in fact. If it’s here, no matter what happens… I don’t think anything will happen, but I will keep the contract, in fact.”

“Even if you tell me to kill time…”

Tension and the anxiety accompanying it. He had been trying to regain his composure since earlier, but still, as the critical time approached, he couldn’t remain calm.

Subaru looked around the room, comparing the many books lining the shelves, and,

“That’s right. Are there books written only in ‘I-glyphs’?”

“…There are some, in fact. Don’t tell me, you can’t read other writing, I wonder?”

“Embarrassingly, yeah. But even like this, I put in effort, you know.”

With all his might, while being watched over by the twins—

He gouged his own wounds grandly by himself, and took massive damage.

“To step foot into the Forbidden Library of the Mathers family, that is a waste of a treasure, in fact. Betty inviting someone in here happens maybe once every few years or not, I suppose.”

“Even if you say that, a book I can’t read is a bundle of paper, and even if you tell me the chance to enter the Forbidden Library is precious…”

Unfortunately for Subaru, this room was neither rare nor anything special.

Even if he told the current Beatrice that, it would only complicate things, and judging that it wasn't something to be particularly proud of, Subaru shut his mouth.

At Subaru cutting off his words halfway, Beatrice furrowed her brows suspiciously. To her, Subaru raised a finger trying to change the subject,

"Come to think of it, are you in this room all the time?"

"That is the contract, in fact."

"A contract again. Contract, contract from such a young age… it seems you were caught by quite the skilled sales lady. Insurance agents are more skilled the louder their voices are, right?"

"It is all a contract I desired myself, I suppose."

It was a tone that curtly refused any further mention.

Subaru nodded quietly at Beatrice's manner of speaking, which had erased her expression, and,

"Or so the person involved testified—"

"If you don't be quiet soon, I'll be on the verge of annulling the contract, in fact!"

Beatrice stood up, pulled books from the shelf, and threw them at Subaru one after another.

Given that it was Beatrice, who usually hurled magic power without hesitation, relying on such physical attacks was extremely rare.

He nimbly caught the throws of the weak girl and piled them on a nearby stand. Suddenly the attacks stopped, and Subaru, knitting his eyebrows, realized belatedly.

The seven or so books thrown at him—all of them were books written only in 'I-glyphs'.

Raising his face, Subaru turned his eyes toward Beatrice.

As if mocking Subaru for noticing her intention late, she waved her hand flutteringly, and,

“Is that okay for yoooou? It might be a little too haaaard, in faaaact?”

“Ri-ight. It might be too haaaard for meeee, so I might not understaaand.”

“It’s disgusting when both of us are using baby talk, in fact!”

“Good grief. I just matched you, you know. The level.”

If Subaru was going to set up a joke, he’d go back not to a baby, but to a fetus.

Communicating by pulling the umbilical cord or kicking the placenta.

At that attitude of Subaru’s, Beatrice shrugged both shoulders for real this time, and began to open a book as if she had completely given up on conversation.

Seeing her curt attitude, Subaru also sat on a nearby chair and picked up one of the books Beatrice had thrown and chosen for him.

He couldn’t possibly say words of gratitude out of embarrassment, but her thoughtfulness was genuinely making him happy.

4

Thus, the silence in the Forbidden Library passed slowly.

Without exchanging words with each other, only the sound of turning pages at slow intervals flowed alternately through the library.

The books Beatrice chose for him were, as expected, mostly works for children like fairy tales, similar to previous times. Since ‘I-glyphs' only meant content similar to being only in Hiragana, it was unavoidable that it would lean toward children.

Even that precious reading time ended up with Subaru's eyes merely repeating going back and forth over the same page.

At first, he had the composure to proceed with reading, but as time passed moment by moment, such mental leeway was stripped away little by little.

—From the closed Forbidden Library, the state of the outside could not be known.

Due to the nature of the room, the Forbidden Library, which didn't even possess windows, was a place where "time was frozen," as Beatrice had once said.

Not in the literal sense, but at least in the sense that it felt that way.

What time was it outside now?

At the point Subaru was invited into the Forbidden Library, sunset was already close.

Thinking simply, calculation suggested it would be fine if he spent just about half a day here until Subaru greeted the morning of the fifth day.

However, placing himself in this stagnant place, he couldn't measure the sensation of that mere half-day by himself at all.

He felt like only a short hour or so had passed since visiting this room, or perhaps he felt like he had been here for nearly ten hours.

The suffocating feeling coming from anxiety and tension also played a part in significantly lowering Subaru's current reality recognition ability, and he could no longer trust his own judgment.

Yet, he felt guilty asking Beatrice about it.

It wasn't feministic like he shouldn't disturb her reading, but he was afraid that by taking such action, a change would occur.

Spending stagnant time like this was also suffocating. But if the situation fluctuated greatly at the drop of a hat—that was also terrifying.

Unable to go forward or back, he just continued to cower before the overwhelming phenomenon called time.

His fingers trying to turn the book went numb, and the tip of his tongue complained of thirst. The pounding of his heart beat out a familiar high speed, the ringing in his ears was high-pitched, and the sound of blood circulating could be heard from his entire body.

How long was he forced to endure such tension?

If the beginning was absurd, the end also had no forewarning.

"—He's calling."

Suddenly, such a mutter resonated quietly within the library.

Before the eyes of Subaru, who raised his head as if struck, Beatrice was closing her book and putting it aside. She hopped down lightly from the stepladder, and,

"I am being called, I suppose."

As if forgetting the existence of the surprised Subaru, she muttered to herself and waved her finger.

Instantly, Subaru's whole body received a sense of wrongness like space distorting.

A sensation close to floating assaulted his body from all directions, and despite it being an instant, fatigue like having been swung around and nausea spread languidly through his whole body.

Stopping his body from sliding off the chair, Subaru glared reproachfully at the ringleader, Beatrice. And when she finally noticed that gaze,

"Ah, come to think of it, you were here, in fact. I forgot, I suppose."

“Forgetting even though I’m right in front of your eyes, that’s low grade even for a joke.”

Announcing just that, Beatrice passed by Subaru toward the door.

Reaching his hand toward her back as she tried to go outside as if it were natural, Subaru, unable to hide his irritation, said,

“H-Hey, wait! If you go outside now…”

“I don’t mind if you stay withdrew inside, in fact. If you stay here, you’ll be safe, I suppose.”

Blood rushing to his head at the phrasing that didn’t hide her contempt, Subaru stood up as if kicking the chair and chased her back. Putting his hand on the door handle, just a few seconds of hesitation.

But,

“Ah, dammit. What the hell, something like this!”

Inspiring himself with foul language, he threw the door open violently.

Immediately after—

“Ah—”

Unintentionally, a foolish voice spilled from Subaru’s mouth.

Shielding the dazzling light piercing his eyelids with his hand, he responded to the morning sun’s welcome with agitation.

Clawing the air with his hand as if to confirm, Subaru’s body tottered forward. The front of the hallway, the window overlooking the garden—in that high sky, was the sun that had just begun to rise.

It was the morning sun of the fifth day, which he had craved so much and hadn’t reached no matter how many times he tried.

“No, way… did I, cross it? The night of the fourth day…?!”

Unable to believe the result before his eyes, he slammed his hands against the window with force enough to break it and pushed it open. A cool breeze flowed in, and as his bangs were stroked by the wind, Subaru vividly sensed the smell of morning. The cold, newborn wind blew away the air of the mansion.

His legs gave way, and he went backward weakly just like that. His back hit the wall, and losing the will to stand, he slid down and collapsed.

Dumbfounded; there was no other way to express it.

It was a current situation he couldn’t have imagined, to the point where he couldn’t even distinguish between dream or reality.

He had completely given up. He had completely despaired. He was worn out.

And yet, Subaru had crossed the night of the fourth day and arrived at the fifth day.

“Ha, haha…”

Unknowingly, a dry laugh leaked from his mouth.

Once it spilled out, he couldn’t find a way to stop it anymore.

“Hihi, hahaha. Wha-at is it. Hey, what is it. Something like this, hey, haha…”

He couldn’t think of a way to put his current feelings into proper words.

Holding his knees, Subaru continued to spew out laughter as if he had lost his sanity while crouching in the hallway.

He couldn’t put it into words. It didn’t become words. Finally Subaru—

"—Subaru?"

What cut into that empty delight of Subaru's was a voice like a silver bell.

At the end of his gaze, which he raised sluggishly, a silver-haired girl was standing deep in the hallway.

It was Emilia. On the morning of the fifth day, he was able to find her having greeted it safely.

Together, the two of them had crossed the night of the fourth day. That fact again made inexplicable emotions well up in Subaru's heart.

However,

"Emilia…?"

In contrast to Subaru, whose heart was expanding with delight, Emilia stared at Subaru in astonishment. And then she suddenly broke into a run, rushed to the side of the sitting Subaru, and,

"Subaru… where, were you?"

"No, I was…"

"Because… no, that's fine. It's fine so… come with me."

Having his hand pulled, Subaru stood up while being surprised by her forcefulness.

Just like that, without hearing Subaru's reply, Emilia began to run down the corridor, dragging him forcibly.

While being taken aback by her sudden action, Subaru tried to mention it, but his throat stopped upon seeing Emilia's profile.

On her refined profile, unconcealable agitation and irritation were floating.

It was an expression reminiscent of the time of the battle at the loot house.

“Hey, what on earth—”

Happened, he could not ask.

Because faster than he could voice those words, another sound struck Subaru’s eardrums.

—That was, he thought, a scream. Or perhaps, it might have been a shriek.

High-pitched and trailing, it was filled with sadness, a cry of the soul that could not help but leave painful claw marks on the hearts of those who heard it.

The scream, as if half their body were being torn apart, continued endlessly, and conveyed its urgency painfully even to Subaru, who didn’t understand the situation.

Passing through the hallway, they headed to the upper floor. The second floor on the east side was the floor where the servants’ individual rooms were. Passing a room where Subaru had been staying until a few days ago, what Emilia aimed for while pulling his hand was further in—there,

“With Roswaal…”

Blue indigo long hair stood in the hallway, narrowing his eyes at Emilia and Subaru rushing over. Right beside him, Beatrice, who had disappeared, was leaning her back against the wall, and in her hands, he could see a cat with gray fur curling its body into a ball.

“Inside.”

To Subaru, who arrived at the three of them and tried to demand the circumstances, Roswaal responded shortly with just a single word.

What he indicated was right next to him, a single private room with its door opened.

When he turned to Emilia, she also nodded to Subaru. Those violet eyes were moist, forcing Subaru to make a decision whether he liked it or not.

Swallowing his breath, Subaru turned his feet toward the inside of the room.

Even while he was stepping in, the scream from earlier continued without interruption. And it was clear that it was now hearing from the room in front of him.

Entering inside, eyelids closed from tension—opening them softly, Subaru saw.

It was a beautifully tidy room. The occupant's methodical personality was reflected; the private room with few furnishings arranged tastefully showed that the limited space was used functionally without waste.

Though the layout itself was almost identical to the room Subaru had been using, he thought, he thought, does this much personality come out just by having a different occupant?

By thinking that, Subaru forgot the scene before his eyes for just an instant.

But such escape from reality was in vain; the world forced a conclusion onto Subaru.

In the center of the private room, there was a carefully made bed.

On top of that bed,

"AaaaaAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAaaaaahhh—!"

There was Ram, screaming as if to tear her throat apart in deep, deep sadness, shedding tears like rain—and.

—While being clung to by her, Rem lay there, having breathed her last.

Chapter 25:
The Voice of Deep Resentment Doesn’t Vanish

How many times has it been now that my consciousness has been dominated by this blankness?

Faced with a spectacle beyond comprehension before his eyes, Subaru stood frozen, at a loss for words, just as he had done again and again.

He had been beaten down. Countless times until now. He wanted to whine, just once, that surely it was about time he could be saved.

After all, he had witnessed nothing but tragedies, repeatedly, over and over like this.

Directly in front of the frozen Subaru, a blue-haired girl lay on the bed.

Her face, devoid of vitality, was pale, and her closed eyes would never open again. Her thin negligee—likely sleepwear—though strange to say at a time like this, suited her well, giving her a childlike air compared to her usual capable impression.

Suddenly, Subaru realized he had never seen her in anything other than her maid uniform. And the first time he saw her in other clothes, they were her final outfit.

"Why… is Rem…"

Muttering, Subaru thrust his hands into his hair, looked down, and muttered again.

Faced with a situation he couldn't understand, his head, spinning uselessly in circles, hurt terribly. Perhaps it was also the fatigue from lack of sleep. Thinking felt awfully troublesome.

In each repetition, four times in total. For Subaru, who had been killed in three of them, she was the person he had to be most wary of as a perpetrator.

Roswaal, who could order her to silence him, and Ram, who likely shared the same position, met the same conditions, but there was no doubt he had judged Rem to be the biggest obstacle this time based on the experience of actually having his life taken.

Therefore, this time he kept them at a distance, even talked the reluctant Beatrice into getting involved, and postponed the situation again and again to prolong his life.

As a result, being able to greet the morning of the fifth day was good news, but…

"Why have our positions changed so much…?"

It should have been Rem trying to kill Subaru. Absolutely not the reverse, and he couldn't think of a reason for Rem to be killed either.

Suddenly, Subaru stepped forward to confirm if she was truly dead. The girl laid on the bed had her hands clasped over her chest; her death face was peaceful, as if someone had cleaned it up.

He reached out, trying to touch that unmoving body. But,

"—Don't touch her!"

His hand was slapped away by an arm swung with vigor, and

Subaru groaned quietly and looked up.

Facing him across the bed was Ram, clinging to Rem and shedding tears. While continuing to shed tears that showed no sign of stopping, Ram said,

“Don’t touch Rem… don’t touch Ram’s little sister.”

It was a word of rejection leaving absolutely no room for argument.

Saying only that as if slamming it down, Ram clung to Rem’s body again, whispering to her while weeping quietly. It was a devoted and painful figure, like a mother telling a bedtime story to her sleeping child.

Even with her sister’s appearance inviting such pity, there was no sign of the younger sister waking up to rebuke her.

The pale profile, the lips with poor color. And the body that had stopped its beating.

Seeing those things up close, Subaru finally accepted reality.

—Rem had truly died.

“It is likely due to magic, I’d saay. Though it seems closer to a curse than magic.”

To Subaru, who had left the room with tottering steps, Roswaal, standing next to the door, voiced his deduction.

Raising a finger, the man with indigo long hair slightly tightened his usually completely lax expression, and said,

“The cause of death is debilitation. Her vitality was stolen while she slept, her heartbeat was slooowly distanced, and just like that, the flame of her life was blown out as though settling into stillness”

At the word “curse,” Subaru raised his face.

It was a deduction he remembered hearing. And regarding the cause of death Roswaal spoke of, Subaru also had an idea.

That was exactly the type of abnormality Subaru had experienced in the situation of his second death. Assuming that was likely the cause of his first death as well, then Rem's cause of death this time would be the same as Subaru's first time and indirect second time.

It would be, but,

"I was sure that debilitating magic was Rem's doing, though."

The second time, where he was debilitated by magic and had his skull crushed by an iron ball.

If one recalled that situation, Subaru couldn't be blamed for predicting it was the crime of the same offender. However, in reality, Rem had been given death by a curse, and Subaru had thus slipped through not only the influence of the curse but also the baptism of the iron ball.

In other words,

"The curse and Rem are separate…? What about a cooperative relationship?"

In the case of his second cause of death, it was an attack after being affected by debilitation due to the curse. It would be natural to assume they were working together, but what about this case?

Falling out, Subaru thought, then shook his head. In the first place, he didn't know the position of the curse user. Speaking from conditions, it would be strange if the curse user wasn't someone close to the mansion.

Otherwise, they couldn't have opportunities to contact Rem, and above all, they had to be a person whose motives and conditions overlapped with Rem's actions.

Considering the remarks in the third iteration, Rem trying to kill Subaru to silence him was because she thought it would be for Roswaal's sake. That act, which indirectly led to the elimination of an obstacle for Emilia, was the gift of loyalty, albeit excessive.

Therefore, the premise that he might not be able to avoid it, which had also mentally cornered Subaru, was greatly shaken because of the link with the curse user.

Unable to establish a logic that convinced him no matter what, Subaru, touching his chin and thinking, couldn’t hide his irritation. With the accumulation of fatigue, the blood circulation in his head right now was the worst.

Even knowing that no decent conclusion would come out, Subaru, who could do nothing but think, had to think. And so,

“Don’t tell me, a cooperative relationship is also X-ed out and they’re completely separate cases…?”

What if there was no relationship whatsoever between Rem and the curse user?

The first time, Subaru was targeted by the curse user and died just like that. The second time, Rem killed Subaru, who had fallen under the curse user’s spell, for some reason. The third time, Rem killed Subaru purely out of a rampage born of loyalty. The curse user was unrelated to this.

And this fourth time,

“Because I didn’t do anything, Rem became the curse user’s target…?”

The causal relationship was unknown. In the first place, even the reason why Subaru’s life was targeted by this curse user or whatever remained unclear. Or perhaps the curse user’s aim could be considered the people in the mansion in general, but then he couldn’t come up with a reason why those of low position like Subaru and Rem would be prioritized as targets, omitting important figures like Roswaal and Emilia.

In the end, it was going in circles unless the identity of the curse user was revealed. Feeling his thoughts blocked on all sides and stagnating, Subaru clicked his tongue in irritation and cut off his thinking. Then,

“You seem to be worrying quite seriously, don’t youuu?”

From a slightly higher position, Roswaal looked down at Subaru and muttered that. His blue and yellow odd eyes were narrowed as if appraising Subaru, and Subaru furrowed his brows at the unpleasantness of having his inner thoughts naturally seen through.

Perhaps realizing his own bad manners, Roswaal immediately corrected his posture, bowed to Subaru with his eyes, and said,

“Excuse me. It seems I am also a little on edge. As expected, when I think that a servant I favor has been made to meet with such a fate, well.”

Even while voicing an apology, Roswaal’s attitude never softened in the true sense. He crossed his arms, and while tapping his crossed arms lightly with a finger, said,

“Roast with fire, violate with water, carve with wind, sink into earth. —I feel like it wouldn’t be a return gift unless I did about that much. It’s awkward to ask this, buuuut… My Esteemed Guest, do you have any idea what happened here?”

There was not a fragment of a joking ring contained in those words muttered in a low voice.

Voicing a threat that was likely his raw true feelings, Roswaal stared at Subaru as if testing him. Suddenly, Subaru became aware of how bad the situation he was placed in was, and agonized over how to respond. But there was a voice that interrupted before Subaru could open his mouth.

“Last night or so, you said to be vigilant. You said that, right, Subaru?”

Looking up in the direction of the voice, what entered the vision of Subaru, whose eyes widened in astonishment, was a gray cat moving its short arms as if washing its face—Puck.

To Subaru, who was left speechless by his unexpected remark, Puck tilted his head and said,

“Emotionally and in terms of obligation, I would very much like to take your side, you know. But if I prioritize that and misjudge things, there's a child who won't be rewarded."

Turning his black eyes softly toward the room, Puck rubbed his pink nose with his hand.

While maintaining his usual comical attitude, he must still have had thoughts regarding Rem's death. Making small movements, he shifted and said,

"If lingering regrets or hesitation remain, the soul will fall to evil without being saved. For me, that is a sad thing, not only as a mere spirit, but as someone who had interacted with that child no little."

Shaking his small head side to side, Puck curled his body up again as if to say he had said what he wanted to say. Gently watching over him on her palm, Beatrice was also staring at Subaru silently.

What kind of emotion was contained there? Even though she was such an expressive girl, the current Subaru couldn't even verify that.

"…Subaru."

Emilia pulled on Subaru's sleeve anxiously, turning moist eyes toward him as if appealing for something.

If there is something you know—thoughts conveyed by just a single call.

While he wanted to throw his whole soul into answering her plea, the impulse to brush away her clinging to him was also Subaru's true feeling.

If there is something you know—everyone says it lightly.

But if that were true, that was something Subaru wanted to scream in a louder voice. Indeed, if there was someone who knew the truth of the situation, he wanted them to come forward right now. And he wanted to slam all the countless questions floating up like mountains against them, and have them pull him out of this dead end with no exit.

However, in reality, such a convenient mastermind would not show themselves, and the meaning of the four pairs of eyes directed at Subaru would not change either.

The advice to Puck, given with good intentions, had backfired like this this time. Toward Subaru, who didn't put it into words despite knowing something, even Puck must have harbored distrust. It was natural for Emilia, who had a deep connection with that Puck, to also harbor not a little suspicion toward Subaru.

He repeated loops, and struggled each time hoping for it to get better. However, the result was that every time he did one thing, it backfired and brought back a worse situation than imagined. Surrounded by enemies on all sides; how many times did Subaru have to repeat this to taste the same heartache Subaru felt last time?

"Subaru."

Clearly, Emilia called his name.

It was proof that she harbored suspicion she couldn't wipe away at Subaru's attitude of falling silent. Subaru felt a sense of sorrow at her natural reaction as he continued to think.

In a situation tantamount to knowing nothing, how could he speak to convince them? Or perhaps, he thought they would be disappointed in Subaru, who knew nothing.

Thoughts that had become a messy jumble.

The moment he thought he wanted to say it and just get it over with—

The stagnation of the world and the black mist—as if induced by Subaru's resignation, they eroded the world again, feeding on his resignation.

He lost his words. No, the lips that would utter words did not move a twitch.

Naturally, his hands, feet, eyes, and tongue didn't move, and even the air was completely cut off from the world. Sound and movement were lost; at the return of the absolute space of silence and suspension, Subaru was literally struck dumb.

It was the unreasonable phenomenon that had forcibly cut him off the other day when he decided to tell Emilia about “Return by Death.”

The black mist created a black arm faster and more elegantly than before. That hand, which had been from wrist to elbow before, appeared forming the outline of a slight upper arm.

Just like last time, the arm slipped into the chest of the frozen Subaru without showing any sign of hesitation. Then, softly stroking his internal organs and sternum, it reached his heart, and——Instantly, his thoughts were blown away, and pain that could cause instant mental death pierced through his entire body.

“Subaru?!”

Hearing a grievous voice of sorrow, Subaru realized he had danced back to reality.

And that he was clutching his chest, a massive amount of sweat floating on his forehead, kneeling and breathing roughly.

Raising a hand lightly to the worried Emilia, Subaru looked back on the current phenomenon.

When he tried to tell Emilia about “Return by Death,” that black mist gave Subaru a warning in the sense of interfering with it.

And if it showed itself with a similar meaning this time too—

“Is it because it’s impossible to explain without touching on the content of the loop…?”

At least with his mental state just now, he didn’t think he could possibly dodge persistent questioning. But if that was true, this situation was the worst.

Subaru, who wanted to spill his guts, and the members who wanted to unravel Subaru's guts. For the black mist, there could be no greater field of activity.

Endless questions meant endless torture. The moment he realized that, Subaru, in fear of the unbearable pain, trembled his lips and backed away.

That act,

"—If you know something, Ram won't let you escape."

To the girl who had collapsed crying in the room, looked like an unforgivable folly.

In a split second, a gust of wind shook the door of the room violently, slamming its aftermath against Subaru's bangs. Immediately after closing his eyes at the natural storm,

"Ouch…!"

Sharp pain pierced his cheek, and Subaru instinctively covered his face with his palm. What he felt damply on his touching palm was the sensation of bleeding dripping from a wound just opened.

Realizing that was an injury from the wind just now, Subaru turned his surprise to the back of the room.

Gently stroking her sister lying on the bed, and directing the hand opposite that one toward him, the pink-haired girl glared at Subaru with eyes harboring rage.

"If you know something, spill everything."

"Wait, Ram! That's…"

Only the folly of saying "I can't" was something he restrained himself from.

The moment he said that, it would become absolutely impossible to settle this situation. However, even if he stopped himself from saying it, not a single word to break the deadlock came out.

Subaru didn't know what would become the trigger to receive that warning again.

The fear of that pain made him lose the ability to make correct judgments regarding Ram.

As a result, Subaru's words petered out, failing to extinguish her momentum.

Toward Subaru, who shut his mouth, Ram sent out wind with the meaning of a second warning.

If a cliché expression was permitted, it was truly a phenomenon one would call a "wind blade."

It was likely magic related to wind. The magic creating a sickle-weasel flashed with sharpness like a slash,[5] tore through the walls and doors on the path to reach Subaru, and was about to slam in a blow like the one that tore his cheek—when it suddenly vanished.

Subaru and Ram, surprised and choking on their words. Between those two,

"—It is my policy to keep promises, in fact."

Muttering, the one who stood in front of Subaru was the girl with cream-colored hair.

Beatrice lightly waved her raised palm, and without boasting about erasing the sickle-weasel Ram unleashed as if it were nothing,

"While in the mansion, Betty will protect this human's safety, I suppose."

"Lady Beatrice…!"

At Beatrice declaring so as if bored, Ram bit her lip in indignation.

Glancing sideways at her attitude, Beatrice looked up at the tall figure standing beside her, and,

"Roswaal. Your servant is acting rudely toward your guest, in fact.

As the master of the mansion, how do you judge that, I wonder?"

Directed at him, Roswaal furrowed his brows for just a moment. But he immediately regained his usual composure, closed one eye and shrugged,

"Indeed, it is truly regrettable. If possible, I would also like to renew my welcome to him as a guest immediately. If he would spill what is in his chest and unburdened himself, then immediately."

"…This guy was in Betty's Forbidden Library last night, in fact. So he should be unrelated to this affair, I suppose."

"Whether one should place weight on the situation is no longer the issue. Beatrice, surely you are fully aware of at least thaaat much, are you nooot?"

Negotiations broke down, and Roswaal turned the palms of both hands upward just as he shrugged. In those palms, he suddenly saw multiple colorful radiances floating up.

Even Subaru, who had absolutely no knowledge of magic, was made to realize that it was a state where condensed magic power was visible.

Red and blue, yellow and green—four colors of pale light floating; even if he didn't understand just how outside the norm that was.

At Roswaal's performance, Beatrice gave a small snort with her cute nose,

"As always, a dexterous youngster, in fact. Having a little bit of talent, putting in just a tiny bit more effort than others, and being blessed by lineage and a teacher by only a slight margin… Do you think you were able to escape being a jack-of-all-trades with just that level, I wonder?"

"You're the one who is as harsh as always. Although, if I said I've never thought I wanted to try out just how different I, who continues to walk, am from you who spends time in a room where time has stopped—that would be a lie."

A rise in magic power occurred between the two, bringing Subaru an illusion as if the atmosphere were distorting.

Unknowingly, the two heightened their fighting spirit, leaving Subaru, the person involved, behind.

Subaru himself didn't know why it was turning out like this. However, the fact that he couldn't utter words to stop the two was also a fact Subaru himself could only grit his teeth at.

"Howeeever, to think you would go so far as to physically protect him. Did you take quite a liking to him?"

"Keep the jokes to your fetishes, Roswaal. Betty's ideal is Bubby himself, in fact. With that human, both adorableness and furriness are unsatisfactory, I suppose."

Against Roswaal heightening the visible four-colored magic, Beatrice took no particular action while maintaining a calm stance.

However, around the girl who should have just been standing there, an overwhelming phenomenon that distorted space was occurring, which Subaru, standing close by, could sense.

That was merely the aftermath of gathered power; just imagining how much efficacy that power would display if it had directionality made his spine freeze.

"Why go this far?"

"A contract is absolute, I suppose. If I break it, Betty will no longer be Betty, in fact. Being sincere to a contract takes priority over everything else, I suppose."

Responding to Roswaal's sigh like that, Beatrice continued with "However,"

"If he aimed for this situation and used the contract with Betty, he would be an outrageous imposter, I suppose."

"I…! I didn't intend for that…!"

Glancing at Subaru, Beatrice looked away with emotionless eyes.

What Subaru wished from her was strictly because he regarded the phenomena related to the causes of death so far as dangerous.

He absolutely did not wish for a situation like this.

“It doesn’t matter, all of that doesn’t matter!”

Stamping her foot, it was Ram who interrupted that exchange.

Receiving everyone’s gaze, she gripped the hem of her skirt tightly,

“Don’t get in the way, let Ram through. Rem’s enemy… if you know something, tell everything. Save… Ram… save Rem…”

A grievous appeal, but Subaru had no words to return to it.

What was given to his silence was an invisible blade harboring rage and disappointment. However, that was again intercepted without reaching Subaru,

“I’m sorry, Ram. Even so, I will try believing in Subaru.”

Lining up next to Beatrice, it was Emilia who checked Ram.

She turned her palm toward Ram, and while carrying Puck on that shoulder, walked up to Subaru. Then, looking down slightly as if searching for words,

“Subaru, please… If you can save Ram, save Rem, please tell us everything.”

At the emotion of affection contained there, Subaru felt his own pettiness and was ashamed.

Even when things had come to this, Emilia was trying to stand by Subaru’s side. For Subaru, who hadn’t shown a decent attitude in this loop, and even now kept his mouth shut about the crucial matter and wouldn’t speak.

And also at his own weakness, unable to return a single thing to such consideration of hers.

“Sorry—”

Leaving that behind, Subaru let himself back away, putting distance between them.

For an instant, Emilia’s hand reached out to stop him. Before it could reach Subaru, it had to be turned to intercept the wind blade that was unleashed, and as a result, no one on the spot could stop Subaru’s feet.

“Subaru—!”

Shaking off the voice calling him to stop, Subaru cut through the corridor regardless of appearance. Behind him, even while feeling a clash of magic power occur, he didn’t even summon the courage to look back.

Despite Emilia racking her brains for him so much, Subaru didn’t have the courage to face that fear.

He was weak. He was helplessly fragile. That was why he was scorning every kind of goodwill and good intentions, and running away selfishly.

He didn’t know what to do anymore.

Where he should go, how he should think, everything.

Only—

“—I will absolutely kill you!!”

Hearing from behind, the scream of a girl like she was vomiting blood.

Only the scream of vengeance of the girl who lost half her body, tearing at herself, chased after him.

As if fleeing, fleeing from that, covering his ears, shaking his head, raising a voiceless voice, Subaru threw everything away and ran.

He continued to run.

Chapter 26:
The Third Choice

Running frantically, he didn't know how much time had passed.

His breath ran out, his knees buckled, dripping sweat ran down his chin; with the inside of his heart a mess, he still continued to run without being able to stop.

If he didn't run, he would be caught up by the incomprehensible emotions chasing him from behind. And if he were caught by them, this time everything would surely end—that conviction alone was now driving Subaru.

Ram's scream, her roar of resentment, that cry that regarded Subaru as an object of hatred, still wouldn't leave his ears.

Ram, who never broke her rude, haughty attitude that seemed to mock people.

That same Ram had bared such emotion and screamed hatred at the top of her voice.

Just recalling it made his heart shrink, and indescribable sadness came and went.

He had run away. He had ended up running away.

Rushing through, bursting out of the mansion, throwing away all the noise heard from behind, he had run away leaving everything behind.

Subaru could no longer return to that place.

Ram and Roswaal wouldn't forgive the Subaru who ran, and Emilia and Puck likely wouldn't be able to fully trust the Subaru who stubbornly kept his mouth shut.

And Beatrice, who was bound by contract, also likely wouldn't become an active ally without being able to read the true intent of Subaru’s actions.

If he could have spilled everything, that would have been fine too.

But to do that, the black mist stood in his way and interfered.

In a world where time had stopped, in a world where sound was isolated, pain like his heart being crushed and fear—before that, Subaru’s wavering resolve was easily blown away.

As a result, unable to endure either the pain or the sorrow, Subaru had no choice but to run.

“It can’t be helped, can it…! What could I… Even I!”

He didn’t understand anything.

Why it had turned out like this, what he had to do.

What he had to do for the world to forgive Subaru.

“Even though… it was… so fun…”

Suddenly invited into another world, having no choice but to live in a world where he knew nothing; a place that welcomed Subaru in a world where only that anxiety was rooted.

Those days, that time, that time where only about a single week had passed, was now so far away it was out of the current Subaru’s reach.

Redoing, returning, repeating; each time, the world bared its fangs at Subaru.

The world that had been so kind changed color, the brilliance that had been vivid faded, and everything looked dull.

—It’s no good anymore.

Suddenly, such a mutter grazed his mind.

—There’s no need to try hard anymore, is there?

At his own voice urging resignation, at that sweet temptation, Subaru almost stopped thinking.

If he did just as those words said, he thought he would surely be at ease.

Originally, Subaru had a nature of easily drifting toward the easier, easier direction of the situation.

It wasn't just Subaru. Any human would likely be the same.

If two choices were lined up in front of them, and they couldn't throw away either, they would be forced into a time of anguish.

In the midst of struggling with such suffering, what if a third option were suddenly presented?

If that option seemed attractive, as if it were a divine revelation, as if it were a godsend, who could blame the impulse to reach out for it?

If one could choose neither to resist nor to escape completely, wouldn't it be better to just throw it all away?

"Throw it away… you say."

Blood rapidly drained from his head, and even the pounding of his heart, which had been beating so fast, felt like something distant.

His limbs became heavily weighted, and his legs, which had been moving as if driven, slowed their pace, gradually changing to a dragging walk.

Suddenly, his field of vision, which had become invisible until then, expanded, and Subaru realized his figure was in a forest surrounded by trees.

While running recklessly, he seemed to have burst out of the mansion, gone off the highway, and wandered into a mountain path.

Surrounded by dense, overgrown greenery, in the gloom where even the sky was blocked, Subaru thought that this place resembled the place of his previous death.

The moment he thought that, a clear vision of the third option floated up.

“If I die…”

Would I be saved, from this situation?

“Ah, that’s right. If I end up dying, it changes.”

The nonsense born of weakness that slipped out of his mouth seemed too sweet, and a twitching smile floated onto Subaru’s lips.

Subaru had already lost his life three times.

A fourth death was inexperienced for Subaru. Therefore, he had been tormented by the baseless anxiety that if he met a fourth death, perhaps everything would end.

But,

“If it ends with that, what’s wrong with it…?”

Each time he repeated, the situation Subaru was placed in got worse.

Death by debilitation, beaten to death after being debilitated. Murdered by a person he should have trusted, and this time the death of that partner, and the loss of all trust from the other concerned parties.

This time, where he picked up only his life. This time, where he was made to hold nothing but his life.

Like this, losing everything, continuing to struggle under conditions worse than when he was first invited to the parallel world. What meaning would there be in such a thing?

No, even if there were some meaning, why was it said that Subaru had to walk it?

“If you want to do it, you should just do it on your own… What relationship does it have with me, with me?”

Biting his lip, he spat hatred at the existence that involved him in this situation.

Muddy dark emotions boiled in his guts, curses as far as he could think of filled his head, pouring black fuel into Subaru’s heart, which had already completely withered.

—The choice called “Death,” it seemed like the best idea to the current Subaru.

If it ends by dying, then that’s that.

But if, hypothetically, he could die and return to the “Second Day” again.

“The first… that’s right. Getting along with Emilia-tan, fluffing Puck, teasing Beatrice, exchanging banter with Roswaal, together with Ram and Rem…”

Tracing the first time just as it was, he might be able to do it happily.

Come to think of it, the first time could be said to be the ideal itself for Subaru. Even if the future of dying from debilitation at the end on the night of the fourth day couldn’t be changed, that death was accompanied by neither pain nor suffering, and above all, peace and tranquility were promised.

If he could return to those days again, if he could come in contact with their smiles, then dying was by no means a scary thing.

The current situation, which was beyond help, was far more terrifying for Subaru, and above all, he couldn’t endure the sadness.

Swallowing his breath, Subaru searched the pocket of his trousers.

Inside, the thin sensation he grasped in his hand was the quill pen he hadn’t let go of even once in these four days.

The sharp pen tip had pierced the back of Subaru's hand countless times, stained with fresh blood each time, and the now dark red, caked-on blood likely couldn't be wiped off even if he tried.

Gripping the quill pen in a reverse hold, Subaru pointed its tip at his own throat.

The pointed tip possessed sharpness sufficient to gouge the human body; that was something Subaru himself could already testify to with his own body.

If he gathered momentum and swung it down with all his might, the objective would likely be achieved.

"Haa… haa… haa… gh."

His vision flickered on and off, and his whole body was hot as if boiling from the too-rapid blood circulation.

And yet blood didn't circulate only to his head, and the spinning of his brain froze more and more as if it knew no limits.

His gaze staring at the pen tip was fixed, and the trembling tip approached inch by inch.

His rough breathing, surpassing even a full sprint, was accompanied by nausea, to the extent that if his concentration broke, he seemed likely to vomit stomach acid immediately.

His knees shook, his lower back gave way, and his arm didn't move as if nerves didn't pass beyond the elbow. Yet only his right hand gripping the pen was trembling ridiculously, comically.

"Damn… it."

Clicking his tongue, he shook his head as if to deceive the emotions before his eyes.

He grabbed and fixed his trembling right wrist with his left hand. But the moment he touched his right hand, the fear was transmitted to his left hand as well. Both hands gripping the pen trembled minutely, and that intent was never carried out.

"Stop… I said stop!"

He raised his voice in irritation, but even that voice couldn't fully hide the trembling.

Finally, he dropped the quill pen he was holding, and when he bent his back to pick it up, his knees, which should have been buckling, lost their strength and he collapsed on the spot.

Putting both hands on the soil, staring at the ground close up in astonishment, Subaru suddenly spilled hot things welling up from both eyes, and bit through his lip in frustration.

Sharp pain and the iron smell of blood filled his mouth, and tasting that, he sobbed.

"I can't even… even such a simple thing…"

—Is it that I lack courage and can't do it?

If he tumbled down there, he could be at ease.

Despite brooding like that, Subaru couldn't even determine the resolve to fall completely.

He couldn't lose to impulse and leave it to momentum, nor could he put an easy and weak decision into action. Even his determination and resolve were fragile; crouching and wailing was the most he could do.

Even if he exposed such a shameful state, the situation wouldn't improve one bit. It wouldn't even worsen. Change would not occur. The unchanging situation just simply conveyed that the current state Subaru was placed in was rock bottom.

Pain, suffering, sadness; everything pressing Subaru for a decision, absolutely everything, granted him no kindness.

Even the option he had craved so much, he didn't have the resolve to carry it out.

He thought that if he was going to choose the end anyway, maybe it would have been better to let Ram kill him.

Subaru was not directly related to Rem's cause of death. Therefore, even if Ram could have killed Subaru, it would have been nothing but a completely misplaced revenge play.

Ram, who wailed at the intense pain of having half her body torn away, and screamed hatred so much.

If it could soothe that body-scorching impulse even a little, wouldn't it be fine to offer up something like the life of Subaru, who had chosen only to rot away like this?

While seeming to care for others, its essence was escapism just to distract from the whereabouts of his own unsettled resolve.

However, Subaru, who avoided even facing his own shame, never realized that thought which insulted even Ram who was being used as a comparison.

That selfish emotion that even spirits would abandon—what dispatched that there was, perhaps, the dispensation of heaven unable to bear seeing such a shameful sight.

"—Ah?"

At the sensation of the air suddenly changing, Subaru, who was groveling, raised his face.

On the soil where he crouched, there was no change in his vision crumpled by tears. But in the gloom where sunlight didn't penetrate, blocked by leaves and branches, something caught on Subaru's nerves.

It was a warning called up from instinct.

Raising his body at the ringing alarm bells, Subaru looked around while kneeling on one knee. Rubbing his eyes, securing his vision, straining his ears, and killing his breath.

The sound of grass being stepped on rang out, and the dry echoes of swaying branches followed in succession.

Fast. And sharp. Something was closing in sharply and rapidly.

Unknowingly moistening his dry lips with his tongue, Subaru instantly picked up the quill pen that had fallen at his feet. Holding it in a reverse grip, he held it in front of him with anxiety whose reason he didn't understand.

—In an instant, it pushed aside the vegetation and revealed itself before Subaru.

"Y-You are…"

A pursuer from the mansion—it was not.

Or perhaps the weakness that somewhere hoped if it were was betrayed.

Before his eyes, which he cast down slightly at the selfish expectation, however, it stood leisurely.

Speaking from Subaru's knowledge, it was likely closest to a wolf.

Its whole body was covered in black fur, its four legs firmly biting the soil, keeping its body low. Saliva dripped from a large mouth lined with sharp fangs, and in the center of a face covered in jet black, red twin eyes, the only things asserting their presence, shone brilliantly.

Its body length was roughly about one meter, and its weight was probably about thirty or forty kilos.

In his original world, it would be the size of a large dog class, but from its overall sharp body shape, he didn't feel that much overwhelming strength.

However,

"Hey, hey…"

In front of that existence with glaring eyes before its prey, breathing roughly, could a human who knew only the lukewarm dogs blended into human society maintain composure?

Before that thing shaking its fangs with obvious hostility, cold sweat rapidly wet Subaru's forehead.

In front of Subaru, who couldn't make a single move, it lowered its head and snorted.

Likely, it had sniffed out Subaru's scent and come this far. Subaru's body, which had run recklessly, had many abrasions from grazing branches, and there were not a few places still oozing blood. On top of that, he had even been raising unsightly sobs. It wouldn't have lacked materials to pinpoint his location.

The black dog lowering its head and threatening him.

Suddenly, he saw a yellowish horn growing on the top of that dog's head, proving that its ecology was definitely different from what Subaru knew.

At the ferocious rage of the horned beast hungry for food, Subaru felt his courage shrink, but on the other hand, realized he was obtaining even a sense of relief from unknown origins.

Perhaps if it was the beast before his eyes, it would affirm Subaru's decision without hesitation. Because to the cornered Subaru, it seemed like such an existence.

"Thinking I'd let Ram kill me… and right after that, this. Even I think I'm too fickle."

Because he couldn't hold a firm resolve, he continued to be swept away by the situation before his eyes.

Just as it had been until now, even now he ended up entrusting himself to the easy situation before his eyes.

He didn't think making that choice was a mistake. Even if he thought so, it was useless, and even if he thought so, nothing would change.

Spreading both arms, Subaru expressed non-resistance to the horned existence.

For an instant, perhaps unable to understand the meaning of the prey's action, the horned beast keeping its body low trembled as if frightened, which was a little funny.

"Wh-at are you scared of, against a guy beaten down this much?"

A laugh that slipped out of his mouth.

He was amazed that he still had the energy left to laugh like that.

—He felt somewhat at ease, enough that laughter came out.

The black beast standing in his way—this guy, who clearly regarded Subaru as prey, was the messenger of heaven who would grant Subaru's wish.

It would likely guide Subaru, who couldn't even end his own life, to a gentle and sweet stagnation with those fangs, those claws, and that horn.

Whether it would end in death, or return and sink into lazy happiness.

He didn't know which would be thrust upon him, but he could escape from this helpless dead end pressing on Subaru.

For now, that was fine. Just that was fine. He wouldn't wish for any luxury beyond that.

So rather, put me out of my misery—

"Huh…?"

Even though he should have been thinking that with a clear feeling, cold water was thrown on Subaru's mood by the sound of hard things clattering close by.

Surroundings; while paying attention to the threat before his eyes, he searched for the cause of the sound, but it wasn't found anywhere visible.

And so he realized immediately. No wonder it wasn't found. It was natural.

The small, hard sound was the sound of the roots of Subaru's teeth trembling, unable to mesh.

"—Eh?"

The lips leaking a mutter trembled, blood flow concentrated in his fingers to the point of pain, and it was ringing at a speed that could make Subaru's heart explode.

The abnormality occurring in his own body; noticing it belatedly, Subaru was astonished.

Why did his body want to escape from this place so much?

Like this, it was as if—

"This is just like…"

—Like I don't want to die, isn't it?

His heart betrayed even by his body, Subaru was distressed by the situation where he could no longer trust even his own self. And, ignoring Subaru's disturbed emotions,

"Oah…?"

The beast suddenly vanished from his field of vision, and a stupid voice dropped into the forest.

Dumbfounded, he chased the whereabouts of the jet-black shadow that had been there just a moment ago. Not found.

Immediately after, the base of his right leg was bitten into by powerful jaws.

"Ggh…!"

Fangs pierced flesh, reached nerves, and the wound was widened by sharpness like a blade.

Blood spurted, the movement of the world became slow, and looking down in a daze at the source of the pain, Subaru's eyes crossed with the red twin eyes thrusting fangs into there.

—As if loudly asserting that he was alive, Subaru's scream echoed throughout the forest.

Chapter 27:
The Fangs to Stay Alive

His throat trembled. His soul screamed.

Tearing through flesh, invading nerves, a sharp, excruciating pain that threatened to drive him mad struck his brain.

“Gyaaaaaaahhh—!!”

His vision turned bright red, and he couldn’t grasp reality at all.

His right thigh area was being bitten by a black beast. Before the thought to tear it off could run through his mind, the reaction of raising a scream against the agony was faster.

—It hurts, it hurts, it hurts, it hurts, it hurts, it hurts.

His head was completely filled with that, leaving no room to even think of a counterattack.

Suddenly, his sense of balance collapsed. The biting beast shook its head with its fangs still thrust in, pulling Subaru, who easily outweighed it by nearly double, down to the ground.

“Ugh—”

Carried by the momentum, he half-rotated and was slammed face-down onto the ground. His face, failing to break the fall, crashed into the soil; the sensation of his nose being crushed and the taste of dirt in his mouth.

Pain continued to assert itself from both above and below, and while spitting out dirt, Subaru’s throat continued to raise a low groan. Then, realizing that the sensation of fangs had left his right leg, he hurriedly flipped his body over.

“This is bad…!”

Returning to his back, he raised his upper body.

Copious bleeding could be seen from his right leg, and the flesh of the skin under his torn clothes was turned up. Pain flared up again from the wound that looked like it had been gouged by a knife, but prioritizing standing up over that—he wouldn't make it in time.

Having sealed the prey's movement, the jet-black shadow moving to pursue was too fast to follow.

Against the wild beast approaching while bounding left and right on the ground, the only reaction Subaru could manage was to cover his upper body with both arms.

A flash of the swung sharp beast claws tore through Subaru's right arm from the back of the hand to the shoulder in one go. Blood spurted, pain nerves applauded the manifestation of the new wound, and Subaru's brain boiled with a heavy ensemble of intense agony.

Before biting off his throat, it intended to crush his limbs and rob him of the power to resist.

Experiencing the cruelty of a wild hunt firsthand, Subaru shuddered and screamed.

That sound, which didn't form meaningful words, had no effect on the horned beast's movements. As if performing a task it was used to, indifferently, the horned beast bit into the left wrist of the merely screaming Subaru, robbing him of the function of a third limb.

The sensation of fangs penetrating his left wrist.

A sensation that surpassed pain and was now nothing more than something inducing screams. Under conditions where his vision flickered and even thoughts didn't run properly, what still drove Subaru was only his reflexive survival instinct.

"Aaaaaah—!! Damn it all!!"

Screaming, with all his might, he slammed the beast into the ground along with his bitten left wrist. Its jaw strength wasn't so weak that the fangs would come out with just that. While soiling its black fur with blood and saliva, the horned beast pushed its fangs in deeply as if mocking Subaru's resistance.

Into the side of its face,

"Don't get, cocky—!!"

The quill pen he hadn't dropped yet pierced deeply into the wild beast's left eye.

At the sensation of its eyeball being crushed and the inside stirred, it was the horned beast's turn to roar.

At the unexpected retaliation from the opponent it had determined to be helpless prey, the wild beast thrashed its whole body in resistance. However, Subaru judged that if he let go here, there would be no next time.

Covering the beast with his whole body, keeping not only his right arm thrusting the quill pen but also his bitten left arm as it was, he absolutely would not let that body escape.

"It hurts it hurts it hurts it hurts it hurts—"

His right leg, with its nerves damaged, couldn't hold firm; his left arm had the wrist dangling by a single piece of skin; and on his right arm, bone was visibly deep within the turned-up wound.

There was a sensation of a nosebleed flowing endlessly from his battered nose, and he felt like he might be missing two or three front teeth if he wasn't careful.

Even in such a state, he did his utmost to escape from the predicament before his eyes.

There was pain. There was suffering. There was fear. He was alive.

Both himself and this beast were still breathing.

"Agaah—"

The beast's blindly swung claws grazed his forehead, and at the sensation of his brain being shaken, his hold loosened. In that opening, the horned beast shoved Subaru away and distanced itself with the quill pen still stuck in its left eye.

With a single leap, it moved several meters away, and just like that, the jet-black shadow melted into the forest and vanished.

Subaru, collapsed on the soil, searched for that vanished figure, forgetting even the pain.

He couldn't think optimistically that it retreated due to injury.

It was a well-heard story that a wounded beast is terrifying. And for the beast, Subaru would also be a wounded opponent.

For both of them, the opponent was an existence whose life had to be ended here.

"—It hurts."

Kneeling on his right leg which couldn't hold firm, he raised his body relying only on his left leg. Both arms were wretched to look at; especially his left hand looked so bad he felt his heart would break just seeing it, so he couldn't direct his gaze at it.

An illusion as if the side of his head were being beaten repeatedly. Temporarily thrusting the continuously ringing alarm of pain into his subconscious, Subaru's gaze glared at the forest where the beast had disappeared.

It will definitely come.

That baseless conviction might have been the gift of the few experiences he had gained in this world, for Subaru who had faced murderous intent not a few times until now.

"—!!"

Was it Subaru or the opponent who raised a scream like holding their breath?

The only thing known was the fact that before the bracing Subaru's eyes, opening a mouth lined with sharp fangs, the horned beast flew in like a bullet.

Subaru tasted with his whole body the power of a creature weighing over thirty kilos charging at full speed without holding back. And that, with the constraint of the condition that he couldn't receive the blessing of support from both legs.

With a split-second judgment, his right arm went up, and the horned beast's bite ended in failure as its jaw was struck from directly below. However, he couldn't kill even a speck of the charge's destructive power, and Subaru's body rolled on the ground entangled with the horned beast, carried by the momentum of the crash.

"Ooooooaaaaaaaah—"

Blown backward, while hitting his whole body hard, Subaru swung his arms frantically. On the way, feeling the sensation of touching hard fur, he grabbed it with all his might, and clung to it determining never to let go, even if he didn't know what part it was.

Rolling on the ground while entangled, eventually Subaru and the beast's bodies entered a slope. Far from stopping, they gained momentum aiming for the bottom of the slope, and in the end,

"—You've gotta be kidding."

Suddenly, the sensation of the hard ground that had been battering his whole body vanished.

Gaining the floating sensation that attacked immediately after, Subaru realized he had thrown himself off a cliff.

"—!!"

Was the voiceless scream again screamed by either Subaru or the beast?

As a result, that scream didn't last very long.

The floating sensation was cut off in just about two seconds, and his bones creaked at the impact of hitting his whole body hard again. A dull sound rang out, and he thought somewhere probably actually broke. However, prioritizing the judgment that his body was in no state to worry about that.

Extending his left arm which had no sensation beyond the wrist, he tried to kill the rolling momentum as if clawing the ground. The fingernails of the five fingers spread on the rock surface were peeled off, and spots like sprayed paint were drawn on the rock wall by the spurting fresh blood.

Doing that much, the momentum finally slackened, and Subaru's body barely stopped at the edge of another cliff. Stopping in a state where half his body was protruding into the air, Subaru hurriedly rolled his body toward where there was ground, and,

"Buhaa… haa… ah, ah, ah, shit!"

Pinching his nose, he vigorously expelled the noseblood that hadn't finished flowing.

Unable to judge whether the liquid accumulated in his mouth was saliva, blood, or stomach acid, he spat it all out onto the ground along with curses.

Breathing roughly, grimacing all over his face at the pain of lacerations and bruises his whole body complained of, Subaru then realized that the figure of the beast that had fallen with him was not there.

"Hey, where…?!"

It wasn't the time to think avoiding death by falling was lucky.

If he received its attack again, the fate of Subaru, similarly at the edge of a cliff, would be decided this time for sure. Assuming the figure of the horned beast jumping back nimbly and threatening him, Subaru looked around while changing his posture.

And he immediately caught that black figure in his vision.

“…Is that so, you couldn’t make it, huh.”

The figure of the horned beast existed beneath Subaru’s eyes, at the bottom of that cliff.

Unlike Subaru, it hadn’t been able to avoid a second fall. Unable to endure the fall from a height more than double the first one, the beast, which seemed to have fallen headfirst, lay on its side atop copious bloodstains, not moving a twitch.

—Apparently, Subaru had picked up his life again.

“Dammit… this is, ridiculous…”

Relief pierced into the gaps of his heart, perhaps because he had witnessed the end of that life.

Subaru, who was also bleeding in a way that couldn’t be overlooked, lay on his side on the ground and closed his eyelids, unable to resist the attacking drowsiness.

Just like that, without being able to think anything, his consciousness fell and vanished.

Chapter 28:
Preparedness and Confession

"—Finally, you've noticed, in fact."

When Subaru opened his eyes, the sunlight was leaning heavily toward the west.

Midway up the cliff—that place Subaru had arrived at during his first fall was gaping open like a mouth where the forest broke off.

He hadn't had the composure to notice it during the chaotic battle with the beast, but placing himself here where he could see the sky, an inexplicable sense of relief wrapped around Subaru.

Perhaps the illusion of having escaped the suffocating feeling of being surrounded by trees made him think so. To the extent that a self-righteous hope floated up that maybe, even in this dead-end situation that should have remained unchanged, something might have changed.

"Why don't you say something, I wonder?"

"…Something."

"On top of being boring, you have a stale, gloomy look on your face; you are a hopeless guy, in fact."

Spitting that out harshly, Beatrice smoothed down her long, luxurious ringlets.

Atop the rocky surface of the sheer cliff, the incongruity of her usual dress attire was tremendous; there was a mismatch there as if only her part had been pasted onto a landscape painting later.

"…In that getup, I can't really picture you doing outdoorsy stuff."

"Betty didn't want to walk in the dirt-smelling mountains either, in fact. If you hadn't fled into a place like this, there would have been no need to come here, I suppose."

Brushing off her hem, Beatrice said this bitterly.

At her words, Subaru furrowed his brows suspiciously, and then, belatedly, he realized.

That the multitude of deep wounds he had sustained were mostly closed, leaving only traces like bloodstains and tears in his clothes.

The left wrist that had been nearly falling off, the laceration on his right arm where bone had been visible, the right leg he had hallucinated was no longer moving—all of it was back to normal.

“There were too many, so I couldn’t erase the scars, in fact. You should accept at least that much as the result of your own clumsiness, I suppose.”

If he looked closely, he could confirm the remnants of wounds received from fangs in various places. However, they had faded enough that one wouldn’t notice unless in a bright place, and above all, he didn’t care about his appearance enough to worry about scars.

Purely, the fact that he had his wounds healed like this was the greatest salvation. However,

“Why…”

“What is it, I wonder?”

“Why did you save me? I…”

—Even to Beatrice, who had formed a contract with him, he couldn’t reveal anything.

At Subaru’s attitude of choking on his words, Beatrice snorted with a familiar look of amazement. She shrugged her shoulders just like that,

“If the other party were to die in an unsightly pool of blood, it would affect Betty’s prestige, I suppose..”

“I thought the terms said… until this morning.”

"If you have the composure to nitpick, I could make a wound in the same place again for you, in fact? Fittingly, there is a target called a scar to aim for, I suppose."

"I'msorrythankyoupleaseforgiveme."

Prostrating himself flat and rubbing his head against the rock surface, he dealt with Beatrice's quiet rage.

In any case, although she teased him, she—

"Are you still… keeping the contract with me?"

"A contract is a contract. It remains valid until one of us falls, in fact… Thinking of it that way, not setting a proper time limit was a mistake, I suppose."

Perhaps intending to pretend the earlier nitpicking hadn't happened in earnest, Beatrice behaved as if she had forgotten the duration Subaru had mentioned.

A foul-mouthed girl with whom he didn't get along. —Subaru felt as if his chest had been suddenly struck by the merciful stance shown by Beatrice, who had given such a strong impression.

Subaru lost his words at the emotions welling up.

Beatrice, while gazing at Subaru who had fallen silent, pointed a finger at him without touching on the change in his expression,

"Come to think of it, there was something I had to ask, in fact."

"…What, is it?"

He instinctively braced himself because, depending on the content of that question, he was wary that an audience with the black mist would be unavoidable.

However, what came out of her mouth was content unrelated to Subaru's fears,

"About the wounds Betty healed… did you defeat the opponent that inflicted them, I wonder? Or did it escape, I wonder?”

“…? By wounds, do you mean that black wolf-like thing? If it’s that…”

Approaching slowly to the edge of the cliff, he pointed below as if to show Beatrice.

At the tip of his finger, there lay the carcass of the beast, rolling in the same position. Beatrice, standing next to him, confirmed it and nodded,

“Was that the only opponent, I wonder?”

“If there were two or more, I would’ve simply been bitten to death twice as fast.”

Being able to bury one like that was completely a result of coincidence.

If he had been attacked by a pack, a dust cloud would have risen in cartoonish expression, and after it cleared, a clean Subaru skull would likely be rolling there.

At Subaru’s reply, Beatrice touched her own chin and closed her eyes for a moment. Then, she shook her head slightly as if immediately convinced,

“I don’t sense any presence in the surroundings, so it was probably a stray, in fact. If you happened to encounter one that slipped through the barrier, your bad luck is quite something, I suppose.”

“I’m actually at the point of suspecting I’m a clump of bad luck myself.”

It felt like all the misfortunes that occur in a life were weighing on him at once.

Even if it were guaranteed that no misfortune would occur if he got through this, he would want to ask them to switch to releasing it in small doses if possible.

Since coming to the parallel world, what he recalled vividly were only memories accompanied by pain.

Even though there should have been just as many happy things.

Feeling something ache effeminately in the depths of his memory, Subaru cast down his eyes to deceive his expression. But Beatrice didn't pay attention to such sentimentality of Subaru's,

"If that's not the case… well, thinking about this is a waste of time, I suppose."

"Hey, what? When you figure something out all on your own like that, it makes me curious. I want to see, hear, and touch that fact you realized"

"It would just add one more thing that you can't do anything about, in fact. More importantly than that, you should rack your brain about how you'll conduct yourself from now on, I suppose."

Pushing away the approaching Subaru, Beatrice clearly blocked the retreat of Subaru, who had been searching for an escape route again.

As if to press the point to the silent Subaru, Beatrice crossed her arms,

"Let me tell you, this is as far as Betty can do for you, in fact. I cannot create an opportunity for you to return to the mansion and explain yourself to the older of those sisters, I suppose. Even if that chance existed, you are the one who threw it away, in fact."

"I…!"

If he could have said it, he wanted to scream that he would have.

If not for that restriction that felt like his heart was being crushed, Subaru would have spilled everything and begged for forgiveness.

That not a single thing would serve as a clue to heal Ram's heart. That Subaru was also a victim just being swept away by that helpless situation.

Because even that wasn't allowed, he had run away to a place like this, been attacked by a wild animal, and ended up groveling for his life.

"Am I an idiot…? No, I am definitely an idiot."

Again, making that situation an excuse, he tried to pretend he didn't see.

Repeating public stances, excuses, defenses, and self-preservation, Subaru had come to the edge of the cliff. It was proof that he had been driven to a place with no escape, both in a realistic sense and a mental sense.

Running, running, running, and continuing to run; which way were his feet facing now?

"Why do you… care about me when I can't go back?"

"It's a whim, in fact. If you don't at least die somewhere out of my sight, Betty will have bad dreams and be troubled, I suppose. — Seeing you hesitating even at this late stage, I feel like even that is a faint hope, in fact."

Erasing kindness, she slashed at him with words filled only with severity.

Beatrice's gaze, looking at him as if he were something boring, was completely dry, and unknowingly Subaru made his throat sound as if gasping.

"If I, choose to run away…"

"I will at least lend a hand so you aren't found by the people of the mansion, in fact. As for where you disappear to after that, you should do as you please, I suppose."

It was a blunt way of speaking, but that was likely her undeniable true feeling.

Beatrice never broke the content of what she voiced. That was clear from the fact that she came to search for Subaru in the mountains like this, and in the end, didn’t abandon him as he crouched effeminately.

Surely, if Subaru chose to run away, she would affirm it.

Not out of consideration, but out of indifference born from weighing the terms of the contract..

But if, hypothetically—

“If I said I wanted to talk to Ram, what would you do?”

“…It’s useless, in fact. The older of the sisters no longer has the composure to listen to your words, in fact. No matter what you say, she won’t listen, and she won’t believe, I suppose.”

To Subaru’s presentation of another choice, Beatrice responded while casting down her eyes, which was rare.

Was the image floating in her mind the figure of Ram raising a voice of resentment, whom Subaru had left behind at the mansion?

How she had been after Subaru ran away. Coming into contact with Beatrice’s current attitude, he knew that it was a situation where he dared not ask.

Seeing Beatrice shut her mouth, Subaru looked up at the sky and chewed on his own foolishness.

That moment, that place was the watershed.

Subaru shouldn’t have run away at that place. Even if he didn’t have the resolve to endure the pain, Subaru should have faced Ram.

He missed the opportunity, and the chance to connect their hearts was lost. And that which had slipped through his hands once could never return a second time.

The rift that had opened between the two was just that deep and large.

“The older of the sisters endured for the sake of the younger. And the younger of the sisters lived for the sake of such an older sister, I suppose. If either is missing, that pair is no longer whole, in fact."

As if interrupting the silence, the melancholy voice of the girl flowed.

In front of Subaru lowering his gaze, Beatrice toyed with her own luxurious hair,

"If either is missing, the function is lost. Since she has ended up like that, the older sister probably won't last long either, I suppose."

"What, does that mean? What do you know…?"

He felt like something outrageous was being muttered.

Closing in on Beatrice with momentum as if about to grab her, Subaru tried to question the true meaning of her statement just now. But,

"You are arrogant, your attitude is big, and your hands and eyes are nasty, human."

His hand was taken, and Beatrice's body rotated as if dancing. As if caught up in her rotating movement, his legs got tangled, and before he knew it, he landed on the ground on his back. Air was forcibly expelled from his lungs by the impact, and the groaning Subaru opened his eyes wide.

"It will never go back to how it was. When I think that, I have thoughts of my own, I suppose. Although, Betty may not have the qualification to voice them, in fact."

"Acting like you understood it all by yourself… Stop acting like a big shot. Are you blurring the content to act like a key person, you piece of shit."

Was she amusing herself with the state of the opponent alternating between joy and sorrow by releasing information in small doses? Subaru cursed at that bad taste. However, Beatrice shook her head,

"You're the one asking; what do you intend to know about an opponent you've only known for four days—and barely even faced properly at that, I wonder? Even if you knew, what could you do, I wonder? Don't force your self-righteousness on me. You can no longer be involved with that mansion, in fact."

"I don't…"

"Know anything", he started to say, but Subaru's mouth lost the counterargument.

The human named Natsuki Subaru, since waking up in the mansion, had been a suspicious person who stayed shut in his room and didn't even converse properly until this morning when Rem died.

At least, the Subaru in Beatrice's subjectivity was nothing more than such a human.

However, even if Subaru told her about the ten days he had experienced, what on earth would come of it?

Looking back on these ten days, could Subaru say he knew anything about them?

To Beatrice, who was now looking down on Subaru with a harsh gaze like this, did he gain anything from those two that would let him argue back?

"In the end, without knowing anything, in a place I didn't understand anything, was I just making a pathetic racket on my own selfishly…"

—You know nothing.

There was no mistake in Beatrice's words.

Subaru knew nothing. He didn't know. He wasted all his chances, and had drifted this far with just his body.

Lying on the ground spread-eagle, Subaru covered his face with his palms and looked at the darkness.

Inside the pitch-black vision, what was recalled were the few days of peace of mind spent at the mansion. Those days shattered into pieces, and Subaru's heart also shattered.

"So as not to touch the barrier, go through the forest tracing the boundary, in fact. If you get out to the highway beyond the mountain, it shouldn't be difficult to walk to a human village, I suppose."

Implicitly, Beatrice was announcing she intended to look after him only that far.

Her contract was, in the truest sense, nothing more than "Subaru's safety within the range of her reach." If there was no factor involving her own beliefs there, the fact that Subaru was a stone by the roadside to her did not change.

Beatrice began to walk around as if searching for a spot where he could descend the cliff safely, and he stood up to follow her back absentmindedly.

Leave the mansion, forget everything, and flee somewhere far away. He didn't know if he could survive, but it was a life he had picked up with so much trouble. Let's cherish it, cherish it.

"—Pretending I didn't hear any of that crying voice, huh."

At the words that slipped out of his mouth, Subaru grabbed his own chest and clenched his teeth.

He heard the voice filled with hatred. The roar of resentment chased after him. A scream covered in curses, saying she would kill him, was slammed into him.

But before that, wasn't that girl crying?

Something that should have shattered was screaming inside Subaru's heart.

"Hey, I'm thinking stupid things, aren't I…"

The back of his throat trembled. The sensation of his stomach being tightened. A shudder like his skin crawling transmitted to his whole body, and the breathing of the standing Subaru became sharp and rough.

He himself thinks that he is thinking stupid things.

It's a stupid story. It doesn't fit logic at all. It doesn't add up, and above all, if he considers the disparity between merits and demerits, it's a clear story.

"Even an idiot doesn't need to think to know. That's right, it's decided."

—Really, are you okay with that?

"It's decided that it's okay. Three cheers, it's because there is life. All's right with the world."

Shaking off the hesitation, he tries to step forward.

But his legs do not obey the brain's command. He stops on the spot, forcing a dialogue.

Someone's question. An inner, question of his own.

—Really, are you okay with that?

"Like I said, it's decided, that it's okay…"

—What part of that, makes it okay?

To his inner question, Subaru cannot find words. Meanwhile, the voice throws questions as if piling them up, demanding an answer.

—Are you okay with not being able to be involved with that place anymore?

—Are you okay with not being able to interact with those people anymore?

—Are you okay leaving the people you left behind in that place alone?

—Are you okay having shaken off the girl who was crying there?

—Can you give up on the future that should have been in that place?

"—Eat shit."

Against the risk, the possibility of getting a return is too low.

High-risk, high-return? That's bound to be the most impossible choice in Subaru's life.

In the first place, the moment he finds himself betting on something, it's safe to call it a loss, judging by Subaru's way of living.

Not getting deeply involved with anything, not choosing anything, just drifting.

Since he had lived that way, since it would have been fine if he could live that way, why not do so even after coming to this world?

"After all that trouble… right, after all that struggle, this is a life I worked so hard to pick up, isn't it?"

Pretending not to see the bonds he had gained, betraying the warmth that certainly should have been there, brushing away even the mercy of heaven that visited at the destination he fled to; if the conclusion he reaches at the end of that is this, isn't his current self too much of a clown?

"No, since it doesn't even make a funny story, a clown is far better."

A clown who behaves comically and can't make anyone, let alone himself, laugh. What value is there in such a thing?

Subaru doesn't know, and doesn't want to know.

"That's right. It's a life I picked up after all that trouble… So."

Taking a breath, he raised his face.

"—I decide how to use it."

The conflicting hearts matched, and Subaru's will was unified.

Suddenly, a cool breeze blowing through swayed his bangs, and Subaru narrowed his eyes at the ticklishness. In the distant sky, over there, the sunset was sinking while dyeing the world orange.

The sun of the fifth day he had wanted to see so much was vanishing toward the end.

While seeing it off, Subaru finally remembered.

For what purpose he had waited so eagerly for that sun.

"—Get back, I suppose."

Suddenly muttering in a low voice, Beatrice stepped around toward Subaru.

She restrained Subaru's movement with a raised hand, and carving a color of deep vigilance onto her lovely features, she ran her gaze around the surroundings.

"Bea…"

"Silence, in fact."

The question was cut off immediately, and Subaru also wandered his gaze as if searching for the cause of her vigilance.

He didn't know what Beatrice felt or what she was wary of.

Therefore, that Subaru found it first was simply a gift of coincidence.

"—Ram."

The pink-haired girl indicated by the mutter was finding Subaru and smiling beautifully.

Her figure was high in the sky, at the summit of a large tree stretching high. Ram, using a thick branch as a foothold and supporting her body with a hand on the trunk.

The moment her gaze and Subaru's gaze entangled and he unconsciously swallowed his breath, something shaved the earth and kicked up a cloud of dust around Subaru and the other.

"Gwoh!"

While being bathed in the raging earth and sand, Subaru reflexively covered his face. When he lowered his arms timidly after a few seconds, a rock face gouged in a semicircle was left before his eyes.

At the destructive power of that phenomenon, a chill ran down Subaru's spine. It wasn't a shudder from imagining himself receiving it.

—He shuddered because he remembered what he was like when he actually did.

"From that time…"

Last time, Subaru fleeing while being chased by Rem in the mountains. There was a blow that blew off his right leg and finally gouged his neck.

Invisible slashes, the identity of the opponent who released them. He had never let his thoughts run there, but,

"So it was the two of them…"

Thud; there was a sensation of a lump that had accumulated in his chest falling.

He knew it was foolish to think so, but what Subaru felt at that moment was the desolation of realizing that even she had abandoned him, along with a mysterious sense of relief.

Subaru tilted his head at himself for obtaining relief.

Thinking such out-of-place sentiments like, as expected, they are only themselves when they are two.

"Found, in fact. —That girl's Clairvoyance is troublesome, I suppose."

“Clairvoyance, huh…”

An ability with a grandiose name; it’s to Subaru’s liking.

As Beatrice’s grave tone indicated, her movements from there were rapid. Ram bent her body and descended from the trunk of the large tree as if sliding.

Landing with quite some momentum, but without killing that momentum, she rode it into a sprint, and with a single leap to the foothold of Subaru and the other midway up the cliff—arrival.

“Finally, Ram found you. Lady Beatrice still being with you is unexpected, though.”

As if facing a hated enemy, Ram said this with shining eyes.

Seeing those young features distorted by hatred, painfulness swept through Subaru’s heart.

Her clothes were the usual maid outfit, but that attire usually worn methodically was now distorted beyond recognition.

Holes were scattered on the skirt snagged here and there, the white brim she had worn on her head had vanished somewhere, and the pink hair that should have been arranged was disheveled and had lost its grace.

—Dressing, and hair care; the two of them used to do it for each other.

Subaru knew that too. He remembered them talking about it, sometime.

There are other things, many things he knows.

“Step back, in fact. By contract, Betty protects this human. Even if the opponent is you, I will show no mercy, I suppose.”

“Lady Beatrice, please move. Ram also cannot hold back when the opponent is Lady Beatrice.”

“An amusing joke, in fact. Did you use the words ‘hold back’ in regard to Betty, I wonder?”

“Lady Beatrice, surely you have forgotten that this is not inside the mansion. Far from the Forbidden Library, and in a forest—under these conditions, do you have confidence you can protect that gentleman from Ram?”

In front of the silent Subaru, the fierce check of the two girls continued.

From the reaction of Beatrice narrowing her eyes in frustration, it was conveyed that Ram’s hardline attitude was not a bluff.

Beatrice’s strength was limited, and it was likely a fact that Ram was advantageous under these conditions. Even so, Beatrice did not try to move from in front of Subaru.

Subaru, while standing behind her,

“Boi~ng.”

Grabbed two of her luxurious ringlets with both hands and stretched them with all his might.

He let go. The hair bounced largely with its volume. Bounce, bounce.

“Yup, quite pleasant.”

“Wh, wh, wh, wh…”

Opening her eyes wide, trembling her lips, Beatrice turned around trembling.

Subaru tilted his head at her with a “Hmm?”. Then,

“What are you doing, I suppose?! In this situation, do you want to die, I wonder?!”

“Don’t say stupid things, I don’t wanna die even a little bit. Dying is really, just once at the end of life is enough. Seriously, I think so.”

While saying that, he pulled Beatrice's shoulder and stepped in front of her as she stumbled.

In front, standing there was Ram staring at him with a dumbfounded face. She heightened her vigilance at Subaru stepping forward, and as if biting her lip,

"Well, you've got some nerve. Does that mean you've finally resigned yourself?"

"Resigned is a little different. If I had to say… I've made my resolve, I guess."

"—What."

Not understanding Subaru's intention, Ram frowned.

To her, Subaru put his hands together and bowed his head deeply.

"My bad. Because I chickened out, I made you incredibly sad."

"—! As Ram thought, about Rem, you know something."

"No, sorry but I really don't have a clue. Honestly, there's so much I don't understand. But."

Cutting his words, Subaru placed a pause of one breath,

"I decided I'll start trying to understand the things I don't understand."

"At this late hour?! What?!"

At Subaru's declaration of determination, Ram, who could only feel it as nonsense, barked. She stomped her foot down as if stamping in frustration,

"Rem has already, died! It's already, irrevocable! Even if you understand something now, what can you do?!"

"I can't say cool things like I can do something. The result of not being able to do anything is this mess, after all. I know best that my persuasiveness is zero."

It's not that he's becoming defiant. Even now, only regret pierces his chest.

He is disgusted by the degree of his own stupidity, and if he could die of shame, he might be dead.

Even so, acting unsightly, struggling to live unsightly, exposing a helpless shameful state, this is the place he arrived at.

And this conclusion is what he obtained.

"What do you know about Ram, or Rem?!"

"I don't understand anything, because I didn't try to know. I remain knowing nothing about the essential parts. But you know…"

For ten days, Subaru walked with them.

They don't know that, and even if they heard, they wouldn't understand.

But, Subaru certainly remembers those ten days.

Even if they forget, the things he saw with them, the things he laughed about with them, the things he spent with them; Subaru's soul remembers.

It's not that he knows nothing. Subaru knows them.

And, such them—

"You guys don't know either, do you."

"What…"

"That I! Love! —You guys!"

The older sister who is meddlesome despite being blunt.

The younger sister who is sarcastic despite seeming politely rude and courteous.

In the days spent with them, Subaru thought that time was precious.

Even if memories of being killed by their hands remained, both were memories hard to forget.

To the extent that he could think that if he could share that time once more, he wouldn’t mind choosing to do “so.”

At Subaru's scream, Ram just froze with her eyes wide open in astonishment.

Naturally. From her perspective, Subaru's statement is nothing but a delusion with unknown meaning. Nothing more than one of thousands of nonsenses uttered by a crazy madman.

Therefore, the judgment to cut him down was made in an instant.

Immediately after her thoughts stopped and her body's stiffness dissolved, Ram's hostility was put into action.

But, even an instant of stagnation is stagnation.

"—!!"

Subaru sprinting was just a split second faster than her immediate judgment being carried out.

Turning his back to Ram, passing by Beatrice's side, Subaru's body rode on full speed—heading toward the cliff.

"Wait—!"

Behind him, a voice like a girl's high-pitched scream echoed.

Which girl's voice that was, did not reach the running Subaru's consciousness.

His thoughts are a mess. He intended to have made his resolve.

But the beating of his heart sent pain throughout his body as if betraying his mind, and at the tips of his limbs, he felt weight as if lead were packed in.

Despite running with all his might, the world was endlessly slow motion, and he felt as if it were trying to urge a change of heart in Subaru by delaying it even by a second.

Ridiculous. Even now, he is hesitating like this.

If he thinks about it, he understands. He struggled that much, he should have been attached to life.

Even if he thought he wanted to die, in the end, he couldn't resist the survival instinct.

And yet now, he is doing this.

"I forgot to thank Beatrice, huh…"

Suddenly, voicing the concern that remained, with that, he left everything behind.

The cliff approaches. How many more steps; it's terrifying to even count. His heart feels like it will break. He feels like it's already broken. It's not normal. He's not sane. An impulse to burst out laughing wells up. Yet he can't laugh at all. There's no way he can laugh.

Even if he survived as is, he would just live as if he were dead.

If he gives up the future in that place, that is the same as being dead for Subaru.

If he is going to live a life he picked up as if he were dead, what's wrong with using it how he likes.

The cliff is right before his eyes. The height is sufficient. At the bottom of the cliff, a previous guest is waiting impatiently for Subaru. He kept it waiting quite a while… Sorry, but I can't go to the same place as you.

"Since a good person like me will end up going to heaven when I die."

His feet left the ground. Scratching the air. Touching nothing, reaching nothing.

His body wavered. His posture collapsed. Up or down, he cannot maintain balance.

Fast. The wind is strong. His eyes hurt. His head hurts. The ringing in his ears is distant. He feels like he left his heart behind. He can't hear the pounding; the bell of ill omen rings out.

If it ends by dying, that's that.

Living as if dead; then it changes nothing.

But if, if hypothetically, he can return.

—Because she screamed, "I will absolutely kill you."

In that case, I.

"—Will absolutely, save you."

Immediately after voicing his determination, he crashed headfirst into the hard ground.

The sound of shattering resonated grandly, and anymore, nothing, can be heard.

Even the voice of resentment could not catch up. Anymore, nothing —

Felt's Imprisonment Life

1

As soon as I woke up, the first thing I felt was a softness throughout my body that I had never felt.

"…Ngah?!"

Without understanding anything, I raised my body while scratching my head. My eyesight was still a little blurry, but I saw a pillow all soaked with drool. Well, I think it was a pillow, I had never seen one so soft, but it should be. Looking around, I soon realized that I was on top of a huge bed with my body covered by a smooth sheet.

"Where am I…?"

Being in a room and on a bed that had nothing to do with a brat who grew up in the slum, my first thought was whether this was not a dream. For me, mornings started on an old couch, a shabby blanket and an unpleasant smell in the air. It is true that I have the goal of one day leaving this life, but I did not want to see it come true in a dream.

"Is that what I really wish deep inside…? What a weird dream…"

"Looks like you woke up."

I was terrified when I heard someone else's voice, and when I turned around, he was standing by the door: he was the red-haired bastard. At the same time, I tried to get the knife from my waist, but it was this time that I realized that I was naked, with only the sheet covering my body.

"If you are concerned about your clothes, they are being washed and restored. The servants will already bring temporary clothes, wait just a little while longer."

"…Wait a minute."

“Yes?”

I wasn’t in the mood to listen to the bullshit of the tall blue-eyed redhead who was standing in the doorway. I didn’t like it that he obeyed me right away, but I let it go.

“Screw my clothes for now, because there are more urgent things to be dealt with. You know what I’m talking about, don’t you?”

“I have some guesses, but I lack conviction. If you can tell me…”

Seeing me staring at him ugly, that damn redhead, one of the most famous guys in the capital… “Sword Saint” Reinhard just shrugged, I got angry at his reaction and screamed:

“Where am I?! And what do you intend to bring me here after leaving me unconscious?”

Because of the scream and my agitation, the sheet almost fell off my body and I had to hold it at the last minute. Only that made the bastard chuckle and I was even more irritated.

“I apologize for my insolence. Please allow me to explain the reason that led me to do what I did to you, in the minimum details.”

That’s what he said after making a serious face and kneeling, while punching me with his blue eyes.

2

Sitting with my legs spread on the bed and my body covered with only a sheet, I popped my tongue in anger. I don’t like the idea of having to play his game, but it’s no use complaining without knowing anything.

“Okay, you can tell me why a noble knight abducted me and kept me naked in captivity.”

“Yes, I will be as honest as possible to end the misunderstanding.”

With a smile on his face, he reached into his shorts pocket. Unlike the time I saw him in the slum, he now wore only a basic T-shirt, shorts and jacket. In fact, I had never seen anyone look so well dressed just like that, what anger.

“Firstly, this residence, located in the upper part of the capital, belongs to the Astrea family. We don’t use it very often and I apologize for forcing you to stay in such a tight room.”

“Was that ironic? about ten of my tents could fit in this room.”

Of course he didn’t mean it and he didn’t want to be insensitive, but I frowned anyway. Then he apologized and took something out of his pocket.

“I think you remember this here,” he said, showing me the object.

“…Isn’t it the badge I had stolen?”

“Technically, no. The badge that you know is currently back in the hands of Miss Emilia. This one is another, but of the same type.”

Now that he spoke, the color of the jewel in the dragon’s mouth was really different from what I remembered. What I tried to steal was red, this one was green.

“And what about it? I don’t need it at this point anymore.”

“Please take it in your hands and you will understand.”

“…”

I wanted to respond with a “I’ll understand what?”, but I kept quiet. Not only because Reinhard’s stare sort of intimidated me, but it was because I had already taken the badge from his hand without thinking. At that time, I saw that the green stone started to shine.

“Done, what’s up? He’s just shining and I still don’t understand anything.”

“The “just be shining” is the most important part. As you can see, the stone did not emanate any light while it was in my hand. And it had not emanated from anyone, with the exception of very few, including you.”

“Chosen …? For this stone?”

I laughed because I thought it was ridiculous that he was doing all that just because of a shiny stone, but the bastard just approached his face without changing his expression and replied:

“No, it wasn’t for the stone. —The lady was chosen by the Dragon… Or perhaps, by fate.”

“Fate… Há! It was just what I lacked!”

And here I thought he was going to say something that was serious.

“Listen, here, Reinhard. “Fate” is the magic word that people who give up on anything love to use. Life should be easy for those who believe in “fate”, since the culprit of everything will always be him, right…? but look here, I don’t need it…”

“…”

“To hell with “fate”, I’m not going to be following impositions that I don’t even see. I don’t know why you’re all happy there, but don’t get me into this.”

I’m tired of seeing people who like to run away using “fate” as an excuse to give up. The lack of strength, intelligence, money and dreams is all his fault. If “fate” only serves to cover up weaknesses, I don’t need it. I am the only one responsible for my life.

“…”

All Reinhard did was look at me with a serious face. Until, a while later, he opened his mouth again:

“Miss Felt, not everyone can go against fate. Only a selected handful of people, possessing qualification, determination and means, are able to oppose him.”

“Shut up, I’m not here to be debating with you. So what if that little stone shines? End of conversation. I’m going to go back to my tent, give me back my clothes.”

Nor do I have the courage to hang around naked, and that outfit was a gift from Grandpa Rom, I couldn't leave behind.

"Unfortunately, I cannot fulfill your request. The one who makes the Dragon Ball shine has the duty to introduce herself to the castle. As a citizen of the kingdom, you will have to obey."

"…Ah, get screwed! Citizen of the kingdom?! And when did the kingdom do anything for me?!"

"As miserable as your condition was, if you live in the capital, you receive the protections of the kingdom directly and indirectly. I will not allow you to deny them."

"It's not like I live here by choice, is it? I just don't leave the city for lack of money, but now I got enough. So, let me out of here!"

"I can't, please give up."

My patience had reached the limit with this conversation that was not going to get anywhere. Reinhard continued with his usual calm face, while I started to get out of control. So I pulled my hair hard, took a deep breath and tried to calm myself down.

"A-Alright… I'm going to think calmly about what you're talking about. In return, I have a request to make."

"May I help. however, you will have to stay in this house until we have an official response from the castle. Any other request, I am willing to answer."

"I just want my clothes back. Until when will you make me stay naked, huh, noble knight?"

I spoke with a tone full of irony and saw Reinhard's eyes widen a little. Then, he apologized and turned his back on me.

"I'll call the maid, I believe your clothes are rea-…"

"Bye, sucker!!"

I took advantage of Reinhard's hesitation and threw the pillow on the back of his neck. And looking at him, I jumped out of bed at the same time and ran. When I looked out of the corner of my eye, he had grabbed the pillow with his hand, but I didn't intend to stop.

"Hah!"

I pulled the sheet off the bed and threw it in a way that it would open, hiding both him from my view and me from him. Now, yes, it was the perfect opportunity to get past him and escape through the door. But… that would be an amateur thing.

"Until never more!"

What I did was jump back and open the window by force, holding myself tightly on the curtain. From what I checked while talking sitting, the room was at most one floor high, which would be a safe height for me to cushion the fall with the curtain and run out after landing. And that was when I was sure of the escape…

"…What?"

…The curtain that was supposed to hold my weight was cut by the part connected to the window. The worst thing is that the cut was so straight that even with a sword it would not be so easy to leave it that way, but Reinhard only had an open hand, implying that it was with her that he had cut it.

"…You monsteeeeeeeeeeeer!!"

"It's the second time I've been called that in the past two days."

As he spoke, he passed by me after jumping out of the window. But as he gained speed "running" through the wall, he reached the floor before me and caught me with a pillow.

"…Excuse me."

In this, the sheet that covered my body wrapped itself around me as if it were a dress, and now I was there like a little princess in the bastard's arms. I'm angry.

"My fault in not having presented the house, but we have stairs that connect the floors.”

“Learned to speak ironies, huh? Get me on the floor! Until when will you be holding me naked?!”

I even tried to get rid of him, but Reinhard just waved his arms and balanced me anyway, making it clear that he had no intention of letting go.

“If you are able to escape this house, I will give up. However, I warn you that the servants and I will try to prevent it at all costs.”

“Oops, word of knight, huh? No going back later. If I can get away, you won’t bother me anymore!”

I pointed a finger at his face and made him promise. After he agreed with his head looking into my eyes, he turned his face towards the house and said:

“Apparently, the servants noticed the mess. Let’s go back to the room.”

“Tch! See if you carry me carefully, noble knight!”

3

We were greeted by an elderly couple when we arrived at the room. According to Reinhard, they were the ones who took care of the house, that is, I would only need to run away from three people. It would be easy, just arriving at night and I was going to get out of this house.

“…Hey, listen.”

“May I help? it looks great on you Miss.”

For a change, I was irritated, and Reinhard continued with his damn little smile. Beside him was a grandmother with a harmless smile holding a bunch of dresses in all colors. And one of them, a yellow color, was the one that covered my body.

“Wh-Where’s my clothes…?”

“It is properly stored. While in this house, please wear the clothes we have here. Stay calm, we bought enough for more than a month.”

“You bastard! I swear I will run away, can you hear me?! I swear!!”

I only know that with my scream it certainly echoed throughout the mansion.

Ram and the Night Study Group

“…Barusu, you have good handwriting.”

At Ram’s commentary, the sounds of pen on paper that had continued up till that point suddenly stopped.

The boy right next to her sitting facing his desk, Subaru, looked up at her with surprise on his face.

“What?”

“Well, I mean, what’s up with that all of a sudden? I mean, it’s not like I want you to get upset with me, but having you praise me out of the blue is more unsettling than you might think.”

“It’s nothing. I was merely stating what I thought. As you’re still in the middle of learning, now and then it’s good to look away from everything you have left to do, and note that the way you write the letters is adequate. I’m only saying that you have good handwriting.”

“The moment you add in an ‘only’ there, it kinda kills my gratitude for what you’re saying!”

As Ram praised him in her own way, Subaru ended up looking up at the ceiling, dissatisfied. But, he quickly chuckled and smiled as though he’d regained his humor.

“Well, setting aside that you said ‘only’, heh, is that so. I’m honestly happy to hear that you think I have good handwriting. It means it was worth all the frustration when I was going to calligraphy class back when I was little.”

“Also… no, it’s nothing.”

“What was that?! When you almost say something and then stop, it usually turns out to have been important, so don’t swallow your words, spit ‘em out! If it’s words of praise, I’ll happily take all you’ve got!”

After giving a thumbs-up, Subaru indicated himself with the thumb while looking full of himself. Ram nodded deeply at him.

“Indeed, I’ll go ahead and say it, then. Good results must be properly praised. Poor behavior must be scolded, and one must take care with giving food as well. …I read that long ago in a book, and I’m putting it into practice.”

“That sounds a lot like how I’d raise a dog, y’know?!”

“It’s similar, in the sense that you still need to learn how to behave, isn’t it?”

“Ah, I walked right into that!”

As Subaru arched his spine backwards, the chair’s backrest let out a loud creak.

With a simple bed and an unpretentious desk, this was the private room of a servant, allocated to Natsuki Subaru for his own use. The extreme scarcity of personal possessions was due to it being only a few days since he had begun his employment.

In this room with nothing in it, evening after evening was filled, not with amorous moments, but the “Acquisition of Letters”.

“Barusu, you’ve gotten it wrong again. That should be more than enough of repeating the same mistakes.”

“Ow.”

With the tip of a wand held in her hand, she lightly smacked the hand that Subaru was holding his feather pen in. Losing his grip on the pen, he rubbed the reddening back of his hand while glaring accusingly at Ram.

“Hey, isn’t that a little too Spartan?! I’m the type that grows more from being praised than scolded!”

“If you want to be praised, then you must produce results. If you do, Ram will praise you in spite of herself.”

“Don’t praise me like you hate doing it! Actually, never mind that… can’t you go a little easier on me with the studying? I still can’t really tell the letters apart and all.”

“A lack of effort.”

Ram cut off Subaru’s self-excusing words without mercy.

Subaru simply sighed and shrugged as though he’d been expecting a response like that.

“Well, you can say that, nee-sama. It’s true that until you actually experience it, you can’t understand how rough it is to encounter a foreign culture. I’m not just studying writing, I’m trying to learn my job too, after all.”

“…Very well, go on.”

“In other words! If you’re going to say that I haven’t studied hard enough, then I’m certain you must be more than familiar with, and exceptionally skilled at, this sort of thing, is what I’m saying.”

While Subaru rushed his words out at high speed, Ram drew her eyebrows together, as if to ask what he was trying to say. Seeing that, Subaru smiled to himself as though he had achieved his aim, and retrieved something from one of the desk drawers. It was…

“Tada! Behold the hiragana alphabet!”

“…and this is?”

What Subaru had retrieved was a large paper that entirely covered the desk. From one side of it to the other, the paper was entirely filled with densely-packed symbols she had never seen before.

“These are letters we use back where I’m from, called ‘hiragana’. Here you’d call them ‘I-glyphs’.”

“You mean this is the official language of the Kingdom of Barusu?”

“Will you please cut it out with things like country names that should only exist in my head?! Elaborating too much on the details and going so far as to produce a written language would be a pathetic black mark on my record!”

“Among the children’s tales we’re using for your instruction book, there’s a story called ‘The Lonely King’. It really is an exact match for your current state, Barusu. You’ll get a laugh out of it, so look forward to it.”

“And now you’ve needlessly spoiled it for me!”

Perhaps because he could imagine the grimness of the contents from the title alone, Subaru began making a pained face. Paying no mind to him as he did, Ram looked over the letters that Subaru had called hiragana.

There didn’t seem to be any pattern to them. Each one had its own particular shape, and to Ram’s eyes, it looked like nothing more than pictures of a snake or the like that a child had drawn as a prank.

“What of it? After showing Ram the alphabet of the Kingdom of Barusu, what did you want her to do?”

“Well, I mean, I was thinking that while I’m practicing writing like this, you’ve got a lot of spare time, too, right? So I thought you might like to try meeting a foreign culture, too, just to kill time. Along with that, you can learn how rough it is to learn letters, and maybe you’ll learn to be a bit more understanding towards me.”

As Subaru placed quite a bit of emphasis on his true intentions in the later half of that, Ram’s shoulders drooped in exasperation.

He could come up with such, hmm, elaborate vexations.

“For her own part, Ram can’t think of a reason that she should accept your proposal.”

“Well, how does proving the legitimacy of your assertions sound, then? If you can master that right away, then I’ll admit you were right when you said ‘a lack of effort’ earlier. From now on, I won’t contest your education policies, and I’ll work like a horse at learning just the way you want. It’s just, if it doesn’t go like that, then…”

“If it doesn’t go like that, then what?”

“Then try to be a little kinder to me! Along with Rem! It’s a promise! This matters!”

As Subaru stated his claims while making the chair creak, Ram’s expression was that of someone looking at a troublesome farm animal. Subaru faltered a bit under the glint in her eyes, but although he withdrew some of his attitude, he didn’t withdraw his claims.

Growing tired of glaring, well, not really, but giving up on it for now, Ram sighed.

“Spending time with Barusu drives up the count of sighs day by day.”

“I hear that a lot.”

“Yes, it’s the correct assessment. …Let me see that.”

As Subaru regained his attitude and stuck out his chest, Ram took the paper with the ‘hiragana’ written on it. Looking it over briefly, it seemed to correspond somewhat to the ‘i-glyphs’ of the common tongue.

“The order of the letters is similar to the ‘i-glyphs’?”

“More or less, yeah. But I’ll give you a once-over explanation. I want to fight as fairly as I can.”

It seemed that before she knew it, it was being treated as a contest, but if it was a contest, Ram didn’t feel like losing. In contests, no matter who it was against, Ram’s creed was total victory.

Ram lent her ear to Subaru as he explained the ‘hiragana’ while pointing them out, and more or less worked their placement and ordering into her head, and memorized their shape and stroke order while guessing at how they were formed based on their structure.

It didn't take long for Subaru to finish his explanation of what he called the fifty sounds. Then grinning at her, he noted "Now neither of us has a handicap".

"The allowed time is until today's study ends. There will be a little quiz at the end, so we'll see if you can answer it, Ram."

"Fine, let's do it. Having you work like a horse will make things easier for Ram as well."

"Hehehe, you look sure you'll win, but I'm gonna change that overconfident look into a teary one!"

While giving a response entirely suited to an insignificant person, Subaru dove headfirst into concentration. Looking at that from the corner of her eye, Ram sat down on the bed and embarked on her acquisition of 'hiragana'.

…Suddenly, she couldn't help but think that it had been a long time since she had spent time studying like this.

"Barusu, where did you study the alphabet?"

"Well that's out of the blue, here when I've gotten focused. If you're trying to throw me off, it's not…"

Glancing back at Ram, Subaru cut himself off mid-sentence.

Perhaps the reason he didn't continue his banter was that Ram's expression, illuminated by the room's dim light, was tinged with something that made him nostalgic for home.

Holding his silence briefly at the look on her face, he suddenly, roughly scratched at his head.

"When you ask 'Where?', it's kinda hard to say. My parents taught me at home… is the most accurate answer, I think. I honestly don't remember having studied at kindergarten."

"'Kindergarten'?"

"It's a school for little children, just really little children. It's basically a place to play, eat, and sleep, but, well, maybe it's a place where the importance of group activities is taught while they're kids?"

The height that Subaru was showing with his hand was roughly the same as the desk, or less. It seems it would be a school where children around the age of four or five would attend; Ram had gone to something similar back in her home village.

"A school, I see. Were you able to attend, Barusu?"

"Kinda, I guess. I attended properly during mandatory education… when I was free to choose for myself, I sort of stopped going. And then, as I was sliding along like that, I ended up here."

Subaru's eyes were downcast, and his manner suggested this was a difficult topic for him to speak of. Given how he looked, Ram judged that it would be cruel to press the matter further.

Even with what had just been said, it led her to guess that Subaru's station in life had been fairly high, at the least.

It was only conjecture, but it seemed likely that Subaru's place of birth had been in the upper class of a small kingdom, separate from the four great kingdoms.

The world was divided into four parts by the four great kingdoms, however it was also dotted with small kingdoms that were not attached to the great kingdoms, and Ram had heard that many of them cultivated their own unique cultures.

Subaru's unusual appearance, and his explanations of a culture Ram had never heard of, were a little too solid to dismiss as a made-up tale. He was likely a runaway or something similar.

The 'hiragana' she held in her hand spurred on this reasoning as well.

"What about you, Ram, how long have you been working at Roswaal's place?"

"Ram's first meeting with Roswaal-sama was when she and Rem were around eight so… that would be nine years ago, then. By now, she's been serving nearly ten years."

"Heh, nine years… wait, nine years since you were eight, are you seventeen? The same age as me?"

"And what's the meaning of you being surprised by that, I wonder?"

"You look young, in an older-sister sort of way. But seriously. If you're seventeen, then Rem is too. That's unexpected…I thought maybe you were younger than me."

"Referring to someone younger than yourself like an older sister, you should keep your lusts in check, Barusu. And Ram was mistaken as well. From your lack of composure, Barusu, she wondered if you weren't more of a child."

This wasn't teasing, rather it was her actual thoughts.

Many things about him, including his facial features if you set aside the evil look of his eyes, feel like a little child. In particular, the frivolity of his words and actions didn't make one think of him as a seventeen year old, an age when one should have gained an appropriate amount of maturity.

Though if one were speaking of a mismatch between age and appearance, that would apply to many here at the mansion.

"But, eight years old? That's pretty young to be depending on someone outside your family. You must have gotten consent from your parents… or is it just normal over here to start an apprenticeship around that age?"

"It's not unusual to leave one's parents while still a child. Although in Ram and Rem's case, there was a different, special reason for it."

"'Special' meaning…?"

"It's simple. If she wasn't together with Rem, Ram hated it and threw tantrums."

"Ah, 'zat so."

They had only been around each other a short time, but Subaru nodded in understanding of the relationship between Ram and Rem.

Ram was well aware that her own ability with chores was placing a burden on Rem. And also that Rem made up for what her sister lacked, and just barely kept the mansion running day-to-day.

Hence, she had no intention of nit-picking at Subaru's understanding to correct it.

Aside from Roswaal, another co-worker who was now away from the mansion, and a few other close acquaintances, she didn't feel the need for anyone else to understand the relationship between herself and Rem.

That would be the case for as long as it remained unclear how Subaru would end up fitting in at the mansion.

"…The time for idle chatter is nearly past."

Above the room's doorway, the magic time crystal's color was changing to a deep yellow, showing that the time had reached the deepest part of the night. It was nearly time to bring the evening's studies to a close.

"Sure is. Well, thanks for all your help tonight. Let's do this again tomorrow…"

"You may be on the verge of regretting assuming that tomorrow will come, Barusu."

"My bad! Just joking around! Okay, it's time for the showdown. Here's the question; try reading it, and writing out your answer in 'hiragana'!"

As he said that, Subaru removed one sheet from the stack of paper he had for practicing on, with the word 'Question' written in it with i-glyphs, followed by a sentence in hiragana, and presented it to her. In exchange, he retrieved the hiragana chart she held.

"Now then, I've taken back the hiragana chart. You're as helpless as a babe in the woods. Hehehehe, go ahead and answer if you can!

And get it wrong, and from tomorrow on, both of you sisters can be kinder when you teach me i-glyphs!”

Working himself up with his crass reasoning, Subaru laughed mockingly as he imagined Ram looking distressed.

On the other hand, not deigning to pay any attention to Subaru’s small-time villian act, Ram looked over the ‘hiragana’ question. She observed the conglomeration of wriggling letters for a while, and then…

“Done.”

Taking a feather pen in hand, Ram smoothly wrote out her answer in the area labelled ‘Response’ in i-glyphs. When she finished writing, she took the answer sheet and smacked it into Subaru’s face.

“…”

“The question was ‘The names of the sisters that live in the mansion’, and the answer is ‘Ram and Rem’.”

“No way, you…?! You got it perfect?! Seriously, that quickly?!”

Checking Ram’s answer against the question, Subaru collapsed dumbfounded on the spot. His reaction confirmed to Ram that her guess had worked correctly.

Based on Subaru’s personality, she’d imagined that he would come up with a question about the mansion and matters related to it. After that, choosing Emilia, Beatrice, and the twins themselves as candidates, remembering a limited number of letters was simple.

“In other words, what matters is one’s grasp of the essentials. Barusu, you remember what you promised, yes?”

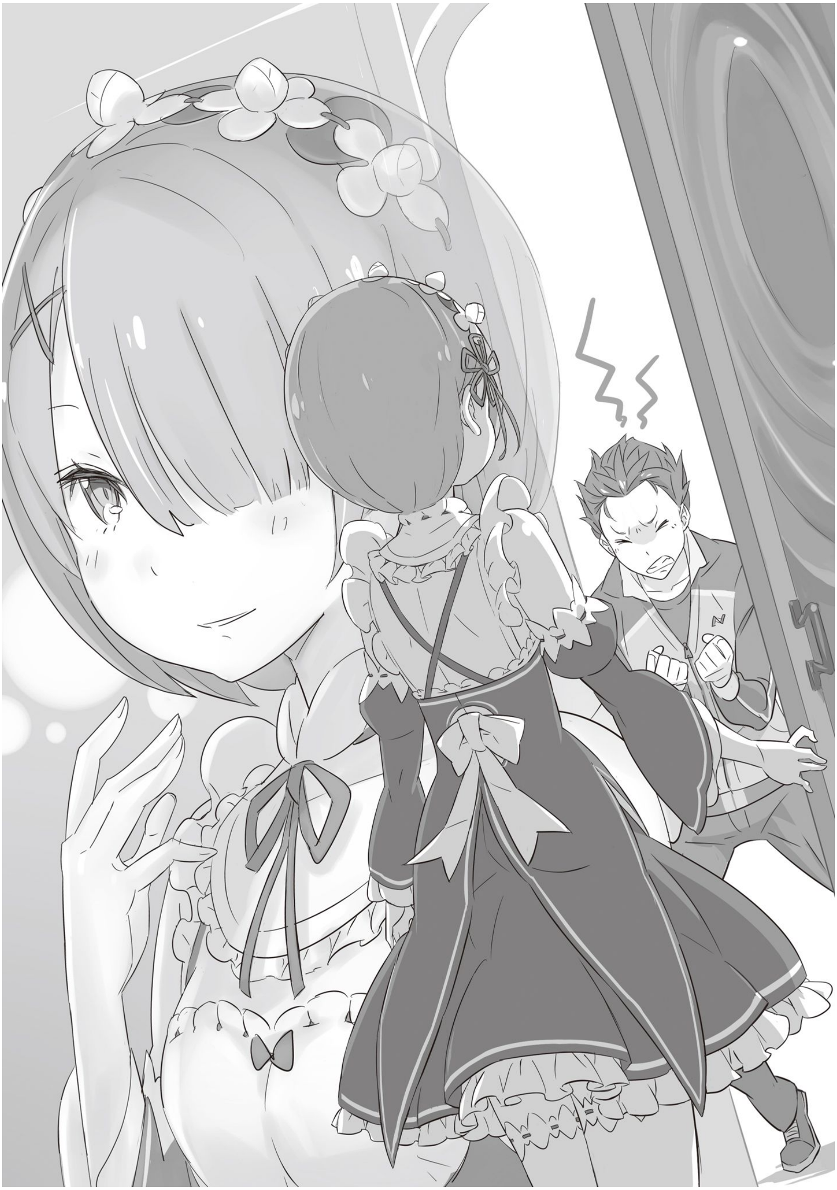
“W…wait. There must be some kind of trick to it. I’m too dumb to figure it out, but you must have done something sneaky… I think…!”

As Subaru stood there being a poor loser, Ram flicked him in the forehead with her finger, then headed for the doorway as she yawned. Then, turning back as she opened the door, she looked back at him rubbing his reddening forehead.

“Tomorrow should be fun. Have pleasant dreams, Barusu. Ram certainly will.”

“You demon…”

Subaru’s frustrated face disappeared behind the closing door. The timing of his last embittered remark was so good, Ram nearly laughed in spite of herself.



“With that, Barusu should learn to take things a little more seriously.”

Ram was very pleased with herself after having not only mercilessly toppled Subaru, but also provoked him to greater effort from tomorrow on.

Retreating away from the room before the whining became audible, she started looking forward to the look on Subaru’s face tomorrow.

“But still…”

A sudden thought occurred to her. It was about the ‘hiragana’ that Subaru had written.

“…It feels like I’ve seen it somewhere before.”

That whisper fell into the hallway, and faded away without reaching anyone; even from Ram’s own memory, it passed away as something largely unimportant.

Rem’s Latte Art

1

It was three days after a new servant had entered the Roswaal manor.

“…What are you doing, Subaru-kun?”

Holding open the door leading back to the dining hall from the kitchen, Rem tilted her head and asked that.

The current time was after lunch. Preparation of food was Rem’s job, but cleaning up afterwards was included in that as well. Having finished that, she’d just now come to check on how the newly-hired servant was handling cleaning up the dining hall.

Greeting Rem as she returned to the dining hall was a black-haired boy who was smiling casually at her.

He had black hair, a color that was rarely seen in the kingdom, and his features had a peculiar way of making him feel younger than the age he’d given. The eye color and the color of his skin were rare as well, and his point of origin was still unclear.

Regardless, there was no mistaking the way that his over-snug butler’s uniform didn’t suit him at all; this was the new servant that the Roswaal manor had welcomed, Natsuki Subaru.

For a moment, Rem was silent as her gaze judged him—Subaru didn’t show the least sign of being aware of it, and stood looking pleased with himself, without a care showing on his face. It looked like nothing more than the innocent face of a mischievous boy, and this only strengthened Rem’s suspicion about his age.

Could a boy with this sort of childlike face truly be the same seventeen years of age as herself and her sister?

“Well, that’s fine. So why are you in such a good mood? Because you piled up the plates nicely, or spread the tablecloth nicely?”

“No way?! Do you think of me as the kind of guy who would make a ‘Yeah, I did it!’ face from a little job like that?!”

“When I think back to how you worked on your first day, I don’t think such an opinion is that far off the mark.”

“Gaah, I can’t really deny that… but, just you wait. I’m a man with incredible potential for growth…The rebellious skyrocket that could one day threaten even your position is climbing now…!”

“What’s this now? What will happen one day? Please speak clearly.”

Leaving behind Subaru as he ground his teeth in frustration, Rem turned her eyes towards the dining hall’s table where Subaru had been playing up until now. It was a fairly wide table, and could be used for dining and discussions for ten people or more. Naturally, the recent lunch was taken here, so cleaning it up had been Subaru’s responsibility, but…

“…This is a cup you forgot to put away, is it not?”

Looking at the cup placed on the table, Rem raised an eyebrow a little. If there was nothing unusual about it, she might have taken it as something that hadn’t been cleaned up, or Subaru’s cup for his break. However, it was clearly different.

As Rem pointed it out, Subaru’s face broke out in a wide ‘You noticed?’ grin.

“Yeah, actually I’ve wanted to try that out ever since I noticed there’s something like coffee around here as well. It was really rough trying to get the milk close to what I remember, but sometimes ya just gotta try it.”

Subaru extended both his hands towards Rem, while dancing festively. Held in one hand was a cup poured full of a drink made from beans, originating from the Vollachian Empire, called coff. And, in the other hand was a container of milk.

And, as for what Subaru was doing with those two things…

“You’ve used the milk to draw a picture in the coff, then?”

In the black fluid in the cup, a white pattern had been used to draw a little picture of a cat.

Rem couldn’t help but let out a sigh of exasperation mixed with wonder at his playfulness.

2

“So you keep the coffee…er, the coff hot, and then the trick is to make the design a little at a time while keeping the milk at the bottom. There’s different ways to do it, but first, the basics are…”

Seemingly to have mistaken Rem’s first sigh for admiration, Subaru cheerfully began to explain, and poured another cup of piping hot coff so she could see.

The aroma of the steaming coff spread through the room, and Rem sniffed quietly. Struggling not to let her interest show on her face, for the moment she simply kept her attention on Subaru’s hands.

When the cup had been poured about half-full of coff, Subaru next switched to the container of milk and began to fill the cup the rest of the way. The foamy milk was something new to Rem, and she couldn’t help but open her eyes wide.

“What have you done to this milk?”

“This? This here is the end product of a lot of difficult work. Honestly, steaming it would be ideal, but I just don’t have that kind of equipment, so I used the magic crystals in the bathing room instead. There was a lot of trial and error involved, I’ll tell ya. I couldn’t get it quite right.”

The foamed milk wouldn’t turn out like that simply by heating it.

She was terribly interested in what sort of struggle Subaru, who she didn’t think could use magic, had gone through with the magic crystals. However, Rem quickly remembered her own duties, and that she was in charge, and put away her curiosity.

She should make him put away the cup and coff right away; even on break, one should be cautious of playing around. She should, and yet…

“To make sure the milk doesn’t spread too far, you keep it on the inside like this. Then, a layer of milk builds up a little at a time, so when you keep the unruly bit of it under control and redo it…”

“ah…”

“There you go, the first step of the first step! The completion of a heart design!”

Lifting up the container of milk, Subaru spun about and unveiled the finished product.

Making way for him, Rem blinked at yet another surprise as she viewed the result.

The white design drawn in the cup was a fanciful thing built up from countless layers of milk. Without thinking, she let a sigh of admiration escape her lips.

“Amazing…”

“Oh, oh oh? What’s that, what’s that, please speak up. Feel free to shower me with praise! Isn’t it amazing?!”

“It’s a skill you could never gain without being an amazingly idle person.”

“Don’t you think you should apologize to all the latte artists throughout the world?!”

As Subaru started getting full of himself, she abruptly gave him a back-handed compliment.

While it was simply out of the question to openly recognize his accomplishment, there was no escaping the fact that it was not only a rare ability, but a craft that required exceptional skill. Even this pattern that he had called the first step made that clear. The picture of a kitten that Subaru had first drawn in that cup—the great spirit that accompanied Emilia, how incredibly difficult would that be?

“This is called ‘latte art’?”

“Yep yep. Latte is sort of the name of this drink, and you make art with it. Back where I’m from, it’s an essential skill for a first-class waiter.”

“Latte art and sewing as well; you’re quite good with your hands at little skills, Subaru-kun.”

“When you call them little skills, it really makes them sound like something that isn’t an essential part of life! Besides that, I can do magic tricks and play the guitar and cat’s cradle and ball-and-cup toys and yo-yo and lots of things, you know!”

Presented with a list of skills she’d never heard of, Rem doubted their existence. However, there was the precedent of the latte art. Perhaps all of them were from a world of little skills that Rem knew nothing of.

“And thinking about it now that I’ve said all that, what am I trying to do with nothing but skills that have no practical use?”

“Boasting all that and then becoming depressed about it… You must have lived a life free of boredom, Subaru-kun.”

“That’s a surprising evaluation of me when my goal in life was to live in seclusion and play with cats on the porch.”

Subaru shivered. Seeing him looking like that, Rem felt even more certain.

Subaru was most likely a person who grew up in a very fortunate environment.

It was true of his work as a servant as well, but she felt that he mostly had no experience engaging in hard work before now. That’s why his fingers were pretty, and in some areas he was lacking knowledge and common sense needed for life. In exchange for that, being able to enjoy something like latte art was a sign of the frivolity of the upper class born from a life of ease.

That fact itself was neither a good thing nor a bad thing. Being unable to choose one's birth was the same for everyone, regardless of whether one was poor or rich. Subaru was making an effort to learn his job. Regardless of the results.

So, even if one were to overlook that he was playing like this during his break time…

"Well, there's a few things I'd like to say about your merciless poison tongue, Rem, but… fine, here."

"…huh?"

Taking the offered container of milk, Rem let out a surprised voice without meaning to. She looked back and forth from the milk in her hand and Subaru's face. Subaru scratched his head as she looked at him.

"Whadaya mean, 'huh?'. Looking all anxious to try it like that, don't give me that."

"Saying that she looks anxious to try; Rem wouldn't…"

"When your face looked like you were dying to try it like that? You don't need to be embarrassed about it. You're a cute girl too, Rem, so what's wrong with playing a little now and then?"

Turning his attention away from Rem as she backpedaled, Subaru poured another cup of coff. Then, placing the cup before her, he offered it with a look that said 'Go ahead'.

"Um, for you to have implied that Rem really wanted to try that. Well, it would be a lie if I said that I didn't want to even a little tiny bit, not in the least, just a little, perhaps slightly…"

"I get it, I get it. I'm forcing you to try it even though you don't want to. So, just once, please do."

"…Well, when you put it like that, it can't be helped. Honestly, Subaru-kun, you're so troublesome."

Pestered until she was left with no choice, Rem hid the glee she couldn't help but feel and turned towards the cup.

Recalling Subaru's process from earlier, the order of things seemed to be that one first poured milk into the slightly tilted cup, building a layer on the interior and drawing a pattern. Envisioning Subaru's movements that she'd been watching wide-eyed, she overlayed her own movement and imitated them…using the white pattern on the black liquid, she drew from her heart.

Rem looked back towards Subaru. And, he looked to her and nodded forcefully.

"Well, that's how it turns out on a novice's first try. Don't worry about it!"

"Rather than playing endlessly, Subaru-kun, please get back to work right away."

While holding the messy art in front of her, Rem stated that in the coldest voice she had used yet.

3

"…Rem, what are you doing?"

Surprised while she was concentrating by a voice from behind her, Rem's little shoulders jumped.

Looking behind her to the dining hall's entrance, standing in the entrance was a girl with sharp, pale red eyes—her older sister Ram.

Rem's eyes briefly lit up at the sight of her beloved sister, but she quickly remembered what she was doing, and her expression stiffened. Suddenly, she tried to hide what was on the table, but…

"…Isn't this what Barusu was playing at?"

It was impossible for her to deceive the sister who had always been better than her at everything, and Ram immediately saw through

Rem's clumsy attempt to cover it up. As Rem shrank, Ram looked over the countless cups Rem had been working on, and the failed latte art, and narrowed her eyes.

…It would soon be nearly an hour since Rem had chased Subaru out of the dining hall, saying that she would clean up.

The state Rem now found herself in was that, until Ram arrived (after becoming frustrated with the work when Rem did not return), she had forgotten the time and been trying her best at latte art.

Glancing quickly, she could see that the magic crystal that showed the time had changed color, and she finally realized that break time had long since passed. It was shameful. On top of that, her sister had found out.

"It's rare for you to lose track of time playing at this sort of thing, Rem."

"I…I'm sorry, nee-sama. I'll clean it up right away. I'll catch up right away on my work, too. Oh, I should never have been doing something like this…"

"Don't be silly, Rem. I'm not upset about it. I just thought it was unusual."

As Rem shrank back, Ram's expression softened in a way that only someone close to her would recognize.

Then she poured coff into an empty cup, took hold of the milk placed nearby, and began to gently pour it into the cup.

"Doing her work with all of her might is one of Rem's good points, but occasionally it's good to do something with all your might even if you can't expect any results from it. If there's no leeway in your heart, nothing will ever go right for you."

"…Are those Roswaal-sama's words?"

"Yes, as expected of Roswaal-sama. They're wonderful words. I feel the same way, too."

Thinking of her master with an enchanted look on her face, Ram's eyes were gentle as she stared into the cup. Having finished pouring milk into it, inside the cup in her hands was…

"This is… a pattern I've never seen before. A pattern… no, a letter…?"

"It seems that this is how you write 'older sister' in the letters of Barusu's homeland. He insisted I look at it while he was studying in the evening, so I learned it no matter how little I wanted to."

Although she'd never seen the letter before, there was no mistaking that it had been drawn by a combination of reliable skills. Rem marvelled at her sister's talent, and gazed shyly at her.

"Were you practicing latte art as well, nee-sama?"

"Not really. It's called latte art, is it? I simply imitated what Barusu was doing earlier."

As Ram spoke about it as though it were nothing, Rem couldn't help but catch her breath. Cutting off the momentary hesitation before her sister would think it strange, Rem smiled softly.

"Impressive as always, nee-sama. Subaru-kun will be jealous, too, no doubt."

"It might be entertaining to crush Barusu's areas of expertise one by one like that. Regardless, that's enough of this for now. I'll clean this up and catch up with you."

Saying that, Ram took the containers of coff and milk and headed off to the kitchen to clean up. Watching her go, Rem compared her own botched creations lined up on the table with the 'older sister' that Ram completed on her first try, without any practice, and sighed softly.

"…You truly are impressive, nee-sama."

Herself, unable to create a single thing she was satisfied with, and her sister, who was able to complete it so easily and skillfully.

It was something she should have already understood, but when she had a chance to compare them like this, she was once again made painfully aware of how far she had to go. To Rem, it was a harsh prompting towards self-reflection and self-discipline.

“Well, all of this needs to be cleaned up, then.”

Speaking to no one in particular, Rem collected all of the used cups onto the tray.

And, at the end, she gathered up Ram’s ‘older sister’ artwork, avoiding damaging the pattern in the milk, and moistening her tongue with the slightly cooled coff,

“Mm…bitter.”

“First, I’ll have to teach Subaru-kun how to grind the beans.”

Deciding to teach him about her own area of expertise, she followed Ram’s path towards the kitchen.

Sigh...

Emilia's Starry Sky Classroom

1

Emilia, who was walking down the corridor, stopped her steps when she was called from behind.

"Are you leaving at this hour, miss?"

The long silver hair swayed as the girl turned. Then, her amethyst eyes reflected the silhouette of the person who had asked the question.

"I'm just going to go to the garden. I still haven't been able to talk to the spirits today because of the confusion this morning… And I can't break the pact," she replied with a gentle smile.

Hearing this, the other person, in this case Rem, closed her eyes slightly.

"Confusion… Do you say Subaru?"

"W-Well …Yes, but…"

Rem's tone of voice was a little harsh, which made Emilia smile uncomfortably. Seeing this reaction, the maid added:

"Any problem you have, please don't be shy to talk to us. Especially considering that Subaru became an employee of the mansion."

"It's not that I feel shy… It's true that it all started because of Subaru, but I have a part of the blame for being so entertained with his conversation," Emilia admitted with a small sigh.

As a spirit user, despite her main companion being the Pack, she had the help of several lower spirits. Therefore, keeping the promise made to them was an obligation that she could not neglect.

"I can't be privileging only Pack, otherwise the others will be upset. So I usually take the time to talk to them every morning, so they can help me when I need it most.”

“I didn’t know about these details of the technique of manipulating spirits. I know very little about it.”

“It is normal, not least because there are very few spirit users. Did you learn to use magic with Roswaal?”

“Yes. I learned the basics from my sister when we were children, and since we came here, I have been instructed by Master Roswaal.”

The Marquis de Mathers, despite all his eccentricity in terms of language, dress and other personality details, was also the magician in direct service to the royal family, known and recognized as the greatest magician in the kingdom. Thanks to that, both Rem and Ram, both under his instruction, had a high caliber in magic technique in their respective elements of preference, water and wind.

“I hope I don’t get involved too much in situations that you both need to use magic…” Commented Emilia.

“I understand your concern, but it will be inevitable. What happened in the capital was only the beginning, I am sure that similar incidents will be repeated throughout your candidacy.”

Instead of consoling, Rem chose to alert her master of the risks. And her strict stance was not only with others, but mainly with herself, which Emilia considered a great quality.

“I know. I can’t be naive forever, let alone look down after receiving so much help from Roswaal and the two of you.”

“My sister and I just obeyed the master’s orders. Of course, it will be a great satisfaction to be able to help you, Miss.”

Then, seeing the maid bow, Emilia also threatened to do the same, but gave up when she remembered the last time she was scolded for it. Even simple gestures like that, now, carried a greater meaning for the candidate to the throne and she needed to get used to it.

“So, I’m going to go to the garden. I promise not to stay long.”

“Yes ma’am. Ah, one last thing.”

Rem, before Emilia started walking again, asked: “What should I do if Subaru asks me where to find you?”

The maid’s concern was natural, since they had just talked about the boy having hindered Emilia in conversation with the spirits. Despite this, the silver-haired girl shook her head sideways and said:

“Don’t worry, you can tell him I’m in the garden.”

“Are you sure?”

“Yes. I don’t want to treat Subaru as a hindrance, and I just need to take my obligations more seriously. In addition… I’m a little curious to know the continuation of the conversation I had with him in the morning.”

“Miss Emilia, or you take obligations seriously, or listen to Subaru stories.”

“I-I know! But I will really do everything right.”

“By the way, if I may ask the question, what was the conversation you were having with Subaru about?”

“Hum… Do you usually look at the night sky Rem?”

“The night sky…? I don’t think much… At most, I am guided by the stars when I have to go out at night.”

“I know, and I was like that too. But that is not it.”

So, Emilia went to the hall window and looked up at the sky. The world had already lost the sunlight, and what lit the landscape in its place was the moonlight and the scattered brightness of countless stars.

“…”

Rem also did the same and went to the window, to which Emilia added: “When you have an opportunity, ask Subaru about the stars. I’m sure that, like me, you will also have fun looking at the sky at night.”

2

“Beatrice, can I get Puck back…?”

“…You can’t, right? But do what…”

The girl Emilia talked to did not hide her dissatisfaction as she hugged the gray kitten tightly in her arms.

“What is it, Lia? Are you hypnotized by my cuteness?”

“Pack, Just yourself. In fact, I kept thinking that Beatrice always makes a face at me.”

“Natural, isn’t it? For Betty, you are a bad girl that keeps the brother from me. Ideally, I would never see your face or that idiot’s face again, okay?”

If it was anyone else, those words would have hurt Emilia, but she knew Beatrice didn’t really have bad feelings about her, so she just laughed.

“I have a pact with Lia, and you know the importance of that, Beatrice. But I promise I’ll play with you again.”

“Do you really promise? Do you promise to come back to Betty as soon as you can, brother?”

After the dramatic farewell, the kitten jumped on Emilia’s shoulder and settled in his usual place, between the silver strands of hair, and said:

“For a change, I didn’t see time go by in the library. It’s already night, isn’t it? Because of your clothes, I imagine you’re going to talk to the spirits in the garden, am I right?”

“Right. I didn’t have time to talk to them in the morning and I can also see the stars that Subaru spoke… Hey, I know! Beatrice, are you busy now?"

"If Betty is busy…?"

Once again, the girl frowned at the question. Everyone at the mansion knew that the librarian never acted sympathetic to anyone, but Emilia was under the impression that Beatrice was especially harsh with her and Subaru. Even so, she suggested:

"If you have no appointment now, how about going for a walk with me? I want to be more friends with you, Beatrice. And today I have a very interesting subject to tell you!"

"Too bad it was Subaru who told you first…"

"Do not disturb, pack! And then? what do you say?"

She stared into the girl's eyes, but without giving too much time, Beatrice turned her face and replied:

"A pity, but I'm very busy right now, understand? Not to mention that I have no interest in knowing about the stars."

"Not even if it's quick? Rem was so interested…"

"Don't think you'll be able to convince Betty with stories about that idiot, okay? I bet he stays giving random names to stars and is having fun like a fool."

"Wow, incredible. How did you know?"

Emilia was truly surprised by Beatrice's precise comment. According to Subaru, the dispositions of the stars were different in his homeland, and apparently he was suffering from knowing which was which.

"Subaru seemed to understand a lot about astronomy, only he said that the stars are not the same here, and there where he grew up. He spoke of Vega, Altair… B-Betelgeuse?"

"…Geuse…"

"Hi?"

"…It's nothing. Now go quickly, do you hear?"

After popped the tongue, the librarian expelled visitors from her library. Before the Door Crossing was activated, however, she just said goodbye to Pack by waving her hand, and then immediately disappeared.

"I really wanted to be friends with Beatrice…"

"Believe it or not, but in the beginning, she and I fought every day. But look how intimate we are today. All thanks to the long time we spent together… Just like you, Lia."

In other words, Pack was telling Emilia not to be in a hurry, which seemed to convince her. Then she headed back towards the garden and, when she left, she was greeted by a pleasant night breeze.

"…I think it's good here…"

Saying, the girl sat on the grass in one corner of the garden. Then she looked unconsciously at the sky and laughed. As Rem told herself, she never paid much attention to the night sky. Of course, there were times when she looked up and was amazed by the beauty of the starry sky, but it was never something that would make her repeat every night.

"Subaru is so excited when he talks about the stars…"

At first, the boy was confused by the different disposition of the constellations, but that soon changed to curiosity. For Emilia, Subaru's eyes that saw the starry sky shone more than any bright spot above.

"You are very happy today, Lia," Commented Puck.

"You know, I really am. The sky remains the same as always, but just because I changed the way I saw it a little bit, it became much more beautiful."

He also said that the name "Subaru" was taken from a group of stars, the “Pleiades” in the language of his homeland. And that is why he was always interested in astronomy and knew so many mythologies about it.

“That band full of stars is the Milky Way, if I’m not mistaken. In the legend, two lovers cross it once a year to meet, on a day called Tanabata.”

“Why do I get the impression that this story is more cruel than beautiful?” Wondered the kitten.

“How was the story? The lovers Hikoboshi and Orihime were separated as a form of punishment, but Hikoboshi is allowed by the star king to cross the Milky Way once a year and go to find his beloved.”

“Well, I guess it’s no use talking about it now…”

Emilia’s eyes sparkled as she told the supposedly romantic story, but Pack was still not convinced. Despite him, the girl was very fond of the myths about the stars, and looked forward to hearing stories from Subaru.

In any case, she could not lose focus on the initial objective:

“So, Puck, I’m going to call the guys.”

With that, the kitten moved away from her a little. The reason for this was so that the lower spirits would not be intimidated by the Pack, which was a great spirit.

“I’m sorry for not being able to talk to you this morning. But now we have all the time in the world.”

Following her whisper, warm flashes began to emerge around her. Each was an inferior spirit who had answered the girl’s call, and the clarity of the lights showed that they were happy, making Emilia smile.

And so, the conversation between them began, serenely, only in their world. Until…

“H-Hey! Wh-Wh-What a coincidence we meet here, huh?”

…A boy in a butler’s uniform came up raising a hand. Another astronomy class was about to begin, under the tutelage of the blinding moon.

Natsuki Subaru’s Splendid Steward Life

1

“…Barusu, wake up. It’s morning”

He was awoken by a frozen voice, and the sound of curtains being opened, letting in a breeze.

Suddenly pulled down from the world of dreams to the real world, Natsuki Subaru growled and woke up. At times like this, he hated being so good at waking up.

“You’re not much help, but at least it doesn’t take much to wake you up.”

The voice that woke him threw that poison dart at Subaru as he was sitting up in the bed.

Standing in front of Subaru as he rubbed sleep from his eyes was a beautiful girl in a maid outfit.

Her red hair was short, and her light red eyes were clear. The girl with a cold expression fixed on her pretty face was named Ram. At the mansion where Subaru was helping out, she was one of only two maids.

“Come now, stop dozing off and get changed. If you keep causing me trouble, I’ll report it to Master Roswaal and your position will be taken away.”

“Can’t we at least say ‘Good Morning’ or something…? oof”

Stifling a yawn at her strict words, Subaru somehow managed to crawl out of bed. Having placed a change of clothing beside him on the bed, Ram turned to leave.

“Get changed, and meet up with us promptly. Don’t even think about something as foolish as going back to sleep.”

"What on earth are you saying to a hard-working man like me? I'll be right there, ma'am."

"…Be quick."

Ram said no more, and Subaru watched as she quickly left the room.

Frowning at Ram's cold attitude, Subaru took off the jersey he slept in, and, stripped down to his underwear, picked up the change of clothing.

Today was the fourth day since he was hired to work here, at the Roswaal Mansion. His body wasn't yet familiar with the job, or even with the concept of hard work. The fact that he was still sleepy was good proof of that.

Pulling on the sleeves, Subaru adjusted the oddly large number of ornaments on his clothing. Placing the last bit of the uniform firmly on his head, Subaru unsteadily made his way down the early-morning hallway. The meeting spot was the mansion's main entrance hall. Subaru made his way there while hunching his back in the chilly morning air.

"There you are, Baru…"

Ram greeted Subaru as he came out of the hallway and arrived at the main entrance hall. But, her expression stiffened as she looked at him, and her greeting halted in the middle. At her reaction, Subaru inclined his head slightly.

He'd changed into his uniform while sleepy, perhaps something was off with it?

"Oh, Subaru? Good morning. Let's work hard today…"

The girl who had been facing Ram, with her back to Subaru, turned around. It was Ram's twin, Rem. Indistinguishable from her sister aside from her blue hair and eye color, she too looked at Subaru and froze.

While her attitude was softer, Rem was even stricter about work than Ram. Subaru looked down at his outfit, checking again to see if anything didn't look quite right.

Starting with a white base, it was a stylish outfit in black. The skirt extended below his knees, and the sleeve cuffs billowed. The frilly apron was straight, and the ribbon in the back that completed the outfit's appearance was done up properly. Worrying that perhaps the hair ornament wasn't on right, Subaru put his hand to his head… at that, he finally realized what was wrong.

"Why am I dressed up in a maid outfit?!"

"Bwaha!"

At the same time as Subaru's morning yell, Ram and Rem both burst out laughing.

2

"Even if they were sleepy, someone would normally notice something like that while getting dressed."

"For you to dress up in the entire thing and come all the way to the meeting spot… I have to wonder if that's one of your hobbies."

After their bout of laughter, Ram and Rem continued to press home the point about Subaru's sleepy-headed behavior. Maid Subaru listened to their criticism with a vein standing out on his head.

"Is there anything else you'd like to tell me?"

"Hmm, yes. It seems that Frederica's clothing fits you perfectly. It's just as Ram suspected."

"My sister is impressive as always. Rem can't help but admire her courtesy."

"That's not the problem here! And I'm not asking if it looks good on me or not! This is a social issue! The senior maids are making fun of the junior maid here!"

"You're thinking of yourself as a maid, then? Truly impressive,

Barusu.”

“It seems you really do enjoy seeing yourself that way…”

The twins exchanged whispered words. Seeing that he was getting nowhere, Subaru gave up in despair.

After giving up, he decided to head back to his room and change, and headed that direction.

“See here, Barusu. You’re already dressed; where do you think you’re going?”

“I thought that before showing such a horrible sight to everyone, I would return to my room and cry.”

“That won’t do at all. We’ve already wasted precious time this morning. We really can’t afford to lose any more.”

“The time we lost was all thanks to the two of you looking at me and laughing it up, wasn’t it?”

As Subaru pointed this out, the twins both wore innocent faces. Seeing their reaction, he let out a deep sigh.

“Anyways, I’m gonna get changed. If I go now, I’ll get by with only being embarrassed by you two. I can’t even imagine letting Emilia-tan see me like this. It would be way beyond embarrassing.”

“You’re saying that, but it’s your first time tasting the unfamiliar feeling of a skirt…”

“Yes, yes, I could really get used to the feeling of freedom…not!”

Unable to help throwing a sarcastic reply back at Ram, who showed no remorse despite being the root of the problem, Subaru started climbing the stairs, trying to get back to his room as soon as possible. The situation needed to be improved, right away.

“Alright, this will be our secret, just ours. I’m begging you, please never speak of it again.”

"Losing your nerve halfway through, that certainly your style, Barusu."

"I don't even have a reply for your poison tongue right now. So please, keep it a secret."

"Keep what a secret?"

"Keep up with the conversation here. I'm talking about the fact that I was half-asleep, dressed up as a maid and paraded around…"

In response to the question from above his head, Subaru angrily turned around and retorted…in the middle of that, he found himself looking into a pair of innocent amethyst eyes, and his voice froze. "Hieh" was all that came out.

On the second floor of the entrance hall, standing at the top of the main staircase and looking this way, was a silver-haired girl—recipient of the hospitality of the lord of the manor, and person of interest to Subaru—Emilia.

Brushing her long silver hair, Emilia looked at Subaru as he froze, and tilted her head.

"Umm… I'm sorry. I'm not sure what to say in this sort of situation."

"You might as well laugh with the rest of them."

"I'm sorry, it's not really amusing enough to laugh."

Subaru could only take so much of this. Was the whole world out to get him? What was up with this situation?

Having the girl he had his eye on see him in an unflattering maid outfit, and being unable to laugh about it… he wanted to die.

"Sister, Sister. Is this perhaps the sort of thing referred to as public execution?"

"Rem, Rem. A situation like this can lead to losing all human dignity and dying, I would say."

The maid sisters behind him took each other by the hand, and quietly discussed his misery. Subaru's escape attempt had failed so badly, he couldn't even disagree with them.

Most likely, nothing Subaru could say at this point would be convincing. To move was death, to speak was death.

All Subaru could do at this point was try and minimize the damage from this fatal wound. Of course, there's no way to avoid a fatal wound, so he might as well make things as painless as possible.

"Subaru, it's hard for me to know what to say…"

Stammering, Emilia shifted nervously while trying to choose her words carefully for Subaru's sake. In any other situation, Subaru would be overjoyed by her concern for him, but in this situation, he was hopeless.

Seeing Subaru's feelings and expression die second by second, Emilia made up her mind.

"I understand wanting to dress up in cute clothes, too, but I don't think it suits you, Subaru!"

"…huh?"

"Ah, I'm not upset or anything. But, I do feel just a little jealous. Something like what Ram and Rem wear is embarrassing for me, but the length that Frederica wore would be fine…"

"You're reaction to what I'm wearing is just giving it a low score? You're not going to yell at me for being a pervert?"

Emilia was trying to explain as quickly as she could, but she'd missed the point of the conversation. There was no need to bring that to her attention, but it was so far off from what he'd expected, Subaru asked her anyways.

"…? A pervert is a dangerous person, right? Are you dangerous, Subaru?"

"I'm not dangerous at all! A modern safety man, that's me! I see, I see! So I'm more your type the way I usually dress, than like this? Got it, I'll go change!"

Subaru rushed to cut the conversation short, before Emilia could react badly. He could feel the twins' displeased glares stabbing his back, but he simply ignored them.

"I can still get out of this thanks to Emilia's cute absent-mindedness, but I'm not out of the woods yet! I have to get back to my room before Roswaal, or even worse, Beatrice sees…!"

"Deeeear me, why is everyone gathered here so eaaaarly in the morning?"

"Are you holding a grudge against me or something?!"

As he tried to break away and return to his room, there was yet another arrival at the entrance hall.

In clown makeup and an eccentric outfit, there was no mistaking the master of the mansion, Roswaal. This in spite of the way he always kept to himself until it was time for breakfast.

"Today of all days, why! Not just Emilia-tan, but Ros-chi shows up too?!"

"If I had to say, it's because I just knew I haaaaad to. If I didn't get up early and come have a look I knew I'd regret it…and indeed, I've seen something quiiiiiite interesting."

As Roswaal approached, he looked at Subaru with the unpleasant smile of someone enjoying themselves a little too much. Under that indecent gaze, Subaru held down the hem of his skirt and backed away without thinking.

"It loooooooks like you've got everything in place. If I had to guess, I'd say this actually isn't your first time wearing women's clothing?"

"Well actually, there was something back at the high school entrance ceremony… hey, quit digging into my dark past! Crap! Now I'll never get to be a bride! Emilia-tan, please say we can be married!"

“Hm? But you’re a boy, Subaru, so you couldn’t have been a bride in the first place, right?”

As Subaru stood on the verge of tears, Emilia’s innocently demolished him, and he broke down crying.

It could only be called terrible. Having been unintentionally seen in women’s clothing, now he knew that fate was playing with him.

“If I’d known I was going to be seen, I’d at least like to have put a real effort into it, and faced it with the makeup and underwear done properly…!”

“Is that the problem? You really are a little strange, Subaru.”

As he half-seriously recovered, regretting being carried along by the situation, Emilia gave Subaru a wry grin.

Seeing her response, he boldly stood tall and folded his arms, getting control of himself.

“Here are four of the six people in the mansion! Having been seen by sixty-six percent of you, I’ve made the manly decision it would be best to finish the job! Certainly, once it’s up to one hundred percent, we’ll all have a good laugh!”

“That’s a manly decision, but you don’t look at all manly right now.”

“What a noisy bunch you are so early in the morning! One might wonder what you’re doing out here, I suppose.”

A small cat pulling aside silver hair, and a girl with horizontal-rolled hair opening the front entrance, made their appearance.

“It’s not like I actually called for either of you! Give me a break!”

“What?! What kind of comment is that?! It’s not like I would show up even if you did… if you… You! That outfit is ridiculous, I suppose! You pervert!”

“Be quiet, drill girl! You’re in no position to be pointing fingers about clothes! On top of that, if you think about it, your Bubby is pretty much running around stark naked all the time, isn't he?!"

"Hey, I'm properly dressed in fur. Pardon my smell, poot poot."

"Don't do it, Bubby! You'll catch pervert from him, I suppose! You must escape with Betty!"

Carrying on like that, the unexpected morning gathering of the mansion's inhabitants continued to chatter noisily.

It goes without saying that this day's breakfast was quite a bit later than usual.

3

"Ah, good grief. Today was a disaster. It's just not my lucky day."

At the end of the day's work, Subaru changed back into his jersey and sighed.

In the end, he had defiantly worked the entire day in the maid outfit. He was left with the feeling he'd lost something important as a person, but in exchange, he also had a feeling of accomplishment, as though he'd won a small victory against an unseen something.

It might be better to say he felt self-satisfaction—he was surprised at his own character, unchanging even across worlds.

"I guess I put a lot of effort into something silly. I really ought to learn better."

It wouldn't do to be disliked for being too foolish. Especially by that adorable silver-haired girl.

"Even with that, I'm surprised that Emilia-tan doesn't mind maid outfits. Or maybe that means she's not impressed with the butler outfit I normally wear…? That'd be a downer."

Turning his head, he thought back to seeing himself confidently wearing the butler outfit, reflected in the full-length mirror.

“Well then, tomorrow I’ll just have to blow away everyone’s memories of the maid outfit, by putting on a magnificent show as a butler. Yeah. On a more intimate note, isn’t it about time I asked Emilia for a date?”

After his work was finished, and Emilia’s studies were done, he could call it an invitation for a refreshing walk.

The flower field at the nearby village, and the little animal that the children had been excited about. There were lots of things to look forward to.

Dreaming about the fun times tomorrow, Subaru’s today came to a close.

The promise of a date, and the world once again turning on him, sat unseen in his future, two days away.

Roswaal Mansion Girls Party: Bathing Room Edition

Emilia: "…Mmm."

Slowly, from the tips of the toes, long, white legs slipped into the hot, faintly cloudy water. Her thighs trembling for a moment from the heat of the bath, she purred softly from the warmth, and let her limbs sink below the surface.

Emilia: "Ahhhh…"

With her long, silver hair simply gathered in her hands, she lowered her body into the hot water, and let out a long sigh.

She was beautiful. Her silvery hair was like a reflection of the night's moonlight, and her bluish-purple eyes seemed like they were inlaid with gemstones. Her white skin, as clear as fresh snow, was slightly flushed with color, and if anyone, man or woman, saw her, they would have to admire her splendor.

Her name was Emilia, and she was a lovely maiden whose fine looks were a gift from her elven lineage.

Emilia: "A bath in a tub big enough to soak your whole body always feels nice…"

Leaning against the edge of the bath, Emilia whispered blissfully while her cheeks reddened.

In a bathing room as large as this, the bath was able to easily accommodate Emilia's long, outstretched legs. As one would expect of the mansion of Margrave Roswaal, the bathing room was as large as a public bath. It was true that Emilia didn't exactly understand his position in society, but the fact that he was letting her stay at his mansion was an ongoing, painful reminder each day that he was a person of importance.

Her protector, her supporter—she had to meet Roswaal's expectations. Her awareness of this was one of the reasons she was spending each day living an unfamiliar lifestyle, striving to advance her studies.

Having said that, even the always cautious Emilia, with her clothing shed, bathing by herself, was simply a girl—nay, a beautiful girl.

Emilia: "Hm… I think I might have put on a little weight."

Her voice trembled as she lifted her arms from the bath, and pinched her white upper arm between her fingers. Perhaps it was due to eating regular meals as part of her recent life at the mansion; she might be overeating. Compared to her life before, life at the mansion didn't give her as many chances to move around, either. Given that, gaining weight was only natural.

Emilia: "Puck will start complaining again at this rate…"

In truth, Emilia didn't worry much about her own health. Puck, the cat spirit bound to Emilia by contract, was another matter. More than Emilia herself, he was concerned, and made sure to always remind her to take care of herself.

Puck, who had appointed himself her substitute parent and spent time with her as family, cared almost too much for her, and often instructed her on how to handle various parts of her life. She was grateful, of course, but sometimes the little lectures grew tiresome.

Emilia: "Do after-bath stretches, and do my hair, and do my nails, and, um…"

Counting on her fingers all the things she'd promised Puck to do after bathing, she started to feel a bit melancholy. Perhaps having her daily routine start to feel tiresome meant that she was getting worn down.

The incident at the capital—having her emblem stolen, and the big mess of a day that it took to get it back. It was only a few days ago; perhaps she was still physically and mentally exhausted.

Emilia: "I can't be like that. This isn't the time to be having second thoughts."

With only thoughts of the past springing up, Emilia tried to cut them off by smacking both hands to her cheeks.

The path she had chosen for herself wasn’t easy enough to let a little exhaustion slow her down. Even from the start, she’d been behind. To recover from that was going to require a real struggle.

And so, While Emilia was rebuilding her motivation…

Ram: “Oh my, Lady Emilia?”

The door to the changing room opened, and someone stepped into the bathing room. Emilia turned to see who had spoken, and saw a pink-haired girl approaching, with a towel concealing her naked body.

She was more petite, but her flawless skin and adorable face were a match for Emilia. The steam-dampened towel clung to her, and revealed her body was well-sculpted, despite it’s delicacy. Looking towards Emilia, she inclined her head slightly.

Ram: “It’s quite rare for you to be bathing at this hour. Would it be better if we come back later?”

Emilia: “No, it’s fine. I wouldn’t say something as mean as that.”

Ram: “I see. Thank you very much. Rem, do come in.”

As Emilia, still soaking in the bath, answered her, the girl—Ram, bowed her head slightly without changing her expression. She then turned towards the changing room and called out to another: her younger sister.

Rem: “Sister, it’s alright since it was Lady Emilia who was here before us, but what would you have done if it had been Subaru? That wouldn’t do.”

With that, Ram’s nearly-identical blue-haired sister appeared, following her into the bathing room.

Compared to Ram, her eyes seemed slightly gentler, but other than that, they were very similar. Her features and delicate form matched her sister—Rem's chest was, perhaps, larger.

Rem was also covering herself with a towel, and at her words, Ram turned her head and replied Ram: "When you put it that way, that's true." If the bath had been occupied not by Emilia, but by the boy who was staying as a guest…

Rem: "If Subaru was looking at my sister with his dirty eyes, Rem simply couldn't tolerate it."

Ram: "If that happened, I'd simply have to gouge out his eyes. His last sight would be a parting gift from me."

Emilia: "There's no need to say scary things like that. Subaru is a good boy."

Ram: "Perhaps your estimation of him is a little off."

Responding candidly to the comments from her younger sister and Emilia, Ram, now sweating, softly placed one leg in the bath. As she placed herself diagonally forward from Emilia, Ram's normally expressionless face relaxed slightly.

Noticing that, Emilia smiled faintly.

Ram: "…What's the matter, Lady Emilia? You seem amused."

Emilia: "Mhmm, just a little. Even Ram relaxes a little in the bath, it seems."

Ram: "I'm not a doll, after all. Though i won't deny that I'm as pretty as a doll."

Speaking in a hard voice, Ram quickly tightened her expression. Emilia regretted having caused her the embarrassment of being noticed, but now Rem entered the bath, across from Ram.

Rem: "My sister's way of always being resolute is wonderful, of course, but I also think that the way she lets down her guard in the bath is adorable as well."

Emilia: "Oh, you mean that this always happens?"

Rem: “Yes, it’s my sister’s little secret.”

Showing a little color in her cheeks, Rem spoke with a humor in her voice that was rare for her.

In some ways, even more than Ram, Rem tended to build walls between herself and others. Having had that impression of her, to be treated like this was an unexpected delight for Emilia.

Ram: “…Rem. Let’s not have too much of that.”

Rem: “Sorry, Sister. I just can’t help talking about how wonderful you are.”

Ram: “Well I suppose it can’t be helped. I’m a sister that anyone would boast about without thinking twice.”

Ram was always kind towards Rem, but today she seemed especially so. Couple with Rem’s own attitude, Emilia felt it was a lovely change.

Emilia: “Do you think that, when you’re naked in the bath, you can forget unimportant things and speak freely…?!”

Ram: “Lady Emilia, what’s the matter?”

Emilia: “Oh, oh my… I think maybe… I just figured out something amazing… something like the real truth about the world…”

Rem: “Sister, Sister, it’s terrible. It seems Lady Emilia is becoming dizzy.”

Ram: “Rem, Rem, it’s terrible. It seems Lady Emilia is half-asleep.”

Emilia: “Even though I’m in the bath?!”

Being treated as though she were dizzy and half-asleep, Emilia sank under the surface in surprise. She blew bubbles playfully, then came back above water with a gasp.

Emilia: “Mmm, the two of you are so mean…”

Rem: “Lady Emilia, it seems to me your imagination is being poisoned by Subaru.”

Emilia: “R… really? That couldn’t… hmm, I don’t think that could be…”

Having had that pointed out by Rem, Emilia looked troubled.

Since the uproar in the capital a few days ago, that boy had been welcomed at the mansion and working as a servant.

His expressions and actions often seemed incomprehensible to Emilia, and he seemed to surprise her every time they met.

Certainly, it was possible she was being influenced by the strange boy, but…

Emilia: “But, if you’re going to say that, the two of you spend a lot more time in contact with him, right? If being in the tub and naked doesn’t make a difference, then maybe you’re changing because of Subaru?”

Rem: “That would be”

Ram: “Utterly impossible.”

As Emilia tried to turn the tables on them, the twins replied in perfect unison. It seemed like a sharp retort, but it wasn’t made with a strong sense of rejection. Even from Emilia’s point of view, somehow or other the twins’ relationship with Subaru wasn’t bad. They’d almost certainly get used to each other soon.

Emilia: “Although I’m not really sure it would be good to let him stay here too long and get caught up in things…”

“…”

Hearing Emilia’s sad whisper, the twins only narrowed their eyes and said nothing.

The future awaiting Emilia was the battle for the fate of the country, to determine who would sit on the throne—the royal selection. The theft of her emblem in the capital was an attempt to interfere with Emilia's candidacy. Anyone near Emilia could certainly get caught in a deadly situation like that again. She hesitated to think it was alright to let a light hearted, good-natured boy like that get dragged in with her.

Ram: "Perhaps that's not something you need to worry about, Lady Emilia."

Emilia: "Ram?"

Ram: "Regardless of what Barusu thinks, if he doesn't prove useful as a servant, he'll be asked to leave in the near future. This decision has been left to us, so please don't trouble yourself about it."

Emilia: "…Thank you."

Emilia expressed her gratitude to Ram for interrupting her gloomy thoughts and saying that. Her deliberately harsh words were meant as a defensive line around Emilia's heart. If it became necessary, she would play the villain to spare Emilia.

Emilia: "It seems that Ram and Rem really are kind when you are naked."

Ram: "Please, stop adding 'when you are naked' to that."

Rem: "Indeed, Lady Emilia. My sister is always kind even when she isn't naked."

At Emilia and Rem's slightly off responses, Ram let out a deep sigh. Then, as the three of them were gathered together in the bath, the shadow of a truly rare fourth appeared.

Beatrice: "…oh, for heaven's sake. It's just one thing after another."

Opening the changing room door and showing up in the bathing room was a girl in an elegant dress. Her cream-colored hair was done up in horizontal curls, and her lovely appearance was almost doll-like. Her red, puffed-out cheeks looked like fruit, and she glared at the three in the bath with round, bulging eyes.

Ram: “What’s the matter, Miss Beatrice? Is it Barusu?”

Beatrice: “That’s exactly correct, and that makes me furious, I suppose. He really is a truly aggravating person! ‘Door Crossing’ doesn’t work on him, so this is the only place I can escape, I suppose.”

Ram: “Even Barusu wouldn’t dare launch an attack on the bathing room, after all.”

Beatrice: “That was my thought as well. I’ll just have to spend some time here, I suppose.”

With a haughtiness that didn’t seem to fit with her appearance, Beatrice folded her short arms and stood in a corner of the bathing room. However, Emilia rose from the bath, and walked towards Beatrice.

Looking up at the naked Emilia, Beatrice made an irritated face.

Beatrice: “…What do you want? Betty is only here to spend some time.”

Emilia: “Don’t say that. You’ve already come to the bathing room, Ram and Rem are here too, wouldn’t it be nice for Beatrice to have a bath too?”

Beatrice: “It wouldn’t be nice at all! I can’t imagine why you’d say that, I suppose. It’s certainly not funny.”

Beatrice tried to shoo away Emilia with a wave of her hand, like she was shooing an insect.

Faced with that stubborn attitude, normally Emilia would have kept her distance, but Emilia was a little different this evening. She glanced behind her, and saw two heads nod.

Beatrice: “…Wait a moment, I suppose. What’s the meaning of that signal just now?”

Emilia: “Oh, it’s nothing. …Ah! Beatrice, Puck is washing himself!”

Beatrice: “Oh?! Where, I suppose?!”

Falling for an old trick, Beatrice’s eyes followed the direction that Emilia pointed.

The next moment, Emilia picked up Beatrice’s small body in her arms, and tossed her towards the bath. Crying out “Nyaa!”, Beatrice flew towards the tub.

Beatrice: “What are you thinking… No matter, it will take more than this!”

The parabolic arc Beatrice was tracing stopped in mid-air. Using magic, she attached her thrown body to the air itself. She slowly began to move towards the side of the bathing room, but…

Ram: “Come now, Miss Beatrice, don’t be like that.”

Rem: “Stay with us a little while. I’ve always wanted to try washing Miss Beatrice’s hair.”

Beatrice: “You…you wouldn’t!”

Ram and Rem had each grabbed a sleeve of Beatrice’s dress as she tried to fly away.

There was a splash, and then Beatrice, now soaking wet, sprayed bathwater from her mouth, and glared at the other three.

Beatrice: “The three of you are completely under the influence of that strange fellow.”

Listening to Beatrice’s words, which were somewhere between a cry and a roar, Emilia smiled.

Smiled, thought that perhaps it was true, and continued to smile.

That day, at the Roswaal estate’s bathing room, the girlish voices echoed on for a while.

Roswaal Mansion Girls Party: Dressing Room Edition

1

Emilia: “Aaaaaah…”

Yawning from the morning’s drowsiness, the girl rubbed tears from the corner of her eyes with the back of her hands.

She had long, silver hair, and beautiful amethyst eyes. She had the lovely appearance of a fairy, but her slightly rumpled nightgown gave her a touch of indecent charm.

The nightgown slipped slightly, revealing her slender, fair-skinned shoulder…almost.

Rem: “That won’t do, Lady Emilia. If you rub at your eyes like that, they’ll turn red.”

Hands quickly extended from behind her, and stopped both the nightgown from slipping, and her hands from rubbing at her eyes. At the advice, the girl—Emilia—responded with a sleepy “mmm”, and then “Mm… yes, okay. …but I don’t think it would really be that bad.”

Rem: “It’s important to take care, even with the little things. Your hair, as well, needs to be combed, even if it takes a long time. I’m beginning to understand Puck-sama’s sorrows.”

Emilia: “Hmf, you’re so mean…”

Seated on a chair, Emilia puffed her cheeks out with a look of dissatisfaction. Standing behind Emilia, and politely running a comb through her silver hair, was a blue-haired girl—Rem.

It was early morning, and directly after waking up, Emilia was in the mansion’s dressing room, having Rem take care of her hair.

—To Emilia, having someone take care of her hair was the start of every morning.

Leaving her hair care to others… this was not due to Emilia being lazy, but that the people around her wouldn't leave it alone. Truthfully, it might be accurate to say that the people around her couldn't help but notice that Emilia was indifferent to her own appearance, and so it was a result of her laziness.

Rem: "if you don't want to take care of it yourself, please let Rem or Puck-sama handle it for you."

Emilia: "…Alright."

Rem chided her as she gently ran the brush through her hair, and Emilia reluctantly nodded.

Rem excelled at all things at the mansion, and had first rate skills not only for taking care of the estate's various tasks, but also caring for the personal grooming of the residents. Just having Rem touch her hair brought a curious sense of peace. Before she knew it, she was overwhelmed by the temptation to go back to sleep.

Ram: "Lady Emilia, now that you've managed to get up, it wouldn't do to fall asleep again. Even Ram is sleepy, after all."

Emilia: "Mmmf… Ah, sorry. Mhmm, you're right, but I got reeeeeeally sleepy."

Ram: "Ram can certainly understand that. Rem's hands have a heavenly touch."

The one saying that, her chest swollen with pride, was a girl whose appearance matched Rem's like two peas in a pod—pink hair and light red eyes were their only difference in color—Rem's older sister, Ram.

Unlike Rem, Ram was standing back and observing Emilia's hair being styled, but that didn't seem especially strange. The sisters, Ram and Rem, had always divided their responsibilities like this.

Rem: "Sister, if you keep praising me like that, I'm going to blush… Lady Emilia, I've finished."

Rem’s cheeks turned faintly red at Ram’s compliment, and she gave Emilia a light pat on her shoulder. As they’d been speaking, the silver hair Rem had gathered had been woven into a pretty braid.

Emilia: “Oh, thank you. …Mhmm, I’m sure Puck will be very pleased, too. That helps a lot.”

Rem: “Something like this is nothing more than the work expected of Rem. But, it’s rare for Great Spirit-sama to not be here while Lady Emilia is having her hair done.”

The great spirit that Rem was concerned about was Puck, the small cat-spirit that held a contract with Emilia. As Emilia’s self-appointed parent, the little cat offered guidance constantly, and often prodded her about taking care of her appearance. As a result, he was always present in the morning when her hair was being done, and when she was selecting clothing, but…

Emilia: “It seems he stayed awake too long yesterday. He was up late playing with Subaru, so he’s sleeping in today. I just can’t believe him sometimes.”

Ram: “With Barusu, you say? With all the work he has to do today, he’s got some nerve staying up late.”

Emilia was smiling slightly in spite of what she’d said, but Ram drew her eyebrows together in displeasure. Seeing Rem nod in agreement with her sister’s words, Emilia’s wry smile deepened.

Ram: “So Barusu’s late night is the reason that Puck-sama is still resting, then. …If he’s making problems not only for himself, but for everyone around him, then it casts even more doubts on his competence.”

Rem: “But, Sister. Thanks to Subaru, Sister and Rem can pick out this morning’s clothing for Lady Emilia.”

Ram: “That’s true. Barusu can take credit for that, at least.”

Emilia: “You’re giving Subaru credit for that? Why?”

As Emilia tilted her head at the sister’s conversation, Rem responded “You see,” to her confusion, and continued:

Rem: “Choosing Lady Emilia’s clothing has always been Puck’s job, after all. There was never any chance for Sister or Rem to give any advice on the matter. But, today will be different.”

Ram: “As far as choosing clothing is concerned, Lady Emilia has no opinion on the matter, correct? Everything is up to Ram and Rem, in other words. It’s a little bit exciting, honestly.”

Emilia: “I… I see. I don’t really understand…”

Emilia felt a little confused as the sisters became excited. The sisters’ expression didn’t normally change much, but as they talked seriously about Emilia’s clothing, she glimpsed a trace of enjoyment in their faces.

As Ram had pointed out, Emilia didn’t have any idea what she should wear. If the sisters could have some fun choosing her hairstyle and clothes, she thought that was fine, but…

Emilia: “It feels a little sad to be left out… oh, I know!”

Ram: “Lady Emilia?”

Unable to participate in the sisters’ discussion, Emilia broke her silence as her eyes suddenly lit up. Ram’s expression softened as she noticed Emilia’s sudden change, and Emilia beamed at Ram proudly.

Ram and Rem exchanged glances as Emilia’s attitude showed she’d had a flash of inspiration.

Emilia: “I just had a reeeealy good idea. Listen, listen.”

Ram: “…I’m not sure I want to hear it, but what have you thought up?”

Emilia: “Well, I’m really happy that you’re working so hard to pick an outfit for me, but aren’t the two of you always wearing the same maid outfit? That seems a little sad to me.”

Not noticing Ram's hesitant wording, Emilia confidently raised a finger and continued.

Emilia: "Since we're here already, I thought I'd like to see what you have to wear beside maid outfits."

2

Rem: "Subaru was one thing, but for Lady Emilia to be suggesting this as well…"

Emilia: "Oh, Subaru was telling you the same thing too? I think I understand a little better what he was thinking, now. It's so much fun seeing all your cute clothes, after all."

Ram: "Though in Barusu's case, his ulterior motive was obvious, so the idea was dismissed."

Neither of the sisters could turn down Emilia, after she'd suggested this with such an enthusiastic smile.

Looking at Ram and Rem standing side by side, Emilia clasped her hands in delight and looked deeply impressed. That was no surprise, since the two of them were in entirely different clothing than she had seen them wear before.

Emilia had known the sisters for three or four months now, but she had never seen them wear anything other than their maid outfits. She didn't know how to express her gratitude.

Emilia: "Thankya, thankya!"

Ram: "Lady Emilia, that response shows a lot of Barusu's bad influence on you."

Emilia: "Mhmm, I was trying to do a little impression of him there. But I'm really very happy!"

Sighing a little as Emilia looked on with her hands held together, Ram turned around once for her. The hem of her skirt lifted as she twirled, and she sparkled with a lovely girlishness.

Ram’s current clothing, compared to the maid outfit that left most of her shoulders and back exposed, was much less revealing. However, the feminine outfit, with a soft white as it’s basis, was an entirely different kind of charming, compared to her usual black serving clothes.

With her maid headdress removed, a large ribbon only added to the effect.

Ram: “Honestly, this is quite embarrassing. This look just isn’t me.” said Ram as she posed, running her hand through her hair, creating a perfectly adorable image. Emilia looked on, delighted; she was beginning to realize the fun of choosing outfits for others.

Rem: “As expected of Sister. No matter what she wears, her beauty only shines more brightly.”

Ram: “Thank you. But you look good too, Rem. Ram is very proud of how cute her little sister is.”

As Rem praised her sister’s appearance, Ram smiled faintly and touched her cheek.

In contrast to Ram’s outfit that had been made with an eye towards a soft splendor, Rem’s clothes were abundant with frills, producing a sweet ambiance not unlike something that would seem fitting for Beatrice, another of the mansion’s residents. With left and right ponytails adding to the effect, the combination of Rem’s gentle eyes and her attire shone brightly.

Emilia: “Mmmmhm, it’s just as I suspected. It’s a terrible waste for the two of you to be wearing only maid outfits all the time. We’ve discovered something here, don’t you think?”

Ram: “Our uniforms are in accordance with Roswaal-sama’s will, so Ram can only agree with him. However, it was thanks to Lady Emilia that we could see Rem look this adorable …I’d like to say that, at least.”

Emilia: “You’re reeeealy not telling us everything, Ram. Don’t you agree, Rem?”

Rem: “Rem is pleased to be able to see Sister in her uniform every day. Working, going out, shopping, fighting, serving… they are everything we need.”

Emilia: “But they’re all maid outfits…”

Rem had counted off the different types on her fingers, but they were all more or less the same maid outfit.

Hearing that response, Emilia started to worry that maybe Rem wasn’t really that interested, but Rem showed a rare smiled and continued “Just kidding, Lady Emilia. Rem really enjoyed seeing Sister’s cute clothing, too.”

Emilia: “…Really? That’s good to hear. But you look reeeeally cute too, Rem.”

Rem: “Thank you very much. However, we should probably get back to work soon.”

As Rem responded, she was looking above the door of the dressing room. The magic time crystal placed there had turned deep green, letting them know it was time to begin the morning.

Ram and Rem needed to start their work in the mansion, and Emilia needed to spend her daily time with the lesser spirits.

Emilia: “That’s too bad. But I suppose we can’t keep on playing forever.”

Ram: “Yes, that’s right. On top of that, if we don’t change quickly, it’s not impossible that Barusu might show up and misunderstand what’s going on. Ram really wouldn’t want Barusu to see her like this.”

Emilia: “Ahah, too bad for him. Oh, but wouldn’t you want to show Roswaal that outfit?”

Ram: “…Ram can imagine what Roswaal would say about it.”

She had hesitated for just a moment, but then shook her head as though clearing it of regret. Rem seemed to agree with her sister, and began to undo her tied-up hair.

It was lonely, and unfortunate. But, there was nothing that could be done. It was that kind of moment.

Puck: “Sorry, sorry, Lia. I slept in. Were you able to wake up alright?”

Emilia: “Ah, Puck.”

The green crystal hanging at Emilia’s chest lit up brilliantly; the next moment, the light introduced a small cat spirit into the world. The little cat rubbed at his eyes, and, looked around the dressing room.

Puck: “Oh, what’s this? Not only Lia, but the other two are dressed up cutely today as well.”

Blinking his round eyes in surprise, Puck whispered without malice. At those words, the sisters, who were still changing their clothes, looked at each other, and then they both fixed their eyes on Emilia.

Ram: “Somehow, being seen by Puck-sama isn’t pleasant either…”

Rem: “It’s rather strange. Rem feels the same way as Sister. What do you think we should do about it?”

Emilia: “Umm, I’m not really sure what to say… Ah, I know!”

As the sisters looked at her sourly and complained, Emilia thought hard, and then clapped her hands. Opening one hand, she landed the floating Puck on her palm.

Puck: “What’s the matter, Lia? You look a little… hmm, you look like a child getting into mischief.”

Emilia: “Well you see, Puck. I understand a little better how Puck feels. So, I thought that it’d be nice for Puck to understand a little better how I feel, too.”

“Puck It’s important to understand each other. But I’m getting a bad feeling about this… Hey, hold on, wait!”

Seeing Emilia's smile deepen, Puck's face showed a rare moment of disquiet. But Emilia didn't wait. Ram and Rem didn't wait, either.

3

—That day, the atmosphere at the Roswaal estate dinner table was a little different from normal.

Every morning, all the mansion's residents gathered together for breakfast. This included the lord of the manor, and Beatrice, and the servant boy was no exception either. However…

Beatrice: "Bubby, you look wonderful. Even if it's not your usual appearance, it's making Betty's heart melt…"

Puck: "Haha, thank you, Betty. But, if you'll please avoid drawing too much attention to how I look, it'll help to preserve the little pride I have left."

Out of those assembled, Beatrice was even more excited than usual as she held Puck to her cheek. Cradled in Beatrice's arms, Puck's appearance was completely different from normal.

With ribbons attached all over his body, and a lovely dress made from from a handkerchief and lace, the little cat who usually only wore gray fur was now decorated splendidly.

Subaru, who knew nothing about the situation, was looking at Puck wide-eyed. Leaning towards Emilia sitting next to him, he held his hand to his mouth as if trying to speak discreetly.

Subaru: "Hey, what's going on there? I'm pretty tolerant towards the idea of dressing up pets, but did you do that, Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: "Hmm, well…"

With a wry smile at Subaru's question, Emilia glanced at the head of the table.There, watching with amusement as Beatrice and Puck cuddled, was Roswaal, with the two maids quietly lined up behind him. They both noticed Emilia's quick look, and each raised a hand.

Those hands were making the sign that Subaru had called 'The Fox'…

Subaru: "Emilia-tan?"

As Subaru repeated his question in a confused voice, Emilia stuck out the tip of her tongue. The answer was a secret from the time spent this morning in the dressing room, between the sisters and herself, so…

Emilia: "Subaru, I can't tell you."

Emilia answered with a cute wink.

Chapters 29-END

Chapter 29:
Natsuki Subaru’s Restart

1

Only nothingness existed there.

Vaguely, that consciousness casually looked around. Perhaps “Looked around” isn’t the right expression in this case.

This consciousness had no eyes. Not only that, but it had no hands, no feet, no part of a body whatsoever. Just an uncertain, incorporeal consciousness floating there.

Understanding nothing, comprehending nothing, it still looked around.

It was a dark room, and utterly empty. The boundaries between the ceiling and walls were indistinguishable, a world enveloped in pitch black where the room’s size couldn’t even be estimated.

Suddenly, meaning was born in that world of eternal darkness.

In the position directly in front of the consciousness, a human silhouette abruptly appeared.

A slender, indistinct outline, also shrouded in black. Especially above the torso, a haze obscured it, strongly hindering the consciousness’s perception.

With the appearance of the silhouette, the consciousness experienced its first sensation.

And before that sensation faded, the shadow moved languidly, as if trying to convey something to the consciousness.

It couldn’t understand. Nothing was conveyed.

Even so, for some reason, it couldn’t avert its consciousness from that human silhouette—

“—we can’t meet, not yet.”

Leaving behind such a faint whisper, the world suddenly vanished.

2

The moment Subaru woke up, his strongest thought was, “Thank you, Mom and Dad, for giving me a strong body.”

He had thrown himself off a cliff, plummeting headfirst to the ground. There was no doubt his cervical vertebrae almost snapped from the impact, but instead of instantaneous eternal peace for Subaru in such a state—

“To think I couldn’t even die instantly and still have some consciousness… this isn’t just bad luck, it’s beyond that.”

Next to the horned corpse that had fallen to its death, he lay immobile, tormented by excruciating pain, counting down the seconds to death.

He probably didn’t last long before losing his life, yet the subjective experience felt like several hours.

He couldn’t bear to imagine Beatrice coming down to check on his well-being and then healing him while he was still alive.

“Nope, never again. I’m absolutely done with trying to kill myself. I wouldn’t do it even if I were dead.”

Even thinking back to the self-interrogation he went through leading up to that moment literally made him want to die.

After putting on such a brave front, his inner self was trembling like that. He absolutely couldn’t call it a “resolution.”

But—

“I’m back…”

Reaching out, clenching his fist, Subaru confirmed his location.

A soft bed. Neatly arranged sheets. The reddish-brown work clothes felt nostalgic, and then—

“Sister, Sister, it seems our guest is still half-asleep.”

“Rem, Rem, it seems our guest is quite senile for his age.”

The twin girls held hands, gazing at Subaru with two pairs of eyes from the foot of the bed.

Familiar voices, familiar gestures. A powerful greeting, repeated four times before, and now for the fifth time.

He had a mountain of things he wanted to say. So many feelings pressed against his chest, wanting to be expressed. Yet, all of them caught in his throat.

Seeing Rem alive and well, seeing Ram’s usual rude demeanor, feeling them treat him as if everything were normal—an uncontrollable surge of emotion welled up inside him.

“Guest, dear Guest, what’s wrong? Are you feeling unwell?”

“Guest, dear Guest, is something the matter? Did you have an attack of your chronic illness?”

After seeing their faces, Subaru fell silent, clutching his chest, confusing the twins. They separated, approached the bed, and reached out as if to comfort the crouching Subaru. As the two approached, Subaru—

“Gaba-cho!”

“Eh?”

“Ah?”

Making a sound effect with his mouth, he vigorously pulled the twins into a tight embrace.

Blue hair to his right, pink hair to his left; their small bodies were easily encircled by one arm each. He put his face between the twins, who had bumped heads, and while savoring the feel of their hair against his cheeks—

“Ah—I’m home, I’m home! Finally, I’m back in this place, with these feelings. I’m home!”

He then roughly rubbed his face against their heads, then patted their backs, releasing them.

The twins, unable to hide their shock at Subaru’s sudden embrace, quickly regained their composure and practically sprang off the bed.

“Sister, Sister, our guest has made a plaything of us.”

“Rem, Rem, our guest has made us the object of his beastly desires.”

“Hah! That’s not it. Sorry, but you two are, unfortunately, just a tad outside my strike zone. Remember that. I don’t really have a thing for younger girls! And girls should have long hair, long hair!”

Subaru’s personal theory was that girlish charm resided in the hair.

Therefore, a woman’s hair should be long. And a silver-haired heroine was Subaru’s justice. Plus, if she had a slightly older, doting type, that would be perfect. Hence—

“Emilia-tan is right in the center of my strike zone! Sorry, but you two are off-center. Still nice pitches though!”

“Sister, Sister. His statement is hard to understand, but I feel insulted.”

“Rem, Rem. His words are crazy, but I feel like I’m being put down.”

The twins’ response to Subaru’s rapid-fire talk was rather harsh.

Ignoring their attitude, Subaru sprang out of bed. Standing barefoot on the floor, he sharply spun around. Turning back in the center of the room, he pointed both index fingers at the two, who were still standing by the bed.

"Listen up, hey, listen, listen to me. After you give each other lap pillows and clean out your ear holes, lend me an ear!"

He offered his palms to the silent duo, making unnecessary open-and-close gestures with his hands.

"I understand that you two have, well, complicated and mysterious backgrounds due to various circumstances. I totally get it, but even so, I'm going to say this."

As if gauging him, the twins silently urged him to continue.

He probably figured that their assessment had already begun. He couldn't come up with a clever plan to try and win their trust while being aware of their gaze, struggling and experimenting.

For starters, he was terrible at socializing.

If he had the advanced communication skills to read others' expressions and respond appropriately on the spot, he wouldn't have become a shut-in, and he would have done better here too.

So, even knowing the meaning of their sharp gazes, there wasn't much Subaru could do. His informational advantage was limited.

Therefore, what Subaru was about to say to them at this point wasn't a declaration of war but purely a self-admonition.

In other words—

"I trust you two, so let's get along!"

Just like the first time, he would face them with all his might, single-mindedly.

He must have thought the same thing on the first day of his summoning to another world.

Even if he knew what future awaited him, he didn't have the strength to fully utilize it. In that case, to make the most of the given chance, he had no choice but to desperately live and struggle through the present situation.

At Subaru's proposition, the two's eyes widened. They exchanged glances with each other, communicating silently. There was no way to guess what was exchanged during that silent interaction, but Subaru was not quiet enough to solemnly await their verdict.

After all, he had decided to abandon that quietness this time.

"Being left behind is lonely, you bullies! The world is much vaster and more open. So stop immersing yourselves in a world just for the two of you and let's open up more and more! With whom? With me!"

"Sister, Sister. Our awakened guest is incredibly troublesome."

"Rem, Rem. Our guest, who finally woke up, is annoying as hell."

"But you two must be sincere even to this annoying and troublesome me! Wow, you are making this guest feel things once again after so long! It's good for a brief moment, yeah!"

It felt like his suppressed frustrations were exploding.

Relying on his mouth, which spun even faster than usual, Subaru's tongue reflected light words more than ever. Then—

"—Couldn't you have woken up a little more quietly?"

The voice came from the direction of the entrance.

Looking that way, standing near the door was a silver-haired girl. She gently knocked on the already open door, her beautiful eyebrows furrowed in exasperation.

"It's good that you're well, but you're recovering from an illness, so you shouldn't make so much noise."

"Don't worry, Emilia-tan, you're my guiding star!"

"What are you talking about?!"

Giving a thumbs-up, his teeth gleaming, he struck his best determined pose. Emilia put a hand to her forehead at Subaru's all-out action.

“Um…”

Her gaze wandered as if choosing her words, and then—

“Anyway, good morning. I’m glad you’re safe.”

Emilia smiled with relief.

Subaru nodded back at her smile, a grin spreading across his face.

“Yeah, good morning. —Alright then, let’s get started.”

The three women tilted their heads, not understanding the intent behind Subaru’s words.

Subaru gave them a wry smile, waving his hand, and declared, as if telling himself first and foremost—

“One week at Roswaal’s Mansion—mission start.”

—Now, let’s set the story in motion.

To look up at the morning Subaru desires, with the people Subaru desires.

The first day of the fifth time, morning at Roswaal’s Mansion begins.

Chapter 30:
Natsuki Subaru's Buffoonery

1

Subaru has two major hurdles to overcome to get through his week at the Roswaal mansion.

First, to earn the trust of the mansion's residents, which includes not only Ram and Rem, but also Roswaal, the master himself.

If he fails to gain their approval, there's a very high chance his life will be extinguished in the name of secrecy.

This was the conclusion he reached after thinking about it over and over again during his ample time in the previous loop.

Similarly, leaving the mansion without their permission would fall under the same category.

Suspicious behavior immediately leads to a DEAD END. This is the point that demands the utmost caution.

Second, is a hurdle he hasn't even found a clue about it yet.

That is, the true identity of the curse user attacking Roswaal's mansion.

The user of the curse that took Subaru's life the first time, ravaged his mind and body the second time, and killed Rem in the fourth iteration.

In this fifth world, the biggest objective is to locate and defeat this adversary whose true identity remains elusive.

In summary, if he can somehow gain the trust of Ram and Rem, and then defeat the wicked magic user, he might be able to break through the loop.

He had to die four times just to finally see the victory conditions.

What's more, the crucial part of achieving these conditions is still largely unknown, and he can't shake the feeling that he's returned with no plan whatsoever.

Subaru sighs again at the sheer difficulty of his path ahead, but he shakes his head, resisting the urge to cradle it, and looks forward.

No matter how high the wall before him, he can't back down.

He came back here, even resorting to suicide. He gambled on the unknown conditions of whether he could return, and he did.

He had died once, by his own hand.

So, he should face this challenge as if he were already dead.

—That's what Subaru had decided.

2

"Soo, Ram? From your perspective, what's your assessment of him?"

At the hour when the moon hung in the night sky, a private discussion was taking place in the office on the top floor of Roswaal's mansion.

There were two participants: Roswaal, the master of the mansion and the room, and facing him, the pink-haired maid—Ram.

Ram tilted her head slightly in thought, considering Roswaal's question, delivered with clasped hands on his desk and a slight smile.

Noticing her hesitation in reporting, Roswaal raised an eyebrow as if he'd seen something rare.

"Hmm~, it's rare to see Ram, who usually makes quick decisions about aanything, pondering so deeply, iisn't it? Couldn't you measure him in a single daay?"

"That's not exactly it, but—"

Her denial came quickly, but its content still lacked clarity. She touched a finger to her lips, a hint of confusion remaining.

“He—Barusu—is, well, completely useless in terms of ability. His performance as a servant is barely better than a novice. Before even considering whether he’s suited or not, he’s simply out of the scope of evaluation.”

“Hmm~, it’s quite mysterious for someone to ooffer to work themselves, only to be soo… unsuited.”

Recalling the breakfast table, Roswaal chuckled to himself.

He remembered inviting their newly awakened guest to the dining table and discussing his achievements and rewards.

Roswaal’s impression was that he was a “boy who had received a decent education, had a moderately quick wit, and was reasonably good at self-preservation.” It wasn’t a bad assessment, and in another sense, it meant he warranted caution.

Therefore, he had assigned Ram to him as a supervisor under the guise of an educator, and indeed, he had set aside time for this report.

He hadn’t expected results on the first day, but on the other hand, someone who could cause this kind of unease in Ram was a serious opponent.

“It’s strange, but…”

“Yes, I’ll listen. Go ahead and tell me everything.

“Though he’s completely lacking in ability, Barusu is… how should I put it… unsettlingly positive?”

Roswaal furrowed his brow at Ram’s statement, which sounded more like she was searching for words than choosing them.

Ram herself likely knew she wasn’t making sense. With a frustrated expression, as if precise words eluded her:

"He just keeps talking and talking, never losing his smile even when he fails, and going so far as to act terribly devoted towards us…"

"…What is it thaat you are think?"

"It's different from what Lady Emilia had told me about him."

Ram responded only with that to the low query.

Roswaal, having had less contact with him, couldn't grasp her specific questions. However, this was the opinion of sisters who had gained considerable experience in the mansion. Considering his trust in them, her advice was something that should be taken seriously.

"At any rate, it's understandable if his true nature isn't apparent on the first day. We owe him a debt of gratitude for saving Lady Emilia. —Let's continue to oobserve his progress slowly for a while longer, shaall we?"

"…In case of, if…"

Her reluctance to hear the rest was palpable.

Even though her expression hadn't changed, his ability to sense it was likely due to their long association. Roswaal looked at Ram's rare display of weakness with his golden eyes, and shook his head slightly.

"Then it shaall be. We'd prefer to handle things as amicably as possible. —Above all, be careful not to let Rem act rashly."

Sometimes, that blue-haired girl tended to act on her own initiative, even when she understood his intentions. While her judgment generally didn't deviate from Roswaal's directives, there were times when her immediate decisions, which nipped potential problems in the bud, caused him trouble.

This time, in particular, there was a chance that such an immediate decision could lead to a bad outcome.

For Roswaal, all three of them were essential pieces.

“By the way, Ram. Is your report finished?”

“…Yes. I apologize for not being able to convey anything substantial.”

“I would never blaame you for such a thing. Rather, shall we finish our duties for tonight? —It’s been two nights. I imagine you’ve been quite… aching?”

To Roswaal’s inviting gesture with his fingers, Ram followed with a somewhat entranced expression. She had been standing in front of the desk, but she approached him with a swaying gait, then hesitantly settled onto his lap as he sat.

“Tonight as well, if you’ll… excuse me.”

“It’s your rightful exercise, of course. It’s always like this, but there’s no neeed to be shy. It’s an important body. Aafter all, It’s not just yours alone.”

He traced her cheek with his hand, turning Ram’s face upwards as her eyes faintly closed.

Combing her pink hair with his other hand, Roswaal closed one eye, looking down at Ram with his blue one.

“Noow then, what kind of eexistence will you be for us. We truly want to proceed amicably, doon’t we?”

He murmured only to himself, then Roswaal immediately shifted his awareness.

Gazing only at Ram before him, his consciousness sank only into Ram.

The first night deepened.

—Concluding with the mysterious private conversation between the master of the mansion and his maid.

"Good morning! Another clear day, perfect for laundry! Good for me, good for you, good for everyone! Good smile!"

On the morning of the second day, welcoming the rising sun with three cheers, Subaru cheered loudly.

Standing in the middle of the garden, his eyelids burning from the sunlight, he shook off his grogginess by moving his entire body with full energy.

First thing in the morning, radio calisthenics—blood circulated properly through his limbs, sending the energy stored during sleep throughout his entire body.

Finally, he stretched both hands to the heavens and shouted "Victory!" marking the end of the beginning of the day.

Lightly sweating on his forehead, Subaru refreshed himself by wiping it away and turned around.

Then—

"You really are energetic in the morning…"

"Energetic, super energetic! My energy is everyone's courage, I love you, love, we love! Let's get to it!"

At the edge of the garden, in the shade of the trees surrounding the garden, Emilia, who had been performing her morning routine, gave a wry smile. A gray furball, or rather, Puck, floated beside her, rubbing his black eyes with his tiny hands.

"Seeing you wash your face, you really are like a cat. But anyway, do spirits also get sleepy? Do they oversleep?"

"You humans get sleepy when you're tired, right? When spirits' mana reserves, the source of their activity, decrease, well, it's similar. If I don't have enough mana, I might continue to feel sleepy like this… fufunyaa."

Prompted by Puck's yawn, Emilia also covered her lips with her palm and let out a small yawn.

Subaru shrugged and played dumb at their gestures.

"You two staying up late isn't good. It's probably that, right? You were talking about your crushes late into the night? That's fine, that's fine, let me in on it! My crush? Um, well, it's super embarrassing, but—"

Subaru clasped his hands, lowered his eyes, and stole glances at Emilia. Emilia waved her hand dismissively at Subaru's behavior, saying, "Yes, yes."

"I love Puck, and Puck loves me. End of story."

"Mutual love?! Is there no room for me?! No room?!"

"No way. Lia's head over heels for my charm. Subaru, you might not have been a bad guy, but compared to me, you're nothing. Just honestly give up on this girl… nyaunyuau!"

Puck looked down at Subaru, warding him off.

Emilia, grabbing a hand towel from who-knows-where, bit it and cried "Kii—" in exasperation.

Then, with no mercy, she pinched Subaru's ear and Puck's ear, who was straightening his whiskers with a pompous air.

"Both of you, don't get carried away! I'll get angry if you keep saying things like that!"

""Ow ow ow, you're angry, you're angry, I get it!""

One person and one familiar cringed in unison at Emilia's punishment.

As they both rubbed their released ears, Emilia let out a small sigh.

"It's good to get along, but don't play around using people as an excuse. Answer if you understand. Yes?"

""Yes~!""

Prompted by her outstretched hand, they impulsively nodded.

He couldn't shake the feeling of being completely manipulated, but it was strange how seeing her satisfied smile made such minor things seem irrelevant.

A relieved smile gently surfaced. As he felt his lips relax, Subaru inwardly panicked slightly and forced a smile.

"What's this pounding heart? An older woman type acting like a big sister to me, Emilia-tan's appeal rush is too intense, I'm troubled + screaming with joy."

"Screaming with joy, but feeling troubled… What's that like?"

"Like 'Kya-hii-n!' or something like that, right?"

He put both fists near his chin and took a small jump, bending one leg. It was a pose a cutesy character from an old manga might do, but he was surprisingly good at replicating it, to his own surprise.

"I wonder why. I feel so utterly deflated."

"More unpopular than expected! Why?! Are me and the world really that out of sync, why?!"

Subaru's full-throttle reaction to Emilia's disheartened gesture. The classic manga pose was called 'Sheh,' but she gave no reaction to it.

It fizzled out, and his strength drained, causing him to collapse on the spot.

"My physical gags really bomb a lot…! It's unavoidable that concepts like 'life' or 'flames' don't convey well, but for a bewitching pose that charmed children and adults alike to not be received, how strict is this world on comedy…!"

"I don't know what wall you crashed into, but that's just fine. Hey, Subaru. Come here, come and sit."

As Subaru, with hands on the ground, looked about to cry, Emilia, sitting sideways on the grass, lightly patted the spot beside her.

Subaru's reaction upon realizing she meant "come here" was swift. He practically leaped, sliding in beside her.

"Called, jumped out, slid in, and here I am. What, what? What kind of timing is 'just fine'? Natsuki Subaru, the man who reaches the itchy spots, will scratch that unreachable spot on Emilia-tan's back exactly as commanded! Nothing more!"

"I only invited you to sit beside me, but I got a bigger reaction than I expected. What should I do?"

"…"

Even Emilia couldn't help but give a wry smile at his intense momentum. In her palm, Puck remained silent, touching his own whiskers.

Perhaps assuming Puck was unreliable in this stance, Emilia prefaced her words with "Um, so," and turned back to Subaru.

"So, how was yesterday? Were you able to do your job properly?"

"Ah, eighty percent failure!"

"I see. You are so confident… wait? You failed? Eighty percent?!"

"No, sorry, eighty percent was an exaggeration. Probably… if I'm being generous, six… no, seven, seventy-five percent…"

"That's so close to the edge…"

Seeing Emilia's suddenly deflated look, Subaru inexplicably felt a pang of conscience and his shoulders slumped. Seeing Subaru influenced by his own demeanor, Emilia waved her hands frantically.

"Ah, but, look, you succeeded twenty percent on your first job, right? Then it's fine, I'm sure you can do well. Come on, be confident."

"You're right! Twenty percent on a first try, isn't that like being a strong batter? I'll ride this tailwind and get cocky, watch me!"

“Don’t get so conceited, and make sure to reflect.”

“Aren’t your demands too strict?! Oh, no, never mind, I’m sorry.”

Pressed by Emilia’s stern glare, his shoulders, which had started to rise, shrunk again, and he hung his head.

At any rate—

“Well, in reality, I’m somehow managing thanks to Ram and Rem’s support. If I’m giving my all and still only getting twenty percent, it’s pretty much unavoidable, right? As for the disappointment there, I’ll look forward to the future, so see you tomorrow!”

“If you yourself aren’t worried about it, there’s nothing for me to say…”

Emilia pouted her lips somewhat sulkily at Subaru’s positive remark. That childish gesture was abnormally endearing, and a feeling like his chest was tightening making Subaru’s body feel hot.

However, he mobilized all his self-control to suppress that impulse.

Subaru made an exaggerated movement, pointing at her with both hands.

“Well, well, well, that’s how it is, so I’ll be working hard at servant life today, too, while being bossed around, educated, and punished by the maid sisters. When I’m exhausted from that kind of life, I’ll come jumping into Emilia-tan’s lap, so make sure to keep it open for me!”

“A harsh assessment with a cute face! But, but, if you’ll listen to half, that means one knee is okay, right! Then, Emilia-tan’s one knee for tonight is reserved by me… don’t you dare use it, Puck!”

Changing the target of his pointing finger, Subaru declared war. Meanwhile, Puck, who was the target, maintained his composed attitude.”

“Heh heh, no matter what you say, you who appeared later, Lia has already dedicated her body and soul to me through our contract.

There's no interfering with this relationship now, nyannya-nyan!"

"Don't change the terms of the contract on your own behind my back!"

Emilia pinched both of Puck's incorrigible ears and lifted him into the air, swinging him.

Since his entire weight hung from his ears, if a human were subjected to it, it would be an unimaginable torment. But Puck, whose weight was like fluff, seemed to suffer no damage. He continued to swing, allowing himself to be swayed, with his usual serene expression.

"Alright then, now that I've replenished my morning vitality, I guess I'll get to work."

"Replenished your vitality? Were you doing something?"

"Of course, my love - love power accumulated from flirting with Emilia-tan. I've got two gauges filled, so I can land two super moves. This is a sure win…"

"You're always so full of yourself. If you keep teasing people like that, they won't believe you when you tell the truth. Haven't you read that in fairy tales?"

"I know similar stories! Honestly, I think that guy totally deserved it, so there's no room for me to defend him, you know?"

"You're saying that, Subaru…?"

Subaru stuck out his tongue and gave an embarrassed smile, standing up under Emilia's gaze, which seemed to say, "Look at others' faults and correct your own."

He brushed the grass from his rear, then stretched his back, rotating his hips.

"I really need to get going, or I'll get seriously scolded. This morning, I'm supposed to start with breakfast prep. Emilia-tan, you don't like bell peppers, right? I'll take them out for you."

“You have to eat them even if you don’t like them… wait, did I ever tell Subaru that?”

To Emilia, who tilted her head in question, Subaru gave a small smile and waved his hand.

He was just slightly pleased that he had surprised her.

He swayed unnecessarily from side to side, continuing to act silly within her sight until he disappeared.

Consciously, deliberately, making sure his smile didn’t fade.

4

Watching Subaru disappear from sight with an unsteady gait, Emilia let out a small sigh and looked down at her hand.

At the end of her gaze, the small gray cat was looking at Subaru’s receding back. Suddenly, noticing Emilia looking down at him, the cat raised its head.

“What’s wrong? You have a gloomy expression.”

Emilia stammered, struggling to articulate her inner confusion. However, it didn’t come out right, eventually just becoming a silent sigh that vanished into the air.

Watching her struggle, Puck touched his pink nose and narrowed his eyes.

“Is Subaru on your mind? That’s unusual. It’s rare for Lia to care so much about another person.”

“Don’t just assume I’m bad at socializing. I’m not bad at interacting with others; I just haven’t had many opportunities.”

Puffing out her cheeks, she complained to the long-time gray cat.

It was a childish attitude she usually wouldn’t show if anyone else were around. It was her way of expressing her affection, something she could only do in front of Puck, who she'd known for years.

Meanwhile, Puck's expression remained serene.

He was like a parent delighted by his daughter's growth—which was exactly how he felt—and with that same expression, Puck nodded.

"Well, it's no wonder you're confused, Lia. Things are getting a little complicated."

"Complicated?"

Though nonchalant, Emilia's expression tightened, sensing that the content was something she couldn't ignore.

Puck's demeanor was generally consistent, regardless of the situation. Whether this was peculiar to spirits or simply a facet of Puck's personality was unknown, but the weight of his statements often fell to the receiver's judgment. In short, it meant Emilia had to make a decision.

Despite being met with a serious gaze, Puck's demeanor didn't falter.

He toyed with the tip of his short whiskers with his fingertip.

"I tried to vaguely sense it, but… Subaru's heart, it was quite a mess. His outer self and inner self are all tangled up. If he stays like that, he might wear out before long, nya?"

He said, in his ever-relaxed tone.

Chapter 31:
The Laments of Buffoonery

1

—Sick.

“Oh, Ram-chi! Did you see that just now?! My knife skills have gotten pretty refined in just one day, haven’t they?! Did my talent finally bloom?!”

—Sick, sick.

“Rem-rin, look, look! This skill that allows for such delicate craftsmanship—right now, a miracle truly resides in my fingertips! Appliqué!”

—Sick, sick, sick.

“Emilia-tan just scrambles my heart every time I see her! She’s so wickedly captivating, I’m practically guilty!”

—Sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick, sick.

Wearing a smile, acting like a clown, his tongue, slick with oil, spun at full speed. He tackled every task assigned to him with all his might, bravely challenging himself without fear of failure, and whenever he had a free moment, he’d wander off in search of some event to join. He mobilized all his memories, digging through the four repeated four-day cycles as if to burn them into his mind, imprinting himself onto every tiny incident he could possibly create.

That’s how it had to be. That’s what he had to do. Not a second could be wasted. He had to scrutinize every possible outcome, simulate every success and failure of every necessary event.

He should think of it as a game. Thorough flag management. He should have been good at it. The more he met people, the higher the possibilities became. He should be able to smile better. He should be able to make others smile better.

Act as if your mind is empty, but never stop thinking. Perform meaningless, wasteful, exaggerated actions. Make them think you're a fool not worth their caution. Avoid being judged as too stupid to be useful. Conflicting thoughts and conclusions. If you have time to dwell on contradictions, act before you think. But before you act, ask yourself the meaning of your actions. Always be careful not to seem unnatural. Don't let your guard down for even a second, let alone a moment. Failure isn't an option; it simply can't be.

—I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail, I can't fail.

Again and again, an alarm bell rang in his head. It was an alert signaling danger. He'd come to this other world and hadn't made any progress, but he prided himself on this one sharpened sense.

Danger was approaching. A mistake was about to be corrected. He didn't know where it was coming from. Stay alert, step lightly, and move his body.

"Whoa there, Ram-chi, I'm not slacking off, okay? I'll definitely, precisely, and perfectly finish my work. You senior folks can just kick back in your rooms and take a siesta for all I care!"

He parried, he dodged, he avoided the situation with flippancy and a superficial smile. Was he doing it right? Was he properly being Natsuki Subaru? Had he avoided suspicion? Even if he managed it in front of Ram, if his true colors were exposed in front of Rem, everything would be ruined.

He had to genuinely and naturally pretend to be Natsuki Subaru. It was simple; it was about himself. He just needed to revert to the lazy pig he was before, completely oblivious to the inner thoughts of the mansion's residents, innocently, unreservedly, impudently, and shamelessly just enjoying whatever was given to him. He was supposed to be good at knowing nothing, understanding nothing, noticing nothing, and doing nothing. He should have been able to do only that. It should have been easy. He should have been able to do that much with a smile.

He walked with a silly grin, a fixed smile plastered on his face. He was inside the mansion. He didn't know who he might run into where. He knew there was no such thing as free time during free hours. All empty time had to be spent recalling the past and planning future actions.

"Oh, ugh…"

Suddenly, a wave of nausea welled up. Only a groan escaped his lips, but Subaru never let his smile falter. His feet continued to skip, and he glided, almost danced, into a nearby guest room.

Then, he headed to the washroom built into the room, and—

"…Obufwa! Ugh, oueh…!"

He emptied the already hollow contents of his stomach into the sink. Any food or drink he consumed was immediately thrown up. All that came out was yellowish gastric acid, and he was so wrung out from the constant retching that even his stomach acid had run dry. Still, to satisfy the unending nausea, he gulped down water from the sink to fill his stomach, only to promptly vomit it back up. He repeated this, again and again, as if trying to wash out the contents of his stomach.

"Haah… haah, haah…"

He roughly wiped his mouth with his sleeve, his face pale, and gasped for breath. The crushing pressure alone felt like it could kill him. If this relentless, stressful time continued, he felt like he could simply waste away and die. He scoffed at his absurd condition, yet not even a dry chuckle escaped him. All that surfaced was an endless well of anxiety and despair rising from his chest.

—Am I doing this right?

Looking back, the time when his relationship with the mansion's residents was best was probably during his first, ignorant loop. So, should he follow the first loop and try to replicate the same situation? No, doing that would be nothing more than tracing the second loop. The second loop copied the first loop's events, but with the added misery of his weakening magic and Rem's judgment. It would simply be going down the wrong path again. If the third and fourth loops were out of the question, then Subaru should indeed emulate the first loop. This time, instead of merely copying the first, he'd aim to do it better than the first.

In the first loop, his abilities at every job were low, but he believed he tackled every assigned task head-on. In the second loop, his attempt to replicate the first loop's results was seen through and judged as laziness. Therefore, this time, he would give his all, just like in the first loop, and produce even better results than before. If he did that, Ram and Rem wouldn't abandon him. If he could just avoid the path where they punished him, one of Subaru's worries would be lifted. But the problem was,

"I still have no idea where the curse user is."

Since Rem was killed, the culprit must be someone from outside. Someone targeting the mansion—if it was related to the Royal Selection, then Subaru, who wasn't familiar with those relationships, was effectively at a dead end. To expose the sorcerer's true identity, the cooperation of the mansion's residents was absolutely essential. At the very least, warning them wouldn't be useless. But then, how much influence did Subaru currently have in this mansion?

"Who's going to listen to my suggestions when I haven't even earned their trust…?"

On top of that, Subaru was constrained by not being able to reveal his source of information.

That's why he endured the frustrating and roundabout process, spending his time with a constant, stomach-churning tightness. Not enough time. The lack of time was maddening. He wasn't confident he could endure this painful time any longer. He wanted it to end quickly. But it couldn't end. His words wouldn't reach them. He needed time for them to reach. And he didn't have that time. He had to do something. He felt sick, it was agonizing.

His thoughts repeatedly wandered into the cul-de-sac they'd reached so many times before. Last night, too, he'd been swallowed by this endless spiral, unable to sleep a wink. The powerlessness of trying to shake off a clearly defined anxiety without finding a solution. If only he could have chosen the option of simply screaming "Danger!" even if they thought he was crazy, it wouldn't be a bad gamble if it saved everyone in the mansion. Measures would be taken beforehand, and everyone in the mansion would safely greet the fifth day. If the sorcerer chose to retreat due to the worsening situation, it would be a perfect ending.

—But he couldn't bear not being there himself.

Subaru wasn't enlightened or saintly enough to simply be content if they were just safe. His desire was for everyone in the mansion to survive and to overcome the fifth day harmoniously, with him by their side. He didn't possess a spirit of self-sacrifice to begin with. He was greedy, extravagant, stubborn, and utterly boorish by nature. That's why,

"Ah, damn it… I'm pathetic."

Despite resolving to take his own life, he couldn't stop himself from hesitating when the opportunity presented itself. Once a life is picked up, it becomes precious. If something you thought you'd discarded returns to your hands, you can't easily let it go again. Subaru was the same. The life he thought he'd thrown away, the life that should have ended. After winning the gamble and returning, what struck Subaru when he realized it was back in his hands was the terror of losing it again.

He couldn't fail; there were no more chances. This was the fifth time. And Subaru wasn't the type to optimistically believe he could "Return by Death" again afterward. He was able to come back this time. Next time, he might not. The constant mental erosion of being aware that this version of himself might be the last, that he was always on the edge of a cliff—the more sane one was, the more it pushed them to the brink. He wasn't so insane as to act recklessly, nor did he possess the courage to stake everything and fight back. Utterly ordinary, utterly mundane. He was painfully reminded of how insignificant he was, to the point of disliking himself.

"Do you have time to complain, you idiot…?"

If he had time to even utter a single complaint, it was more important to crack a light joke and make a good impression. Before he knew it, he shook off the fading nausea, slapped his stiff cheeks, and admonished himself. Then he headed out of the guest room. Currently, it was free time after finishing his assigned work, but even that time was precious now. In any case, he needed to find Ram or Rem, and then—

"I finally found you."

As he leaned out of the door, he heard a voice call out to him. He turned around to see Emilia, catching her breath. The moment her silver hair, swaying in the breeze, entered his vision, Subaru's consciousness sharply switched gears. He adapted to the situation, forgetting all stomach pain, chest tightness, and suffocating feelings. Now, he turned back to Emilia, his cheeks stretching into a lecherous grin.

"Well, well, well, Emilia-tan calling me specifically? How delightfully embarrassing and rare! Say anything, command anything! For you, I'd dive into fire, water, or even the darkness of a stolen goods warehouse!"

He pointed a finger to the sky, swayed his hips, and struck a pose in rhythm. He felt like he wanted to applaud himself for how quickly he could switch gears. However, Emilia's reaction to him was not what he expected. He had braced himself for a look of exasperation or a sigh, but—

"Subaru…"

"Hey, hey, hey, Emilia-tan, that's not cool. Ignoring my best joke, one I thought up all night. A joke, once used, can't be used again due to freshness! Do you understand how it feels to have the child you painstakingly birthed be killed by Emilia-tan?!"

He bit his sleeve and pretended to cry in vexation. But even to this, Emilia's reaction was meager. Emilia defied all of Subaru's expected reactions, merely looking at him with eyes that mingled sorrow and pity.

—This is bad, his instincts screamed a warning.

"Emilia-tan, why so quiet? If a beauty like you stays silent, I might mistake you for a work of art, take you home, decorate you in a corner of my room, and give you good morning and good night kisses every day!"

Something's wrong, his own voice screamed inside his head, again and again.

Her reaction was unlike any he predicted. A reaction that was neither exasperation nor anger was unexpected. If she were angry, he could still consider how to respond. But for her to look at him with such pained eyes… Did it mean she saw through his clumsy clown mask?

The moment that anxiety pierced him, Subaru remembered the gray cat that was always by her side. Recalling the characteristics of the spirit that claimed to be a cat, he clearly understood the futility of everything he had done so far. How foolish it was to try and put on a superficial act in front of someone who could read minds.

The instant he realized this, Subaru's bluff collapsed. The pasted-on smile vanished without a trace, replaced by the vulnerable expression of a child waiting to be scolded. The awkwardness of continuing to dance, pretending not to be noticed, in front of someone who saw right through him. And more than anything, his tiny pride was deeply wounded by the fact that he didn't want her to know.

A silence fell between them. Subaru no longer had any room to make lighthearted remarks, and Emilia, for her part, was searching for words, her eyes wavering at Subaru's expression.

—He didn't want Emilia to be disillusioned with him. That was the one thing he didn't want. But he didn't even know what to say to make an excuse. There was no way to break through the situation here, either. He tried to open his mouth many times, but the crucial words wouldn't come, leaving him unable to move forward. As Emilia watched Subaru, who was consumed by this frustration, she suddenly murmured, "Alright," and then softly,

"Subaru, come here."

"…Huh?"

"Just come."

She firmly grabbed Subaru's arm, heading into the very guest room Subaru had just emerged from. He was pulled back into the room, only half out the door, and question marks filled his mind, unable to grasp her intention. But Emilia paid no mind to Subaru's confusion, placed her hands on her hips, and looked around the room, then—

"Alright, sit down, Subaru."

She pointed to the floor, her voice unchanged, like silver bells, and said so. Following her finger, he looked down at the floor. The floor was carpeted, and while no one used the room, it was impeccably clean. Of course, the floor was so well-maintained that he could even lie down on it if he wanted.

"Wouldn't a bed or a chair be better to sit on? Why the floor…?"

"Just sit!"

"Yes, as you command!"

She spoke with an uncharacteristically strong tone, and he instinctively obeyed, sitting ramrod straight. Seeing him sit, Emilia nodded contentedly and then came right beside him. Naturally, he had to look up at her from his low position, but he couldn't even entertain any impure thoughts at the moment. He was simply desperate to decipher Emilia's true intentions.

"…Mhm," Emilia whispered softly. She took a breath as if confirming something, or perhaps steeling herself, and then sat in seiza next to Subaru. His heart fluttered at her beauty, so close he could almost touch her, and he stared intently at her pale profile, trying to read her emotions. Suddenly, her pale profile flushed, and he noticed her ears were faintly red.

“This is special, okay?”

“—Huh?”

A question mark appeared at her suggestive words, but before he could voice it, something pushed the back of Subaru’s head. Naturally, his seiza posture couldn’t resist the force, and he was swept forward, stumbling into a soft embrace.

“The position’s a bit off. And it’s prickly.”

Something shifted beneath his head, and Emilia’s shy voice was close beside him. Surprised, he looked up, his eyes widening further at the sight before him. Right above him, so close their faces could almost touch, was Emilia’s face. It appeared upside down, and a vague, distant realization surfaced: “Ah, I’m upside down.”

At this distance, upside down, with a soft sensation beneath his head. These keywords converged, forming a single meaning within Subaru. In other words, this was—

“A lap pillow?”

“It’s kind of embarrassing, so don’t say it out loud. Also, don’t look over here. Close your eyes.”

He was lightly tapped on the forehead, and her palm covered his eyelids, blocking his vision. But Subaru gently removed her hand, protesting,

“Emilia-tan looking shy is also the best, but… what exactly is going on here? When did I earn a reward worthy of this?”

“That kind of strange bravado isn’t good, you know.”

He was tapped on the forehead again. This time, however, she kept her hand on his forehead, and Emilia used her fingers to brush back

Subaru's upside-down bangs.

"I told you, Subaru. When you're completely exhausted, I'd give you a lap pillow. So I'm doing it now. I can't do it all the time, but today is special."

"Special or not, it's only the second day! If I look this exhausted and worn out, then I must have the weakest constitution in all of history…"

"I can tell you're beaten down just by looking at you. You probably won't tell me the full story, will you? I don't think this will make things easier… but it's all I can do."

Emilia interrupted Subaru's words, speaking with a gaze full of affection. Her fingers, which had been combing his bangs, now parted his hair and began to gently stroke his head as if comforting a child. He gave a small laugh, attempting to shrug off Emilia's actions. He wanted to insist she was mistaken, that he wasn't acting pathetic, and he intended to maintain the pretense he'd decided to uphold in front of her.

"Haha… Emilia-tan, like… I, can't…"

His voice cracked, his throat tightened, and the next words wouldn't come out. For some reason, he couldn't disconnect his awareness from the soft touch of her fingers stroking his head.

"Are you tired?"

"N-No, I can still do it. I'm totally fine…"

"Are you troubled?"

"If you're so kind, well, I'll fall for you, you know? Like that, again… that's… haha."

In response to her brief questions, Subaru's words rang hollow. He knew himself that his words were empty of feeling. And then, Emilia gently leaned closer to Subaru and said,

"—That must have been hard."

“—!”

She said it with tenderness. She said it with care. She said it with affection. With just those words, with just that one phrase, the tattered dam inside Subaru burst. It broke, it shattered, and everything he had held back poured out all at once. It was a well of intense emotions he thought he had contained, but had never been able to extinguish.

“It… was hard. It was really, really tough. It was so scary. So incredibly sad. It hurt so much, I thought I was going to die…!”

“Mhm.”

“I did my best, you know. I was trying my best. I was desperate. I was desperately trying to make everything good…! It’s true. Truly, honestly, I’ve never tried this hard before!”

“Mhm, I know.”

“I love this place, you know… I think this place is really important, you know…! That’s why I was desperate to get it back. I was scared. I was so scared. The thought of being looked at with those eyes again… I hated, hated, hated myself for thinking that…!”

His emotions were out of control. Once they exploded, they gushed out like a dam breaking, profusely staining the coward’s face, hidden behind a smiling mask, with tears. The tears wouldn’t stop. Snot ran down his face. His mouth filled with some inexplicable liquid, making Subaru’s choked sobs even more unbearable to listen to. He was pathetic. So shameful. A grown man, sobbing uncontrollably on a girl’s lap while she stroked his head. So shameful he wanted to die. Yet, his heart was filled with such warmth, it felt as if he might just die from it.

Emilia’s reassurances as she listened to Subaru’s complaints were gentle. Even though she said “I know,” it was obvious that she couldn’t possibly grasp even a fragment of Subaru’s experiences. Yet, Emilia’s voice carried a weight that he couldn’t simply laugh off. He didn’t know why. Perhaps he just wanted to believe that. But it was true that Subaru felt as though he had been saved by that inexplicable warmth.

Tears streamed down his face as Subaru continued to cry on Emilia’s lap. He cried and cried, bawling until his pathetic sobs faded into the distant beyond, leaving only the quiet sound of peaceful breathing in the guest room.

2

Rem visited the guest room when Emilia was gently stroking Subaru’s black hair as he slept.

Opening the door silently, Rem spotted Emilia in the room and was about to speak, but Emilia put a finger to her lips, signaling “Shhh,” and Rem closed her mouth. Shaking her short blue hair, Rem calmly surveyed the room. Then, she approached Emilia, who was sitting directly on the guest room floor with Subaru’s head in her lap.

“Is Subaru just sleeping?”

“Yes. Fufu, look, he’s like a child, isn’t he? When I stroke his head, he makes a relieved face.”

Amused, Emilia stroked Subaru and sought Rem’s agreement. Rem responded to her request with a quiet shake of her head.

“It seems Subaru won’t be able to do any more work today.”

“That’s right, he’s off today. To take a break just two days after starting work, he’s a very naughty boy. When he gets better, please punish him for me.”

Emilia chuckled softly, then returned to gently toying with Subaru’s face. She apparently had no intention of moving the sleeping Subaru and freeing her legs. Rem interpreted Emilia’s attitude this way and quietly looked down at Subaru. As he slept innocently, all tension and flippancy had vanished from his expression. For some reason, when he interacted with Rem and her sister, he always displayed a subtle tension before he even smiled. Sensing something significant in that attitude, Rem had even considered strengthening her surveillance.

"Seeing him sleep like this, I lose the desire to do so."

Following Emilia's example, Rem lightly parted his bangs with her finger and murmured. He looked as vulnerable as an infant. His appearance, as if ignorant of the world, was almost pitiful, and Rem's lips curved into the barest hint of a smile.

"I will inform my sister that Subaru is useless today. We'll have to reallocate the work."

Rem bowed, politely stated her intention, and turned her back. She headed towards her sister's location. If she closed her eyes, she would immediately sense her sister's whereabouts. She intended to go straight there and deliver her message as she had just said. From behind her,

"Rem."

She stopped walking at the call and slowly turned her whole body around. There was a significant difference in eye level between her and Emilia, who was sitting on the floor. Yet, Rem felt an inexplicable sense of pressure, as if Emilia was looking down on her. Unaware of Rem's slight surprise, Emilia softly said,

"—Subaru is a good boy, you know?"

Rem responded to the declaration with a deep bow. Then, without another glance, she headed for the door and left the guest room, leaving the two behind. She walked down the hallway, pondering Emilia's words. A faint tremor ran across Rem's expressionless face, unnoticed even by herself.

—Only a faint scent of evil lingered, leaving a slight knot in Rem's heart.

Chapter 32:
I Cried and Screamed and Will Cry No More

1

“Falling into a peaceful sleep on a girl’s lap, with my head being stroked… Looked at on its own, that was a truly exquisite event, I guess.”

Subaru scratched his head, mumbling with an abashed expression. He lowered his eyes, repeatedly stifling sighs, and as he ran his hand through his hair faster, his ears turning red, he continued,

“Crying and whining like a baby, blubbering all my complaints, getting my face completely messed up with tears and snot, and then falling asleep on the lap of the girl I’m crushing on. On top of that, hogging her lap for hours in that state… what kind of humiliation play is this, seriously?”

He recalled the feeling of Emilia’s lap and the terrible state of her lap after several hours of Subaru’s deep sleep. It was a dreadful mess of tears, drool, snot, and other fluids, a condition that was inexcusable both hygienically and purely from the perspective of Subaru’s “boy factor.”

Yet, she hadn’t spontaneously tried to wake him until he awoke, and despite her clothes being soiled like that, she didn’t blame Subaru when he woke up and profusely apologized.

“If you were able to rest even a little, that’s enough. Besides, Subaru, you don’t understand.”

“Huh?”

“Instead of saying ‘I’m sorry’ over and over, when it’s like this, saying ‘thank you’ just once is enough to satisfy the other person. I didn’t do it because I wanted an apology; I did it because I wanted to do it for you.”

Who wouldn't be swayed if a finger was placed on their lips to stop their apology, and then they were told that with one eye closed? No one, that's who. In fact, Subaru was instantly and completely won over. He was already head over heels for her anyway, so this was just the final, overwhelming push.

He parted ways with Emilia, who said she was going to change, and wandered around the mansion for a while in a daze, then came back to his senses in this sorry state. Looking back at his actions today, he wanted to cry at how pathetic he was. But after crying so much, he couldn't shed any more tears now.

"No, I'm really not good. What was that about not wanting Emilia-tan to see my weak side? I just showed her the most embarrassing part of me! How am I ever going to face her again?"

"…Entering someone's room late at night, and that's what you have to say, I suppose? I thought it was peaceful since I hadn't seen you all day, but this is an unwanted disaster, in fact."

Beatrice, perched on the middle rung of a stepladder, grumbled, glancing sideways at Subaru writhing near the entrance.

After wandering around the mansion and concluding that he couldn't possibly face anyone while sober, Subaru had headed to this forbidden small room, unreachable by anyone else. Although, for the young lady who was its master, it was likely quite displeasing. However, that wasn't the only reason he came here.

"Don't say that, Beako. We're buddies, aren't we?"

"What kind of relationship is there between Betty and you… wait, in fact. Before that, what did you just call Betty, I suppose?"

Beatrice asked, raising an eyebrow and her cheek twitching. Subaru clapped his hands at her reaction.

"Ah, 'Beako.' Nicknames are for people you feel a certain level of intimacy with. I think it's necessary. Up until now, you were the only one in the mansion I didn't feel that way about, but…"

He recalled the previous loop, the time when he was steeped in despair. Even if it wasn't a situation where she was swayed by his smooth talk, a contract had certainly been made between them. Beatrice had faithfully kept her word, and she even helped Subaru by deliberately vagueing the terms of the contract. Even if she had forgotten it, he couldn't possibly forget how he felt saved back then. That's why,

"No matter what you think of me, I'll call you Beako. That's the most I can do to show my affection for you—!"

"Betty's not happy at all, in fact! What is this pushy goodwill?! It's not just gross, it makes Betty feel sick, in fact!"

"What's with your tone?! I'm seriously trying to express my heartfelt gratitude, this isn't a time to make fun of me!"

"If you can say you weren't joking after reflecting on what you just said, then what's happening between you and Betty isn't a conversation anymore, it's something else that feels like a conversation, in fact!"

Subaru, who thought he was trying to have a back-and-forth conversation, was told he was playing Kabaddi instead and stammered. It was his way of showing affection, but unfortunately, it didn't seem to resonate with her. He was genuinely disappointed and couldn't help but slump.

"Well, even so, I'm still going to keep calling you Beako."

"That's unnecessary persistence, in fact. Then Betty will absolutely not respond to such a name, I suppose. With that, our opinions align, in fact."

"Don't be so cold, Beako."

"…………"

Despite Subaru's call, Beatrice remained silent, her gaze fixed on her book. It seemed she intended to put her earlier statement into practice. Approaching her stubborn figure, Subaru circled around the stepladder.

"Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako, Beako…"

"—You're uniquely annoying, in fact! What is it, I suppose?!"

He chanted her name like playing Kabaddi. Beatrice's emotions, constantly whispered into her ear, reached their boiling point, and Subaru pumped his fist, having achieved his goal. Then he turned back to her, and with a twisted grin at the still fuming girl, he said,

"I'm cornered and out of options. Frankly, I need your help."

—He pathetically cried and fell into a disgraceful disarray, and in the end, he conveyed the conclusion he'd reached to the vertically-coiled-haired girl.

2

After pouring out his inner turmoil on Emilia's lap, and letting all the pent-up, ugly feelings and uncontrollable tears flow out, what remained within Subaru was his own pure greed.

He loved Emilia. He loved life in the mansion with her. He loved the environment where he could learn so many things. He loved Ram, who, despite her bluntness, took care of him in many ways.

He absolutely loved Emilia. He loved Rem, who subtly insulted him with polite language while guiding him. Emilia-tan was truly an angel. He owed a debt of gratitude to Roswaal for providing this paradise-like situation. He now also owed Beatrice a debt he could never repay. He held an unshakable fondness for the people living in this mansion. He couldn't discard the happiness of being there himself.

Feelings welled up so much they choked him. The indelible memories of happiness were the source of his vitality. But as he thought of that—

He loved Emilia. He felt useless for not having the power to protect her. Life in the mansion was relentlessly stressful. He didn't know when he might be abandoned. Ram, who had severed his leg with a blade of wind and pierced his neck, was terrifying. Rem, who repeatedly tortured him even while healing his wounds, and crushed his skull with an iron flail, was horrifying. The unfathomable madness of Roswaal, who employed these two and likely could give the order to ruthlessly exterminate Subaru, was sickening. The constant need to check if he was still alive upon waking, and to confirm that despair wasn't creeping in, was excruciatingly painful and sad.

That, too, was the undeniable truth within Subaru. Conflicting emotions couldn't tolerate each other's existence, and Subaru spent his time struggling to live, holding them within him, on the surface and deep inside. It was as if he had to walk barefoot on thin ice, constantly smiling without showing even a hint of his soles being peeled away.

Emilia had seen and scooped up Subaru's agony, his miserable torment of resisting despair.

Perhaps Puck had noticed it. A spirit who could read minds would have easily seen through Subaru's clumsy mask. But even so, it was Emilia who comforted Subaru's heart, a heart that was on the verge of breaking.

He didn't care if this was dependence. There was not an ounce of doubt that the driving force behind Subaru's heart now was his feelings for her. Yes, in other words—

"Emilia-tan is truly an archangel!"

"Did you just utter something intensely idiotic, I suppose?"

"Of course not. I just reconfirmed the most important thing to me."

He could answer that with confident pride, puffing out his chest. And having his statement completely affirmed, Beatrice sighed, as if too weary to even bother showing exasperation.

"Let's get back to the point, in fact… Well then, about you asking for Betty's help, I suppose."

"Yeah, it's seriously like a prayer to God. I can't think of anyone else to cling to."

Currently, the only person in this mansion Subaru could fully trust was, of course, Emilia. But her existence was also the most crucial factor for Subaru. In short, he didn't want her to be in danger.

For Subaru, who prioritized his own life above all else, her existence was the only thing truly comparable to his life. Therefore, in this loop, with the confrontation with the sorcerer in mind, he wanted to avoid using her help until the very last moment. That naturally made it difficult to borrow the power of Puck, who was always by her side, leaving him with only one remaining option—

"Somehow, you're actually quite sweet, you easy-to-sway Beako."

"Even if Betty doesn't understand the content, she can sense the insulting atmosphere, in fact?"

"I have absolutely no intention of that… Honestly, you're the only one I can rely on in this mansion right now."

He couldn't confide in Ram or Rem, nor of course in Roswaal. If Subaru could rely on anyone in this mansion besides Emilia, it was her.

"Please. —I'm begging you."

So, Subaru knelt on the floor before her and bowed his head, making his plea. For her cooperation. To become a guiding light for Subaru's path, to bring an end to the repeating chain of despair.

"I need your power. All of it, everything. I want to protect the place where I can be happy."

"…"

As he remained bowed, a silence fell between them. While waiting for a reply, Subaru's heart hammered anxiously against his chest. But as the prolonged silence stretched on, the sound gradually faded, and Subaru, feeling suspicious, lifted his gaze slightly. And then,

"…Beatrice?"

He unintentionally called her by her name, forgetting their previous exchange. Her expression, as she stared at Subaru, was filled with such sorrow that it made him do so. Her brows slightly furrowed, her lip bitten, Beatrice glared at Subaru. But to Subaru, it looked like a face that was about to burst into tears.

He held his breath, silently waiting for her next reaction. Beatrice then took a moment to compose the waves of emotion within herself, and quietly, with her eyes closed, she replied,

"…Betty has no reason to grant your request, in fact."

She said it weakly.

"Beako… I…"

"Silence, I suppose, human. Betty won't always be kind, in fact. If you're getting ahead of yourself, Betty won't forgive it, I suppose."

Beatrice interrupted Subaru, rattling off her words quickly. Subaru was silenced by her overly sensitive reaction, surprised and bewildered as to what he had said earlier had struck a nerve.

That, in turn, must have strengthened her already uncooperative stubbornness, leading to this deterioration of the situation. He had intended to express his sincerity, but it had backfired. It was a result he regretted endlessly, but Subaru no longer possessed the delicate mental fortitude to dwell on it. Something backfiring was already a common occurrence in this situation. How many times could he remember the dice landing favorably in these five repeated worlds? Thinking that, he could crush any lingering, weak heart. In the first place, that weak part of himself that might have made him stop, he'd already flushed it all out with snot and drool on Emilia's lap. He decided he hadn't shed any tears. A man who cries on a girl's lap, let alone in front of her, is the worst kind of man. He had his pride; he was a man, after all.

"Listen, Beatrice. I understand why you want to push me away. From your perspective, I'm just some rude, inexplicable guy who was brought in yesterday."

"If you understand that much, then you should understand Betty's answer too, in fact."

"I'm grateful you healed my stomach wound. You might not know it, but I have so much to thank you for, and on top of that, I still can't manage without relying on you. It's pathetic. It's utterly miserable. But you're the only one."

He rattled off every thought that surfaced, one after another. He was aware that his persistent demands were selfish and showed no consideration for her feelings, yet Subaru continued to bow his head. Looking down at Subaru's incoherent words and his bowed head, Beatrice gave a small snort, as usual.

"Lamenting your lack of power, pathetically groveling on the ground, begging and clinging. Do you have no pride, I suppose?"

"I've clearly seen what's important. If smashing my head on the ground ten or a hundred times is enough, I'll do it as many times as it takes."

He didn't possess a petty pride that clung to his own insignificance. Keeping his head bowed, Subaru maintained his posture of earnest supplication. He knew it was a cowardly tactic. In the five repeated worlds, Subaru had met Beatrice countless times, and they had argued each time. That relationship, forged through constant bickering, allowed him to understand. Even if Beatrice outwardly adopted a cold demeanor—

"Raise your head, in fact."

A somewhat resigned, gentle voice reached his ears, and Subaru believed his humble plea had been heard. He again realized his own insignificance and felt a blush of shame at his insincere attempt to feign sincerity. However, it was also a necessary step. He had to be pragmatic. More than anything, he had to resolve to use every means at his disposal to achieve the future he desired—

"Bea—"

"Take this, I suppose!"

"Blagh!"

Just as he solidified that tragic resolve, something hard suddenly and forcefully struck his face. His head, still in a dogeza bow, snapped backward, and an indescribable sound echoed through the Forbidden Library, followed by an inarticulate scream. Subaru writhed, bent backward like a shrimp. Unable to comprehend the damage to his cervical spine, he thrashed, his gaze wandering until it locked with Beatrice, who stood with her arms crossed and one foot raised. Understanding dawned. The young girl had delivered a merciless "yakuza kick" squarely to Subaru's face, still bowed in a dogeza.

"You—this—!"

"Betty cannot comprehend the shallow notion that a hundred of your heads rolling around would be worth Betty's effort, in fact. No matter how many copper coins you collect, they will never reach a single Holy Gold Coin. Do you know that, I suppose?"

"No, even if you collect thousands of copper coins, they'd reach a Holy Gold Coin. If you're comparing them by value, that's how it is, right? Are you okay with math?"

"Stop looking at Betty with those pitying eyes, I suppose! Those aren't the eyes of someone who was just begging Betty for help, in fact?!"

Shrieking loudly, Beatrice and Subaru's war of words began. A back-and-forth that never started for the same reason in their many repeated worlds. As their familiar quarrel continued, the tragic resolve Subaru had held somehow began to seem absurd. After such an exchange, the war of words ultimately concluded with—

"Alright, I'll play my trump card. If you cooperate with me, I'll endure your mana drain a few times."

"Your mana isn't as valuable as you think, in fact? Though it's true that compared to normal mana… it was somehow compatible or had a better taste, I suppose."

“My mana has a track record of being absorbed by Puck too. In other words, it’s indirect mana drain. …You understand what I mean, right?”

Beatrice’s expression changed, and the negotiation ended with her biting her lip in vexation as she nodded to Subaru, who was basking in the superiority of leading the negotiation. Looking back, Subaru thought it had been a rather anticlimactic resolution. Of course, by bringing the conversation to that point, he had reluctantly secured Beatrice’s cooperation.

—He knew that the little magician had arranged things that way, though.

Chapter 33:
The Rays of Hope that he Saw and the Shadow of Unrest

Negotiations with Beatrice, which felt somewhat predetermined, concluded, and Subaru successfully secured her cooperation. It was a result heavily reliant on her goodwill, but he decided to put aside any self-reproach for his lack of ability until later. The objective was achieved; self-reflection could come afterward. There'd be no end to it if he started dwelling on "what ifs" in the middle of everything.

Subaru idly touched his chin, suddenly conscious of the time. The Forbidden Library was completely cut off from the outside world, offering no means to track the passage of time. Not even a crystal clock was present, making him think, as he watched the young librarian, that she lived a remarkably free life in that regard.

Based on the stubble on his chin, he estimated it had been about seventeen hours since he last shaved. It was likely around ten at night. Considering he'd crashed on Emilia's lap sometime after noon, he'd overslept by an outrageous margin. He'd been so adamant about not wasting a second, yet the more he thought about it, the more hopeless it seemed.

Realizing that self-loathing was a bottomless pit, Subaru decided to get straight to the point with Beatrice, who appeared to have reached her limit of displeasure. He wondered how much he could explain without revealing too much. Remaining wary of the black mist, he intended to resolve each of his questions one by one.

"…You want to know more about Curse arts?"

"Yeah. I know there are users of that system, unlike Magicians or spirit arts users, but I don't know anything beyond that."

"You always ask the strangest things, in fact. Knowing about those kinds of people won't benefit you in the slightest, I suppose."

Just as before, when he'd only touched upon the subject, Beatrice's expression wasn't bright as she spoke of Curse arts Users. She'd previously stated that she disliked their approach to mana, but this time, he needed to delve deeper.

"Basically, isn't it a system that can only be used to cause trouble for others? I heard it was popular in the northern countries or something like that."

"If you know that much, you don't really need to ask, I suppose. Curse arts users are a nasty bunch, bringing illness to their targets with curses, or imposing restrictions that forbid certain actions, or simply reaping their lives, in fact…"

"Well, it's true that things depend on how you use them, but if it's that biased, you really can't find any use for it other than messing with people."

That's all curse arts was: curses. Supernatural powers that harm others are perhaps a vice that can arise in any culture or society. Though, he thought, the fact that they actually have the power to affect others was probably unique to this world.

Even "Ushi no Toki Mairi" (Ox-Hour Shrine Visit), in a way, fell into the realm of curse arts. Thinking such thoughts, Subaru leaned forward, trying to get the tight-lipped Beatrice to speak.

"Alright, so I want to ask… how do you protect yourself from a curse?"

Intercepting a curse arts user was difficult unless you knew their true identity. However, Subaru's advantage in this situation was knowing that an attack would occur. Even if he didn't know the Witch's identity, he knew they would use Witchcraft, so devising a way to defend against it was a logical and reasonable approach. A brilliant idea, if he did say so himself.

However,

"You can't, in fact."

"—Huh?"

"There's no way to prevent a curse arts once it's been activated, in fact. It will never disappear until it exerts its full power and fulfills its curse on the target, I suppose."

"Is that even allowed? Instant death resistance nullification…?"

Beatrice's flat declaration almost broke Subaru's spirit. A surprise attack with an instant death resistance nullification spell—just thinking about it brought a mountain of criticism as a combat condition.

"A chant simultaneously with the start of combat. I have no means to resist, so this is a checkmate. It's checkmate, I tell you! This is a terrible game!"

He tore at his hair, re-realizing the grimness of his situation. The faint glimmer of hope he'd had moments ago shattered into a million pieces, and Subaru's mind boiled, desperately searching for another solution. His face was like Baron Ashura, one half blue with despair, the other red with defiance. To such a Subaru, Beatrice said,

"However, that only applies to activated curse arts, in fact."

She said, loosening her lips as if revealing a trick. Subaru let out a breathless "Huh?" and looked up, seeing Beatrice's smug expression. Though the girl's face suggested she'd perfectly duped him, Subaru's heart was completely frozen. The immense temperature difference that had just occurred made Beatrice's eyes flutter slightly.

"…I don't think you need to be so angry, in fact."

"Me. Serious. Next. None."

He managed to reply in broken words, killing his emotions. Inside, he was raging with insults and abuse for Beatrice, but he wanted to avoid a confrontation with her right now. After all, a glimmer of hope was finally appearing.

Beatrice held up a finger as if giving a lecture, and said, "As I said, there's no way to prevent an activated curse arts, I suppose. However, you can interfere with the curse before it's activated, in fact. Before activation, it's merely a ritual, not curse arts, so any entity with a certain level of skill can easily dispel it, I suppose."

"For example?"

"In this mansion, first there's Betty. Of course, Big Bro. Then Roswaal and… the three little girls might not be able to, I suppose. Oh, you can't either."

"I know that firsthand…"

He was greatly indebted to her the first and second times. Putting that aside, Subaru pressed Beatrice further.

"How do you distinguish a ritual before it's activated? Or rather, does curse arts require preparation before it's cast?"

"Of course, in fact. The stronger the ritual you handle, the heavier the burden on you. It's the same with everything, I suppose. Curse arts especially has a strong aspect of that, in fact. Considering its effect on people, it's a natural price, I suppose."

"Can you… guess the price of that curse arts?"

With a desperate hope, Beatrice closed one eye, pondered for a moment, then licked her lips.

"The content changes depending on what kind of curse arts effect it has, in fact. But there's one rule that can never be broken, I suppose."

"A rule that can't be broken…"

Subaru held his breath, urging Beatrice to continue after she paused. In response to Subaru's pleading gaze, Beatrice lightly tucked her chin.

"—Contact with the target of the curse arts. That's an essential condition, in fact."

She declared.

The moment that information registered, Subaru's mind raced. To perform curse arts, contact between the caster and the target was necessary. This meant that in both the first and second loops, Subaru himself had faced the curse arts user. He tried to search his memory and recall that person.

"Excluding the mansion residents…"

Excluding the residents who could be targets of curse arts, Subaru recalled the first eight days. During that time, he lived as a servant in the mansion and should have had almost no contact with anyone outside the mansion. The external presence Subaru could have possibly contacted during that time was—

"—The village at the foot of the mountain."

In both the first and second loops, Subaru had visited that village. And come to think of it, both times he went to the village were during the crucial daytime hours of the fourth day. The pattern of him being cursed by a Witch in the village, returning to the mansion, and the curse arts activating—leading to his death—flashed through his mind.

If a curse arts user was staying in the village, it would explain why Rem became the target of curse arts in the fourth loop. In that loop, she went to the village and was chosen as the curse arts user's target. In some cases, it might have been Ram, and if Subaru had carelessly gone to the village, it probably would have been him.

It connects. It connects. Everything connected.

"Beako. Do you know how many residents live in the closest village to this mansion?"

Beatrice frowned, taken aback by the sudden change of topic. But perhaps because Subaru's expression was so serious, she didn't point it out. Instead, she shook her head.

"I don't know, in fact. I'm sorry, but Betty doesn't have much knowledge even about the mansion, let alone anything outside the Forbidden Library, I suppose."

"I see. No, it's fine. That's asking too much. Besides, I can just ask Roswaal about that much… And then…"

Was the curse arts user among the residents, or were they a temporary visitor? If it was the latter, finding them wouldn't be too difficult. He could simply ask the villagers and expose the caster. Conversely, if it was the former, identifying them would be incredibly difficult. If they had prepared that meticulously, he'd be at a loss, but—

"That possibility is actually slim."

If he assumed this incident was related to the Royal Selection, the royal family's demise due to the epidemic was only about half a year ago. Including the time it took for Emilia to be named a royal candidate and for the Royal Selection framework to be established, the current situation should be a fresh, chaotic mess that had only unfolded in the past three or four months. He didn't think anyone would have the foresight to hide a curse arts user among the villagers beforehand. If there were, they would either be a prophet or would have "known about the Royal Selection beforehand."

Considering that,

"The curse arts user is an outsider. Finding them wouldn't that difficult…!"

As he spoke, Subaru began to search for holes in his own reasoning. While there were a few points to refine, the general theory wasn't bad. Besides, from the curse arts user's perspective, this was before any action had been taken. Only a god or a devil could know that their presence had already been exposed at this point.

He looked up, searching for a clock, but there was none. He clicked his tongue, but then recalled his stubble timer from earlier and savored the fact that it was still "the night of the second day." Compared to the fourth day, when the situation began to turn for the worse, he still had a full day's leeway. That also meant he could launch a surprise attack on the Witch from his side.

"I've got a lead, you bastard…! I haven't been killed once and almost killed once for nothing, you damn jerk!"

A ray of light appeared. The situation was changing. Despair was parting, and hope seemed to be streaming in from the other side. Subaru instinctively clenched his fist, his voice trembling with joy.

As Subaru rejoiced in the turn of events, Beatrice, who had been left behind, looked displeased. Her adorable cheeks flushed red, and she pouted her lips, expressing her displeasure.

"Asking for my cooperation and then acting like that is truly outrageous, I suppose. If what I said was helpful, don't you have something to tell Betty, in fact?"

"Oh, right! You saved me! Thanks to you, I've found a light! I super love you, Beako!"

"Wha—?!"

Subaru leaped, scooped his hands under her armpits, and lifted her light body above his head, spinning her around. Despite wearing a luxurious dress, the girl's body was as light as a feather. Subaru's mood was also soaring, and that synergy doubled the spinning speed, and then some.

"Let… let me down, I suppose!"

"Hahaha, I feel like I could fly right now! No, let's fly together, Beako?! I can fly! You can fly!"

"Don't get carried away, in fact—!"

"Jump Pro?!"

Magical power erupted from directly above him at close range, hitting him squarely and slamming him to the ground in an incomprehensible posture. The impact entered his head, traveled through his body, and exited straight from his backside. He landed on his rear, his head spinning from the turbulent rush of mana within him. Meanwhile, Beatrice, freed from Subaru's grip, drew a beautiful arc with her small body and flew.

However, just as it seemed the girl would crash wherever she was headed, she abruptly stopped mid-air. She gracefully turned her body, her skirt fluttering, and landed lightly on the library floor with an elegant stillness. She looked down at Subaru, who was still shaking his head miserably on the ground, and with her usual demeanor, snorted.

"That's what you get for acting so familiar and getting carried away, I suppose."

"I saw more than just that though. —It was white."

"—?! Take this, I suppose!"

"D'OH?!"

A second shot blasted Subaru's chin, sending him flying deeper into the library. He tumbled, crashed into a step ladder, and was buried under falling wooden planks. Sharp corners hit him everywhere, and with tears in his eyes from the unbearable pain, he cried out,

"My affection gauge was maxed out and you hit me with a super move for this?! What was your problem, tell me!"

"Everything, I suppose! You hugged me, lifted me like a child, swung me around, peeked at my underwear, and spouted superficial words of love, in fact! At this point, your very existence annoys me, I suppose!"

"Don't deny my entire existence, that's sad! It reminds me of my shut-in days, even though it wasn't that long ago."

His shut-in days felt like a distant past. Indeed, it felt like he had come so far, a distance that could no longer be calculated. He wondered if everyone was doing well. Anyway,

"Now that I've come full circle and calmed down, the situation has improved quite a bit. …Tonight's tough, but tomorrow, I'll head to the village and…"

He decided to investigate the curse arts user's identity. He probably couldn't go alone, so he'd have to go with either Ram or Rem. And if a confrontation with the curse arts user was possible there, having the two strong fighters accompany him seemed essential. If all went well, he'd defeat the curse arts user, and if, by some chance, it turned out that Subaru had no prior connection to the Witch, then everything would end happily. This would be the completion of Mission 2: "Conquer the Roswaal Mansion."

"Mission 2 was seriously so much harder than Mission 1."

He remembered Mission 1 was "Defeat the Thugs," so he really had come a long way when he thought about it.

Recalling the battle with the thugs, which now felt like a long time ago, he then reflected on his days in the mansion. He knew it was too early, but a dead end where he couldn't do anything was finally about to open up. He hoped he could be forgiven for feeling this excited.

He didn't neglect to check his surroundings, wondering if there was anything else he needed to resolve. Precisely because the situation was turning for the better, he suspected there might be a pitfall. It was the caution of a timid person, but then a word suddenly caught in that web of vigilance. It was, “The Witch’s… lingering scent…”

“What is it, I suppose?”

“That’s right. The Witch. Rem too…”

Just a single word, and countless scenes flooded his memory. The word “Witch” had appeared frequently in those scenes, but Subaru still lacked knowledge of its true meaning. The Witch Subaru knew in this world was merely a very short episode in a fairy tale called “The Witch of Envy.”

However, if he recalled, that name had appeared several times, both during the loop on the first day of his summoning and during the repetitions in the mansion this time.

Subaru looked up at Beatrice, who frowned in bewilderment. He felt a slight anxiety about whether she would answer. After all, the last time he’d mentioned it, Ram had flatly cut him off, and Rem had even used it as a motive to attack him. Even Emilia seemed to have a strong resistance to it. Therefore, carrying that anxiety,

“Beako. —Do you know about Witches?”

“…”

There was no immediate answer to his question. Beatrice closed her eyes at the word that had vibrated her eardrums, and fell silent as if confirming the word. Subaru, too, waited, his heart churning from her reaction.

He wondered if, by some chance, that one word had again touched a raw nerve.

“The one who swallowed the world. The queen of the Shadow Castle. —The Witch of Envy.”

Subaru gasped and his eyes widened at the suddenly whispered words. Without noticing Subaru’s reaction, Beatrice let out a melancholic sigh.

“In this world, the word ‘Witch’ refers to only one being, in fact. I’s a being whose name is forbidden to even speak, I suppose."

"Everyone fears her, everyone reveres her, and no one can defy her."

"Yes, that's right, in fact. Rather, the question 'Do you know?' is the more puzzling one, in fact. You couldn't possibly not know, I suppose. In this world, after your parents' names and your family's name, you're taught the name of that Witch, in fact."

"That's… an exaggeration…"

He tried to laugh it off, but seeing no hint of a joke in Beatrice's expression, he swallowed his words. If what she said wasn't a joke, then she was truly a symbol of abomination to the world—.

"The Witch of Envy, 'Satella.' —The worst calamity that once existed, who devoured all six Witches bearing the names of deadly sins and destroyed half the world, in fact."

Beatrice stated in a voice devoid of emotion, then closed her eyes. Subaru let out a short "Huh" at the familiar name, rendered motionless by the weight of the name that had been thrust upon him.

"It's said she ruled the night. It's said she couldn't understand human words. It's said she envied everything in this world. It's said no one who saw her face survived. It's said her body will never decay, never weaken, never end. It's said that even with the power of the Dragon, the Hero, and the Sage, she was sealed but could not be destroyed."

Beatrice rattled off these details, not allowing Subaru to interject. And to conclude the list of information, she added a final "It's said."

"—Her body was that of a silver-haired half-elf."

Chapter 34:
The Witch, the Spirit, and the Mage

The Witch of Envy, Satella.

A supernatural being, once purging the Witches that made the world scream, she wielded their stolen power to obliterate half the world, striking fear into the hearts of all. Her body, sealed within a crystal by a hero's hand, remains imprisoned to this day, impossible to destroy.

Subaru, with his modern sensibilities, found it all absurd. It was an impossible tale by the standards of his original world. While stories of her evil deeds being passed down for centuries might be one thing, the idea that such a being still slumbered somewhere in the world was another.

"Well, it's an age where people know the most popular idol group member even if they don't know the president's name, so I guess I can't really rely on that."

Subaru himself was a prime example of someone who lived a typically bland and unenthusiastic life, uninterested in either.

As he mused, Subaru replayed the details Beatrice had shared, then leaned his cheek on his hand and looked next to him. In the sunlit garden, faint lights floated around Emilia, who sat on the green grass.

It was one of the most beautiful sights in this world, its fantastical impression undiminished no matter how many times he saw it—Emilia's morning routine.

To avoid disturbing her, Subaru scratched his head a little distance away, stifling a rising yawn and letting out a sigh in his butler's uniform.

A night had passed since his meeting with Beatrice in the Forbidden Library, and now it was the morning of the third day. For Subaru, who had spent most of yesterday sleeping, his physical condition was still excellent. He had a mountain of questions he wanted to ask Beatrice from midnight to dawn, but,

“It’s bad for your skin, so go to bed now, in fact. Besides, you made me stay up so late tonight because of you, I suppose.”

The girl, veins throbbing in anger, had chased him out of the library. Thinking back, she was always in that room, but where did she sleep? Aside from the bookshelves, there was Beatrice’s usual stepladder and the desk Subaru occasionally sat at. There was nothing else notable in the room. It was impossible for her to sleep directly on the floor, given her personality.

“Does she have a room or something? I’ve never seen her come out of one though. Not that I’m expecting any pervy coincidences with a little girl like her.”

It would be annoying if she was keeping secrets. He decided that if he got the chance, he would secretly follow Beatrice for a day. That is, once he got out of this loop and life in the mansion became peaceful.

—With another reason to strive forward, Subaru’s lips curved into a smile. Just then,

“You’ve gotten quite a good look on your face, don’t you.”

A voice spoke, and a gray furball appeared before his eyes as he looked up. Or rather, a small cat with a pink nose floated there. It was Puck. He washed his face with his small paws, just like a normal cat would.

“Honestly, I couldn’t bear to watch you yesterday. I’m a little relieved now.”

“Oh, sorry for making you worry. But my sensitive heart still hasn’t recovered at all. I want you to comfort it. Specifically, fluff fluff fluff fluff.”

“Well, that much bravado is fine, I suppose. I’m glad. It means Lia lending you her lap was worth it.”

“By any chance, were you watching that lap pillow too?”

“Well, it went on for so long. I figured it would be tough to sit seiza for hours, so I offered to switch a few times… but you can rest assured. Lia didn’t give up her duty until the end.”

Subaru’s cheeks flushed with shame at Puck’s endorsement. Seeing his reaction, Puck said,

“Hah!”

“Ow—?! Why did you scratch me just now?!”

“As a mother, I found it heartwarming, but as a father, I felt an indescribable discomfort towards you.”

“Are you swaying between a woman’s heart and a man’s heart? You’re complicated too!”

“It’s tough when you have a cute daughter. Oh, so please, move a little further away from Lia, see?”

“He’s resorting to obvious obstruction tactics! This distance is my absolute line! Doesn’t the feeling of being just out of reach have a subtle charm? Please, I beg you!”

Subaru bowed deeply, somehow gaining permission to maintain the status quo. Then, he looked towards Emilia again. She seemed engrossed in conversation with the spirits and apparently hadn’t noticed the exchange between one person and one cat that was shattering the morning’s tranquility. As he watched her serene profile, occasionally breathtakingly beautiful when she smiled, Subaru suddenly murmured under his breath.

“—A silver-haired half-elf, huh?”

That was one of the Witch of Envy’s characteristics, as Beatrice had described. The Witch who shook the world and struck fear into everyone’s hearts, her origins. Subaru, unfamiliar with such a burden in his own life, couldn’t imagine how difficult it must be to share that commonality. But he could infer that it surely wasn’t an easy path.

Yet, despite all that, she had grown up with such an honest and straightforward personality. The way she lived, like a delicate flower, was probably because,

“She was either incredibly blessed by her surroundings. Or perhaps…”

“Because her adoptive parent was good, I suppose. Hehehe.”

Puck put his paws on his hips, leaned back, and chuckled while touching his whiskers. He was an emotional cat. Combining this with Subaru’s mumbled thoughts, Puck must have clearly understood what Subaru was thinking.

As Subaru closed his mouth, having been preempted, Puck began spinning vertically in mid-air.

“Well, her innate nature is a big part of it, I suppose. I don’t intend to tell you everything, but she’s suffered ten thousand times more than you imagine. —Even so, she’s like that, which makes her precious.”

Not a single rebuttal came to mind. It was true that Subaru didn’t know anything about Emilia’s past, and Puck had shared those unknown days with her. And Subaru’s imagination, limited by that of a person who had always lived in comfort, was easily surpassed by reality. People became so helpless when toyed with by fate. Subaru had keenly felt that many times since coming to this world, and Emilia must have experienced it countless times as well.

“Hey, Puck, do you know about the Witch of Envy?”

“I suppose there isn’t much I don’t know.”

“Then, I want to ask… When would someone pretend to be the Witch of Envy? No, ‘pretend’ sounds bad. Should I say, ‘borrow the name of the Witch of Envy’?”

What came to mind was the event from the very first loop, on the day he was summoned. He thought back to that very first incident. At that time, Emilia had falsely introduced herself as “Satella” to the ignorant Subaru. He had a vague idea of her true intention there, but Subaru wanted someone else to confirm it. Even better if it was her closest confidant.

Puck, who had been silent for a while, not understanding the intent of Subaru's question, slowly opened his mouth.

"Either way, I think it's a reckless thing to do. There's no end to people who still hold grudges against the Witch, and the fear and despair etched into their hearts will never disappear. To pretend to be the Witch in such a situation can only be described as crazy."

"Got it."

"?"

Puck raised a questioning eyebrow as Subaru pointed a finger at him. Leaving Puck behind, Subaru clenched his fist mentally, having received an opinion from Puck that affirmed his own theory. Yes, at that point, pretending to be the Witch was something that would naturally be seen as insane. It only didn't happen that way because Subaru was extraordinarily ignorant of common sense, but normally, that's what would happen. So why did Emilia give that name, knowing what would happen?

"If she acted crazy and made me uncomfortable, she wouldn't have to involve me in dangerous things like finding the insignia."

He thought she must have wanted to push him away. Emilia's intention, as she had acted, was now lost to another dimension, and only Subaru knew about that exchange. And Subaru would never have the chance to ask her true intentions. However, that was the only way he could think about it. And if he thought that way, Subaru had received enough from her to believe it was the conclusion. In short,

"Emilia-tan is truly like Maitreya Bodhisattva!"

"Don't compare people to things you don't understand well."

As Subaru, convinced of Emilia's maternal kindness across dimensions, the person herself approached with a wry smile. Having finished her conversation with the spirits, the faint lights that had floated around her were gone. Instead, Puck, who had been swimming beside Subaru until now, hopped onto her shoulder.

“Back to my usual spot. This is the most comfortable place after all.”

“Yes, yes, welcome back. I’m always sorry. But when Puck’s around, the other spirits get intimidated.”

“Intimidating spirits is beyond awesome, it’s amazing. It makes it seem like I’m important, which is a misunderstanding.”

“Hehehe, I am important, even if I don’t look it. I demand more reverence! Specifically, how about dried sardines as an offering?”

“You’re totally a cat…”

Puck started shaking his head in a peek-a-boo style. Emilia stroked his gray head with her finger, then turned to face Subaru again. When he became aware of her beauty directly in front of him, Subaru found himself almost involuntarily averting his gaze.

He felt awkward, of course. After all, he’d had a lap pillow, cried his eyes out, had his head stroked for several hours, and then they’d parted. Only one night had passed since then. He truly felt like he wanted to roll around on his bed with a pillow, wondering what kind of face he should make when meeting her again. The fact that he still came to see her showed how serious Subaru’s condition was. He was in a severe state of Emilia addiction. He could no longer live without her.

“Um, it feels a little embarrassing, doesn’t it? …Are you feeling alright?”

“I was having withdrawal symptoms, but I just got rid of them, so I’m perfectly fine. Emilia-tan, yourself… uh, thanks for everything, I’m sorr—”

He started to apologize, then stammered, swallowed his words, and rephrased.

“Thank you for everything. My head and heart were a murky labyrinth, but I think I'm feeling a little better now."

"It doesn't seem like you've completely shaken it off, but it's progress that you're even thinking about shaking it off. Yes, if I could help even a little, that's fine. If you feel like you're wearing thin again, just tell me. Your big sister will be kind to you."

Emilia put her hand on her chest and chuckled, teasing him. That, too, was probably her thoughtfulness to lighten his guilt. Seeing her face, which looked genuinely happy about acting older, made him wonder if she actually meant it, and his thoughts wavered slightly. Anyway,

"Being well is the most important thing. You have to work hard today, right? You slept at a strange time, but aren't you sleepy?"

"Don't worry about that. Shut-ins like me generally sleep during the day and are awake at night. I've been a bit too healthy lately."

"You say 'shut-in' sometimes, but what is that?"

"It's about a brave person who burns charcoal briquettes in their room and gambles on whether a pink-haired magician will jump in to save them."

Honestly, that was the act of people on a whole other spiritual level. Emilia nodded slightly, taken aback by the strangeness of Subaru's words. Watching her reaction, Subaru suddenly realized,

"Speaking of magicians, Emilia-tan, you're one too, aren't you? What kind of magic can Emilia-tan use?"

Asking about what kind of magic someone could use was something that could only happen in another world. Subaru almost chuckled, having uttered such an unexpectedly fantastical question. But Emilia shook her head at his question.

"Strictly speaking, I'm not a magician. In my case, it's not just my contract with Puck, but I'm a spirit arts user. I use spirit arts, not magic. The principles are almost the same though."

"Magicians and spirit arts users are different?"

"What kind of difference is that, sensei?"

He raised his hand and posed a question to Puck, the lecturer. The cat straightened his posture and, clearly pleased, relaxed his cheeks.

"It comes down to whether or not you use a gate, so the difference is quite significant. For a magician, the size and number of gates directly relate to their aptitude as a magician. But for a spirit arts user, that doesn't matter much. They use outside mana regardless of a gate."

"So, magicians draw in mana from outside through a gate, and use the mana stored inside to cast spells. And spirit arts users don't have that, right?"

As he chewed on Puck's explanation, Subaru tilted his head at a question that suddenly arose partway through.

"No, no, then spirit arts users would be overwhelmingly advantageous. In other words, magicians store fuel internally, but spirit users can import as much fuel as they want from outside… unlimited MP means it wouldn't be a fair fight."

"You understand quickly, but it's not that convenient. The mana filling the atmosphere isn't infinite, and…"

Puck cut himself off and looked up at Emilia. Receiving his gaze, she took over the explanation.

"The strength of the arts a spirit arts user can handle depends on the power of the spirit they serve. Besides, contracting with a spirit itself seems to be quite rare, so I don't think one is superior to the other compared to a magician."

"Hmm… But if you contracted with a powerful spirit, that would be pretty good, right? Emilia-tan, isn't Puck actually pretty amazing?"

"Well, I won't deny that I'm one of the ones you'd count from the top."

"You're usually so gentle, but when you speak your mind… you really stick to your guns, huh?"

Subaru had a lot to say about strong egos, but even he was surprised by Puck's unwavering nature. It must be the difference in experience. A greenhorn and a Great Spirit were simply years apart in accumulated wisdom.

Despite that, perhaps unaccustomed to praise, the Great Spirit chuckled bashfully, looking quite pleased. Subaru pointed at him.

"By the way, what kind of spirit are you, Puck? You were spitting out ice like crazy in the loot warehouse… but if I remember correctly, I thought there wasn't even an ice attribute."

During a lecture from Roswaal in the bathhouse some time ago, Subaru had heard about the four standard types: fire, water, earth, and wind. In addition to those, there were only the dreaded yin and yang systems. Responding to Subaru's question was Emilia, who was stroking Puck's head. She turned her right palm upwards.

"It's ice, but this is actually fire mana. Fire mana is mainly related to heat, so both hot and cold are broadly categorized as fire."

The air crackled, and an icicle appeared slightly above her palm. The icicle, about the size of a traffic cone, pointed its sharp tip towards him and began to rotate like a drill.

"You might not mean anything by it, but that's scary?! If I had a phobia of sharp things, I'd pee my pants right now!"

"Ah, sorry. I was just trying to explain it clearly and got carried away… I summoned it, but I don't know what to do with it."

"Thinking of using it as a meaningless threat is dangerous! I prefer the graceful and lovely Emilia-tan!"

"Yes, yes."

Emilia gave a perfunctory affirmation, then clapped her hands, and the icicle dispersed. It didn't melt or shatter; it literally dissipated into a fine powder. It was a strange principle, but its fantastical nature never failed to attract Subaru's curiosity. Perhaps his fidgety excitement showed on his face. Puck, who had been watching the silent Subaru, suddenly asked, “Hmm, perhaps you want to use magic?”

“Can I?! If I can, then! An ultimate annihilation spell…!”

“No, you can’t. You shouldn’t make light of the basics of either magic or spirit arts, I suppose. Magic isn’t built in a day.”

Puck folded his arms, directly striking down Subaru’s surging curiosity. His spirit broken, Subaru slumped his shoulders. Perhaps feeling sorry for him, Puck fiddled with his whiskers and said, “But,”

“I suppose I could let you have a simple experience?”

“Meaning?”

“In short, since you want to use magic, either Betty or Lia can assist you. We’d use the mana inside your body and cast magic through you. For us, it’s just a matter of whether the mana comes from the atmosphere or from you, and the magic itself will come out of your gate. How about it?”

“Hold on, Puck, don’t make promises so easily. It might be dangerous, you know.”

Emilia, his partner, admonished Puck’s tempting offer. She seemed genuinely concerned about the safety of the act, but,

“Sorry, Emilia-tan. I appreciate your concern. I’m super happy about it… but I’m gonna do it!”

Subaru gave Emilia a confident smile, flashing his teeth with a thumbs-up. Emilia blinked several times, unable to hide her surprise at Subaru’s attitude, which completely dismissed any negative thoughts or concerns.

“Wh-Why are you so…?”

“Even when I know it’s dangerous, even when I know the risks, there are times when a man just has to do what he has to do. …If I miss a chance like this, where I might be able to use magic, then there’s no point in being summoned to another world!”

A roar from his soul, clenching his fists. Right now, Subaru was more excited than he'd ever been since coming to this other world. For Subaru, who had only ever received aesthetic benefits from this otherworldly boon, mostly from seeing beautiful people, he couldn't talk about this other world if he missed this chance.

Perhaps realizing that it was useless to oppose Subaru's enthusiasm, Emilia gave in, emphasizing, "I'll stop you immediately if it seems dangerous." Subaru accepted her advice with a good smile and turned back to Puck.

"What should I do first? Do I have to draw a magic circle or sacrifice Beako or something?"

"I'm glad you're getting along with Betty. Right, let's start by checking your attribute, I suppose. We can't start until we know what kind of magic you can use."

Hearing Puck's suggestion, Subaru's cheerful expression instantly clouded over. Puck blinked his black eyes at his obvious reaction, but Subaru waved his hand dismissively.

"My… attribute… is… definitely… 'Fire'… I think?"

"Why are you suddenly speaking in broken sentences?"

Subaru slowly shook his head with a creaking sound, as if it was about to snap, in response to Emilia's question. He didn't want to remember anything beyond that. But Puck, disregarding Subaru's thoughts, flew from Emilia's shoulder and hovered in front of Subaru's face.

"Alright, excuse me."

"Whoa, what is this new sensation?"

He extended his tail, which was as long as his small body, and placed its tip on Subaru's forehead. He was probably checking the mana inside Subaru's body. He thought that before, when he had communicated telepathically with Emilia, they had pressed their foreheads together, but the difference in treatment made him feel envious of the good fortune of having his forehead touched by Emilia.

“Trying to gloss over it doesn’t change reality… No, wait, let me try to think positively, like myself. Come to think of it, wasn’t Roswaal’s attitude at that time unnatural? Yes, he was jealous of my rare talent as a magician slumbering within me. Oh, shit! Yes, he was jealous of me. That’s why he spouted all sorts of nonsense to try and close off my brilliant path as a magician…”

“That’s rare. You were straight ‘Yin’ attribute.”

“SECOND OPINION—!!”

Subaru despaired at the endorsement from a different person across dimensions. Unless Puck and Roswaal were secretly conspiring on this matter, he had no choice but to believe this result. How likely was it that this laid-back cat, who lived by the motto “My way is my way, others’ ways are others’ ways!”—a phrase his own mother often used—would lie out of jealousy of Subaru’s talent?

“A debuff specialist, huh… I wanted to unleash lightning bolts and blow away armies of ten thousand…”

“Oh, and you have absolutely no talent either. Your gate is small, and only the number of them is slightly better, I suppose? Many of them aren’t fully open, so the ventilation seems poor, too.”

“I know! Shut up! Don’t talk about me like a room with uncleaned window screens! By the way, if you quantify my talent, what would it be like?”

“If you devoted yourself solely to magic training for twenty years, you might become almost first-rate, I suppose.”

“Betting half my life to be less than first-rate… I’m giving up on this path…!”

Emilia looked exasperated at Subaru’s declaration of giving up on his dream, holding back tears. But it couldn’t be helped. The concepts of “effort” and “hard work” were so unwelcome in Subaru’s dictionary that they had claw marks on them. Still, putting that sentiment aside, “I still want to try a magic experience, so please do it. What should I do?”

“It’s the ‘Yin’ attribute, huh—a bit surprising. For simple ‘Yin’ magic, what was there, Lia?”

“For Yin attribute, I thought ‘Shamak’ for blinding people was one… but I’m sorry, I’m not very confident.”

Emilia lamented her lack of ability. In front of her, Puck clapped his paws and said, “Oh, right.”

“Shamak, huh, that’s something rarely used, I suppose. Well, let’s aim to use that for now.”

“Hold on, hold on, hold on. I can’t just go along with it as if it’s obvious. First of all, what kind of spell is Shamak? What if I use it without knowing its effect and some weird power turns me into a frog? In that case, Emilia-tan, please turn me into a prince with a kiss.”

“Am I the only one who feels like the beginning and end of that sentence don’t connect?”

Subaru winced at her scrutinizing gaze. Meanwhile, Puck nodded, agreeing there was some truth to Subaru’s point.

“You’re right. It might be a little scary to use an unknown spell. Well, let me show you. This is Shamak.”

With a flick of his short arm, Puck completed the brief incantation. Suddenly, Subaru’s vision was plunged into darkness. Even after blinking and opening his eyes, his sight remained as dark as if his eyelids were still closed. He let out a small cry of surprise, but even his own voice didn’t reach his ears. The darkness that had appeared completely severed Subaru from his vision and the outside world, sending a sensation akin to dread down his spine.

“Alright, that’s the end.”

“Mom—… wait, huh? Did I come back?”

"You came back. By the way, Subaru. You just called me 'Mom' because you were so anxious, didn't you?"

"I wouldn't do something so unmanly?! That was, you know, like calling your teacher 'Mom' in school, that kind of thing!"

His vision returned, and he breathed a sigh of relief seeing Emilia's beauty and the small cat side by side in front of him. He touched his eyelids, confirming there was no change.

"So that was the blinding spell, Shamak, huh? It's plain, but it seems like it could be quite effective, doesn't it?"

"Not really. Unless the opponent is weaker or of equal strength, it'll just be repelled by pure difference in power and won't last long. If I were to cast it on you, Subaru, I could make you spend your whole life in darkness, though."

"That thought is scary?! I'm confident I'd be groggy if that state lasted just one day, let alone longer!"

Subaru chuckled wryly, subtly clenching his trembling fist behind his back. The memory of the moment everything felt distant, being assailed by a sense of desolation as if left alone in the world, was still fresh. That feeling—the time when he felt utterly alone, with no one on his side—he suddenly recalled it, and his hands trembled.

Biting his tongue in shame, Subaru smiled.

"Anyway, whether it works or not, I can use that spell now, right? I want to try it right away!"

"Alrighty. Well, I'll provide the assistance. Lia, please stay away, as in the unlikely event mana goes wild and Subaru explodes, your clothes would get dirty."

"That's a truly unlikely scenario, isn't it?! That's almost an impossible failure case, right?!"

Puck smiled silently and amiably, while Emilia, with a slightly crestfallen face, said, "Don't push yourself too hard," and actually put some distance between them. In an extremely unsettling atmosphere, the situation began to unfold, leaving Subaru's slightly hesitant mood behind.

Puck settled on the top of Subaru's short black hair, adjusting his position.

"Your head's prickly and uncomfortable to sit on."

"I never thought the day would come when someone would sit on it. I can't even offer you a cushion as hospitality, but make yourself at home."

"Nah, I'm already missing Lia's hair, so I'll finish quickly and go back. So, are you ready?"

Subaru hesitated for just a moment at the question. But then, he slowly nodded, twisting his cheeks into a smile. He was still riddled with anxieties, but he couldn't resist his curiosity.

Receiving Subaru's affirmative answer, Puck also gave a big nod. Suddenly, Subaru felt a sensation of heat throughout his body. It was a feeling distinct from blood circulating—this invisible, raging torrent within his body must be mana. He could feel the energy inside him moving with purpose, transmitted by something from Puck, who was on his head.

"Subaru, try to imagine it. Right now, I'm grasping the flow of mana inside your body and moving it. You need to expel a part of it from your gate, out of your body. It will take shape outside—like the black cloud from earlier."

"Imagine, huh? Leave it to me, I'm good at fantasies."

Subaru slightly misinterpreted Puck's advice, seeking an outlet for the writhing energy within him in his imagination. He envisioned the gate—a portal—in the center of his body. The gate's heavy doors opened, allowing energy to overflow from inside to out. That energy would exit, sublimate into a phenomenon according to Subaru's will—

"Oh, this is troubling. The gate suddenly…"

Just as he reached the final stage, Puck suddenly murmured that. Subaru wasn't given time to ask "What?"

Immediately after—

"Both of you?!"

Emilia screamed, and a few seconds later, an explosively ejected black mist covered a corner of the Roswaal Mansion's garden.

—Although it didn't explode, it was a complete failure.

Chapter 35:
A Pledge of Purchased Goods

1

Subaru was left alone in the darkness.

Darkness covered his entire field of vision. He couldn't hear a sound, nor could he see anyone. Even if he reached out to touch, he couldn't discern if it was the ground or a wall—a forced incomprehension permeated everything.

Unconsciously, he felt his throat tremble as he let out a scream.

He just kept raising his voice, hoping it would reach the distant, distant end of nothingness.

"—ru."

Suddenly, a voice echoed from beyond the darkness.

He clung to this change, born within the 'nothingness,' as if pouncing on it.

He clawed with his hands, moved his legs, and headed toward the voice.

"Subaru—"

Forward, always forward—!!

2

"To get straight to the point, Subaru, your gate isn't the kind you can control, so it's probably best not to push yourself."

"Is that seriously the first thing you say after seeing me like this, you jerk?"

"Tee hee."

"That's not cute at all?!"

Subaru cursed at Puck, who was floating with his arms crossed, delivering his overall assessment, while he himself was experiencing the hard, cold sensation of the grass with his entire body.

Lying face down on the grass, Subaru was gasping for air, his whole body abnormally sluggish. A fatigue akin to a high fever permeated him, and he couldn't feel any fighting spirit in his limbs.

It was a familiar sensation.

It was similar to when Puck drained his mana on his first day after being summoned, or when Beatrice routinely siphoned mana from him.

In short, Subaru was completely out of gas.

"For better or worse, your gate, Subaru, is coarse-grained. That's why it ignored your intentions, and everything just gushed out."

"So… don't… talk about people… like a screen door…"

He was out of breath. How much energy was he wasting just to utter such a weak retort?

He tried to stand up somehow, but he couldn't muster any strength anywhere in his body. In the end, all he could do was lie there and groan.

Emilia knelt down to meet Subaru's gaze in his weakened state,

"Don't move. You've used up all the mana in your body, so you need to stay still. —You might not be able to work today, either."

"—That's a problem!"

Subaru instinctively blurted out sharply, responding to Emilia's attitude, which was like a mother scolding her mischievous son.

As Emilia blinked in surprise, Subaru genuinely and deeply regretted his carelessness.

If he were to truly waste this entire day, it would mean throwing away the one-day reprieve he had gained regarding the loop.

That would be incredibly stupid, and fatal.

To stumble due to his own self-inflicted wounds like this was unacceptable.

"Nngh…!"

He struggled to stand up, channeling his self-reproach into strength.

If he could at least sit up, it would be a bit better. From there, he could gradually regain control and recover.

"Hey, I said you shouldn't push yourself."

"Now is the time to push myself. If I don't do it now, I'll seriously regret it forever…"

It wasn't uncommon for him to bring trouble upon himself through his own actions, but the timing and situation were currently the worst.

Emilia subtly shrugged her shoulders at Subaru's desperate efforts, sweat beading on his forehead.

"There's really no helping it now, is there?"

Emilia spoke again, bending down.

Unsure of her intentions, Subaru looked up at her with just his eyes.

"—? Emilia-tan, what are you—mph!"

Her hand, which had met his gaze, suddenly pressed against Subaru's upturned face. Then, he felt something being pushed into his mouth.

Something round, with a soft texture.

Confused, Subaru looked at her, and Emilia nodded, still covering his mouth with her palm.

"Chew it."

"—?"

"Chew it, and swallow. One, two, three."

Overwhelmed by her unyielding attitude, Subaru bit down hard on the sensation in his mouth.

A sweet and sour taste slowly spread across his palate. He guessed it must have been some kind of fruit based on the texture, and then—it happened.

"Whoaaaaaa—?!"

A heat like fire ignited throughout his entire body, and Subaru sprang to his feet.

His blood seemed to boil, raging inside him, and his limbs, from fingertips to even under his nails, felt like they would burst with energy. His breathing became ragged as if he wanted to expel the excess heat, and unable to suppress the impulse, his legs started doing random high-knees.

After all that, Subaru finally realized he had regained the strength to stand up.

He looked at his hands in disbelief, opening and closing his fists to confirm the sensation.

The heat in various parts of his body hadn't completely subsided, and he could feel a dull fatigue lingering in his joints. However, it wasn't so bad that he couldn't move.

"Wh-What was that just now…?"

"It's a fruit called a 'Bocco.' Eating it activates the mana inside your body, and it's just a temporary measure, but your gate regains some strength."

The identity of the familiar fruit matched the one Subaru had received from the old woman in the slum on his very first loop.

He remembered experiencing similar side effects after eating it that time too—but that was rectified by Pack's mana drain afterward. This time, it seemed the order of events was reversed.

In any case,

"Ah, I'm relieved. If I had ended up on a BAD route like that, I really wouldn't have been able to forgive myself. Thank you, Emilia-tan."

"I didn't want to use it because there aren't many, and it's not good for your body… That wasn't just bluster earlier, was it?"

It seemed Subaru's urgency earlier was genuine enough to make her resort to using such a valuable item.

Subaru looked up at her questioning tone.

"Of course."

He stated emphatically.

Then, wiping his forehead, he added,

"Still, I was an idiot… If it had ended there, I would've died of self-reproach, even more so than last time."

He prided himself on having experienced many things others couldn't, in terms of experiencing various ways to die. But,

"Dying from humiliation, frankly, no thanks."

In the first place, if possible, he wanted his last death to be the previous suicide by jumping. That, too, was incredibly painful because he didn't die instantly.

One death was enough. And if possible, he wanted to meet it in his own bed after living a full life. Or, perhaps, to be watched over in Emilia's arms after achieving some spectacularly cool flag—

"Nah, that's not how I can think, and that's why I'm such a small-minded guy."

Even in jest, he couldn’t casually utter the word ‘death’ anymore.

Only someone who had truly experienced what Subaru had could laugh at him for becoming cowardly.

He turned his body, re-checking his condition.

He was far from perfect, and if anything, there were lingering worries about his state.

However, Subaru didn’t have the luxury of postponing his plans because of it.

“Are you okay? Do you think you can really work?”

“I’ll do my work, and I’ll finish everything else too. Just think of yourself as riding on the remodeled unsinkable Subaru, and relax.”

“An unsinkable ship that’s already been remodeled once, huh…”

If she noticed that, the sense of security would disappear.

To be honest, he had sunk not just once, but about seven times, but there was no need to point that out and spoil the morning air. Subaru learned his lesson.

Ignoring Emilia’s remark, Subaru performed some squats on the spot to regain his composure.

“Alright then, shall we face our senpai’s with renewed resolve!”

“Yes. I don’t think you’ve talked to either of them since yesterday, Subaru…”

“—Ah.”

He was told this mid-stretch, and his lower back gave a dull pop.

3

“Sister, Sister. A heartless person named Subaru has arrived.”

“Rem, Rem. A wage thief called Barusu has appeared.”

"I am truly sorry for yesterday! Please, please forgive me!"

He bowed his head, begging for forgiveness with profuse apologies.

He felt like he'd been bowing his head all morning. Excluding Roswaal, he'd apologized to everyone in the mansion, completing the full set of women.

"So, I've finished the 'being looked down upon by girls' route—my karma is deep."

"Sister, Sister. Subaru is quite the pervert."

"Rem, Rem. Barusu is such a contemptible masochist."

"That's going too far, especially you, big sis!"

Shouting while still in his full Japanese DOGEZA, Subaru transitioned from that position into a handstand using his arms as a pivot, then smoothly spun up to his feet.

"Anyway, I'm sorry for being such a pathetic mess yesterday and an annoying pest the day before yesterday… Well, a lot happened and I was feeling down, but I'm making a fresh start, so from today on, I'm the new Subaru."

"The lap pillow, right?"

"The lap pillow, right?"

"Do you mean everyone knows? How embarrassing?!"

He covered his face in an action of shame. As Subaru slumped, the twin maids exchanged glances.

"Shall we start our morning duties soon, Sister?"

"We should begin our morning duties soon, Rem."

"No comment is just as disheartening!"

The two maids cut off Subaru's comment with a hand gesture.

While Subaru stuck out his tongue and reacted with an “Ouch,” the two hurried off to begin their work. Then,

“Hold on, hold on. I have a small favor to ask before you start your morning duties.”

Stopping at Subaru’s call, the two turned back and tilted their heads in unison.

“A favor?”

“Trouble?”

“Even though I’m interacting with them so calmly after a long time, what is this bubbling feeling in my chest…? Humans are strange.”

While he was happy to exchange such banter, a wry smile also tugged at him, given the older sister’s more obvious scowl compared to her sibling.

He sighed, lightly letting go of the absurdity that had surfaced.

“Actually, I’d like to visit the village. It’s nearby, isn’t it? Do you have any plans for shopping or anything?”

To confirm his suspicions from the Forbidden Library last night, he wanted to visit the village today if possible. At Subaru’s thought, Rem placed a hand on her chin.

“I believe we’re running low on spices, so I was planning to go to the village tomorrow…”

“Then, how about moving that plan to today? If we’re running out, it’s better to get it sooner rather than later, and it’s not like we’re in an environment where we can easily borrow miso from a neighbor if we run out of spices, right?”

Even if he wanted to be neighborly, there were no other mansions nearby to begin with.

Rem seemed to ponder Subaru’s suggestion for a moment.

But,

“Sounds fine to me.”

“Sister?”

It was Ram, lightly touching her pink hair and winking one eye, who answered casually in place of her pondering sister.

She turned her gaze to her sister’s questioning voice.

“We have to go shopping anyway, and there’s no urgent business. We also have Barusu to carry things, so we might as well work him to the bone while we have the chance.”

“Please consider that I actually just had my stomach cut open and am recovering from a three-day illness!”

Subaru interjected with that retort to Ram’s rather blunt opinion, yet internally, he couldn’t help but tilt his head at her unexpected assistance.

It seemed the twin maids’ opinions were not aligned on this matter.

Considering the previous loop and the loop before that, both twin maids were supposed to be in a position to eliminate Subaru if the conditions were met.

The fact that their opinions differed was an anomaly that Subaru, having actually been killed by them, couldn’t overlook.

At any rate, he was genuinely grateful for the unexpected support.

He had genuinely intended to rack his brain over how to persuade them.

“…If Sister says so.”

After a moment of contemplation, Rem also offered an affirmative opinion.

Rem often took the lead in their actions, but he knew from their past interactions that she generally prioritized her sister's opinion.

One could say the outcome of this negotiation was decided the moment Ram, albeit by chance, was convinced.

As Subaru secretly gave a fist pump, Rem, with a serene expression that replaced her thoughtful one, said,

"However, we will go to the village after lunch regardless. After two in the afternoon—before then, let's at least finish our usual duties."

"It'll be fine. Barusu, who brought it up, will work his fingers to the bone. Right?"

"It'd be nice if even my sister, who agreed, would help out… Well, I'll work myself to the bone and do my best."

"Crushing your body."

"Right, that."

His incomplete sentences were corrected in stereo, and Subaru scratched his head in response. And just like that, the negotiation had splendidly borne fruit.

The shopping trip was settled, and now it was finally time for servant duties. Rem began walking briskly, perhaps reorganizing the day's schedule to include the shopping, sorting things out in her head.

Seeing the blue-haired girl off, Subaru looked at the pink-haired girl beside him. She had been appointed as Subaru's overseer again today, and he would accompany her to learn the ropes of his unfamiliar servant life.

Yesterday—or rather, the day before yesterday—it was probably best to avoid interacting with her at that strange level of tension. In fact, having come full circle and gained the mental space to reflect on himself, it was too painful and impossible to imitate.

"It's terrifying to realize my own dark history in such a short time. I'm in a pseudo-sage mode right now. …No point in dwelling on it, shall we get to work, Senpai?”

“Before that.”

As he was about to start walking, Ram stopped him this time, returning the favor from earlier. He stepped his foot out to the side, turned to her with a wide stance, and looked at her.

Ram crossed her arms and looked up at Subaru from below.

“About the magic in the garden earlier…”

“Ah, that was pathetic, my bad. It’s completely useless. I’ll seal that away for a while. Apparently, it’ll take twenty years to master.”

“Being pathetic aside, try not to provoke Rem too much.”

“—?”

Subaru didn’t understand the meaning of Ram’s words and a question mark floated above his head.

At his bewildered face, Ram let out a “Hmph” through her nose, as she sometimes did.

“In that corner of the garden, you used Shamak to disrupt the surroundings, including Emilia-sama—you should be dancing in thanks to Ram for stopping Rem.”

He was so shocked by his magic failure that he hadn’t realized it, but from an outsider’s perspective, that situation could easily have been ‘one of those situations.’

For that, he was truly grateful to Ram for not acting rashly. Conversely, Rem’s tendency to act immediately in such situations chilled him to the bone.

“Honestly, I can’t afford to be careless… Four times and this is where I’m at. I’m dreading what’s to come, me.”

"What are you muttering about…? If you don't work quickly, you'll miss both breakfast and lunch."

"Alright, alright. No, well, I was just thinking about the afternoon shopping trip. I wonder which one of you will be accompanying me."

Considering his current mental exhaustion, Rem's company felt a bit heavy.

However, considering his objective in the village, Rem was actually the more suitable companion.

He didn't know the conditions for which of Ram or Rem would accompany him to the village, so this question was also meant to probe that—

"What nonsense are you talking about?"

"Huh?"

As Subaru tilted his head, Ram, uncharacteristically, smiled.

A very cruel, chilling smile.

"Both Ram and Rem will go. It's what you call 'a flower in each hand,' Barusu."

—I just hope those flowers aren't poisonous.

Subaru, who hadn't considered the possibility of negotiations going too well, covered his face with his palm, looked up at the ceiling, and merely muttered that in his heart.

Chapter 36:
Fast Forward in the Village

1

This was Subaru's third time visiting this particular village.

He had first come with Ram, and then again with Rem. For a village so close to the lord's mansion, it was rather small, with a population of perhaps three hundred at most. Far fewer people than his local elementary school back in his original world.

Even knowing how tiny it was, the village felt like an enormous challenge to Subaru now—too big for him to handle. It was easy to say "around three hundred people," but it was impossible to investigate every single one of them. What's more, he optimistically only had today and tomorrow.

"It seems we finished our work quite early today."

"Barusu was disturbingly sharp. I wonder what happened."

"Heh heh, I guess the dormant potential within me has bloomed. Ram-chi, you can praise me directly without being shy. Just don't fall in love, alright!"

Subaru was quite elated, having received high praise for his morning's work.

It was the result of putting all his effort into completing the essential tasks to ensure the afternoon's shopping trip. Until now, such enthusiastic efforts often backfired, but strangely, this time he managed to approach it naturally, perhaps because he was more relaxed.

Naturally, the memory of Emilia's lap warmed his ears.

—She must have helped me relax, I guess.

Even contact with the twins, who had forced him to maintain such a false front, didn't feel as mentally taxing now.

Some tension remained, but in a good way, it reinforced Subaru's resolve and kept him focused.

Thus, as he explored the village, literally "a flower in each hand" as he'd boasted, Subaru's state of mind was calm enough that he didn't start trembling.

This was partly due to his feelings towards the two maids, but also due to the tension of acting in the village.

—He had to avoid alerting the problematic individual with any strange behavior.

The condition for a witch doctor to cast a curse, as learned from his Q with Beatrice last night, was physical contact with the target.

As a prerequisite for cursing someone, the witch doctor first had to make some form of physical contact with them. If one considered the witch doctor purely as an assassin, this was a rather risky condition.

Considering his knowledge from his original world, for an act that could be accomplished simply by sniping from a distance, one had to expose oneself to risk.

It could also be said that because they paid that price, the absolute success of the curse after activation was guaranteed.

In any case,

"The culprit's conditions haven't changed—it's limited to the villagers I encountered during my two previous visits to the village."

If that person was a recent outsider within the last few days, it was almost certain. Narrowing it down would be easy.

As he observed the compact village scenery, Subaru racked his brain, dredging up memories from the past. But no matter how hard he tried, he couldn't recall every person he'd met in the village.

His focus had suddenly shifted from inside the mansion to outside. Since he had largely excluded this possibility, it was hard to search through old memories.

“For now, what I remember are… the ‘Aging Granny’, the Youth Group, ‘Ram-Rem’s Fan Club’, the ‘Village Headman’, and the kids.”

These were the most memorable faces in the village.

The ‘Aging Granny’ was an incredibly lecherous old woman, who he distinctly remembered groping his backside with a lascivious grin. Apparently, she would grope young men, muttering “I’m getting younger, I’m getting younger.”

The Youth Group was exactly that—a group of young men from the village. Their leader was a loud, short-haired, athletic-looking guy who would slap his shoulder hard, which was particularly tough on the indoor-type Subaru.

The ‘Ram-Rem Fan Club’ was just a provisional name he gave them; they didn’t actually call themselves that. They seemed to be composed of members similar to the Youth Group, also led by the short-haired leader. They apparently disliked men who got close to Ram and Rem, and Subaru had grimaced when they would aggressively pat his shoulder as a form of harassment.

“Remembering them like this, it’s… everyone seems too suspicious. They’ve all subtly made contact with me. This four-choice… no, effectively three-choice situation.”

The second and third options would be combined, naturally reducing it to three choices. However, that was as far as the clues went. To delve deeper, he would have to—

“This time, too, I’ll have to step into the same place, won’t I?”

There was no other conclusion.

Subaru sighed at himself for always finding only direct, head-on approaches. And then, at his weary sigh,

“What’s wrong, Subaru?” “Does your tummy hurt?” “Are you hungry?”

Voices, responding one after another, came from above Subaru.

He turned his head to see small figures clinging to his back.

It was a boy with short, neatly cut brown hair, less than ten years old, probably in early elementary school. The boy grinned at Subaru’s gaze. And besides him, other small shadows clung to Subaru’s legs and waist.

They were all small children, none taller than Subaru’s waist. There were four clinging to him alone, and if he looked around, there were probably about ten in total.

Readjusting the surprisingly light weight on his back, Subaru began, “Alright,” then,

“You guys follow me even across time and space, huh…”

“What are you saying?” “Did you hit your head?” “Do you have a tummy ache?”

“Stop obsessing over tummy aches. What, do you want me to have diarrhea that badly?”

When Subaru said that, the children burst into laughter. It was likely they were reacting to the word ‘diarrhea’ rather than finding it genuinely funny.

It seemed that talking about bodily functions was universally capable of inducing laughter in this age group, even across worlds.

“My nature of being inexplicably bothered by kids hasn’t changed either.”

As a child on his back pulled his cheek, Subaru could only slump his shoulders at the cruelty of his own disposition.

This was the true power of the ‘Absolute Loner Ability (except for kids),’ a contradictory power that countered the absolute loner force created by his communication disorder.

"For some reason, I've always been somewhat popular with kids and old people. Honestly, I only need to be popular with one person in this world."

He shifted his body, dandling the child on his back.

Amidst the joyful squeals and cries of "Me next, me next!", Subaru walked through the village with the children in tow.

Currently, Subaru was on his own, free to move.

In reality, he wasn't alone, and being clung to everywhere made him anything but free, but he was 'free' in the sense that he wasn't accompanied by Ram or Rem.

The maid sisters, who had come to the village with him, had said things like,

"Sister, Sister. Let's split up and collect only the light items."

"Rem, Rem. Let's leave the heavy, hard-to-carry stuff to Barusu."

Then hurried off to scatter for shopping, leaving behind disheartening comments for later.

Supposed it was a kindness to Subaru, who wanted to see the village, but he honestly wished at least one of them had stayed. Then, he wouldn't be swarmed by children, and—

"I wouldn't have had to greet suspects while super nervous."

Subaru, breaking out in a cold sweat, reiterated his plan to gauge its difficulty.

His chosen method for finding the curse arts user was very simple.

—To use himself as bait to lure out the user.

Not in a "Please kill me!" kind of way, but rather to intentionally step into the preliminary stage—the stage where the curse's ritual was inscribed.

He was aware this was a highly risky decision. It meant that if the curse arts user chose to activate the curse the moment it was inscribed, a countdown to death by weakening would begin for Subaru."

His current goal was to become a carp that willingly jumped onto the cutting board, waiting for the chef's knife to descend.

He had to get on the cutting board to see the face of the invisible chef.

"At least, Beako said she can dispel the ritual itself."

Beatrice, and also Puck, claimed they could dispel the curse's ritual. He wanted to avoid the latter case as it would inevitably involve Emilia, but if Beatrice remained uncooperative, that option might be unavoidable.

"Subaru, bad face—" "Scary face—" "Weird face—"

"What are you saying, pointing at someone's face, kids? Plus, I've been hearing you, number three, quite often."

Subaru retorted as he dragged the children along, exploring the village.

He couldn't shake them off, and they were surprisingly useful as navigators for finding suspects.

Most importantly, an assassin who couldn't cause a stir in the village wouldn't be able to harm Subaru while he was surrounded by so many children. It was a calculated move, using them as human shields.

"I'm quite the scoundrel myself. I'm disgusted by my own thoughts."

"Subaru, what's wrong?" "What happened?" "Are you spaced out?"

"Nah, nothing."

Subaru stroked the heads of the children clinging to his legs, laughing self-deprecatingly.

“Well, it’s for my happiness. Just cooperate a little, okay?”

Come to think of it, he never used to like children.

Loud, overly familiar, and selfish.

—Perhaps he felt that way because they seemed just like him.

2

“Coming to check on you now that your free time is almost over, and just look at this…”

Ram sighed in exasperation, running a hand through her pink hair.

Subaru met her gaze, swinging his arms in wide circles.

“I’m not doing anything weird, am I? Whoops, almost done. —Alright, arm circles and leg stretches!”

He moved dynamically, stretching out the stiff muscles of his body. The children mimicked Subaru’s movements, and surrounding them, a group of elders and the youth group followed a beat behind.

Finally, they took a deep breath, and everyone synchronized their breathing.

Then, as a grand finale, they stretched both hands to the sky, and everyone shouted in unison,

“—Victory!!”

A cheer erupted as they finished, and he instinctively high-fived the people around him. Wiping his slightly sweaty forehead, he left the circle of chatter and headed towards Ram. In contrast to Subaru’s refreshed appearance, Ram gave him a completely cold look.

“What kind of entertainment is this?”

“Entertainment? It’s nothing that grand. I was just trying to keep the brats occupied, and the adults watching decided to join in on the fun.”

The “Radio Calisthenics No. 2” was his method for dealing with the noisy children who constantly demanded attention. He recalled that he’d only performed as a ‘radio exercise enthusiast’ on his very first loop, and he decided to make it public this time.

“Well, I was surprised it was more popular than I thought. Maybe this wide appeal, enjoyable for both children and elders, is the secret to its long-standing support!”

“I wouldn’t know.”

“She cut me off cold!”

As Subaru dramatically recoiled from Ram’s curt reply, the children watching mimicked his reaction, recoiling as well.

“Ram-chi, you’re cold.” “Ram-chi, you’re mean.” “Ram-chi, you’re scary.”

“…Did you teach these children to call me that?”

“No, well, I didn’t intentionally teach them, but approach-ability is important, right? If you’re too far apart, you can’t see each other’s faces clearly. …I thought that was lonely, you know… I thought that…”

“What a fast talker. Ram doesn’t mind that much, but Rem might dislike it.”

“Rem-rin?” “Rem-rin.” “Rem-rin-rin.”

Seeing the children tilt their heads while repeating the name, Ram shrugged as if in resignation.

Then, she turned back to Subaru.

“So, did you enjoy the village as you wished?”

“—Ah, regarding that, it went smoothly.”

Answering Ram's question, Subaru twisted his cheek into a smile.

His "village stroll," which was merely a pretext for contacting the suspects—that itself was achieved far more easily than Subaru had expected.

It was partly because they were already noticeable individuals, but also likely because they themselves had wanted to make contact with Subaru. They showed up without him even having to search for them, so regardless of the flow of events, physical contact happened as much as, or even more than, last time.

He had, however, been meticulous about avoiding conscious physical contact and ensuring that only the main named characters would be suspects.

"I wanted to show off my flexibility, trying every trick in the book to avoid contact… However, when you're surrounded by this many brats, there's nothing you can do."

He sighed at the children still clinging to him. Unlike the adults, who generally gave up after being avoided once, he couldn't help but be overwhelmed by the children's vitality.

However, with Ram coming to pick him up, his youthful escapade was over.

With a lingering sense of reluctance in his eyes, Subaru said,

"Alright, I've got work, so scram, you guys. Oh, what a shame. If I had more time, I would've played with you more. Haha, too bad."

"So cheerfully—" "While laughing—" "Are you really that happy—"

"Shut up! If you want me to genuinely care, you guys need to think about how you interact with your elders! For kids to use casual speech with me on our first meeting, it makes me realize how low my objective human value is, and it's depressing!"

He yelled at the children, acutely feeling his own lack of human value. It was a negative spiral.

Waving goodbye to the grumbling children, Subaru followed Ram, who was signaling him with her gaze to hurry and meet up with Rem. But just before he started walking, his sleeve was tugged.

He turned his head to see a girl with brown pigtails shyly holding him back.

"Oh?"

A surprised sound escaped Subaru's lips.

Unlike the active bunch from earlier, this girl had been observing Subaru from a step back, peeking at him intermittently.

He knelt down, meeting the gaze of the downcast child.

"What's up? If there's something you want to say, I'll listen."

"Um… over there."

Tugging his sleeve, the girl pointed in the opposite direction of their meeting point with Rem.

He felt reluctant to brush off her weak tug, so Subaru looked at Ram for permission. She sighed faintly.

"Why don't you do what you want for a little longer?"

"Alright, I owe you one, Senpai. So, what could it be?"

He followed the girl as she pulled his hand.

With her leading, the same group of children from earlier trailed behind. They seemed to know their destination, uniformly wearing mischievous smiles and whispering to each other in low voices.

"They're definitely going to be surprised." "They're definitely going to be happy." "They're definitely going to pee their pants with joy."

"Surprised, happy, and peeing their pants—am I an ill-behaved puppy? With expectations this high, I'm the kind of contrarian who actually doesn't want to be surprised…"

Pushed along by the children's giggles, he squeezed between houses and entered a sunless corner.

Then, he found what the children had wanted to show him.

"Ah-ha, I remember this event now."

A sound of understanding escaped him, and Subaru clapped his hands, nodding repeatedly.

The girl let go of his hand and ran off. The usually quiet girl came back before Subaru, breathless, holding it in her arms.

It was a 'puppy'-like creature with brown fur.

It seemed to have been born recently, its body not even thirty centimeters long when fully stretched.

With its innocent eyes and seemingly soft fur, it possessed more than enough charm to stir Subaru's instincts as a 'fluff-lover.'

His arm instinctively reached out, ignoring his will, but he managed to restrain it, exhaling a long breath.

Surrounded by children and doted upon, it was truly a pampered pet, feeling like royalty. But based on his past experiences—

"Fwoosh!"

"Of course, it'd be like this…"

The moment Subaru approached, its fur bristled, and it snarled in warning.

Seeing its tiny body on full alert, the children also looked surprised.

"It's usually so quiet!" "It's only angry at Subaru!" "What did you do, Subaru—"

"I'm the one who should be asking that! Is this just a matter of incompatibility between me and this guy, since it's happened three times now?"

Responding to the children's boos, Subaru observed the small animal that showed no sign of becoming friendly.

If there was no particular reason, this would be his third encounter with this small animal. To have the exact same individual react in the exact same way like this made the loops worthwhile. For some reason, Subaru's loops rarely allowed him to tread the exact same path as the previous one.

"If it's going to react the same way, I'd have preferred a friendly reaction, personally."

Being disliked three times in a row was genuinely disheartening.

Subaru offered a fawning smile, trying to curry favor. Then, the puppy suddenly relaxed, as if its guard had dropped. Seeing it curl up in the pigtail girl's arms, Subaru, seeing an opportunity, eagerly approached.

"Well then, if you'll excuse me."

He fully extended his 'fluffing' arm, raised by Pack, towards the curled-up small animal.

First, as a test, he checked the feel of its head and back, then its belly, and then moved onto more connoisseur-level areas like the tips of its paws to its joints. His recent obsession, its ears and tail, would be saved for later.

"Whoa, as expected of the fluff-ball of my dreams. That's some serious fluff-ification. But still, a stray naturally has some issues with its fur. Daily brushing and love are key there."

"I don't know what Subaru's talking about." "Fluff-ball? Fluff-ify?" "An adult being so mushy with a puppy, it's a bit gross—"

"The third one has been relentlessly savage this whole time?!"

The chestnut-haired pretty boy, the 'number three' in question, smiled innocently at Subaru's retort. If you cropped the image, he'd look like an angel, which must have emboldened him.

“He’s going to make so many girls cry in the future… That aside, fluffing is great—it’s the pinnacle of human culture.”

His frayed heart soothed by the soft touch, Subaru was captivated by the inexplicable charm of fluffing.

It made sense that cat cafes were popular. Originally, from a hygiene perspective, who would even think of combining cats and a cafe? The originator must have been an exceptionally talented ‘fluff-lover.’

“Fluff-balls and fluff-lovers are destined to attract each other, aren’t they? I’m poetic, and super amazing. Still, I’m a little worried about that. Oh, what’s this? A ten-yen… no, a one-yen coin-sized bald spot on its head. It’s whitish, but where did you bump—ouch!”

Perhaps pointing out its complex was the trigger, but the puppy, which had been docile until then, suddenly bared its fangs.

It bit down on his left hand with its small canine teeth, and when he hastily pulled it away, a thin line of blood ran down the back of his hand.

Subaru looked at the wound, saying “Aiyaya.”

“What incredible event completion rate. Even the position of the wound is almost the same. Could it be that you’re time-leaping too?”

To his question, asked while lightly wiping the bleeding wound, the small animal, its guard completely back up, only responded with an intimidating growl.

Seeing the renewed rift in the interaction between Subaru and the creature, the children who had been observing chimed in.

“He got carried away again!” “Well, he did touch it without permission!” “Besides, this one’s a girl!”

“I feel like the points of contention are subtly shifting… And no one’s worrying about me. It’s about time a tsundere came out and showed some affection!”

He complained to the children about their attitude, but not a single one listened. On the contrary, it was probably because Subaru had raised his voice.

The puppy, trembling, wriggled out of the girl's arms, leaped out, and darted into the bushes.

"Oh no!" "Oh no!" "Oh no!"

"Did you all just synchronize your 'oh no's'?! I'm sorry! I didn't mean any harm! It's always like this!"

He stomped his foot, apologized profusely, and then waved goodbye to the children who were going to look for the puppy.

Leaving them behind, after they had left their marks all over Subaru's body until the very end, he hurried back to Ram, who had been waiting.

"Sorry to keep you waiting."

The tall maid, arms crossed, leaned against the fence. She opened one eye and looked at Subaru as he addressed her.

"Regarding the kouhai I sent off, expecting him to be back quickly, returning with messy hair, rumpled clothes, and blood flowing from his left hand."

"That's exactly what I'm sorry about! A lot happened, you can tell just by looking!"

"Yes. I was watching, so I mostly know."

A hint of worry crossed Ram's delicate features, and she let out a small sigh.

Subaru furrowed his brow at her uncharacteristic demeanor, but then Ram snorted, "Hmph," looking at Subaru.

"That wound and your appearance are pathetic. Let's go meet Rem quickly. Rem should be able to heal both."

"Oh? Ram-chi, are you the type who can't use healing magic?"

"I can perform drastic remedies like cutting off the affected area."

"Dangerous folk remedies?!"

Subaru couldn't hide his shiver. Then, Ram suddenly walked up to Subaru, pulled his sleeve, and started leading the way.

Subaru blinked, surprised that she was initiating physical contact like this, and Ram looked back over her shoulder.

"Barusu, aren't you coming?"

"I'm coming! With you!"

As he responded, he saw Ram's lips soften for just a fleeting moment.

He continued walking, being led by her sleeve.

On one hand, he thought how cute she would be if she were always so straightforward, but on the other hand, perhaps it was precisely because she was always true to herself that such remarks kept spilling out.

Frankness, too, had its time and place.

Thinking such thoughts, he walked with Ram towards the spot where Rem was waiting.

He felt as if the leading back was walking slowly, more leisurely than usual, for some reason.

Chapter 37:
The Curse Arts User's Identity

1

"Sister and Subaru are quite close, aren't they?"

That's what Rem said first when they met at their rendezvous point, seeing the two of them. Her gaze was fixed on the space between them, specifically where Ram was pulling Subaru's sleeve.

Subaru, the one involved, thought that if you only saw that particular moment, it might have looked like quite a suggestive scene.

Laughing off Rem's hasty conclusion, Subaru pointed to the spot in question.

"There's no ulterior motive, really! It's purely because I was slow, and Ram-chi got impatient. Sorry for making you wait."

He lightly waved his sleeve and dropped his finger, apologizing to Rem for the wait. Even so, Rem's gaze remained a little colder than usual, but when Ram smoothly moved to stand beside her, Rem's expression softened.

Aha, looking at it now that I've calmed down, Rem's mental state, despite appearing unfazed, has quite a few flaws. Especially when Ram is involved, her dangerously sister-complex tendencies really come to light.

"Sister…"

"Even Barusu says so, Rem. There's no ulterior motive, right?"

Ram coolly dismissed her sister's pleading voice. Rem, who had been staring intently at her sister's identical face, suddenly narrowed her eyes as if realizing something.

"Sister, did you… perhaps see something?"

"Yes."

"…Even though I told you not to."

"If it's necessary, I'll do it. Anything more is useless, Rem."

"When you two talk in your own little world, it makes me, the one left out, want to cry! Let's mix it up and chat together, okay!"

Serious Rem, deflecting Ram, and Subaru, who cut in with a joke. The two of them, especially Rem, shot Subaru a sharp glare.

The reason was vague, but it seemed he had significantly triggered Rem's caution. Conversely, he felt like he was gaining favor with Ram, which reaffirmed to him how difficult these twins were to handle.

At this rate, they were headed straight for a BAD ending.

He wanted to somehow raise Rem's affection level, but he had no idea how.

For now, he decided to say,

"Alright, alright, alright, it's like this. Let's not be so intense; How about we have some fun instead. I'll carry anything you need, whatever the original purpose was."

He rotated his shoulders and his hips, appealing his readiness to work.

Some of the smaller purchases were probably already in the parcels Rem and Ram were carrying. Subaru's role, if Ram's words were correct, was supposed to be handling the large, heavy items that required a man's strength.

With that in mind, Subaru's gaze drifted behind the twins, and he instantly regretted it.

There, sitting proudly, was a barrel-like object that looked like it would take a whole person to carry.

"…Is there no limit?"

"Seven times."

"Huh?"

As Subaru lowered his voice, imagining a diagonal line across his face, Rem's lips suddenly whispered a mysterious number. To Subaru's puzzled tilt of the head, Rem then looked at him with a testing gaze.

"We plan to take breaks according to Subaru's schedule. Seven times is Rem's prediction."

With a rare, politely insolent bow, Subaru considered the distance to the mansion. It was about a twenty-minute walk. In a straight line, it was less than three kilometers, but Subaru was acutely aware of his lack of stamina.

He silently approached the barrel and carefully tested its weight. Perhaps it was a paper tiger, just a deceptive appearance. That pathetic hope was easily crushed by the solid weight that settled heavily in his lower back.

To carry this, for three kilometers, with seven breaks—

He twisted his waist, did some knee bends on the spot, and stretched his back out wide.

"I'll try my best not to go over ten."

He rather liked this part of himself—instead of the expected defiance at being provoked with "seven breaks," he set a higher number to create a safeguard.

"By the way, Ram predicts you'll rest thirteen times."

"Atleast you two are fair, not letting personal feelings get in the way of harsh or lenient evaluations."

Even with the slight difference in affection levels, he still felt that Rem's evaluation was more favorable.

In its own way, it was a situation that made him scratch his head.

2

It was well past dusk, the sun already dipping low, when Subaru and the others finally made it back to the mansion.

Subaru had suggested taking a break roughly twelve times, collapsing under the weight of the luggage. His biceps were screaming from lactic acid, and his knees wouldn't stop shaking from what felt like spasms. He'd been utterly defeated by Rem's prediction, and it was only a sliver of pride, the desire not to give in to Ram's malicious teasing, that had kept him going this far.

"We made it, we made it! I did it, me! Good job! Seriously, good job!"

"Sister, Sister, Subaru's practically groveling on the ground, he's so happy."

"Rem, Rem, Barusu is lying on the ground like a dog, utterly moved."

"Hey, don't be so mean! Praise me for finishing this first. I'm sensitive and delicate, you know. If you keep whipping me, I'll break easily. I'm a product of the lenient education system; I haven't experienced many setbacks!"

Especially since coming to this world, he felt like he'd been whipped too much. Of course, he knew he'd been given plenty of sweet rewards too, but even considering that, weren't the whips a bit too strong?

Anyway,

"Yes, yes, well done."

"Yes, yes, good effort."

With a dismissive nod to Subaru's struggles, Rem effortlessly lifted the sake barrel from the ground. Subaru, who could bench press eighty kilograms, would have struggled to lift it above his shoulders even with all his strength. Yet Rem carried that heavy object, holding small items in her other hand.

The sheer absurdity of the impressive sight made Subaru crack a smile.

“Was I even needed?”

“No? Ram and Rem always handled this by ourselves if Barusu wasn’t around, as you can see.”

Ram had no intention of comforting the boy inside Subaru.

Watching Rem’s retreating back, with a heavy-sounding thump-thump to her steps, Subaru truly felt the uselessness of his physical labor.

“Then why did you make me do it? Are you seriously just messing with me? Come on, seniors shouldn’t bully their kouhais!”

“Don’t you understand, Barusu? It was consideration, of course.”

“I don’t get it. What do you mean, ‘consideration’?”

Ram snorted in response to Subaru’s question, then shrugged her shoulders in an exasperated pose.

“So Barusu wouldn’t mind if, after Rem carried that enormous sake barrel back, Lady Emilia saw you happily returning with nothing but a small bag of spices in your hand?”

“My words fail me at your kindness, Senpai!”

Subaru knelt and bowed in thanks to Ram’s esteemed presence.

Making a girl smaller than himself carry a huge load, while he returned with just a shopping bag, looking smug—what kind of hellish scene was that?

Even before Emilia saw him, just looking in a mirror would have filled him with despair. His already flimsy “manliness index” would have been utterly shredded; compared to that, it was nothing.

Just then,

“Sister, Lord Roswaal is—”

Rem, who had gone ahead with the luggage, returned to the two exchanging words at the entrance. Ram reacted instantly to her sister mentioning the mansion’s master. The name “Roswaal” invigorated Ram so much that she shed her usual languid aura, moving briskly to stand beside her sister, tidying her appearance as she walked. Then,

“What are you doing, Barusu? Are you going to keep Lord Roswaal waiting?”

“You two can communicate with just sympathy, but that doesn’t mean I can understand! Huh, what, is this like a servant assembly?”

Subaru, met with a look usually reserved for slow-witted children, scratched his head and hastily followed them. On the way, he tried to tidy himself up, mimicking Ram, and when he opened the mansion’s entrance,

“Ahaha, you two were together, how convenient. It saves me the troooouble.”

Roswaal, the master of the mansion, was waiting for the three of them with his arms spread wide.

He had long indigo hair and heterochromatic blue and yellow eyes. A gentle-looking man with a lazily relaxed smile—but now, his aura was different than usual.

“Formal attire?”

“Correct. Weeeeell, I don’t particularly caaaaare for it. But when I wear my usual clothes, there are always some jeaaaaalous people, so I have nooooo choice, simply no choice, but to wear these formal rooooobes.”

He usually favored overly playful clothes with absurdly large collars, geometric patterns, and colors that blended into the background. But now, he was clad in proper attire, similar to what he wore when they first met. Roswaal's outfit made Subaru consider two possibilities.

And,

"Do we have guests?"

"Are you going out?"

The twins voiced the same possibilities Subaru had just thought of. Roswaal gave a wry smile at his servants' questions.

"Ram is correct; I'm going ooout. I've received a rather troooooublesome message, you see. I'll be going to Garfiel to confirm it. I don't think I'll be late, thoooooough."

That was a new name, and Subaru didn't know if it was a person or a place. However, seeing the twins nod as if they understood everything, Subaru followed suit, nodding to Roswaal's words without objection. Roswaal gave a magnanimous nod to their attitude.

"So, that's why I'll be leaving the mansion for a while. In any case, I don't think I'll be back tonight—Ram, Rem. I'm leaving it to you twooo."

"Yes, as you command."

"Yes, even if it costs my life."

He nodded to the two who affirmed instantly, then his heterochromatic eyes fixed on Subaru.

Feeling slightly overwhelmed by their intensity, Subaru shifted.

"Sorry, but I haven't sworn that kind of loyalty that would cost my life yet, you know?"

"That's peeeeerfectly fine. If you suddenly swore something like that, it would feel heavy and unseeettling, you see. Well, I'm leaving it to you too, Subaru.""

Patting Subaru's shoulder, Roswaal winked, reflecting Subaru in only his yellow eye.

"I sense something ominous. Don't worry about me… Just take gooood care of Lady Emilia, aaaaalright?"

"—Ah, that's definitely something I'll take on."

He didn't need to be told. Subaru didn't know how much Roswaal suspected, but he responded with clear resolve.

—An unprecedented turn of events. This certainly meant that Subaru's actions had brought about a change in this world.

Receiving Subaru's nod, Roswaal nodded contentedly. Then, after saying a few more words to his loyal twin retainers,

"Weeell then, I'll be off. I pray nothing happens."

He muttered in a somewhat low voice, and Roswaal's back disappeared beyond the entrance.

Suddenly, after seeing him off with a bow, Subaru wondered,

"Wait, I just realized, you two aren't going with him. And there's no sign of a carriage or anything outside… Is he walking?"

In response to Subaru's question, the twins looked at him with matching expressions of exasperation.

"There's no point in going. We'd only be in the way."

"Loyalty can't make you fly, you know. And besides, it would show my skirt."

"Whoa, you just said a bunch of things I can't unhear…"

From Subaru's perspective, they were a hopelessly strong force, comparable to Elsa, yet the two of them clearly recognized their own inadequacy. Furthermore, if he believed Ram's statement,

"Whoa, it's true!"

Subaru pushed open the entrance where Roswaal had disappeared and confirmed that their master was no longer outside. Then he looked up at the sky for a moment and saw a tiny speck of a shadow in the far distance, towards the sunset, barely discernible by its fluttering mantle. It had to be Roswaal, flying solo.

“He can fly?! Can you do that with ‘Yin’ magic?”

“You can, if you can properly handle wind, fire, and earth.”

At Ram’s words, Subaru covered his face, thinking of how far off the day he could achieve that was. Subaru’s lack of magical talent had already been thoroughly confirmed by both the court mage and the spirit. When the day would come that he could fly freely, he had no idea.

Putting such sentiment aside,

“Even without Lord Roswaal, our duties remain the same. In fact, precisely because Lord Roswaal isn’t here, we must perform them diligently.”

“That’s a very diligent opinion. Alright, let’s get to it.”

Subaru nodded to Rem, who began taking charge, his mind racing.

The situation had changed again. It was a change that clearly foreshadowed an attack. The twins would no doubt be roused to reinforce the mansion’s defenses, but knowing an attack was definitely coming, Subaru’s thoughts were elsewhere.

He needed to quickly ascertain the identity of the curse arts user. The acceleration of their actions was undoubtedly triggered by his visit to the village today. This meant Subaru’s suspicion was correct: an assassin was likely hidden among them.

3

“So, it’s finally time for Beatrice!”

I pushed open the door and stepped into the Forbidden Library. Beatrice, who had been sitting on a step stool reading a book, dramatically slumped her shoulders at my overly confident intrusion.

“You’re the only one who can so easily break Betty’s ‘Door Crossing,’ in fact. How do you even do it, I suppose?”

“It’s a hunch, a gut feeling. My sixth sense whispers to me.”

I closed the door behind me and walked toward Beatrice. She watched my approach with an expression of utter disdain, but perhaps seeing the seriousness in my face, she narrowed her eyes.

“Your expression is different than it was half a day ago, I suppose. You’re a busy one, in fact.”

“I wish I could take it easy sometimes too, you know? It seems the world just won’t let me.”

For an ordinary person, it’s hard enough just keeping up with the constant barrage of changing situations. Fumbling through one problem after another often leads to a dead end. In that regard, the current situation feels like I’m backed into a corner. But at the same time, I feel confident that I’m also cornering my opponent.

“There’s something I need you to check for me. I finished cleaning the bath super fast just for this.”

“If the bath was a higher priority, then it can’t be that important, in fact.”

“It’s not that the bath was the priority, but rather managing Rem’s affection level… No, never mind that.”

Cleaning the huge bathhouse was a grueling task. Even now that I’ve gotten somewhat used to it, it’s still heavy labor that leaves my whole body aching. That’s precisely why Rem’s reaction if I skip it is so terrifying. Especially since, in this loop, her affection for me isn’t very high due to my closeness with her sister.

Even if I found the curse arts user, if Rem’s affection was low and I ended up on a BAD route, it would all be for nothing. I felt like a man juggling two women, having to deal with two different threats at once. Although, I don't think there are many two-timing situations where a single flag management mistake leads directly to death.

"And it's not even a juicy story."

"You're getting off topic again… So, what do you need Betty for, in fact?"

"Ah, about that…"

For now, I pondered for a moment in front of Beatrice, who seemed willing to listen. I hesitated on how to broach the subject, then nodded once.

"I think I might be cursed. Could you check it for me?"

"…What are you talking about, I suppose?"

"I think I might be cursed. Could you check it for me?"

"Who told you to say the same thing twice, I suppose! It's only been half a day since we talked about the curse arts in detail, in fact! There's a limit to how easily influenced you can be…"

Perhaps thinking I was being paranoid, Beatrice slammed her book shut roughly and approached, yelling. But halfway, her momentum deflated, replaced by a look of suspicion, then certainty, on her adorable face. She stopped and looked up at me with questioning eyes.

"There's a trace of a spell… You really are cursed, in fact."

"Seriously? Even though I kinda knew it, it's still pretty shocking to hear it confirmed."

Even though I was prepared to be afflicted by a curse, having someone else confirm it was still a lot to take in. It affirmed my suspicions, and confirmed that the assassin in question was indeed hiding among those kind villagers.

"Can you tell what kind of curse it is?"

"Just by looking at the spell, Betty can't tell, in fact. Betty isn't deeply knowledgeable about curses, and it's not something Betty wishes to know, I suppose. However, nine times out of ten, it's the kind that will take your life, in fact."

Beatrice stated the fact dispassionately, without any hint of a threat. I quietly nodded at her words. I had already experienced firsthand the kind of power a curse could unleash. Perhaps surprised by my composed expression, Beatrice blinked her large eyes rapidly.

"You have a lot of nerve, in fact. Aren't you afraid to die, I suppose?"

"Huh? Are you stupid? I'm super scared to die! There's almost nothing scarier than dying in this world. 'It's better to die'—I wish people who say that would try dying first."

That alone was an absolute truth I had learned in this other world, one I would never compromise on. "Death" is absolute. Treating it lightly is unforgivable. And casually speaking of "death" as something to compare to other things is nothing but a thoughtless folly only those who don't truly understand it can make.

I knew that, because I had experienced "death" countless times, I had returned, restarting the world, so as not to experience a sensation worse than "death" itself.

"So this time, I'm gonna break through, fate!"

I pointed my finger to the sky, declaring war on the unknown, supernatural entity that could be watching from anywhere. Then, I turned back to Beatrice.

"Alright, hurry up and remove this curse. We don't have much time."

At the very least, I needed to identify the culprit and make my move before they did. I was eager, having finally gotten a chance to make the first move. Beatrice tilted her head at me.

"Why should Betty save your life, I suppose?"

"I figured you'd say something uncute like that, so I prepared a way to persuade you. Puck would be sad if I died."

"…Brother would probably not be greatly disturbed if one or two humans like you died, I suppose."

"No, no, if I die, Emilia-tan would be devastated. If Emilia-tan is devastated, Puck would take damage too. What would he think about your position, having not prevented something you could have?!"

"You're threatening me while begging for your life?! Have you completely lost your mind, in fact!"

Beatrice stamped her foot in frustration, but apparently couldn't come up with an effective retort. She exhaled a long, frustrated sigh to calm herself, then beckoned me closer.

"Betty will humor you, I suppose. However, Betty will not be involved in any further dealings from now on, in fact."

"Honestly, I can't really promise that. When I'm in trouble, I'll definitely come looking for your help. I'll gnaw on your shin until it's powder and drink it as soup."

"Do you even realize you're the one being helped, I suppose?"

"I have a reputation for getting my way. I didn't become a shut-in for nothing!"

Beatrice shook her head in resignation at my thumbs-up and flashing teeth. Then, she held a white light in her palm and touched my body.

"Now, Betty will destroy the curse mark that was engraved, in fact. It's the spot the curse arts user touched directly, so it should be a good reference, I suppose."

"Oh yeah, I've already laid the groundwork, don't you worry."

Watching the glowing palm approach, I rechecked my body. I had made sure to have each of the suspects touch a different spot. Only the old hag who got younger had ignored my intentions and touched my butt, but if Beatrice's hand went for my butt, then so be it. I'd accept the fact that the old hag was the culprit, and then condemn Beatrice for sexual harassment too.

But my expectations were—

"—Huh?"

Completely off, surprised by where Beatrice's palm landed.

A warm light seeped into my skin, and I felt a gradual heat. Suddenly, a faint itch arose. It welled up from within and then, finally,

"A black mist…?"

It was directly grasped as a black mist in Beatrice's glowing hand. The itching disappeared, confirming that the extracted mist had been the cause of the sensation. And then, that mist in Beatrice's palm,

"Utterly detestable, I suppose."

Was crushed and vanished, as if in a crushing image. Beatrice shook her hand, dispelling both the mist and the light from her palm. Noticing my gaze, she looked at me.

"It's done, in fact. You should be fine now, I suppose."

At her words, I involuntarily let out a deep breath. I realized, belatedly, my own cowardice for unknowingly holding my breath in tension, but there was something I needed to ask before I could mock myself.

"Hey, Beako."

"That way of calling me…"

"The spot your palm touched just now, that's where the curse arts user touched, right?"

Interrupting and pressing the question, Beatrice nodded. With that nod, I knew the identity of the user responsible for the curses.

According to my original plan, I was supposed to wait until tomorrow to act after identifying the culprit. I would coordinate with Ram, Rem, and Roswaal, the master of the mansion, then flush out the village's curse arts user and resolve the situation. That was the vision I had—

"I have to go to the village—!"

I rushed out the door, forgetting even to thank Beatrice. All my initial goals and everything else were tossed aside. My mind was filled with nothing but curses aimed at merciless fate.

"No matter where, no matter how far… Are you kidding me?!"

Shouting every angry curse I could think of, I ran. I ran.

Chapter 38:
The Meaning of Courage

1

He burst out of the room, dashed down the hallway, and leaped down the stairs.

He landed on the landing, skipping three steps at a time, then spun around and immediately jumped, hitting the ground floor. He looked up, and—

"—Ram! Rem! I need to talk to you!"

Subaru's feet carried him to the entrance hall, his voice echoing through the mansion. He was about to rush out the door when Ram, who had already reached the entrance, stopped him. It wasn't so much that she'd anticipated him as that she was simply closer to the spot than Rem, who was busy preparing food in the kitchen. In other words, Ram had more time on her hands.

Ram's composed expression showed a hint of surprise, perhaps at the sight of Subaru's agitated face.

"What's wrong, Barusu? Why are you in such a hurry…?"

"Sorry, but I'm going to the village. It's pointless to try and stop me, and I'd go even if you did, but I figured not telling you would just cause more confusion."

"To the village…? For what purpose…? No, before that, did you not listen to Lord Roswaal's instructions? Tonight, Ram and Rem are entrusted with the mansion. Do you not understand what that means?"

Ram's gaze sharpened as she countered Subaru. Her stance was to prioritize Roswaal's wishes above all else. Subaru's dismissive attitude toward their master's orders must have struck a nerve. However, Subaru was not in a state of mind to back down.

“I don’t have time for a back-and-forth, so I’ll be direct. There’s a curse arts user in that village. I figured out who they are, so I have to go.”

“…You expect us to accept that childish excuse?”

“What else am I supposed to say? That’s the truth. You can ask Betty if you don’t believe me; she’ll vouch for it. And…”

“Sister—”

Before Subaru could argue further with Ram, who was growing increasingly suspicious, Rem appeared, opening the large door behind them. Seeing the two arguing at the entrance, she glided to her sister’s side.

“Sister, what is this…?”

“He says he wants to go outside to defeat a curse arts user in the village. —What should we do, Rem?”

Ram succinctly summarized the situation for her sister, who blinked in confusion. After a moment, as if finally comprehending, Rem turned her suspicious gaze to Subaru.

“Sister, Sister. Subaru tells such boring jokes.”

“Rem, Rem. Barusu says things that show he’s a first-class clown.”

“Ram, Rem. I may joke around a lot, but sometimes I’m serious.”

The two fell silent as Subaru’s words overlapped their unison. He stepped forward, pressing his advantage with their reaction.

“I admit it’s hard to believe, and I know it’s difficult to trust me when I suddenly start acting like this. So, I won’t say you should unconditionally let me go.”

This was a crucial crossroads for Subaru. He moistened his lips with his tongue and offered a proposal to the two silent girls, pointing a finger.

"I'm going to the village now. If you're suspicious, you can come with me. You can keep an eye on me. However, we can't leave Emilia-tan alone. If you join me, only one of you can come."

"Your arbitrary decisions… Besides, if we are to follow Lord Roswaal's orders, there's no reason for Rem or Sister to accompany Subaru…"

"Ah, there isn't, if you're only following Roswaal's orders from this evening. Is that the only order Roswaal gave me though?"

"…"

Rem lost her words, as if a sensitive spot had been hit. It seemed his bluff had hit its mark. He had suspected from fragmented information from previous loops that they had been ordered by Roswaal to keep an eye on him.

Rem still scanned her surroundings, searching for a rebuttal, but it was Ram who broke the silence with a sigh. She raised a hand slightly.

"Alright, Barusu. I'll allow your independent action."

"Sister—?!"

Rem was stunned by her sister's swift surrender. But Ram turned her raised palm to her sister and continued, "However."

"As Barusu knows, I cannot let him go alone. Allowing Barusu to act alone here would be defying Lord Roswaal's orders."

"Right. So, what's the compromise?"

"—It's annoying to admit, but we have no choice but to accept Barusu's offer. Ram will stay at the mansion. Rem will go with Barusu. If he does anything suspicious… that's the condition."

"Couldn't ask for more."

Subaru thrust his fist into the air, signaling his agreement to Ram's terms. Ram let out a small sigh and turned to her sister, who was still a little lost.

“Rem, that’s how it is, so please. Ram will handle confirming with Miss Beatrice and protecting Lady Emilia. —I’ll be watching over that too.”

“Sister, that look…”

“This isn’t the time to be talking about it. I’ll use it if necessary. You do the same, Rem.”

Rem couldn’t interject any further words at her sister’s calm tone. After an exchange that only the two of them understood, Rem swallowed several words and then turned a less-than-friendly gaze towards Subaru.

“Subaru, I’d like to hear the details.”

“On the way. Things might be getting pretty bad.”

If Subaru’s worst fears were true, the damage could be significant, not just for him personally but from a much broader perspective.

He lightly tapped Ram’s shoulder, showing his gratitude for letting him pass. Then, with Rem, who still looked unconvinced, Subaru headed for the entrance. Just then,

“—Subaru, are you going somewhere?”

From the top of the grand staircase in the entrance hall, the sound of a silver bell descended. He instinctively looked up. Emilia stood there, her silver hair swaying. She must have heard Subaru’s loud voice from earlier. Breathing slightly heavily, she looked at the three frozen figures in the entrance.

“I heard a loud voice, so I came down… Did something happen?”

“Something might happen, Emilia-tan. Well, you don’t have to worry. Oh, but I’d be happy if you worried just a little.”

Subaru deliberately acted this way to spare Emilia unnecessary anxiety. Despite Subaru’s usual frivolous demeanor, Emilia seemed to see something in it.

“You’re making a face like you’re about to do something dangerous again.”

Emilia saw through him immediately and made a meaningful face. Subaru scratched his head, wondering what to do about her keen insight.

“We just barely finished arguing about that…”

“It’s useless to stop you, isn’t it?”

“Well, I guess so. In fact, if I were stopped, it would hinder various situations…”

“Alright, alright, I get it. I won’t stop you.”

Emilia descended the stairs and stood before Subaru and the others, placing her hands on her hips. Her deep purple eyes looked directly at him, and he found himself unable to look away, drawn in by their sparkle. She reached out to the motionless Subaru, lightly touching his chest.

“Even if I tell you not to overdo it or push yourself, that seems useless too, doesn’t it?”

“Depending on the situation… yeah. No, I don’t want to do any of that, either.”

Words like “effort,” “hard work,” and “desperate” were all things he wanted to avoid. Yet, if he was the only one who could change the situation, Subaru had no choice but to act. He chuckled wryly, thinking how he’d developed such a troublesome nature—it was likely largely due to the girl in front of him.

“—May the blessing of the spirits be upon you.”

“What was that?”

Subaru tilted his head at her murmur, still touching his chest. Emilia gave him a knowing smile.

"It's a send-off. It means 'come back safely'."

"Ah, like sending someone off with a flint. Then I should respond too. Emilia-tan, glory to victory to you—"

"Alright, alright."

Emilia brushed off Subaru's salute and turned her gaze to Rem. Rem, who had been silently watching their exchange, straightened her back under Emilia's gaze.

"Rem, be careful too. And keep an eye on Subaru so he doesn't do anything reckless."

"Yes, Lady Emilia. Understood."

"You don't trust me, do you?"

"What are you saying? It's because I trust your character, Subaru, that we're even having this conversation."

"What kind of trust is that? It's devilishly ambiguous, in both good and bad ways."

Emilia, hands on her hips, was in lecturing mode. She probably had many more things to say, but she brought the conversation to a close there. Understanding Subaru's urgency, she pushed his back gently.

"Have a safe trip."

"Yep, I'm off!"

Pushed forward, he responded with a raised fist, leaving Emilia and Ram behind and rushing out of the mansion. Rem followed, bowing as she left the estate, and he could tell she was effortlessly pacing beside him as he ran.

"So, I'd like to hear the details…"

"There's a curse arts user in the village. Betty dispelled the curse on me, but others might have been cursed too. —If we're not careful, the village might be wiped out."

"—Are you serious?"

Rem gasped, her eyes wide, as she ran beside him. Subaru nodded silently in response, focusing intently on reaching the village. If the sorcerer were a rational human, such drastic measures wouldn't need to be considered. However, if Subaru's suspicions were correct, the worst could happen. That's why Subaru ran. Rem, running alongside him, also understood the gravity of the situation and ran in silence.

The two figures sliced through the night, heading for the distant village beyond the trees.

2

"Subaru, over there!"

Subaru heard Rem's voice, filled with a certain tension. Rem, who had cried out, was quite a distance ahead of Subaru's gaze. The clear outline of the village was in the direction she was pointing, and her expression indicated the same thought.

"The village is quite bright, isn't it…?"

Subaru also sensed something amiss, coming to the same conclusion. His steps were heavy, too slow for running, yet too fast for walking—his dash had slowed to that pace. Rem, unable to suppress her impatience, looked at Subaru in frustration, but he couldn't even manage a loud word, his side aching from the effort.

"Go on ahead…!"

He gestured for her to go first, but Rem shook her head. After all, the very reason she was accompanying Subaru was to monitor him; separating now would be self-defeating. Perhaps annoyed by Subaru's sluggishness, she said,

"Oh, it can't be helped. Just try not to bite your tongue."

"Huh, wait, Rem-rin, what are you—?!"

Rem rushed back to Subaru's side, extended her arm, grabbed the scruff of his neck, and effortlessly lifted his wobbly body. It was the same overwhelming difference in physical strength she had displayed when carrying the wine barrel.

Carried on Rem's shoulder, Subaru's body was inverted, soaring through the wind. Experiencing the speed of Rem's full sprint, Subaru was speechless at her incredible physical prowess. At the same time, he was convinced that his decision to bring her along was correct.

What could a powerless and incompetent Subaru possibly accomplish by diving into the heart of the crisis alone? Securing Rem as a fighting force, including their bluffing exchange at the entrance, had been the right move.

"We've arrived. Subaru, are you alright?"

"That was fast, as expected… Now, the village's situation… Ugh, bleh, bleh."

Subaru leaned against a fence, tormented by nausea caused by the jostling and exhaustion. Ignoring Subaru's pathetic state, Rem scanned her surroundings. A villager passing by noticed their conspicuous appearance.

"Aren't you two from the mansion? At this hour…"

"Just in time. Has something happened?"

Rem seized the approaching young man and questioned him from above. He widened his eyes slightly, startled by her firm tone, and stammered, "Uh, yes."

"Actually, several of the village children are missing. We know they were playing until it got dark, but after that…”

Rem opened her mouth to press further questions at the young man’s vague words. But Subaru moved first. Still breathing heavily, Subaru put a hand on the young man’s shoulder, turning him around.

“The missing ones are Luca, Petra, and Mild?”

“Th-That’s right… Do you have any idea where they went?”

Receiving confirmation of his fears, Subaru clicked his tongue and kicked the ground, muttering, “Damn it!” Then he gazed towards the edge of the village—the fence leading to the forest.

“Who’s looking for the kids besides you?”

“The entire youth group, and the village chief.”

“The kids are in the forest. You won’t find them searching inside the village.”

The young man’s expression changed at Subaru’s assertion. He still seemed to have questions for Subaru, but Subaru patted his shoulder and started running.

“I’m going into the forest first. You tell everyone, that the kids are in the forest!”

The young man called out in question from behind, but Subaru ignored him and started running again. Rem hurried to follow. She couldn’t understand Subaru’s certainty.

“How do you know that…?”

“I know. I’ve heard it twice now—about finding them crying alone deep in the forest—”

Tall wooden fences surrounded the village. They climbed over the fence adjacent to the forest, landing on the earth, and entered the woods. They wove through the gaps between the trees, mindful of branches and muddy ground, heading deeper.

"Even within the forest, the area is too vast. Subaru, do you have any idea where they might be…?"

"If the kids' words were accurate, it should be this way…"

He proceeded relying on his memory, but his steps, tracing only what he'd heard, were heavy.

Moreover, the visibility was pitch black, and there was no way to confirm if they were going the right way. But then,

"—The barrier is broken."

At Rem's surprised cry, Subaru clenched his fist, confirming his judgment was correct. Before them, Rem pointed to a crystal embedded in a large tree. It looked as if it had lost its light ages ago, a mysterious object they had encountered several times in the forest. Subaru remembered several instances where the forest and the barrier were mentioned. When was it that Ram had directly told him not to go deep into the mountains?

"What happens if the barrier is broken?"

"Witchbeasts will cross the boundary. That's why maintaining the barrier is the villagers' duty…!"

"No point in talking about it; it's a fact in front of us. More importantly, what are witchbeasts?"

Despite her continued agitation at Subaru's question, Rem replied,

"Witchbeasts are external enemies of humanity that possess magic… It's said they were created by the Witch to harm humanity."

"The Witch again…"

Subaru frowned at the frequent appearance of that unignorable word, but he became convinced by the first part of Rem's words. He understood the sorcerer's true identity and the impending disaster threatening the village.

“—! Subaru, what are you doing?!”

Rem cried out in surprise, trying to stop him. Before her, Subaru was crossing the tree, which was part of the barrier, and heading deeper into the forest. Turning to her, surprised, Subaru offered his left hand.

“The kids are deeper in. We have to go save them.”

“Do you have proof? To cross the barrier, Lord Roswaal’s permission is…”

“The scar on the back of my hand is proof.”

He pointed to the back of his left hand—where there was a wound he had sustained when he visited the village earlier that day. It was the mark of the fangs that had surrounded the children and also “baptized” Subaru.

—Pointing to this wound, Beatrice had said:

The entity that created this scar was the one who cursed Subaru.

The being involved in all instances where Subaru was afflicted by a curse. The same entity that had the potential to attack Rem in the fourth iteration.

Only that entity could encompass all these possibilities.

“It’s the dog the kids were so fond of. What if that dog-like thing wasn’t a dog, and cursed everyone it bit?”

It was not something man-made, but like a natural disaster.

Just as there were epidemics spread by rats, if it spread explosively through animals, it was easy to imagine what would happen to a village like this.

The safety of the children who had chased that dog into the forest was also similarly at risk.

"The more time we waste, the worse it gets. I don't know if the kids are cursed, but we need to get all of them back to the mansion for an exorcism, no matter what."

"Wait. You can't make such a decision on your own—besides, the situation is too suspicious."

"Huh?"

Rem persisted, clinging to Subaru as he tried to enter the forest in his agitated state. She pointed towards the village, and by extension, the mansion.

"At a time when Lord Roswaal is absent, does such a problem arise by design? What if this isn't targeting the mansion…"

"Then what do you propose? Abandon the kids, who are undeniably in immediate danger, and return to the mansion to strengthen our defenses? If you're okay with all the villagers dying tomorrow, then that's an option."

Subaru said it, knowing himself that it was a terribly unfair thing to say. Rem was merely trying to avoid risk. That was a natural emotion, and she was by no means to blame.

Whether they remained silent or crouched down, the time for a decision would inevitably come. No matter how limited the options, they had to choose one of the cards presented before them. Of course, they could choose not to choose. However, the deepest regret when he had done that was still etched deeply in Subaru's heart.

"Rem, let's go. We have no choice but to do something about it ourselves."

"Why are you so… Subaru, how much does this village concern you…?"

Perhaps still uncertain in her judgment, Subaru heard Rem murmur so effeminately for the first time. Rem, who had always maintained a composed demeanor no matter the situation. But when faced with a decision without her trusted lord and sister, she regained the fragile, age-appropriate face of a young girl. Subaru felt a painful empathy for that human weakness. However, neither of them had the luxury of wallowing in their wounds now.

There was no time to spare, and no room for mental distress. As he urged Rem to act, Subaru's legs trembled for reasons other than fatigue, and he couldn't hide it. Of course. He knew that the entity that had caused his death twice and Rem's death once was waiting ahead. Moreover, his strongest accompanying force was not actively enthusiastic about going deeper. Considering the worst-case scenario where he might have to go alone, how could he suppress the cowardice that he had tried to hide, but which was now peeking through?

However, Subaru slapped his cheek, making himself forget his weakness. Rem looked up at the sharp sound. Receiving her gaze, Subaru took a deep breath and said in a low voice,

"—Petra, when she grows up, she wants to make clothes in the capital."

"…Huh?"

"Luca says he's going to take over from his dad, the best lumberjack in the village, and Mild wants to make a flower crown from the flowers she gathered in the field to give to her mom."

"…………"

Counting each face that came to mind behind his eyelids, Subaru continued.

"Meina was happy because her little brother or sister is going to be born soon, and the brothers Dain and Cain are competing over who gets to marry Petra."

A small laugh escaped him unintentionally. Then, he shook his head at the silent Rem.

"How can you say it doesn't concern me? I know their faces, their names, and what they want to do tomorrow."

Subaru disliked children. They were noisy, overly familiar, spoke casually, and most of all, they had no manners. They were rude, impertinent, reckless, and presumptuous, like looking into a mirror.

Subaru was far from being a good person at heart. Even when he saw reports of gruesome incidents on TV, no matter how large the numbers on paper, if it wasn't close to him, he would forget it soon after a night's sleep; he was that heartless.

That's why he disliked them, and he didn't care what happened to children who weren't close to him. Indeed, as Rem said, prioritizing Emilia and the others and staying cooped up in the mansion felt much more like something Subaru would do. But,

"We promised to do radio calisthenics again tomorrow."

During the loop on his first day of summoning, Subaru must have thought the same thing. It would be easier to abandon them. He ran because he couldn't do that.

He looked at Rem. She was wavering in her judgment. She was confused. She looked weak. She looked like she was lamenting her lack of strength. It was Subaru's own reflection.

He hated himself for steeling his resolve while looking at her, who was weaker than him right now.

He was terrified and scared out of his wits, yet he despised himself for still trying to preserve himself by using someone else. If he could even use his own cowardice, then he would.

"I keep my promises, and I make others keep them. —I will definitely do radio calisthenics with those kids again. So, we're going deeper."

—He hadn't known courage could be so terrifying.

Subaru was desperately trying to steady his trembling hands, finishing his sentence without noticing his voice was shaking.

Watching Subaru's back, Rem silently closed her eyes. If she chose not to follow, he supposed that would be unavoidable. Going back now to call the villagers would waste too much time. At the very least, he wished to tell Rem that much before leaving—

“It can’t be helped, then.”

“Rem?”

Rem looked up at Subaru, a faint smile on her lips. She looked at the surprised Subaru with an expression that showed clear emotion, perhaps for the first time.

“Rem’s assigned task is to monitor Subaru. If I let Subaru go alone here, I wouldn’t be fulfilling that, would I?”

Subaru was stunned for a moment by her teasing words, then shook his head.

“Ah, you’re right. Keep a close eye on me so I don’t do anything suspicious.”

“Yes, I will. —So, shall we go?”

Rem glided to his side, and Subaru felt as if he was truly standing beside her for the first time, and he straightened his back. He felt a ticklish sensation and was about to thank her when he noticed something.

—In Rem’s hand, as she walked beside him, a flail had somehow appeared. The iron ball, connected by a chain to an iron handle, made a light metallic sound in her hand, unbefitting its weight.

“Um, Rem-san, is that…?”

“For self-defense.”

“No, but that’s…”

“For self-defense.”

With Rem, and such a conversation, he stepped into the untrodden forest. Somehow, desperately, he managed to rekindle the courage he had just managed to squeeze out, which was beginning to wane again.

Chapter 39:
An All-Nighter Pledge

The search through the night forest continued, Rem at the ready, wielding her self-defense iron ball.

The moonlight was blocked by the trees, and the forest's darkness, where pitch black fell, was deep. As they avoided the trees in their path and pushed through the branches, abrasions that bled slightly appeared all over Subaru's body.

As the master of the manor, Roswaal gave orders crisply, his posture and gestures full of dignity, though the size of his collar tended to obscure his grandeur. He then grinned widely at Subaru as if he had read his mind. "Buuut before that, you neeed to introduce yourself first. Luckily, all of the residents of the manor have gathered here."

The stinging pain of small wounds, and the frustration of fumbling through the dark, blindly searching.

Including the lack of time, the mental pressure these things put on Subaru was immense.

"Honestly, this much darkness was way more than I expected. Rem, how are you okay with it?"

"If we're in the forest, or the mountains, my divine protection… More importantly, please don't speak so loudly. Control your breathing, and your heartbeat is too noisy."

"Stop… you… can't…"

He retorted, breaking his words into individual hushed syllables, slowly following Rem, who was ahead.

If it weren't for her, he'd probably be lost and stuck, unable to even tell where he was. Rem's footsteps were light and unwavering as she moved forward, as if she had night vision.

She was traversing the dark forest, which Subaru couldn't even vaguely see, clearing a path to make it easier for him to follow.

In the depths of the darkness, where even moonlight was distant, the only thing he could rely on was Rem's back ahead of him. Her small body in front looked large, and he instinctively reached out and pinched the hem of her maid outfit.

"…What are you doing?"

"Just hugging onto something in the loneliness of the dark—that's the scene."

"If you're grabbing on so you don't get lost, you should properly grab my shoulder or something."

"I don't want to hinder your steady progress, but I can't stand the loneliness. That's just my bittersweet, delicate maiden heart coming out…"

"What kind of talk is that… You were a little cool just now."

Rem looked speechless, as if dumbfounded. She stopped, letting Subaru hold onto her hem, then looked around and let out a small sniff.

Subaru pointed at her police-dog-like gesture and asked,

"You've been doing that off and on, but can you really track by scent?"

"It's the one thing that can't be disguised. Appearance and voice can be faked, but the scent that emanates from one's very existence cannot."

Rem's words were brimming with confidence as she declared this. All Subaru could do was pray her sense of smell would lead them to their goal.

Suddenly, watching her, he felt like they'd had a conversation based on scent before. Back then, yes, it was definitely the 'Witch's scent' that was the problem. Rem had said he smelled of something abominable.

Thinking back, Beatrice also seemed to have said something similar about him. The situation didn't allow for it now, but if he remembered after things were settled—.

"—! Close, it's the scent of a living creature!"

Beside Subaru, who was lost in thought, Rem turned her face to the right and narrowed her eyes. Subaru followed suit, looking in the same direction, but all that greeted them was the unchanging darkness.

Feeling frustrated, he turned back to Rem and asked,

"Is it the kids' scent?!"

"I don't know, but it's not a beastly smell."

"That's good enough! Let's go!"

"This way."

Rem crouched low and ran, and Subaru followed, still holding onto her hem.

He felt a hint of excitement in Rem's voice. Their steps unconsciously quickened towards the literal light they saw in the darkness.

However, hope and anxiety are two sides of the same coin.

Rem's unconsciousness, in not definitively stating that the scent was the children's, was likely because she, too, subconsciously acknowledged that anxiety.

That's why they both needed to find an answer as quickly as possible.

Rem, leading the way, violently swung the iron ball in her hand, tearing out trees that blocked the path and creating a wide opening. Her rough method clearly showed her impatience, and Subaru, following behind, naturally pressed harder with each step.

His breath grew ragged, his legs heavy, but his mind was as sharp as ever. Gradually, his eyes began to adjust to the pitch black, and faint images of the forest began to appear in his vision.

Suddenly, the view in front of Subaru opened up. There was an open space in the forest where the trees parted. It was a small hill with an open sky, and the moonlight streaming down created an almost fantastical atmosphere.

On that small, green hill, bathed in the dazzling blessing of the moonlight—,

There they were, children lying sprawled on the green ground, their limbs flung out listlessly. He rushed over, and he and Rem quickly checked on their safety.

There were six of them in total. No external injuries were visible on their exposed skin, and while all of them were unconscious, they were still breathing.

“They’re alive. —They’re alive!”

Subaru clenched his fist and cheered, thinking they had made it in time.

Rem however, who had been observing the condition of a sleeping girl beside him, prefaced her next words with “No,” and said,

“They’re still breathing now, but their exhaustion is too severe. At this rate…”

“Exhaustion… A curse!”

Looking at them, the children’s faces were pale, and their ragged breaths gasped like fish out of water. Cold sweat beaded on their foreheads, and their sleeping faces looked pained, as if tormented by a nightmare.

Subaru bit his lip, objectively observing the curse—something that had attacked him many times—and asked,

“Can’t we do something, anything? Can you lift the curse, Rem?”

“Rem’s abilities are far too inadequate… If only Sister were here to see this situation.”

Like Subaru, who was spurred by impatience, Rem regretfully admitted her own powerlessness.

However, she quickly shook her head as if to shake off that weakness and said,

“In any case, I’ll cast healing magic, even if it’s just a temporary measure. We need to restore their strength, even a little.”

“Alright, please. What should I do?”

“Be vigilant of your surroundings, and gather the children in one place.”

Following Rem’s instructions, Subaru lined the children up in front of her. Looking at the children struggling to breathe with pained eyes, Rem used the iron handle to draw a circle on the ground.

A circle that completely enveloped the children. She squatted down at its edge, touched her hand to it, and began to chant,

“Water’s healing, bestow your blessing—”

Following the incantation, a faint blue light appeared within the crudely drawn circle, softly enveloping the sleeping children’s bodies, and slowly seeping into them.

Even to Subaru, who lacked knowledge of magic, the gentle, soft shimmer felt like a healing wave.

As time passed, the light permeated the children’s bodies, and gradually, their strained breathing began to calm, if only slightly.

“Amazing, Rem. With this…”

"I told you, it's a temporary measure. While I can speak to the mana in their bodies like this, it might be alright, but once it's depleted, it won't even be first aid. We need to eliminate the root cause as quickly as possible."

"Lift the curse, huh. We'll have to go back to the mansion and rely on Beako and Puck. Alright, let's go back. I'll carry the children…"

"—Subaru?"

Just as he steeled himself for an immediate retreat, Subaru was startled by his name being called.

He shifted his gaze to the sound and saw a brown-haired boy with his eyes slightly open.

The boy, who seemed to have regained consciousness, looked at Subaru with his eyes, and gasped painfully,

"Subaru, Suba…"

"You woke up, Luca. Good boy, strong boy. But don't push yourself. We'll take you back right away and get rid of whatever's making you suffer. You can leave it to me, just rest quietly for now…"

"One, deeper… still… deeper."

"…Hey, what did you say?"

Luca tried to convey something in broken words.

Subaru felt something in that fragmentary information that he couldn't ignore, so he asked again.

However his voice didn't reach Luca, who had closed his eyelids again and lost consciousness.

Subaru muttered a small "Damn it," then looked deeper into the forest,

"If the group from daytime, the missing kids… Ah, dammit, it's true. That girl with the braids isn't here."

The six sleeping here were all children whose names he knew, but the one missing was the girl who had led Subaru to the puppy during the day. She was a shy child who struggled to join Subaru's group.

Her figure was nowhere to be seen. Luca, with his brief return to consciousness, didn't say "help me" or "it hurts," but instead conveyed that "that child was taken deeper."

A child who was not even ten years old, still in a life-threatening condition, worried not about himself, but about his friend's safety.

"Damn it all."

Swearing once more, Subaru stood up.

Luca's exchange seemed to have been mostly unheard by Rem, who had a question mark floating over her head. Subaru turned to her, pointed a finger, and asked,

"Question, Rem. If we keep casting healing magic on the children, can we extend the time limit?"

"…For now, yes, but it really is just buying time. Rem would also be tied down here."

Rem's words were disjointed as she responded, unable to grasp Subaru's intention.

As he listened, Subaru's mind raced. What should he do? How should he, useless in this situation, move most effectively?

There was only one possible course of action. It would be a huge gamble, but—

"Rem. One of the children was still taken deeper. I think that's probably where the beast is."

"Deeper… but if they were taken one by one, then that means—"

Subaru stopped Rem from voicing her worst fear by holding out his palm. To her, silenced, Subaru said with a frown, "I know the situation's bad, but we somehow managed to save the lives of the kids we thought were pretty much gone. So, shouldn't we try to save the rest too?"

"You might get greedy and drop even the ones you could have brought back."

"That's why you're here, Rem, so that doesn't happen, right?"

Rem flinched, rebuffed. Subaru spread his arms in front of her.

"With your strength, Rem, carrying six kids and escaping shouldn't be impossible, right? On the other hand, I thought I was pretty strong, but I can't carry six kids. Two at most, maybe three if I push it. I can't use healing magic, and there's almost nothing I can do here. So, we should make good use of the pawn that's free."

"…………"

"I'll go check deeper. Rem, take the children and go back to the village for now. —Don't worry, I won't do anything reckless, impossible, or thoughtless. Just drop the kids off at the village, and then Rem, you can fly back."

Rem listened silently to Subaru's absurd logic.

Though her gaze didn't soften, Subaru's lips kept rambling, talking up a storm.

"The child deeper in… In the worst-case scenario, I'll turn back, but if there's still hope, I can at least buy some time."

Unable to accept Subaru's decision, Rem grabbed his sleeve and pleaded.

Was she worried about him, or simply unable to stomach his reckless plan?

Hoping it was the former, Subaru gave a wry smile and gently removed her fingers from his sleeve. Then, he took her detached fingers and said, "Don't worry, we won't lose each other."

"On what basis…"

"I have a basis."

Smiling, Subaru touched his nose with his finger, then pointed at her face and said,

"You're confident in your nose, right? I've actually been told a few times by R-rin and B-ko that I emit a pretty obnoxious smell."

Rem fell silent, her eyes wide.

He jabbed both fingers at her in her astonishment, as if taking revenge on the Rem of the past, the one this Rem didn't know.

"Even if no one else notices, you alone will notice my smell. My foul stench, the lingering scent of a sinner—right?"

"Subaru… how much do you know…?"

"Well, I don't know much at all. There's so much I don't understand, and no matter how many times I repeat yesterday, today, and tomorrow, I can't seem to reach the answer I want."

Rem made a bewildered face at the sudden change in topic. While he thought her reaction was understandable, he was also somewhat surprised at his own state of mind, being able to laugh about this.

He wanted to praise himself for having developed such thick skin.

"Just like you have a lot of things you want to ask me, I have a lot of things I want to ask you. So, after everything's settled, let's talk. All night in each other's rooms, in our pajamas, like a late-night girls' talk. Promise, okay?"

With that, he forcibly intertwined his finger with hers, which he was still holding.

Their pinky fingers linked, Rem looked at Subaru with bewildered eyes. In front of her, Subaru vigorously shook their intertwined fingers up and down.

“Pinky promise!”

“Wh-What was that just now…?”

“It’s a promise ritual from my hometown. If you break it, you have to swallow a thousand needles. It’s like one damage hit a thousand times, an instant kill move if you’re playing an RPG with only triple-digit HP.”

Subaru’s words came thick and fast, now beyond Rem’s comprehension. To Rem, who was speechless from confusion piled upon confusion, Subaru prefaced his next words with “In short,” and said,

“I trust you, Rem. So, I want to act in a way that makes you trust me too. Let’s make that promise now.”

“…”

“I told you, didn’t I? I keep my promises, and I make others keep theirs. So don’t worry, I’m completely fine.”

“Fine, you say…”

Finally unable to hold it in, Rem let out a sigh of exasperation and gave a weak laugh.

Unable to suppress the urge to laugh, Rem continued to chuckle softly, and Subaru, pulled along, also chuckled silently.

After laughing for a while, Rem lifted her head and said,

“You’ve made a promise. —I’ll really be asking you a lot of things, you know.”

“I’ll tell you anything, even the name of my first crush. Except for the name of the girl I’m currently in love with, that’s off limits.”

“I already know who.”

"But it won't reach the person herself, will it!"

Somehow, it was like a conversation they had left behind.

By recreating it, Subaru found his own satisfaction. Rem, too, with a serious expression, said,

"I'll be back soon. Please, don't do anything reckless. Lady Emilia would be angry."

"I don't want Emilia-tan to be angry either, so I'll be careful. — Well, it'll be fine. Today, I'm pretty much a demon."

"A demon…?"

"The demon version of 'godlike'! My new favorite phrase!"

He crossed his arms, spread his legs, and struck a new pose, grabbing at the empty air.

What did Rem think of Subaru's flimsy bravado?

She didn't comment on his attitude.

"See you later,"

She said, then scooped up all the children. The sight of the small girl carrying six people, albeit young ones, on her tiny shoulders looked like a street performance. Even in this situation, Subaru found himself laughing as he watched her receding back.

Alone on the small hill in the forest, in a world where silence fell, Subaru exhaled deeply, then slowly turned towards the direction he had been told to go.

"Alright then, let's do this, Subaru."

He said, as if steeling his trembling self, then bit hard on the pinky finger with which he had made the promise, and began to run.

—What awaited him ahead: despair, hope, or something else?

The fourth morning, which he had reached countless times, now felt ever distant.

Chapter 40:
The Witchbeast's Fangs

My heart raced, but I tread carefully.

Deep in the forest, Subaru continued to traverse the dark night, following Luca's words, which he'd squeezed out of a hazy consciousness.

His mouth was dry, and his throat burned with tension. He held his breath, silenced his footsteps, and pushed deeper into the perpetually dark forest. Though there was a faint hint of hesitation, there was no sign of weakness, no fear of moving forward.

Despite his big talk to Rem, Subaru didn't believe his actions were without a chance of success. He didn't think so highly of himself that he'd jump into a situation with zero chance of winning.

Just as he'd fallen from grace in his original world without reason, his self-assessment in this world was the lowest possible—likely only below someone completely clueless.

It was precisely because he made such judgments that he wouldn't commit the folly of stepping into a no-win situation. Even when there was absolutely no turning back, he'd still search for excuses, showing his small-mindedness and cowardice.

He was aware of this, and because of that, he could follow the thinnest of threads, those easily overlooked, and struggle to cling to an answer.

"Think back on the situation. If the 'Witchbeast' is really that dog…"

One tended to focus only on the terrifying implications and the curses that actually took lives, but looking at it from a broader perspective, a chance of victory emerged.

No matter how lethal the trap, the one who set it was still that fragile puppy. If the target was that thing, which fit perfectly into a child's hand and whose cuteness seemed to equate to its combat ability, then—

"I can't possibly lose… right?"

It was a pathetic way to seek victory, hoping for it based on the opponent's small size.

However, he didn't think it was a misguided idea. Subaru had already had the curse removed by Beatrice. So, if that being tried to get him again—he should be able to strike first.

The potential advantage in a fight, that thin thread, was the driving force behind Subaru's current footsteps. Of course, he was aware that this was based on the most Subaru-centric conditions aligning.

Naturally, he could imagine the worst-case scenario contradicting this, but—

"No, no, stop it. If you envision the worst pattern, the way this world's god's work is to happily cross that line and bring about an even worse situation."

Considering past results, he set up a protective barrier before suffering a terrible backlash. Even knowing that this world's way of showing affection was to mercilessly tear away that barrier and gouge out the hidden wounds beneath.

"—!"

He suddenly held his breath and stopped, sensing something amiss.

The change in the air was palpable on his skin, and he felt the temperature of the sweat on his forehead, which had been damp from exhaustion, rapidly drop.

A dense presence, unconsciously radiating intimidation, pricked his skin like needles. Just its presence alone instilled such instinctive fear.

The warmth of the air changed, and as the airflow became disturbed, it carried a foul odor. The forest, which had only smelled of dense grass and earth moments before, now reeked of a stench that made him involuntarily wrinkle his nose.

Unlike Rem's extraordinary sense of smell, even Subaru's ordinary nose could clearly detect it. It was the distinct odor of a living creature—or more plainly, a beastly smell.

Unable to stop the rising sense of dread, Subaru held his breath and moved forward.

He cautiously peeked through the gaps in the trees, looking towards the source of the smell, and realized that the thin thread he had clung to had been abruptly severed.

—It was covered in jet-black fur, blending into the deep darkness of the forest.

Its physique was comparable to a large dog. Its long limbs firmly pressed into the ground, supporting a body as heavy as Subaru's, if not more so.

Its developed claws and fangs, too large to be contained within its mouth, were a culmination of violence, evolved specifically for piercing and tearing flesh.

In the darkness, where light was blocked by branches and leaves, its two glowing red eyes were impossible to miss. They ceaselessly scanned their surroundings, looking as if they were eagerly awaiting the moment to sink their fangs into prey.

Seeing its form emerge in the darkness, it became clear.

—That peculiar appearance, from which only pure threat was extracted, that was a witchbeast.

"And that thing…"

Subaru examined its form in detail, touching his chin as he searched his memory.

The witchbeast before his eyes—he remembered it.

It closely resembled the horned creature he had fought to the death at the end of the previous loop. At first glance, he couldn't confirm the presence of a horn on its forehead. But if it was the same one—

"Did I inadvertently get my revenge last time…?"

It was no consolation, but thinking that he had managed to get a blow in made him feel a slight sense of relief.

However, just as all the events of the previous loop remained only within Subaru, that fact could not bring about any change to the current situation.

If there was any gain, it was—

"Only knowing that those claws and fangs aren't just for show…"

He wasn't expecting a scenario where the claws were fake and the fangs were just for decoration; he was just disheartened to know that the threat was genuine.

With the confirmation of the large witchbeast's presence, Subaru's resolve quickly began to wane. His already thin chance of victory had completely vanished.

According to his self-diagnosis from earlier, not being reckless was Subaru's course of action.

"Anyway, slowly…"

It was just as he was about to decide to leave the area and wait for Rem to rejoin him.

"…"

He couldn't take his eyes off the witchbeast and backed away, glaring at its strange form. Then, in the corner of his slightly widened vision, was something that caught Subaru's attention.

In the deep abyss of the forest where the witchbeast stood, there was a place where fallen trees lay piled up. Perhaps the witchbeast's dwelling was in the gaps between those fallen trees.

—Beside those fallen trees, a young girl had been discarded.

Her clothes were tattered. Her brown braids were disheveled. Blood oozed from various spots on her fair skin, and from a distance, it was impossible to tell the extent of her injuries as she lay face down.

Still, the girl—

"—Ugh."

A small, faint sound.

It traveled through the air, through the forest, and sharply struck Subaru's eardrums.

It was a distance too far to have reached him. Or perhaps it was an auditory hallucination, a mere trick of his mind.

If he looked closely, the fallen girl wasn't moving an inch, and for only her faint groan to reach him like that, it was too pathetic a wish for a miracle to grant.

Only Subaru was here. Only Natsuki Subaru.

If a miracle were to occur, if Heaven wished to save the girl, then a more reliable, strong, and valiant hero should be here.

For example, Roswaal. For example, Beatrice. For example, Reinhard.

They would have easily overcome such a situation. They wouldn't have cowered like Subaru, trembling at the knees and giving up.

They would have easily repelled the witchbeast's threat, rescued the girl from despair, and led the story to a perfect, happy ending. Amazing, cool, elegant.

However the one here was Natsuki Subaru.

He had no strength. No magic. No wisdom, nor cleverness to be resourceful. If he could cling to a miracle, he would shove aside the crowds and be the first to seize that right. He was that kind of hopeless man.

Subaru was the one who desired miracles. He couldn't possibly be a miracle.

Subaru gritted his teeth, forcing himself to endure the chattering of his jaw.

He took a deep breath, placing a hand on his chest as if to confirm his heartbeat. It was beating. It was certainly beating, but he couldn't tell if it was fast or slow.

The passage of time had become terribly ambiguous. His vision felt as if it was warping, and he wiped the sweat from his forehead, rubbed his eyelids, and tried to stick to his original intention—to remain a bystander.

Yet,

"Hey, stop it…"

A weak mumble. In his line of sight, the witchbeast turned its head slowly, looking at the fallen girl. It then scraped the ground with its sharp claws and moved towards her with deliberate steps.

One step at a time, one step at a time, as if chipping away at Subaru's heart.

He couldn't read the witchbeast's intentions. It must have been the one to drag her here. It could have killed her anytime. Yet, it had kept her alive. Now that the girl, whom it had kept alive, had moved, it was trying to stop her. It didn't make sense. It was unreasonable. It would reach her in just a few more steps. Wait, this was wrong, it didn't make sense. What should he do? He saw no chance, no hope of victory. There was nothing left to cling to, just nothing, simply——Emilia, surely, wouldn't hesitate.

"…Hey, hey, hey, hey, hey, hey, I'm thinking about some pretty stupid things right now."

He took a deep breath, steadied his breathing, dug his nails into his trembling knees, and bit his lip. He bit down hard enough to draw blood, awakening his consciousness with the pain.

Natsuki Subaru couldn't perform miracles. All he could do was struggle dirty, writhe, and annoy the approaching despair by throwing a tantrum and saying he hated it. That was the extent of his abilities.

Subaru didn't overestimate himself. Therefore, he knew the limits of what he could do.

At most, he could inflict a tiny scratch on fate. And if he saw that limit, that maximum extent of his abilities, then he should fulfill it.

He took off his jacket and wrapped his tattered butler uniform around his left arm. He tightened it securely to prevent it from slipping, wiped away the blood, and faced forward,

"ORA-AAAAAAH!!"

He bellowed, kicked up grass and dirt, and leaped into the area where the witchbeast was poised.

Startled by the sudden loud noise, the witchbeast flinched dramatically and sprang back, lowering its body and glaring at Subaru.

Subaru, also, encouraged himself with his shout, stomping his feet and intimidating it.

"Aaaah! Over here! Come on, look! What's wrong, are you scared!!"

He spat and yelled. His heart felt like it was about to burst, sending waves of pain throughout his body.

Right in front of him, the witchbeast, now face to face, felt much larger than he had imagined.

This was partly because he had seen it from a distance, but also largely due to being overwhelmed by its immense hostility.

What he had learned from his previous fight with a witchbeast was that even a being grandly called a “Witchbeast” still fought within the familiar confines of a regular animal.

Of course, Subaru had never had the chance to cross swords with a four-legged beast in his original world, but he had seen countless instances of humans fighting beasts in manga and anime.

Among those, the most effective strategy against an opponent whose main attack was biting would be to cover one’s arm with thick cloth, as Subaru was doing now.

Given his poor equipment, this was the only countermeasure Subaru could prepare.

Shouting, yelling, and threatening, he thrust his left arm forward to keep it at bay.

Ideally, the witchbeast would be timid and flee, pressured by Subaru’s spirit. However, as before, these creatures never let go of prey they had targeted.

In contrast to Subaru’s roar, which shattered the forest’s silence, the witchbeast, crouched low, didn’t let out a single growl. It simply coiled its limbs silently, as if calculating the timing to explode, and merely glared at Subaru.

Its demeanor clearly indicated which of them was the prey, raising Subaru’s adrenaline further, and he took another step forward, gaining momentum,

“What are you so complacent about! Come on!! Come! Co—”

It vanished.

Just like that, the witchbeast that had been in front of him melted into the darkness and disappeared.

His throat froze in astonishment, and the trembling of his eyelids made Subaru realize his mistake: he had been robbed of a moment of blinking. The witchbeast had been waiting for that brief instant when Subaru lost sight of it.

Subaru was terrified that a wild animal had engaged in such a sophisticated psychological battle, waiting for a moment of distraction from its opponent. He immediately cast his gaze in the direction where the witchbeast had vanished, and——The moment that scene flashed through his mind, Subaru instinctively pulled his right leg back.

"—!"

"Take that, you idiot!"

Where his right foot had been, the witchbeast's fangs snapped shut with a high-pitched crunch. He had narrowly avoided a blow that would have gouged out his nerves if he had been a moment slower. Subaru then kicked the witchbeast's unguarded torso with all his might from directly above.

It was a front kick from a compromised stance, far from his full power. But it damaged the witchbeast, which let out a whimper like a puppy and tumbled away.

Perhaps feeling humiliated by that pathetic cry, the witchbeast righted itself, glared at Subaru, and finally bared its fangs, letting out a ferocious roar.

Its red eyes were stained with fury, and its fangs clattered repeatedly in its drooling maw.

—That last strike was a fluke. He had believed that it would target his leg again, just like in the previous loop, and he had simply gotten lucky.

"Come on, come on! You're pretty pissed off, aren't you? Well, I'm even more pissed off than you are, you bastard!"

—It's coming!

An unfounded certainty, but at the same time, the witchbeast's form vanished.

When it reappeared, it was already before him, having circled to Subaru's left. Its long fangs plunged into the arm he had extended forward.

He felt the sharp fangs pierce through the thick fabric and sink deep into the flesh beneath.

"You—!"

An intense, agonizing pain that almost made him cry out, a sharp agony that directly assaulted his brain.

But,

"—Don't want to!"

He tensed the muscles in his left arm. Naturally, the embedded fangs became harder to dislodge, and combined with the effect of the wrapped jacket, the witchbeast's movements were completely halted.

Subaru's gaze locked with the witchbeast's red eyes, and as he was almost swallowed by its overwhelming hostility,

"You bit me, you idiotic moron—!"

Subaru embraced the witchbeast's body with his left arm and spun around with all his might.

The witchbeast's body lifted due to centrifugal force, and with the momentum of the swing, he slammed it back-first into a large tree behind them.

He thought he heard a yelp of pain, but Subaru's movements didn't stop. To avoid missing the chance while he had the fangs—that lethal weapon—restrained, he swung and spun, wildly slamming the creature in his arms against trees and the ground, repeatedly.

Finally,

"This is the end!"

He brought it down from directly above onto a fallen log, aiming to crush the witchbeast's face.

A tremendous impact reverberated through his arm, and then the witchbeast, which had been struggling to free itself, suddenly went limp.

Gasping for breath at its surprisingly easy defeat, Subaru collapsed to his knees.

Looking at it, the witchbeast, still biting his left arm, had no life in its eyes. A large amount of blood spilled from its mangled head, and a tree branch that had pierced it during one of the slams protruded from its back.

Slowly, he widened its jaw and pulled out its fangs. Its tongue lolled out. Realizing that its life had completely ceased, Subaru took a deep, shaky breath.

"Did… I win?"

Dazed, he muttered only that, then removed the jacket, stained with blood and saliva, from his left arm. The skin underneath was in a terrible state; the embedded fangs had gouged out flesh, and the white bone beneath was faintly visible.

The pain he had forgotten in his excitement surged back as he looked directly at the wound.

Wincing greatly at the burning sensation,

"Anyway, ah, it hurts. Damn, the girl…"

He crawled, at a frustratingly slow pace, somehow reaching the girl beside the fallen tree deeper in the forest.

Despite it being a life-or-death battle, there was not a shred of satisfaction or sense of accomplishment from his victory. All that remained was a heavy feeling of fatigue that weighed down his body and a strong aversion, a desire to quickly erase the memory of the mutual killing intent that had just taken place.

He didn't need exhilaration or the afterglow of victory now. He just wanted to confirm, with a sense of urgency, if what he had sought at the end of this struggle had been recovered. That impatience was far stronger.

With his left arm clutched to his side, Subaru leaned his back against the fallen tree and let out a deep sigh of relief.

The girl right beside him—her body faintly soiled with dirt and blood—he could indeed confirm that the breath of life remained within her. In fact, her complexion was better than that of the children he had seen earlier, and aside from minor external injuries, the damage was extremely light. Subaru, with his exposed bone in his left arm, was in a far more severe condition.

“You made me worry… Well, it’s fine. If a girl’s body gets scarred, I’d have to take responsibility and marry her, wouldn’t I? Emilia-tan seems strict about harems.”

As relief washed over him, what returned was mental stability brought on by lighthearted remarks.

He had told Rem he would buy time, but as it turned out, he had completely eliminated the threat itself. He probably wouldn’t be punished for being a little proud.

“Buying time is good, but I suppose it wouldn’t hurt to defeat that thing, would it?”

Quite brilliant, he had achieved a long-cherished desire that hadn’t been fulfilled in the original story.

To distract himself from the pain of his injury, his rambling thoughts continued. He wanted to somehow take the girl back to the village, but he didn’t have the strength left to do so.

It would be best to calmly wait for Rem to rejoin him. This time, there was no time limit. In the worst case, he could probably just fall asleep here and it would work out.

“Though, I can’t exactly just openly doze off…”

He re-tied his loosened jacket, making it serve as a tourniquet, and sighed.

Then, Subaru suddenly heard the distant rustling of bushes.

He looked up. Just as he thought he might have mistaken the sound of the wind, the same sound came again, directly from the front—from the direction Subaru had come from.

The direction Subaru had emerged from was also the direction he had parted ways with Rem. So, the one rustling the bushes would be that charming girl with blue hair.

“I’ve been waiting forever… Unfortunately, your opponent isn’t around anymore.”

He prepared a line he’d always wanted to say, waiting for the girl he was meeting to burst out.

The grass and trees rustled, and he sensed a presence stopping just beyond the bushes. He felt eyes observing him, and Subaru gave a wry smile.

There was no longer an enemy to be wary of, he thought, and raised his right hand to signal, —And then, his whole body registered it: the suffocating, beastly stench returned.

The bushes rustled, and from beyond, a low, four-legged shadow stepped out.

Then,

“Oh… you’ve got to be kidding me…”

Numerous points of light—glowing red eyes that cut through the night forest—peeked out from beyond the cluster of trees directly in front of him.

There were so many he hated to count them, likely more than he had fingers and toes combined.

Holding his left arm, he stood up, surveyed the points of light floating in the darkness, and let out a deep breath.

Subaru suddenly touched his cheek with his right hand and realized it was contorted. The corner of his mouth twitched, forming a smile.

Ah, he understood. Indeed, this, involuntarily, made him laugh.

“—I’m dead, aren’t I?”

Overwhelming killing intent exploded with those words, and the silent forest was swallowed by madness.

All Subaru could do was shield the still unconscious girl behind him, spread his arms, and stand his ground, showing his resolve.

—A scream, trailing high, high into the forest sky.

Chapter 41:
Oni

A guttural cry escaped Subaru's throat, echoing through the deep, dark forest.

It was an inarticulate burst of sound, neither "ah" nor "oh," utterly devoid of meaning. Even as it tore from his own throat, Subaru couldn't find a reason or purpose for the act.

A multitude of crimson lights darted towards him. As they drew closer, their outlines sharpened, revealing raven-black beasts with bared fangs, lunging for the attack.

There was no time to register the trembling in his legs, the terror in his heart, or the screams of his soul. In that moment, Subaru's mind wasn't consumed by the overwhelming embodiment of "death" closing in, but solely by the safety of the girl lying just behind him.

He spread his stance, extended both arms, and used his body as a shield, preventing the beasts' claws and fangs from reaching her. It wasn't a conscious decision; his body simply moved on its own. If only his opponent had been the kind to back down easily in the face of such resolve, he might have been saved. But the reality pressing in was merciless. Before the raw, untamed hunger of the beasts, such sentiment held no meaning.

—It's over. After coming all this way, just when I finally saw the whole picture.

He still wasn't strong enough. He still couldn't reach. No matter how much his heart struggled not to yield, a sheer lack of power stripped Subaru of his options. Was this situation also fated to be the same?

"—!!"

He roared, refusing to accept defeat. That much, at least, he wouldn't yield to any of the crimson lights before him. He held onto his fighting spirit, a literal bluff, a hollow threat —fangs clamped down on his windpipe, —Then, before his eyes, he saw a witchbeast's head explode like an overripe fruit.

The close-range pulverization sent blood spattering, drenching Subaru head-to-toe in fresh crimson. Immediately after, the headless body, still propelled by its momentum, slammed into Subaru. He was thrown backward, tumbling, and as he shook his head to clear the pain and the nauseating feeling of blood, he staggered to his feet.

What in the—

"Sorry for the delay—but Rem is glad she made it in time."

With an elegant swish of her skirt, a white apron dress daintily held in one hand and a menacing iron flail in the other, a blue-haired girl descended into the abyss. She spun, taking a graceful step, the clinking of her chain echoing.

"I thought the plan was for you to focus on stalling?"

"I did my best! I stalled for an insane amount of time! I went all out, like it wouldn't matter if I defeated them! And this is the result, thank you very much!"

Subaru literally prostrated himself in gratitude to Rem, who was making the morning star's chain clang in a high-pitched rhythm. Rem, observing his reaction, slowly turned her gaze to what was in front of her—a horde of witchbeasts, licking their chops and eyeing them, anticipating the arrival of new prey.

The creatures that had been so aggressive towards Subaru alone had now turned cautious with the addition of a single, small girl. They weren't underestimating the fact that one of their pack had been instantly slaughtered. As he'd realized from their previous encounter with that one beast, despite their brutish appearance, these creatures were remarkably cunning and sly.

"Rem…"

He called out to her towering back, urging her to stay alert. Rem didn't turn at Subaru's slightly lowered tone, merely exhaling.

"After tracking Subaru's terrible body odor and rushing here because of your incredibly loud, shameless shrieking, this is what Rem finds. You're in a dreadful state, aren't you?"

"My 'terrible body odor' is a bit of a low blow. Also, I'm not aware of it myself, but I'd like to know in detail what I was screaming just now."

"If Rem feels like it, and if they allow it, I don't mind telling you in full detail."

Pointing forward with the iron handle, Rem's eyes gleamed with a dangerous light, as if challenging them. While Subaru's blood ran cold, the witchbeasts, on the receiving end of that hostility, didn't seem to be taking it calmly. Clear signs of battle readiness and an eager anticipation of domination emerged in the eyes of those who had been silently glaring at them.

"It seems that won't be possible."

"—Rem!"

Unable to hold back, Subaru involuntarily called out Rem's name, his voice high, almost a shriek.

Before her, two witchbeasts suddenly unleashed a ferocious attack, splitting left and right. Had it been Subaru facing them, he would have been unable to keep up, unable to decide which way to focus, and easily torn apart by their poisonous fangs.

But,

"—Hup!"

Her right arm, gripping the iron handle, swung as if casually swatting a fly. The chain attached to the handle followed its rotation, and the flail linked to the chain dutifully followed. The destructive weapon, which should have been cumbersome, spun with incredible speed. Following the swing of her arm, it swept away everything in its path, directly striking a witchbeast's torso and blowing it clean in half. Bones and organs splattered, quickly transforming into forest fertilizer, unnoticed by anyone.

Meanwhile, the surviving partner, whose comrade had been instantly killed, channeled all its rage into its fangs, delivering a sharp blow to Rem's exposed left side—just before her left fist crashed down on the witchbeast's snout from directly above. The force of the punch caved in its skull, killing it instantly with a blow that buried its head in the ground.

It was a brilliantly executed maneuver. But its brutality was far from what one would call brilliant.

Praise was far from his mind. Subaru's eyes were wide, and he could do nothing but stare in stunned disbelief at the massacre unfolding before him.

He thought he knew Rem's destructive power firsthand. It became unequivocally clear that his understanding was merely a "thought."

"S-So stronggggggg!!"

"Rem wonders if that's an appropriate thing to say to a lady, Subaru."

"My vocabulary's too poor for me to think of any other words to describe this situation. Seriously, you're amazing!"

Overwhelmed by Rem's unexpected reliability, Subaru scrambled to his feet and returned to his original position. The crawling Subaru checked on the unconscious girl. Despite the moment of absolute peril, and the ongoing threat to her life, the sleeping girl remained profoundly unconscious, unaware of it all.

"My, how carefree and optimistic. She'll surely grow up to be a cheerful and tenacious child!"

Praising her profound sleep, he used his aching arm to carefully lift her small body. He readjusted his grip, holding her light weight securely.

"Rem, can you actually wipe them all out by yourself?!"

"We are outnumbered. It would be a losing battle."

"Right, I figured. In that case…"

He moved to Rem's side, still holding the girl. The witchbeasts, having lost two more from their pack, were slow to react. They crouched low, trying to gauge their next move, their eyes gleaming with intimidation, but lacked the impetus to act. If they had attempted an infiltration strategy, relying on their numbers, Subaru and his group, inferior in strength, would have been wiped out instantly. However, they mistook caution for cowardice and chose the least optimal path.

Therefore, Subaru and Rem, almost simultaneously, fixed their eyes on the same spot.

"There!"

Rem's strike answered Subaru's shout. The flail's roar tore through the air, celebrating slaughter. It found its mark, exploding the ground just in front of the densely packed mabeast horde—sending clumps of earth and dust flying, and a torrent of debris obscured the retreating witchbeasts' vision for several seconds.

"Now—!"

At Rem's next shout, Subaru's body bolted forward as if kicked. His destination: a single point of breakthrough in the dense area, where the previous blow had forced an opening in their encirclement.

As Subaru plunged into the gap, a witchbeast that had yielded the way roared. The beast roared and leaped again, attempting to block Subaru's path, but—

"—Whoa, trauma sound!!"

A light clinking of chains gently caressed his ear as it passed by. A shiver ran down Subaru's spine at the familiar sound. Right beside him, the flail's welcome exploded, and a burst of blood blossomed like a solitary flower in the night forest.

Leaving the fresh blood behind, he stepped on uncertain ground, plunged into the forest amidst immense hostility. He leaped over tree roots, his cheek brushing against branches.

“Rem, I don’t know where I’m going!”

“Straight ahead, forward. Once we pass through the barrier, the fight will be decided. Until then, do not lose your sense of direction!”

“Straight ahead,” she said, but “ahead” was elusive. He hadn’t realized that the darkness, where he could only see a mere few feet ahead, would so thoroughly disorient him. Even if he tried to feel his way forward, both his hands were occupied by the weight of the girl. Naturally, Subaru was forced to curl his body, minimizing harm to the girl, while keeping an eye on obstacles ahead as he ran.

He was out of breath. Had he lost his way? Would they catch up? Would they get ahead, surround them? His anxieties were endless, and the rising fear steadily eroded Subaru’s spirit.

His left arm felt numb, and the unceasing bleeding dripped from the fabric of his jacket. The drops of blood falling to the ground almost made him feel as if he was leaving a trail for his pursuers.

Running, dashing, constantly fleeing. The scenery remained the same, making him feel as though he hadn’t moved an inch. Though he knew that wasn’t true, desperation spurred on that illusion.

Whenever weakness swelled in his chest, whenever his knees threatened to buckle,

—From behind, the surging sound of chains spurred Subaru on.

Each time he heard that sound, Subaru grit his teeth and looked forward. He was able to run like this now thanks to Rem. Because she eliminated external threats and protected his back, he was able to continue living this shameful existence. Since he’d already exposed himself this much, he might as well throw caution to the wind and desperately cling to life.

“Ah, damn it! My side aches—!”

He cried out in frustration, pushing himself forward with each step. Forward, ever forward—!

Then, suddenly, the darkness opened before Subaru's eyes. His vision expanded, and he instinctively squinted at the sudden light. In the distance, he saw artificial light.

"Rem! Light! People… we're reaching the barrier!"

At the literal appearance of light, Subaru turned his head back to convey his joy. However, he instantly stared in shock.

Behind him, Rem, who had been fighting to protect Subaru's back, was a horrifying sight. Her impeccably tailored maid uniform was shredded in countless places by claws or fangs. Numerous shallow wounds marred her exposed white skin, and her once vibrant blue hair was so disheveled and caked with so much splattered blood that its original color was almost indistinguishable.

"Rem—!"

"Run! …While Rem can still be Rem!"

Subaru's voice, full of concern, was cut off by her strong words from behind. He couldn't accept it. But her shout banished his hesitation, and he ran towards the barrier. All sentimentality was put aside. If only he could just pass through the barrier, just get through there—

"What…?"

His resolve was immediately shattered by an unexpected sight. Subaru's dumbfounded gaze was directed towards the glow of the crystal that powered the barrier, right next to the great tree where it was embedded. His gaze was low, almost parallel to the ground. There, a small, tiny shadow crouched.

As he drew closer, and its outline became clearer, Subaru's eyes widened. It was a small creature.

Its body was small enough to be completely enveloped by both his arms, and its fur was as soft as cotton. He knew it was incomparable to the larger ones.

—It was the witchbeast puppy that had guided Subaru to the village.

"I haven't seen you around, but… I can kick your ass, even you!"

If it was trying to block his way, it was clearly out of its depth. If it intended to stand as the final obstacle in this escape, he had to say its thinking was shallow. But Subaru's thoughts—

"No way…"

—were swept away by the torrent of mud and earth that unfolded before his eyes, completely filling his vision. It was a sight that made him realize that the shallow thinker was, in fact, himself.

The world slowly, gradually slowed down. Subaru understood from experience that this was a grace period granted by being on the verge of death. In this world where everything moved sluggishly, he belatedly realized something. Before entering the forest, Rem had told Subaru this:

—Witchbeasts are external enemies of humanity, possessing magic.

She didn't say they could use curses. She said they possessed magic. Didn't that also mean they could use this kind of magic?

"Oooohhh—!!"

He thrust his feet sideways, abruptly braking his sprint. But it was useless. His stumbling body lost its balance, and the mudslide was already upon him. There was no way to evade. And if he was swallowed by the current, the frenzied dance of sand and stones would tear his body apart in an instant.

All was lost. The moment that thought crossed his mind, Subaru braced himself to at least throw the girl in his arms sideways—when a shock from his direct side sent him flying, tearing through trees.

"Gahhh?!"

He screamed as he was blasted away, struck on his right flank with enough force to feel like his organs were spilling out. In the gravity-defying sensation of up, down, left, and right blurring together, he instinctively curled his body to protect the girl, then slammed his back into a thick tree trunk, the impact stealing his breath, and he fell to the ground.

“Gah, ugh, ah… It hurts…!”

He groaned in pain, rubbing his battered abdomen as he looked up. And then, he stared directly at Rem, who had been launched high into the trees by the direct impact of the mudslide.

Rem’s small body spun lightly like a leaf, receiving the rough welcome of dirt and stones. Her splattering blood marked a clear distinction from her earlier appearance, already caked with return blood, making it clear even to an untrained eye that she had sustained seriously bad damage.

Rem fell spectacularly to the ground, unable to even break her fall. The only saving grace was that the ground, tilled by the mudslide, didn’t shatter the fallen girl’s head.

At this point, even the slow-witted Subaru understood the situation. Rem had sacrificed her own time to evade, pushing Subaru away from the mudslide. And she, herself, had borne the full brunt of the impact. Of course, it was a force that Subaru himself couldn’t have withstood. But if Rem became a sacrifice for it, it was meaningless.

“Rem, you idiot! You, like this… I, if this happens…!”

The moment he almost shouted “What for?”, a chill ran down Subaru’s spine. Perhaps they had experienced the same sensation. The witchbeast that had unleashed the mudslide, and the pursuing horde that had caught up, all halted their movements simultaneously.

There was a premonition. A certainty. Only a dense aura of “death” permeated the air.

—Slowly, Rem’s fallen body began to rise.

Despite taking such a flamboyant attack, there was no sign of injury in her movements as she stood up. On the contrary, the wounds she had sustained visibly closed before his eyes. Her terrifying regenerative power radiated intense heat, causing her blood to evaporate and even create a reddish mist.

Then, Subaru saw it.

Rem, her eyes devoid of reason, surveying her surroundings. Her blood-soaked face distorted into an ecstatic grin, and most importantly—from her head, where her hair ornament had come loose, a white horn had sprouted.

“Ah ha, ha ha ha—”

Laughter. It was like a child’s, a laugh overflowing with raw cruelty.

Spinning around, Rem’s body, carried by the wind, charged into the horde. Before the leading witchbeast, which had halted, could react, its nape was crushed under Rem’s heel. The witchbeast, killed by a throat crush from above, was kicked hard, keeping the other witchbeasts in the rear at bay. One by one, as they stopped moving, she repeatedly brought down the morning star in her hand—its chain retracted into the iron handle, transforming it into a mace—producing blood blossoms and corpses one after another.

“Witchbeasts, witchbeasts, witchbeasts —Witch!!”

What was most terrifying was that Rem, with her reason-lost eyes, hadn’t lost her sanity. Even as she surrendered to her surging bestiality, she wasn’t losing track of the situation. With overwhelming power, she was unleashing some kind of unresolved karma simmering within her.

Blood burst, skulls shattered, intestines and brains splattered into the forest with incredible force. Kneeling, forgetting his pain, Subaru stared at the scene.

He didn’t have the courage to speak now. If he did, if he entered the consciousness of the raging Rem, he had an inexplicable feeling that he would be killed, even though it shouldn't be possible.

Perhaps it wasn't a misconception. Rem seemed that far beyond normal right now. Her appearance, her grotesque form with blood splattered all over and her crazed laughter echoing through the forest, was truly—

"—An oni."

No matter how much blood she was drenched in, her white horn remained pristine. On the top of her head, it gleamed with a sharp point, as if loudly proclaiming its existence.

Subaru was overwhelmed by the situation. But unlike Subaru, who was paralyzed, the witchbeasts wouldn't just sit there and wait to be slaughtered. Individuals who broke free from the paralysis began to surround Rem one after another. Even as the number of corpses piled up with each blow, they slowly reached her body with their claws and fangs.

They were outnumbered to begin with. The number of witchbeasts, which had already increased from the initial pack size during their movement through the forest, was immeasurable. Though a number equivalent to the initial pack had probably already been annihilated, crimson lights continued to spring up incessantly in the dark night.

"No matter how strong she is in 'strongest mode,' she can't last forever against infinite spawns…"

The situation was changing rapidly, but at its core, Subaru and the others remained at a disadvantage. Realizing this objectively, Subaru cut himself off as he sensed another surge of magical power.

The mana was concentrating again, at the puppy. The mana in the air was being completely drawn there, and his vision twisted as if warped. Rem must have felt the magical vortex. She turned, her hand-blade, which had just ripped out a witchbeast's internal organs, poised to deal with the threat, ready to strike towards the puppy—but, —Not missing the opportunity as she was about to rush forward, the horde of witchbeasts simultaneously pounced on her back.

"—!"

A sense of disarray. Even Rem, in her berserk state, seemed utterly bewildered by the situation beyond her comprehension. Emotion returned to her previously reasonless eyes, her blood-soaked savage grin faltered, and beneath it emerged the face of a grief-stricken girl.

—Ah, so she can make that kind of face too, he thought idly, as—

"—GaaahhHHHHHHH!!!"

A searing pain in his crushed left arm ripped a throat-shredding scream from Subaru.

Immediately after, the simultaneous sensation of fangs digging into his right leg, left flank, and back. His vision turned crimson. The pain was no longer recognizable as pain. His ankle was crushed. A chunk of flesh was cleanly taken from his side. Blood, contents, spilled out. Dripped. What a waste. His flesh and blood.

"Subaru—!!"

He heard a screaming voice. Even trying to lift his head towards the sound, his body was no longer free. He lost his balance. His other ankle, the one not crushed, was also half-torn, making the severity of his wounds just right. He collapsed onto the ground. Right before his eyes, a gaping maw lined with fangs loomed. Fangs aimed at his windpipe. They were crushed between an iron ball and the ground right in front of him. Blood splattered. His own blood, or theirs?

His consciousness flickered. He didn't know what would happen when it disappeared. His life was draining away. He thought to himself what a foolish thing he had done. It would negate the meaning of starting over, and being too fixated on that was putting the cart before the horse.

It hurt, it was painful, it was distant, he couldn’t see, couldn’t hear, his life was wearing away. From the hole in his side, his life was spilling out like sand from an hourglass.

Disappearing, ending, everything—I am.

“Don’t die, don’t die, don’t die—!”

A tearful voice. Crying.

I am—

Chapter 42:
Steamed Potatoes

1

My consciousness drifts far away, bobbing on the waves.

Amidst the flickering ripples, in a hazy slumber, it floats and sinks between dream and reality.

“—Is there any other way to save him?”

“—That’s all, I suppose. The rest is up to you, in fact.”

Voices talking, far, or perhaps near, at the boundary between beyond and here.

Pleas, rejections, tearful voices, voices devoid of emotion. Voices.

Suddenly, a soft sensation envelops my palm.

It’s the touch of someone’s hand, I recall from memories of having felt it many times before. I must have felt this warmth like this before.

Then, the sensation of that palm suddenly moves away.

Leaving my hand, far, far away, so high I can’t reach… and,

“—I will definitely save you.”

Only that strong resolve remains, leaving me behind.

Everything vanishes, leaves, goes away. Far, far away.

And then—

2

This must be, what, the tenth time I’ve been forcibly knocked unconscious and woken up like this?

Subaru vaguely thought, staring at the unfamiliar ceiling patterns. There's an old pillow talk cliché about counting the stains to pass the time, but if I were to count the stains at this world's cultural level, it'd take forever, he thought with a wry smile —a sudden spasm in his side made him groan.

"O-Ow, that hurts…"

He reached for his aching side, and a strange sensation exploded in his left arm. Following the feeling, he brought his left hand to his face and understood completely at the sight of its grotesque state.

From his fingertips to his wrist, his left arm was covered in white, raised scars. Furthermore, these scars were connected by distorted, clumsy threads, so much so that if someone said a child who was bad at sewing had stitched him up haphazardly, he would have believed them.

The odd sensation wasn't limited to just his arm. When he lifted his shirt, he saw similar stitching on his spasming right side. And then both his ankles, around his right bicep, his right shoulder, and even his backside—the list was endless. All of them bore scars and stitches, making him feel like some kind of cyborg.

As he gently touched various parts of his altered body, a faint pain brought his memories slowly trickling back. That's right, he'd gone into the depths of the forest to look for the children, and then he encountered a witchbeast—

"I really thought I was dead…"

He'd shielded Rem, taking the full force of the witchbeast's fangs. The beast's jaws should have easily crushed Subaru's flesh, tearing and ripping him apart like rags. He'd felt his life draining away and had been half-convinced it was over.

"Mummy… no, that's not right. Seeing how much I've been sewn up with needle and thread, a jiangshi-like image is probably more accurate."

Or perhaps, if he had a screw driven into his head, he'd be Frankenstein's monster. He mused this far, then suddenly realized how carefree he was being.

"—Right. This is no time for jokes. What about Rem and the children?"

Subaru sprang up from the simple cot and looked around to assess his surroundings. The unfamiliar ceiling, the crude bed. A cramped room with shabby furniture—this was definitely not the Roswaal Mansion.

Then, right by the entrance—he noticed a silver-haired girl sitting on a wooden chair, her face bowed in sleep.

"Emilia-tan."

She didn't respond to his call. Her slumber seemed deep, her breathing quite profound. Her beautiful silver hair, usually so neat, was slightly disheveled, as if she hadn't had time to fix it. More importantly, her clothes were badly stained with blood and mud.

His own injuries. Waking up in this bed. Emilia, sleeping on a chair right beside him. And her clothes, soiled with blood. Considering these points, even Subaru, as slow-witted as he was, could grasp the situation. In short,

"Looks like I owe Emilia-tan another one…"

"I wonder about that. While I do think you should be grateful to Lia to some extent, I think there's someone else you should be more grateful to this time."

A gray cat, emerging from behind Emilia's silver hair, responded to Subaru's self-reproachful murmur. He gently nudged Emilia's cheek with his paw, then floated up to Subaru's face.

"Oh, good morning. How do you feel, now that you're awake?"

"It's hard to say 'great.' I must be a cyborg without even realizing it. I almost want to escape before they mess with my brain and become a masked hero seeking revenge on the organization."

“Cyborg… Oh, you mean the threads. It was an unavoidable procedure. Simply to heal you, your internal mana wasn’t enough. We had to rely on tools just to piece you back together. Without them, you’d probably be in pieces right now, you know?”

“That’s a chilling thought! Even so, couldn’t someone better at sewing have done it?”

Even if he didn’t mind the stitches themselves, he wanted to complain about the shoddy workmanship. Especially as someone who held the title of “Sewing Level S,” he felt like he wanted to teach them the basics. To Subaru’s words, Puck waved his paw, saying, “No, no.”

“It’s been a long time since I put a needle through a human body. My hands were shaking all over the place, it was quite a struggle.”

“You, of all people?! How did you even manage to sew with that tiny body of yours?!”

“It was easy because you weren’t moving. Your bleeding was severe, so I froze a lot of the wounds while working on them, but you’ll have to bear with that.”

“So that’s why the scars are strangely white… I’m a man, so I won’t fuss about the marks remaining or anything, but still.”

Subaru looked over the various scars, then turned back to Puck. Puck looked surprised at Subaru’s posture, but Subaru bowed deeply to the black-eyed cat.

“You saved me, thank you. I’ve gotten my life back again.”

“Mm-hmm, being honest is a good thing. This time, you did something deserving of it. It would be too unfair for you to collapse after all that. So, it’s fine, really.”

Puck responded to Subaru’s words of gratitude without a hint of shyness. Feeling a weight lift from his chest at Puck’s words, Subaru began, “Well then.”

“It’s flattering that you say I ‘did something deserving,’ but… what actually happened after that? Honestly, I don't remember anything after being chomped on by those dogs in the forest."

"'Chomped on' is a cute way to put it. Judging by your condition when you were brought in, I'd have thought it was more like 'CRUNCH-SQUISH-RIP-RIP-MUNCH-GUSH!'"

"Hey, with those sound effects, I'm definitely dead! That's a 'missing five or six arms' scenario, and I alone wouldn't be enough!"

"Right, so, the blue-haired maid girl was in quite a bad state too."

Puck's casual remark made Subaru's throat involuntarily constrict. Puck then added, "However," to Subaru's reaction.

"In her case, the effects of her onification make her wounds heal incredibly fast. By the time she carried Subaru back to the village, there were no visible injuries. She didn't even need healing magic."

"Don't scare me unnecessarily! …Anyway, Rem made it back to the village then. And the other person, the one who was carried back with me?"

"They were there, so rest assured. Six children plus one, makes seven. It's a good thing you and the blue-haired girl were strong. Your judgment was spot on in the end."

Puck clapped his paws together, making no sound with his mouth. The softness of his paw pads prevented any clapping noise. Subaru's lips almost curved into a smile at the comforting sight, but he shook his head to banish it.

"Puck, I have a few questions. Is that alright?"

"Only if you speak softly, so Lia doesn't wake up. I manifest using the mana I gather overnight, but when I was out last night, I was using Lia's Od."

"Od?"

"Mana is what you absorb from the outside world. Od, on the other hand, is literally the power of the soul, inherent to a living being's body. Unlike mana, using Od drains one's life force, so I prefer not to use it much."

As he spoke, Puck glanced at Emilia as if looking at a troubled daughter. Subaru, drawn into gazing at her sleeping face, easily accepted Puck's words. He could imagine Emilia, if she needed to sacrifice herself to help someone, wouldn't hesitate. If Puck needed to appear last night, and if it meant drawing on her own life force, she wouldn't have hesitated for a moment.

"So, that means Emilia-tan helped me even at the cost of her own life force?"

That too. My main role yesterday was for the children—the ones Subaru brought back from the forest. My purpose was to remove their curses."

"Remove curses… That's right! That happened too. Are the children okay? What about the curses?"

"They're also fine."

"The healing magic helped suppress the weakening quite a bit, and the curse removal went well, so there are no problems. I definitely removed the children's curses."

Puck thumped his own chest as if to give his seal of approval. Subaru let out a deep breath at the sight, relieved that his actions hadn't been meaningless. And, as is human nature when relieved,

"Oh."

Immediately after the feeling of relief filled his chest, Subaru's stomach let out a loud growl. He touched his belly, feeling something akin to pain in its emptiness, and remembered that he had missed dinner last night.

"By the way, I don't get hungry as long as I absorb mana."

"I didn't ask, but okay. Still, since mana is everywhere, you're like a plant, full just by breathing air."

"I don't need water or sunlight either. All I need is love. It's an important thing you should never forget when dealing with spirits."

"Alright, alright. Can I go outside?"

He pointed to the door and asked. Puck, with his arms crossed, nodded several times.

"I think that's a good idea. You should move around a bit and check yourself, now that you're in one piece. Oh, and the threads will be absorbed into your body and disappear on their own once your body gets used to them."

"Oh, good. It'd be hard to look stylish with these worm-like stitches. It's like I was born two hundred light-years too early or something."

Puck tilted his head with a smile at Subaru's full-blown joke. It seemed he didn't get it. It was supposed to be a golden setup, starting with "Light-year is a unit of distance," and leading to a joke about "different planet's sense of style."

With Puck's permission, Subaru headed out of the room. On his way, he gave a small bow to Emilia, who was sleeping right next to the door. As he bowed, her peaceful sleeping face caught his eye, and he was filled with the urge to ruffle her hair, but the watchful eyes of her guardian nearby made him give up. He exited the room. And then,

"Ah, well, I guess that's to be expected."

Stepping out of the room and poking his head outside the building from the front entrance, Subaru muttered this at the commotion in the village.

It was still early morning, just after sunrise, but many figures had already gathered in the village square. It was a small settlement. The number of people there suggested that almost the entire village population was present. Elderly people, women, and children huddled together anxiously, while a group led by strong young men surrounded them protectively.

The group surrounding the villagers protectively was the youth corps, who had also worked tirelessly searching for the children last night. Subaru twisted his neck, unable to find the faces he was looking for within their circle, and then headed towards another building that seemed to have a lot of people going in and out. But before that,

"—Barusu, you're awake."

A voice called from behind, and Subaru stopped and turned around. He recognized the way he was addressed immediately, but seeing her face still brought an overwhelming sense of relief.

Standing behind him was the pink-haired maid—Ram. She had the sleeves of her familiar maid uniform rolled up, carrying a large amount of steamed potatoes in a basket-like container.

A faint, almost salty aroma wafted from the slightly steaming potatoes, making Subaru's hungry stomach cheer with anticipation and excitement. Ram snorted "Hmph" at Subaru, whose stomach growled with a sound similar to the onomatopoeia Puck had used earlier.

"To worry us so much with such severe injuries, then to immediately ask for food upon waking, how unsightly. Did getting bitten by a dog make you catch 'dog-ness'?"

"I could go on about what 'catching dog-ness' even means, but… so, you actually were worried about me, huh?"

He straightened his back, bent down, and swayed his body from side to side as he approached Ram with a smug look. Ram narrowed her eyes at Subaru's teasing attitude.

"Eat this."

"Urfgh!"

A steamed potato was forcefully shoved into his mouth, literally crushing his throat. On top of that, scorching heat ravaged his mouth, and Subaru gasped wildly like an animal, looking upwards, "Haff! Haff!" Then,

“I thought I was gonna die! But yes, it was delicious!”

“It was delicious, wasn’t it? Freshly made… no, freshly steamed.”

“What’s with that smug look, it’s irritating! I can’t deny how delicious it was though!”

“Yes, yes, here’s another one, now quietly devour it.”

He was handed a potato and took it playfully, like a child. Ram looked at Subaru with a scornful gaze for a moment, then said,

“Well, regarding last night’s incident, I’ll honestly thank you. Good work.”

“Good work? You’re always so condescending. No, it’s fine, but… is this something you’d even thank me for?”

“If any harm comes to the villagers, the lord’s responsibility is questioned. Thinking about what would have happened if the children had been threatened by that pack of Ulgarms… your actions were correct, Barusu.”

“Ulgarms, huh…”

That must be the name of those black witchbeasts. What a grand name. Just hearing it made it clear that they were the kind of beings that threatened your life upon encounter. Subaru nodded, and Ram looked towards the forest.

“The barrier that seemed to have frayed last night has been re-weaved. After that, I spent the whole night checking if there were any problems with the barrier, so no witchbeasts should be able to get through here.”

“Unless we leave from here, right? It’d be pointless if the kids crossed the barrier, went to the other side, and came back with a baby.”

“That stings a bit. Since the barrier was put up, there haven’t even been skirmishes with witchbeasts, so we let our guard down. —I'll make sure to tell them."

Her tone was a bit less gentle, likely because she, too, was irritated. For Subaru, it was the unpleasantness of being caught up in it, but for her, it was probably directed at the villagers who didn't properly follow Roswaal's instructions. Considering her excessive loyalty, he couldn't help but pity the villagers who would be lectured.

"Don't overdo it. Honestly, you had injuries that would have surely killed you if it weren't for the Great Spirit and Lady Beatrice."

"Beako's name came up, so I owe her one too… Damn it!"

"Even if it was at the Great Spirit's request, it's rare for Lady Beatrice to leave the Forbidden Library, let alone the mansion. Though she can't act at her full power outside the mansion."

Subaru regained his balance with Ram's support and lightly shook his head. He felt as if he was low on blood. There was a similar languor to his first morning at the Roswaal Mansion, and the heaviness in his limbs was probably due to a severe mana deficiency. Puck had said he had been sewn back together from serious injuries. Given Subaru's naturally low mana reserves, it wasn't surprising that they were depleted.

"I'll watch the village's progress a little longer before returning to the mansion. I'm also concerned about the children whose curses were removed… and the measures against the Ulgarms."

"Measures, you say? Isn't just putting up a barrier enough?"

"It might have been enough for the skirmishes we had until now."

Ram replied to Subaru's slight question with her usual expressionless face. But as her supposedly emotionless eyes met his, Subaru's spine tingled as if pierced by ice, and he couldn't stop the goosebumps. She spoke to Subaru, enunciating each word as if chewing on them:

"To allow the village to be harmed, and especially Barusu, who is connected to Lord Roswaal's mansion, to suffer this much, and then to simply resolve it with non-interference, is unthinkable."

"Wh-What do you intend to do…?"

Subaru, who had involuntarily switched to formal speech, saw Ram suddenly shed her intimidating aura. She lightly ran her fingers through her pink hair.

"We will eradicate them. —However, that will happen after Roswaal-sama returns. Once Roswaal-sama is back, it won't take much time."

Subaru had no room to object to her words of complete trust. While he didn't know the extent of Roswaal's power, he understood the immense trust Ram placed in him.

Afterward, Subaru "stole" two more steamed potatoes from Ram before they parted ways. After they separated, she headed towards the group of villagers who were still huddled together, looking anxious. This was likely her way of showing concern. The fact that her expression of concern was steamed potatoes was very much in line with Ram's detached personality.

"These steamed potatoes are delicious. The saltiness is truly exquisite."

Chewing on the steamed potato he had received, Subaru continued to wander around the village.

While checking his physical condition, he also simultaneously confirmed the safety of the children who had been retrieved from the forest. The children themselves were still asleep due to the fatigue from last night and mana depletion from the curse removal, but their parents showered him with excessive gratitude. Honestly, Subaru, who hadn't done it for thanks, panicked terribly, was more flustered than ever, and ended up choosing to escape out of embarrassment without even managing a decent joke.

Sweating nervously from the unexpected welcome, Subaru decided he had accomplished his main objectives. He returned to the room where he had initially slept, intending to wait for Emilia to wake up, and then realized he hadn't yet seen the blue-haired girl.

—Suddenly, the image of an Oni, bathed in blood and roaring with laughter, flashed through his mind.

At that instant, it wasn't fear that made Subaru tremble, he thought. It was a more overwhelming, inexpressible emotion, like being in the presence of a being far superior, one that he had to look up to as a living creature. Perhaps, people would call it awe.

With a white horn growing from her forehead, her figure, using inhuman strength to slaughter witchbeasts, was precisely the image of an Oni from ancient legends. He wondered if he could act normally in front of her after seeing that.

"No, no, if I was fine with Ram, who's her twin, what am I worried about? If Rem's an Oni, Ram's an Oni too, right… Wait, haven't I had an incredibly rare experience?!"

Subaru shook his head, refreshing his memory, trying to make himself forget his cowardice with a lighthearted remark. It was thinking only of the most shocking scene from last night that made him feel that way. He needed a fresher, more exhilarating sight that would make him forget such a harsh scene—

The scene of an iron ball crushing a witchbeast's head, blowing apart its torso, and tearing through the pack, came to mind. It was certainly demon-essce, but it was a perfect description for an Oni

"Wait, even if I cut out the Oni part, all I can think of is gore. And now, ugh, thinking about it makes me sick…"

The feast of blood and guts suddenly came to mind, and Subaru covered his mouth, feeling nauseous. He staggered to the edge of the building and squatted in the grass, breathing heavily.

He somehow managed to hold it in, breathing a sigh of relief. After all, it was steamed potatoes he had finally put into his hungry stomach. And it was a precious dish, filled with Ram's unique kindness. It would be a disgrace to a man to waste it.

Having somehow managed to suppress his vomiting, Subaru nodded vigorously, praising himself. Then, he looked up, ready to face Rem again.

"—You're just in time, in fact."

From beyond the grass, a girl with cream-colored hair in vertical curls appeared. Recognizing Subaru, she beckoned him over.

"I have something to discuss with you, I suppose. Would you mind accompanying me—"

"Guh-hurk-hurk-hurk!"

Subaru's long-suppressed vomit erupted, cutting off Beatrice's affected words.

"Kyaaaaaaah!"

3

After the commotion died down, Subaru was led by Beatrice to the back of a building right beside the Witchbeast Forest.

Previously, this area should have been lined with small, independent shops, but naturally, the morning after a witchbeast disturbance, there wasn't a single villager aimlessly wandering around.

This deserted place, with its rows of empty houses, would indeed be the perfect spot for a hushed conversation away from the village.

"So, what's so important that you had to call me out to a place like this?"

"That's not the attitude of someone who was just throwing up, in fact. Have you reflected at all, I suppose?"

"Oh, thanks for rubbing my back. I feel a bit better now. Oh, and you helped put my body back together too, right?"

"When you give Betty the same kind of thanks for both the former and the latter, it makes Betty a little unsure how to interact with you, in fact.”

Regardless, he was genuinely grateful, so he hoped she’d just accept it.

Putting Subaru’s thoughts aside, Beatrice, uncharacteristically for her, kept her gaze wandering and fidgeted with the hem of her skirt, as if troubled.

Her demeanor suggested there was something difficult to say.

It was quite unlike her, who was usually so direct and outspoken with Subaru. Perhaps her expression, looking her age, like a child afraid of being scolded by their parents, also played a part.

Seeing such a face, Subaru couldn’t bring himself to rush her. Crossing his arms and leaning against the building, Subaru waited for her to speak.

However, that waiting posture wasn’t needed for very long.

Subaru not pressing her seemed to have, conversely, spurred her decision.

Beatrice closed her eyes, then opened them wide as if she’d steeled herself.

Then,

“Bubby has Bubby’s own ideas, in fact. However, keeping it silent wouldn’t be fair to you, I suppose.”

“Bubby,” the affectionate name she used, could only refer to Puck.

Imagining the small, gray cat he’d just spoken with, Subaru tilted his head at her words, expressing his question.

To Subaru, Beatrice said,

“Bubby favors that mixed-blood girl, so he prioritizes her. That’s the correct thing to do as a spirit, in fact. However, Betty has complaints, I suppose.”

“You, what are you…”

Subaru’s words, “trying to say,” were cut short.

Before he could finish, Beatrice spoke, cutting him off.

She declared,

“—In less than half a day, you will die, in fact.”

Chapter 43:
The Conditions to Stay Alive

I swallowed the words I was told, breaking them down, chewing them over.

It took only a few seconds for them to pass down my throat, settle in my stomach, and become blood and flesh circulating to my brain. Slowly, I closed my eyes, savoring their meaning.

“You’re calmer than I expected, I suppose. I thought you’d be crying and screaming, in fact.”

Perhaps surprised by Subaru’s unexpectedly quiet reaction, Beatrice mumbled this in a tone of surprise.

In response to her words, Subaru gave a small nod and then said,

As he spoke, he held up three fingers, showing them to Beatrice, who stood before him.

As if flaunting them to the silently observing Beatrice, he folded down one of the raised fingers.

“First, a black joke, a bad prank. Honestly, it’s not funny… but if a ‘Prank Successful!’ sign pops up, I’ll laugh. If it’s coming, now’s the time, you know?”

He winked as he made his demand, but Beatrice’s expression remained unchanged.

Subaru accepted that the most peaceful possibility had been crushed, and with a sigh, he folded down a second finger.

“Second, the injury was too severe. I actually saw my insides spill out, after all. Even if they say life-saving treatment is just barely working, it doesn’t quite click… but I can accept it.”

“There’s no way Betty and Bubby’s healing would be incomplete, in fact. Scars will remain, and even if it’s not completely healed yet, it'll return to normal with time, I suppose. Betty wouldn't let someone she managed to save just die pointlessly, in fact."

"Right. You proved you could save me even with my guts out… wait, that was only three or four days ago, wasn't it?"

It was hard to tell due to the repeating days, but in the correct timeline, Subaru's stab wound from Elsa should have happened four days ago.

—Four days later, and he's back to having his stomach ripped open. Someone losing their intestines so frequently in such a short period might just be a rare specimen.

"It's not something to be happy about at all, but… anyway, if that's the case,"

Waving the remaining third finger from side to side, Subaru brought up the last possibility that came to mind.

"There's only one cause of death I can think of."

Among the many possibilities that had led to Subaru's death during the repeating days at Roswaal's mansion, the one that matched the current situation was…

"A curse's revenge?"

"You got a whole bunch of them planted on you when you were attacked by the pack of Ulgarms, in fact."

As if to back up Subaru's conjecture, Beatrice replied, crossing her arms.

Subaru glanced at the white scars remaining in various places on his body—the marks of teeth and claws from multiple Ulgarms—and then, scowling, he asked,

She had a dangerous tendency to say something like, "You didn't ask, so I didn't do it, in fact,"

if he played his cards wrong, so he poked at that concern.

However, she shook her head at Subaru's question, mixed with hopeful speculation.

"If it were something that could be dispelled, I would have put you in debt to me in a way you could never repay, I suppose."

"Hey, give me a break. I'm already so indebted it's tough to pay back, you know."

Always receiving, never able to give anything back. This time, and the time before that, and the time before that too.

Beatrice looked questioning at Subaru's lament, but Subaru waved his hand to dismiss it and asked,

"Can I ask why this curse can't be dispelled?"

"…You might as well know how you're going to die, in fact. It's a simple story, I suppose. —Too many curses have been layered on top of each other, making it too complex, in fact."

"Curses are… layered?"

To Subaru, who tilted his head, unable to visualize it, Beatrice spread both her hands.

Then, to the blinking Subaru, she said,

"Suppose a curse is a thread, I suppose."

As she spoke, a red thread suddenly appeared between her palms. She showed him the taut thread with her eyes, and Beatrice tied a knot in the thread.

"Suppose this knot is the curse's spell, in fact. To dispel it, simply put, would be to untie this knot, I suppose. But…"

Beatrice's fingers moved skillfully, and the number of threads passing through her palm increased. Blue, yellow, green, pink, black, white—threads appeared one after another. She made knots in each of them as well, and moreover, she intricately intertwined each thread.

“If it were just one curse, you could unravel it by tracing it. But when multiple threads get tangled like this…”

Reaching out, Beatrice gestured for him to take the tangled threads. With the threads placed in his outstretched hand, Subaru looked at the complex, bizarre pattern and said,

“You can’t untangle it no matter how you pull or trace it, huh… Ah, damn it, that’s definitely a high degree of difficulty.”

Even if he were to untangle them one by one, he wouldn’t know where to start.

Of course, he thought it wouldn’t be impossible to untangle this given enough ti

“You mentioned a half-day limit. What kind of prediction was that?”

“That’s simply because the Ulgarms will get hungry after about half a day, in fact.”

Beatrice held up a finger, then pointed it at Subaru and continued.

“The Ulgarm’s curse excels at ‘draining mana from a distant target,’ I suppose. The witchbeasts primarily feed on mana… so the reason for the curse should be obvious, in fact.”

“They attack people because they’re hungry, huh. I see, typical wild animals, simple. I guess I should be grateful they haven’t gotten peckish until now.

He wanted to vent his frustration somewhere, but unfortunately, his hands were filled with threads. Subaru directed his indescribable emotions at the hard knots in the thread, struggling to untangle them with much effort, while Beatrice looked at him with a puzzled expression.

“Aren’t you scared, I suppose?”

“Huh?”

"Betty has given you a death sentence, in fact. Betty and Big Bro have a way to save you, but they're not doing it because there's no time."

Subaru had approximately half a day left—depending on the beast's hunger, it could activate at any moment.

In such a time-limited situation, the curse plaguing Subaru's body wasn't simple enough for an attempt to yield results.

That's why Beatrice wasn't taking the gamble, and Puck was the same.

While he understood the rationality of their judgment, he couldn't grasp her intention in deliberately stating it like this.

Beatrice looked directly at Subaru. Fiddling with the thread in his hands, Subaru suddenly felt like he understood what she was looking for. It was…

"What is it, you… Do you want me to blame you?"

"…"

Beatrice fell silent. Normally, she'd retort quickly, but her choice of silence now made her thoughts unfathomable.

She didn't deny it, nor did she affirm it. Subaru gave a wry smile at her attitude.

"Puck and your judgment, well, from a human emotional standpoint, it seems heartless, but from a logical standpoint, it's a natural conclusion. Pouring all your effort into someone who's clearly going to die—it might be beautiful in a story, but it's just superficial."

Pouring all effort into a life that's known to be beyond reach.

Perhaps that's a beautiful way to face life. However, from a practical standpoint, the fact that it's futile cannot be denied. Of course, it's precisely because emotions are involved that people sometimes throw themselves into such actions.

“I don’t think you two are heartless. You two are right. —I’ve got another question I want to ask, can I?”

“…What is it, I suppose?”

“Does Emilia-tan also know about the curse on me?”

The girl still sleeping in Subaru’s room, exhausted from nursing him.

He couldn’t help but wonder how she would have faced a situation that Puck and Beatrice had already given up on.

To Subaru’s question, Beatrice shook her head.

“That half-breed girl doesn’t know, in fact. The reason Bubby isn’t touching your curse is to keep the curse’s existence from her, in fact.”

“…Ah, I see. Puck can’t leave Emilia-tan’s side while dispelling a curse, so if he did, she’d inevitably figure out that I’m cursed and that the means to break it are far off, right?”

If they kept silent until the curse activated, the mental wound inflicted on her would be a one-time affair. It was a understandable way of thinking if Puck prioritized Emilia above all else and judged that the tragedy couldn’t be avoided.

Subaru read Puck’s formidable intentions, despite his appearance, and then said,

“So,”

As if to mark a break in the conversation, Subaru pointed his finger at Beatrice. Watching her eyebrows furrow slightly at his gesture, he continued,

“I don’t see you as so cruel that you’d go out of your way just to deliver a death sentence, you know?”

“…What do you know about Betty, I suppose?”

"At least four times longer than you think, that's how long I feel like we've known each other."

Looking at the girl whose frown and doubts deepened, Subaru thought of the long and short two weeks he had rushed through.

His relationship with Ram and Rem was good, as it had been since the first time. His relationship with Emilia was also good, apart from how much crying on her lap affected her evaluation. He'd grasped the identity of the sorcerer who had tormented him, and he'd saved the lives of the village children.

Looking back at these repeated loops, this attempt scored close to a perfect score.

If only Subaru's own life were factored into that score.

"When those dogs bit me all over, I honestly thought I was dead. How pathetic."

The feeling of his life slipping away, experienced countless times—Subaru had succumbed to it. He'd grown too accustomed to dying. He'd developed a habit of giving up. After all this, after so much.

Most importantly,

"You, Rem, and Emilia-tan were the ones who treated my wounds, right? If you were going to abandon me because of some curse, you wouldn't have treated me so thoroughly."

It was an insult to them, who had desperately clung to his life even after he selfishly gave up on it.

Including the small cat who had used her short limbs to mend Subaru's body with thread.

"You're all… terrible liars."

"…It's true that the possibility of survival is much lower, in fact. Bubby is trying to keep that girl from getting involved in that method, too."

"Trying to play the villain and take my anger? That's too much consideration for a little girl. —Tell me, then, about that infinitesimal possibility."

He made a small circle with his thumb and forefinger, showing it to Beatrice to prompt her answer.

After a moment of hesitation, she exhaled as if resigned.

"Since it was a Ulgarm that cursed you, its contents must be something that thoroughly drains mana, in fact."

He understood that. Subaru had already felt its power a numerous times.

Therefore, the moment the Ulgarm that cast the curse began to 'feed,' Subaru's fate would be sealed. After all, there was no way to prevent an activated curse—

"Wait. Then what about the kids' curses?"

The children found deep in the forest were weakened. Their condition must have been almost identical to Subaru's curse. He hadn't thought that far at the time, but…

"If the curse had activated and the children were having their mana drained, the pattern should be for them to be drained until they're empty, but those kids are safe—you're not going to tell me that was a lie to make me feel better, are you?"

If that were the case, Subaru probably couldn't tolerate it.

Beatrice stopped Subaru's hasty conclusion by holding out her palm.

"You're rushing too fast, you must listen to the end of the story, in fact. You're close to the core, I suppose. —The village children's curses could be dispelled. That method also aligns with the faint possibility of connecting your life, in fact."

"The difference between the kids and me…?"

Subaru's mind raced at Beatrice's explanation.

The difference between Subaru's curse and the children's. Their curses were singular; Subaru's were multiple. Activated curses. Unactivated curses. Curses that steal mana. Weakening from mana being stolen. Stolen mana. Stolen mana is food for magical beasts. —If that's the case…

A possibility suddenly flashed in his mind, and Subaru looked up, turning to Beatrice.

"If the caster itself dies, what happens to the stolen mana?"

Beatrice's expression didn't change at the question; she simply nodded once.

"If it loses its destination, the curse loses its original efficacy. That's also a condition because this spell's purpose is to steal mana, not to kill the target, in fact."

With Beatrice's affirmation, Subaru felt a sense of conviction inwardly.

The children's curses—their progression stopped because the magical beast that cast them died.

If the caster dies, what remains in the children's bodies is simply a spell, which Puck and Beatrice could easily dispel.

The number of magical beasts that perished in that forest last night must have been considerable.

Starting with the one Subaru dealt with during their first encounter, a significant number were also subjugated by Rem's hand during their escape.

If the magical beasts that cursed the children were among them, there's no element currently to refute this current hypothesis.

However, that conviction simultaneously—

"Ah, I see. That's how it is."

Having confirmed that his hypothesis was solid, Subaru realized.

The meaning behind Beatrice still standing before him with such a seemingly sorrowful demeanor.

Since it was impossible to dispel the curse by normal means, the only way to remove the curse on Subaru was to kill the caster.

But,

“The ones who cursed my body are too numerous to pinpoint.”

Subaru looked back at the forest where the magical beasts resided.

A barrier was spread around it, separating the village and the forest by something not physical.

Deep within that forest, the scattered pack of magical beasts.

Finding them and eradicating them within half a day was impossible.

“Ah, damn it…”

Almost laughing, Subaru pressed a hand to his forehead and looked down.

He had come to terms with it. He had faced the reality he couldn’t turn away from.

Unless all the Ulgarms were killed, Subaru’s life couldn’t be saved.

The difficulty of doing that within half a day. More than anything, the danger of stepping into that forest and facing the pack of witchbeasts—these were the reasons that made Puck hesitate and refuse to inform Emilia of the truth.

“Bubby…”

“I know without you saying it. If Emilia-tan knew, she’d push herself too hard, being the girl she is. That would make me incredibly happy… but it would also terrify me.”

Emilia was the type of person who would selflessly put herself at a disadvantage for others, even though Subaru saw the possibility of her doing so, he couldn’t ask it of her.

If, by some remote chance, he were to lose her before his eyes, Subaru would surely suffer a torment that tearing his own body into a hundred pieces wouldn’t suffice.

“The difficulty is truly monstrous. There’s no way, absolutely impossible. I’ll give up—”

Is that why you’re giving up?

As Subaru was about to speak, that voice echoed in his mind.

Lost in the noise, it was distant, a faint voice that seemed to resonate from the depths of his subconscious.

He gasped, looking around.

No one else was in the area except Subaru and Beatrice. Yet, that voice just now—

Is there any other way to save him?

A pleading, desperate voice. But that voice also held a tragic resolve somewhere.

“Did your head start hurting, I suppose? That’s not surprising, in fact.”

That’s all, I suppose. The rest is up to you, in fact.

Chapter 44:
The Usage of Despair

"—You were spouting off some pretty cool rhetoric earlier, but…"

Fifteen minutes after declaring war on the Witchbeast Forest, Ram prefaced her statement while glancing at Subaru beside her:

"If you calm down and think about it, there's no condition saying you have to fight on the front lines, Barusu."

"Hey, hold on. That's technically true, but look at all this overflowing motivation! This single-handed sword, handed down from the village's youth group, has a proper lineage! I'm practically living a fantasy right now!"

"Even that sword, you wouldn't have gotten it if Lady Beatrice hadn't stopped you from going in empty-handed. If you went in bare-fisted, you'd be nothing but dead weight."

"I can't honestly deny that."

Subaru sighed, his shoulders slumping, as he readjusted his grip on the unfamiliar hilt.

It was a single-handed sword with a black sheath and a copper-colored hilt, its blade roughly the length of Subaru's arm. He couldn't hide his surprise at how light it felt. He'd acquired this weapon by following Beatrice's advice, who had frantically stopped him from challenging the Magical Beast Forest unarmed.

The gravity of the situation deepened with each passing moment. It was this sense of urgency that almost made him choose to rush in immediately, but looking back calmly, he honestly realized it would have been suicide.

Beneath her seemingly unapproachable demeanor, that girl with the vertical drills somehow always managed to do good work—that was the frustrating thing about her.

"By the way, can you use a sword, Barusu?"

"I don't know, it's subtle. I do have a second dan in junior high kendo, but I don't think actual swordsmanship and school kendo are the same."

Subaru replied, shaking the sword at his hip, feeling its weight.

Three years in middle school, and after that, idle swings whenever he had time, for no particular reason. He figured he was somewhat more capable than a complete amateur who had never touched one, but he didn't think he'd gone much further than "just dabbled."

The ill-fitting single-handed sword was a blade inherited from a young man in the village's youth group.

He couldn't exactly honestly say, "I'm about to enter the Magical Beast Forest," so he had to make some pretty awkward excuses to get it, but how useful it would prove to be was currently unknown.

That wasn't the only thing entrusted to him in the village.

"In my pocket… candy, a pretty stone, and whoa! A bug got in!"

Subaru shrieked at an unpleasant sensation as he rummaged through his stuffed pockets. The winged insect, trapped in the cramped space, flew away from Subaru's hand and vanished into the depths of the forest. Watching it go, Subaru wiped his forehead and said,

"Those kids are unbelievable, taking advantage of the commotion like that. I'll give them a lecture later."

"It's proof they adore you, isn't it? …I wonder what's so good about a man like this."

"In the pure eyes of children, the true essence of a man like me shines brightly."

To Ram, who looked as if she was about to snort with a deadpan expression, Subaru poked a finger at her, wagging his head from side to side, saying, "And… besides…"

"This time, it's not just for me, but also a thank you for Rem. In fact, I'm more of a delivery boy for her. You get it, just watch."

"…I see."

Subaru nodded repeatedly with a satisfied look at Ram's hesitant agreement.

The exchange before leaving the village had resonated with Subaru to some extent. He hoped it had done the same for Ram, who had also witnessed it.

—Leaving the village and entering the Witchbeast Forest.

The children, still affected by the drained mana, were the ones who detected Subaru and the others trying to sneak into the forest, hidden from the villagers.

They had intended to thank Subaru and Rem directly, and upon noticing them, they crammed various things into Subaru's pockets as a token of their gratitude.

The sweets, the pretty stones, even that winged insect—to them, they were all expressions of their gratitude. There was no way he could treat them carelessly. Though the winged insect did escape.

As Subaru stood there, flustered by the somewhat unnecessary expressions of thanks pressed upon him, the children smiled and said:

"We want to thank Rem-rin too, so bring her back later, okay…?"

How dangerous the place she was in now was, and why she was risking her life to fight—The children didn't know, and they didn't need to know.

Because—

"Don't you worry, you brats. I'll lecture any bad kids who wander into a dark forest at night without telling anyone, along with their reckless big sister."

He might as well add the foolish boy who recklessly entered the forest and got bitten all over by dogs, causing immense trouble for everyone around.

Wouldn't it be quite satisfying for them to sit on their knees all night, listening to the village chief's sermon?

Naturally, a smile played on his lips as he envisioned this future.

As Subaru subtly grinned to himself, Ram said,

"Even so, you're slow, Barusu."

Ram looked back at Subaru from far ahead, her expression one of exasperation.

Ram effortlessly traversed the forest, which should have had difficult footing, with heavy strides.

Despite her attire being her usual maid uniform, her footsteps were no different from crossing the mansion's garden.

Subaru, on the other hand,

"C-Can't you cut me some slack? I'm lacking blood, and guts. Speaking of which, I forgot to have Emilia-tan say 'have a good day' to me!"

"You haven't said 'I'm home' yet, so last night's 'have a good day' is still valid.""

"I-Is that how it works…?"

Struggling with his swaying body and dizzy head, he tottered along, using his single-handed sword like a cane.

Their march could hardly be called fast, and their current situation only served to make Ram, who was ahead, feel more anxious.

Unlike last night, they were searching the forest during daylight hours. Visibility was far clearer than after sunset, but the dense, overgrown branches and leaves still made it difficult to see far.

He thought he was walking in the same place as last night, but the possibility that he was heading in a completely wrong direction couldn't be denied. Did the depth of the forest even distort a person's sense of direction? He genuinely thought that if he were alone, he might have gotten lost without even knowing the way out.

"Barusu, wait a moment. —Clairvoyance, open."

Ram held up a hand to stop him, and her right eye turned crimson as she murmured.

Since entering the forest, Ram had been regularly using her clairvoyance, searching for Rem's presence, who should be in the forest. Unfortunately, there had been no results yet.

Either Rem wasn't within Ram's visual range, or—

"Stop imagining bad things. Fate will be overjoyed and make them come true…"

He poked his own head, banishing the worst-case scenario that had surfaced.

Three or four hours had already passed since Rem deceived her sister and the villagers and entered the forest. Compared to them, who were chasing after her, it was impossible to imagine how deep she had gone into the forest. However, considering the enormity of her objective, even running from one end of the forest to the other wouldn't be enough.

Subaru once again felt the overwhelming nature of Rem's goal and the high difficulty of his own survival.

Even understanding that, he couldn't help but be thoroughly exasperated with his own self-preservation, which still made it hard to make up his mind.

"Ah, how pathetic. Concentrate, concentrate, me. Just focus on guarding the defenseless Ram while she's using Clairvoyance, don't think about anything else."

He drew the single-handed sword from its sheath, lightly testing its feel by slicing the air.

The sound of it cutting through the air was quiet, and its weight was slightly lighter than a wooden sword. Given the length of the blade, this one was easier to handle; all that remained was purely the readiness to wield a real sword.

“They say in real combat, just keeping the blade straight with a real sword is tough, you know.”

A blade wielded by an amateur would wobble, making it impossible to cut anything straight in the first place.

He raised the blade towards a thin tree branch directly in front of him, and with a single upward slash from directly below—a branch about the thickness of Subaru’s wrist was effortlessly severed, spinning and falling to the ground.

He involuntarily exclaimed “Oh!” and praised his own skill. He let out a gasp of admiration at the unexpectedly “lack of resistance” and continued his sword dance.

With each swing, whether one or two, branches and leaves scattered, and the intensity of his slashes increased.

Reconfirming the fact that his three years in middle school and subsequent swinging practice had unexpectedly paid off, he got carried away and swung the blade wide horizontally.

“Ah.”

With a loud clunk, the blade buried itself halfway into the thick trunk of a tree.

Entry was easy, but extraction was difficult. The embedded blade wouldn’t budge easily, and Subaru, sweating profusely internally, looked back at Ram. After confirming that she was still sharing her vision through Clairvoyance, he put his foot on the trunk and struggled to pull the sword out.

“Oh no, oh no, oh no, this is so uncool! Losing my sword like this would be so lame! Get out, come out, I don’t care if it breaks in half, just come out…”

“—Barusu, something’s looking at us.”

Behind Subaru, who was struggling to pull out the stuck sword, Ram, who had lost her immediate vision due to Clairvoyance, shouted.

—Subaru shuddered at her warning that something was looking at them. If she, who could share others’ vision, said so, it meant that the entity was…

“Within eyesight of us…!”

Subaru released the hilt, which wouldn’t budge, and frantically looked around. To his left—a shadow leaped from branch to branch, approaching them at an incredible speed.

Seeing that it was the familiar four-legged beast, Subaru immediately abandoned trying to pull out the sword. He crouched down and picked up a few suitable stones.

“No time to pull out the holy sword, so take this!”

He threw a fist-sized stone with all his might at the leaping shadow. If it hit, the spinning projectile had enough force to immediately incapacitate, but alas, it was an amateur’s throw. Moreover, with a moving target, whether it hit or not was a matter of miracle.

His continuous throws were in vain; every stone he threw vanished into the depths of the forest.

As if mocking Subaru’s clumsy resistance, the witchbeast bent a branch and executed an especially sharp glide—landing on the ground, it lowered its body just a few steps away from Subaru. But then,

“Alright, welcome!”

As if he had anticipated its move, an uppercut-like full swing was unleashed.

The target was the witchbeast's face as it landed, and the chosen weapon was the empty iron-sheathed scabbard. This was the precise timing he'd predicted, assuming his stone diversion would miss. He intended to smash the beast's nose with the thick hilt end of the scabbard—or so he planned.

"Huh?!"

A tremendous whoosh of air echoed, and Subaru's feet slipped badly on the fallen leaves.

At the moment of impact, the witchbeast's charge, which had lowered its body further, slightly altered their point of intersection, and the scabbard only managed to snag a tiny bit of fur on the beast's back. Conversely, Subaru's wide-open back, exposed by his massive swing, was left completely open for the twisting beast's fangs to tear into.

Directly behind him, the presence of the magical beast digging at the ground and turning to bare its fangs. Feeling a chill on his neck, he tilted his head. Just before its sharp canines tore into Subaru's calf—

"What are you playing at when it matters most?"

A gust of wind caught the leaping witchbeast, heavily disturbing its mid-air movement and making it miss its target.

The witchbeast lost its balance due to the unexpected intervention. It rolled on the ground and tried to get up immediately, but its limbs trembled violently, and it remained sprawled on the spot, unable to move.

Subaru, still clutching the scabbard, watched the unmoving magical beast with a shaken expression. He raised the scabbard, ready to strike at any moment, and moved sideways to Ram's side.

Ram, who had her palm facing the crouching witchbeast, snorted with a "Hmph" as soon as she saw Subaru beside her.

"Your armaments have become quite meager in just a short while."

"I admit I screwed up and my attack power dropped significantly. So, what state is that in?"

He pointed at the unmoving witchbeast, questioning Ram, who he assumed was responsible for its condition. The witchbeast had already closed its eyes and wasn't twitching at all, as if it had fallen asleep.

Seeing this, Ram gently lowered her palm that had been extended towards the witchbeast.

"It's over."

"Huh?"

"I said, I stopped its breath."

Surprised by Ram's casual announcement, Subaru went to the witchbeast's side, half in disbelief. He poked its seemingly sleeping body with the tip of his scabbard, and when there was no reaction, he boldly flipped it over. Its limbs sprawled loosely, and its tongue hung out of its mouth; there was no sign of life. Indeed, it was dead.

"What did you do to make it like this?"

"Didn't I tell you I can use a little wind magic? I just cut the tendons in its limbs with a wind blade and choked it to death. —I had no intention of making it suffer for long."

Ram spoke as if it were nothing. Looking closely, indeed, a faint trail of blood dripped from the tips of the witchbeast's limbs, and its expression showed signs of agony, as if it had gasped for breath without air.

Confirming these things, Subaru couldn't help but have various questions about Ram. What part of this was "a little magic"? This magic felt unsatisfyingly uncool, and it was no different from being an assassin.

However, it seemed Subaru wasn't the only one who wanted to retort to his partner.

Before Subaru could sort through the several options that came to mind, Ram looked at the single-handed sword still stuck halfway in the tree trunk and said,

"Useless."

"Ugh."

That succinct, no-nonsense expression stung the most.

As Subaru clutched his chest and knelt, Ram shrugged slightly and walked towards the trunk where the sword was embedded. Then, she placed her palm on the tree, and with another wind blade, gouged out the surface of the trunk, effortlessly freeing the sword. Subaru was dismayed, but he hastily went to catch the single-handed sword Ram threw to him.

"Thanks, but can we stop throwing bare swords with a vertical spin?!"

He gave up on catching it and retrieved the sword from the ground. He wiped off the dirt and sheathed it, thinking to himself that it was back where it belonged, when Ram tilted her head.

"Even so, the Ulgarm just now went for Barusu instead of the defenseless Ram. It was the same last night, too; you seem to be quite popular with them."

"Ah, yeah. I guess I'm pretty pheromone-y."

Subaru lightly pressed his hand to the magical beast's corpse, then scratched his head, vaguely agreeing with Ram's observation.

This feeling of being the witchbeasts' priority target had indeed continued since last night. As these results accumulated, Subaru's suspicion drew closer to certainty.

Anyway,

"So, did you find Rem with your Clairvoyance just now?"

"No, unfortunately. She might be deeper in the forest. We should hurry… Though the chances of you being attacked will also increase exponentially.”

Ram touched her white cheek, seemingly lost in thought as she glanced at Subaru.

Her gaze flickered between Subaru and the witchbeast, and then, as if she had somehow reached a conclusion, she nodded.

“You look weak, after all.”

“That’s the conclusion you came to after agonizing over it? How rude!”

“Then, you look easy to take advantage of.”

“The fundamental part hasn’t changed, my dear sister!”

“Talking won’t improve anything. Let’s find Rem.”

…Y-Yes, you’re right.”

With a partner who stubbornly maintained her own pace, Subaru found things somewhat difficult.

She, oblivious to his inner thoughts, headed deeper into the forest.

Chasing after her, Subaru suddenly brought up something that had been bothering him.

“Can I ask what a ‘hornless’ is?”

It was a word Ram herself had uttered before entering the forest.

It was a word he could somewhat imagine, but Ram didn’t stop, nor did she look back, as she replied,

“Just as it sounds: a derogatory term given to a fool who, despite being an oni, has lost their horn.”

The appearance of the word “Oni” brought back the scene from last night to Subaru’s mind.

In the forest, Rem, covered in blood, letting out a roaring laugh. The sharp, white horn extending from her forehead was unforgettable. It was exactly like the oni he knew from fairy tales.

However, there was no sign of such a horn on Ram's forehead, despite them being twins. Of course, it might be hidden beneath the white prim essential to her maid outfit, but that possibility had just been denied by her own words.

Perhaps sensing Subaru's unspoken dissatisfaction, Ram ran a hand through her pink hair.

"Due to a minor incident, I lost the only horn I had. Since then, I've decided to rely on Rem for everything."

"…Ah, did I ask something bad, by any chance?"

"Why?"

Ram, walking ahead, looked back and genuinely tilted her head in wonder. Subaru replied by scratching his cheek.

"Well, I don't know how big a deal horns are to the Oni race, but I'm guessing it's a pretty big problem. I thought I might have been pretty rude touching on it."

"If that's the case, it's too late to worry about it now that you've dug it up. —Well, rest assured."

After lowering her voice slightly to threaten Subaru, Ram's expression softened slightly.

"While it was difficult at the time, I'm calm now. Losing my horn has brought me things and saved lives. Those things are part of fate."

What a broad-minded person, Subaru thought to himself.

After saying that, Ram prefaced with "However," and a shadow fell across her face.

"Rem probably doesn't think so. —That's why we need to find her quickly.”

Ram faced forward again and signaled to Subaru to stop with a hand gesture.

It was time for Clairvoyance. This time, he would be vigilant of her surroundings without fail.

Her right eye turned crimson, and her vision shifted from here to afar. Her leaping vision jumped to another viewpoint, searching for the target.

Subaru didn’t know, nor did he ask, what it was like to perceive the world by borrowing the vision of a compatible individual, or how much of a burden it placed on the caster.

Every time she used Clairvoyance, tears of blood streamed down Ram’s white cheeks, both her legs trembled as if she had walked all day, and her body, stubbornly pushing forward, swayed as if she were constantly dizzy. Still, Ram did not stop advancing through the forest.

Subaru believed he shouldn’t leave it to Ram, who never complained about pain or suffering.

At their core, she and Rem were ultimately alike. If it meant pushing themselves too hard, they were the type to do it without hesitation.

Including Emilia, the women in that mansion were a little too focused on putting others first.

“You should be flailing around, just looking at your feet, like me. —It makes me sick how uncool I am.”

He kicked at the grass underfoot. Then, the scattering grass got in his mouth, and the flying dirt got in his eyes—a huge miscalculation. He frantically “peck-pecked” and felt terribly awkward about his own lack of composure.

Somehow, Subaru had the illusion that his somewhat stiff emotions had eased a little, realizing that such clumsiness suited him well.

So,

“Ram, are you worried about Rem?”

A question asked despite knowing it was not good to disturb her consciousness while using Clairvoyance.

“Ram, whose eyes were bloodshot and whose gaze was not focused on him, replied a beat later,

“Of course I am. It’s true that she’s stronger than me, but that’s no reason not to worry.”

“…Yeah.”

“Even if she’s far better at everything, Ram is her older sister. That position will never waver.”

Under a firm resolve, her position as an older sister was exercised.

Subaru now admitted that until he truly understood this, he had greatly underestimated her, believing she only used her position to act important.

Having admitted that, Subaru, too, had no choice but to brace himself.

“Ideally, I had wanted to meet up with Rem first, though.”

He scratched his head and started doing knee bends.

Perhaps sensing something unsettling about Subaru’s demeanor, Ram, who had not achieved results, ended her Clairvoyance and regained her normal vision.

Wiping her bloodshot right eye with a cloth from her pocket, she frowned quizzically.

“Barusu, what are you planning to do?”

“Right now, I’m just here to drag you down, aren’t I? I told you before we entered the forest, didn’t I? That I’d be useful in helping

Rem.”

While it was a fifty-fifty possibility, the odds had now shifted to about seven to three in his favor.

Of course, there was still the anxiety of hitting that remaining three, but…”

“Seven to three? It’s rare to be on the winning side of those odds. I can’t throw it away. —Ram, are you willing to take a bit of a dangerous gamble?”

“Hungry beasts and a young man in the forest—as a maiden, there aren’t many situations more dangerous than this, I suppose.”

“You got a point, Sister of mine.”

Subaru laughed, then took a deep breath and opened his eyes wide.

If Subaru’s idea was correct, the situation should change now. Even knowing it was necessary, he couldn’t stop his heart from faltering.

—It’s too late to be scared now. I’m a petty coward, that’s obvious. But if I can still act, even while scared and holding back, then there’s no complaint.

If Subaru was right, it should come.

“Ram, I’ve actually—”

—He was about to say, ‘I’ve actually been returning from death.’

Subaru acted as if to reveal what he was forbidden to tell, to break the taboo. Ram, who had been bracing herself, froze.

No—time had stopped.

The world lost its color, sounds vanished, and the concept of time itself was utterly blown away.

In this world where everything was equally subject to stagnation, the only entity escaping that restriction suddenly appeared before

Subaru's eyes.

"—It's here."

The murmur didn't actually make a sound.

He poured all his wishes and venom into it, hoping it would reach the entity before him. If a little of his feelings got through, he'd feel much better.

—In a world where time had stopped, the only thing unaffected was a black mist.

It appeared from nowhere and began to form the outline of an arm in front of Subaru, who was putting on a brave face. Fingers formed, a wrist appeared, an elbow emerged, and an upper arm branched off—this was the same mist transformation he had witnessed before. But this third time, there was further change.

"Up to the shoulder…"

Beyond the upper arm, a shape resembling a shoulder was forming.

Having created from the fingertips to what appeared to be a shoulder, it was now truly worthy of being called "a single arm."

From the first encounter, it had gradually begun to form a clearer image. While terrified of the mist's erosion intensifying with each repetition, Subaru wasn't given time to examine it in detail.

The fingers slid unhesitatingly into Subaru's chest, which felt eerie about the black mist's growth.

They passed through the thin flesh of his chest, grazed his ribs, and went straight for his heart, protected within his sternum.

Even knowing it was coming, pain, once it crossed a certain threshold, was unbearable.

The pain of his heart being directly gripped was in a realm that could not be described without screaming and writhing madly.

A long, painful, unbearable period of agony continued.

His heart rhythm went wild, blood was pushed out chaotically, and his entire body screamed. Tears of blood erupted from the pain, and his clenched molars involuntarily cracked and shattered.

Enduring pain that could cause such things, the frozen Subaru could not release it through external reactions and had to continue to endure it.

Eventually, the time of suffering faded, and his vision was dyed pure white—

“—Barusu?”

Having been called, Subaru realized he had been kneeling.

Saliva was dripping from his downturned mouth, and he hastily wiped it with his sleeve as he stood up.

“Close call, that was too close a call. It was just a daydream.”

“You’re just as sick as I am, Barusu. Don’t push yourself; leave it to Ram. So, how can we help Rem…”

Ram stopped mid-sentence, her expression changing abruptly as she looked around.

In the silent forest, only the faint rustling of tree branches swaying in the wind and leaves rubbing together echoed. Ram, listening intently to these sounds, looked at Subaru.

“What did you do, Barusu?”

“…I took a bit of a painful gamble.”

Despite all that agony, not a trace of it remained anywhere on his body now.

While he found the method, which thoroughly left wounds only on his mind, repulsive, he felt a flicker of gratitude that it left him with enough physical strength to move.

Because—

“The wind is acting erratically… and the scent of the beasts are drawing closer. A lot of them, too.”

Amidst the deep green, which was beginning to lose its tranquility with rustling sounds, Ram’s face suddenly fixed on the right. Following her gaze, he saw multiple red specks of light approaching from a distance.

Five at first. Ram turned to face them, knowing they would encounter them in ten seconds or so. Beside her, Subaru drew his single-handed sword from its sheath, preparing for the unavoidable battle.

“We still haven’t found Rem…!”

“Well, don’t worry. We’ll probably meet up soon enough.”

“How can you be so sure?”

He shrugged at Ram, who glared at him with a sharp gaze.

“Rem’s goal is to hunt down all the witchbeasts in the forest. —As long as I’m here, they’ll come flocking to me as their prey. So eventually, Rem will have no choice but to come here too.”

He had been thinking about it for a long time. He had been wondering for a long time.

The reason why the witchbeasts chose Subaru as their target.

In this iteration, Subaru was always cursed every time he encountered a witchbeast. It wasn’t so much an unavoidable fate as it was a kind of compulsion, ensuring that Subaru would always be chosen as the target when he encountered a witchbeast.

The magical beasts reacted excessively to Subaru’s presence. The answer to that reason was derived from the words of a person who had reacted excessively in a similar way. Simply put,

“The Witch’s Scent.”

Witchbeasts were said to be external enemies of humanity, created by the Witch.

They had always shown an excessive reaction to Subaru, who carried the scent of the Witch.

It was probably for the same reason that Subaru had been consistently attacked after entering the forest.

If the faint scent enticed the witchbeasts to appear, then he might as well reek of it boldly.

So boldly that all the witchbeasts in the forest, all the witchbeasts that had cursed Subaru, would gather, and even Rem, who was pursuing them, would be forced to join them.

That was Subaru's best plan to reunite with Rem and save himself.

—He called it, "Operation: Natsuki Subaru Decoy."

It was still a fighting style that didn't put him on the front lines, but the plan worked out well.

It helped that a fleeting comment Beatrice had made when the mist appeared the first time he tried to tell Emilia about his "Return by Death" ability had bothered him.

With the appearance of the mist, the lingering scent of the Witch surrounding Subaru became stronger.

—Perhaps that mist had some connection to the Witch.

That's why every time that mist appeared, the Witch's presence emanating from Subaru became stronger, and as a result, he became an effective live bait for luring witchbeasts.

The unbearable agony that could not be conveyed to anyone, and the excruciating pain that could not be complained about to anyone.

With a sense of exhilaration from turning the tables on the fate that had brought these upon him, Subaru's lips twisted into a grin, leaving even the approaching threat behind.

—Ah, I finally struck a blow against the fate that engineered this loop!

Cheering inwardly, he tightened his grip on the single-handed sword and braced himself against the approaching witchbeasts.

Then he declared loudly to Ram beside him:

“So, when it comes to fighting, I’m totally counting on you, alright!”

“You should objectively reflect on what you just said later.”

Following Ram’s sighing voice, a blade of wind struck the approaching horde head-on.

—The battle against the witchbeasts is about to begin again, with a new cast.

Chapter 45:
The Effectiveness of his Lingering Scent

I kick the ground and leap forward.

Thick roots snake underfoot, getting in the way, but I stomp them down with all my might, crushing them as I forge ahead.

When traversing forests, mountains, or unpaved paths, being overly cautious about uncertain footing is actually a mistake. When running on natural animal trails, it's the decisive resolve to push through, no matter what's underfoot, that truly carves the path forward.

Trusting the sturdy soles of my shoes, I trample over accumulated branches, leaves, and moss, leaping once more.

My breath comes in ragged gasps. Sweat trickles down my forehead, threatening to sting my eyes, and I blink painfully, trying to clear a path for the sweat.

There's no time or reason to look back. Besides, the possibility of having escaped is practically nil. The pursuer's footsteps still parallel mine, relentlessly dogging me as if mocking my frantic flight.

I lean my body forward, minimizing wind resistance, and sprint at full speed.

My lungs ache, and I feel my entire body creak, gasping for oxygen like a fish out of water.

Subaru, who is opening and closing his mouth clumsily like a beached fish, hears:

"What a vulgar expression… it really shows your upbringing."

"—You bastard, you'll regret that later!"

Regretting the wasted oxygen, Subaru shifts the arm wrapped around the young girl in his embrace—Ram—and carefully readjusts his grip on her small frame.

It's probably been about ten minutes since the start of the 'Operation: Natsuki Subaru Decoy,' which utilized the black mist likely connected to the Witch.

Just as Subaru had planned, the battle against the gathering witchbeasts became incredibly fierce, and finally—the two of them had no choice but to choose flight, tearing through the forest in retreat.

"I trusted you when you said you could fight, and this is what I get!"

"I was fighting, actually. It's just that Ram's stamina didn't last as long as expected."

"Didn't you say something cool about crossing dangerous bridges?!"

"It was more dangerous than Ram imagined. I was about to fall before I even crossed."

Ram's responses to Subaru's shouts are consistently brazen.

It's hard to believe such an attitude from someone who, after repeated battles, can't maintain her mana and can barely move her limbs.

Lured by the 'Witch's Scent' that Subaru emits, the witchbeasts are being successfully drawn out.

Their numbers far exceed Subaru's wildest imagination, and frankly, the rate of their appearance is so overwhelming that he can think of nothing but regret.

Utilizing wind magic, Ram had dealt with seventeen witchbeasts.

After clearing them all so smoothly, Ram suddenly lost her strength and collapsed. Subaru, who was right beside her, was startled out of his wits and hastily scooped her up, beginning their escape—

"Now we're here—it's nothing but improvisation."

"You're being carried, so shut up! Don't make me talk so much! I'm about to bite my tongue… Besides, my stamina isn't… holding… out…"

Despite being a shut-in student with extraordinary athletic abilities in every other respect, his indoor lifestyle has left him severely lacking in stamina. A long-distance run would easily place him among the last in his class.

Even with such poor stamina, when his life is on the line, he manages to squeeze out every last drop. However, it's only a matter of time before his well of stamina runs dry.

The pursuing witchbeasts seem to sense that the fleeing Subaru is about to collapse.

As if savoring the process of their prey weakening, they nip at his heels whenever his pace slows, keeping him on edge and reigniting his fading instinct to flee.

"Barusu, they're right on your left. —Just swing your sword; you'll hit them."

Ram, still in his arms, turns her head and advises him on a suitable distance as the scenery rushes by. He glances over, and sure enough, he sees the snout of a witchbeast running alongside him, completely underestimating his threat.

He swiftly draws the single-edged sword from his hip and slashes towards it. The strike, aimed perfectly, bisects the arrogant witchbeast's face horizontally, adding another piece to the forest's compost—or so it should have.

Ram's eyes, looking up at him from his chest, fill with anger, as if exasperated by Subaru's refusal to draw his sword. But Subaru glares back with equal emotion.

"Why aren't you drawing your sword?"

"How am I supposed to swing a sword while carrying a person with both hands and running?! Even if I could swing it, I wouldn't hit anything, you'd fall, I'd trip, and it'd be a triple out, you idiot!"

Subaru hurls his ragged breath at the dumbfounded Ram, straining and sweating as he desperately moves his legs.

Even though Ram is small, the weight in his arms must be no less than forty kilograms. To be running so desperately while carrying that much weight is quite impressive. To also draw a sword and fight on top of that is something only seen in manga, and Subaru simply can't do it.

An untrained ordinary student has limited options when carrying a girl. Naturally, Subaru's only choice is to carry her and run.

"It's about time my hidden power awakened—Ow!"

The voice, eagerly anticipating the moment of awakening, abruptly switches to a scream of sudden, sharp pain in his shoulder. He twists his body to look, and there, embedded deep in his right shoulder, is the fang of a leaping witchbeast. A single strike from a beast that had grown tired of toying with them; a chunk of his shoulder flesh is gouged out, and his throat trembles from the pain of his collarbone touching the tip of the fang.

But,

"Carelessness is a great enemy—"

Ram, still in his arms, reaches for Subaru's waist, pulls out his single-edged sword, and delivers a sharp, diagonal thrust.

The tip of the blade deftly penetrates the witchbeast's nose, destroys its brain, and emerges from the back of its head. The strength in its impaling fangs completely drains away, and it's thrown off by Subaru's momentum, plummeting to the ground—leaving behind the tumbling corpse, Subaru looks at the blade that had passed right by his face.

"Don't do such a dangerous thing!"

"I prevented another curse from taking hold, so be grateful. —

Barusu, if a Ulgarm bites you, you absolutely must kill it. If you let it escape, your life will be that much shorter."

Skillfully, Ram shakes the blood from the blade in his arms, then warns him with a glare. Subaru, pretending to focus on running, refused to answer her words.

He's aware of the faint trembling at the roots of his teeth inside his closed mouth.

He can't tell if it's from fighting spirit or fear. No, that's a lie. He accepts with a sense of resignation that it's probably the latter.

Witchbeasts are terrifying. Their fangs and claws are utterly frightening.

The sensation of the fangs that had just pierced his shoulder, though shallow, was sharp enough to stimulate Subaru's fundamental fear.

He had been bitten and torn apart countless times, all over his body.

How could he ever forget that pain, that sense of loss, that despair?

Even with a sword in hand, Subaru hasn't once driven its blade into a witchbeast during their joint struggle with Ram. He's only brandished it as a deterrent, keeping them at bay.

As a result, he's forced a heavy burden on Ram, and now he's compelled to flee while carrying her, exhausted. Including the fact that he couldn't have imagined so many witchbeasts gathering, everything is solely Subaru's fault.

His shoulder wound aches. Blood steadily trickles from the tear in his clothes, soaking his right sleeve up to the elbow. He feels the strength draining from his right arm, and he readjusts his grip on Ram's body several times, desperately pushing forward. In any case, he needs to change locations, even if only slightly.

"Ram!"

“I’m on it.”

Ram responds curtly to his call, her eyes turning bloodshot.

She periodically activates her clairvoyance, searching the surrounding area for any sign of Rem.

During this time, it’s Subaru’s role to protect the completely defenseless Ram.

He scans the surroundings, intensely wary of any witchbeasts preparing to pounce.

Fortunately, perhaps deterred by the demise of the previous beast, no individuals are overtly provocative. They merely pursue him, maintaining a constant distance, as if patiently waiting for his stamina to run out, like tigers eyeing their prey.

In the unsettling silence, Subaru gulps, unable to shake off a bad premonition.

Occasionally, he swerves right and left as if to provoke them, changing course to avoid any ambushes. Each time he does, he loses track of the original direction they were heading.

It’s been a long time since they lost sight of the village and the path deeper into the forest. Since Ram, who uses clairvoyance, hasn’t mentioned it, he trusts that they are at least avoiding running in the wrong direction and simply keeps running.

Abandoning that thought and simply running mindlessly, the result was—

“Damn it—!”

Suddenly, the forest opened up, and the ground beneath his feet vanished, bringing immediate retribution.

His feet flailed in the air, and a floating sensation, as if his internal organs were being pulled upwards, assailed him. Immediately after, his heels scraped against a slope, and he transitioned into a slide, losing his balance.

It was a heart-stopping moment, but he wasn't facing a cliff.

More simply, they had encountered a hollow in the forest. He slid down the slope, holding the girl, clumsily reaching the bottom while almost falling. Grateful for the luck of not tumbling, he looked around and realized his gratitude had been too hasty.

They had fallen into a ravine in the forest, a V-shaped hollow with two exits, left and right.

However, the sounds of multiple witchbeasts reached them from both paths. At the same time, he sensed more witchbeasts sliding down the slope from which Subaru had fallen.

"We've been trapped…!"

He shouldn't have underestimated the witchbeasts as mere animals.

Despite repeated encounters making Subaru realize they possessed some semblance of intelligence, he chose not to dwell on it, given the situation and their appearance.

This allowed them to cleverly manipulate his path, leading him into this inescapable trap.

In his arms, Ram, unaware of the dire situation, still had her gaze fixed on the distance.

It was impossible to leave the resolution of this predicament entirely to her, given her lack of awareness. Therefore, overcoming this crisis was a testament to the trust she placed in Subaru.

"I've got no choice but to do this…!"

Decisiveness was one of Subaru's few virtues.

He somehow managed to hold Ram with just his left arm and snatched the single-edged sword from her right hand. The wound on his right shoulder throbbed, but it wasn't so severe as to impair his grip.

Taking a deep breath as he felt presences from the left, right, and behind, Subaru raised the single-edged sword.

“Here we go, you bastards!”

He plunged it into the slope in front of him, mobilizing his lower body and right arm muscles—he was about to tackle the uphill climb.

His chosen method was, once again, escape—heroic actions like breaking through one of the three paths and carving a way out weren’t worth considering. Since he didn’t possess any supernatural combat abilities, it was even unknown whether his blade would reach the first beast.

He plunged the blade in, dug his shoe soles into the moss-covered slope, and used his whole body to climb the hill. If he rolled down, it would be the end, but it was self-evident that the end would come no matter where he waited. So, if he was going to struggle, it might as well be in a direction that offered some hope.

He twisted his body, pressing his right arm from elbow to shoulder against the slope to gain as much friction as possible as he ascended. Below, in the hollow, the witchbeasts that had been trying to ambush Subaru and Ram butted their noses together, looking up at their fleeing figures and roaring.

It was too late now that they had realized his intentions.

After a dozen or so thrusts, Subaru and Ram finally reached the top of the slope. He swung his body over the edge, hooking his upper body, and somehow managed to climb out.

“Alright! I did it! I actually managed! Nice one, me! I’m awesome! This venerable one-handed sword, it’s all chipped and broken, but… ugh!”

Amidst his self-congratulatory remarks, his body, which had just topped the slope, was immediately pulled back down. Instantly, a tremendous gust of wind, carrying dirt and debris, swept over his head—the back of his neck, too slow to dodge, was gouged by the aftershock, bringing with it both burning pain and intense agony.

"—You bastard!"

Grimacing in pain, he peered over the slope again, and far in his line of sight stood a small shadow—the witchbeast pup he had encountered for the fifth time was there.

It was stretched out on all fours, belly to the ground, in a crouch.

Its glowing red eyes were fixed on them, its unwavering animosity towards its escaped prey swelling within it.

In short, it was preparing for a second shot.

"No way, I'm not taking that!"

As a torrent of mana began to affect nature, Subaru, in a panicked rush, launched himself over the slope. He put off sheathing his sword and readjusting his grip on Ram, fleeing from the witchbeast's sight—and as he ran, the forest behind him was ravaged by a horizontal torrent of earth and debris.

Trees were toppled, and the ground was ripped open, the sheer force of it felt right behind him. There was no time to look back; his lagging calves were torn by the aftershock, and blood spurted out.

"Damn it!"

He yelled and leaped.

He jumped and landed to the right, onto a different slope than before. Deciding not to be caught by the mudslide, and bracing for the cliff's greeting, Subaru plunged the sword, which he had held in a reverse grip, into the ground again.

"Ow, ow, ow, ow, ow!"

He scraped the ground with his right side, twisting and digging in the impaled sword to control his fall. Half-crying from the pain of the new scrapes, Subaru looked up at the cliff from which he had fallen.

"Whoa!"

Unable to stop himself, he instinctively shoved away the witchbeast's body tumbling down the slope.

With a yelp like house dogs, several witchbeasts fell straight down. Unlike the hollow from before, the bottom of this slope was a stark, rocky valley. The falling witchbeasts were mercilessly embraced by the hard ground, silencing them with the sound of bones shattering.

"I almost ended up having a funeral myself, but—"

"Barusu—! Rem was there!"

In his arms, Ram let out a cry of joy, her bloodshot eyes returning to reality.

Then, after a joyful expression, she frowned at the fact that their view was tilted sideways.

"I haven't seen you in a while, what's going on here?"

"We're in a cliffhanger situation due to unavoidable circumstances! More importantly, I want to hear about your results, partly to distract myself from reality."

Feeling his arm muscles tremble, Subaru shifted his focus to the good news for a distraction.

Without commenting on Subaru's increased injuries, Ram nodded slightly.

"Another sight caught Rem's shadow not far from here. The timing was bad, so I couldn't get Rem's own view, but she should have been heading this way."

"How do you know?"

"The view Ram seized was from a Ulgarm, and it encountered Rem while moving somewhere with several others from its pack. It was smashed, and the connection broke."

"Is that so…"

Subaru didn't know what kind of shock Ram experienced when the entity whose sight she was sharing died. But he imagined it was anything but a pleasant sight.

At any rate, confirming Rem's safety was a stroke of luck. Just as he expected, she seemed to be doing well as a hunter in the forest, which was great.

"The problem is that we have way more issues over here… I ran over thinking Rem was in danger, but this is beyond the level of the rescuer needing rescuing."

"If we fall down the cliff, both of us will be in danger, Barusu. Can you climb up?"

"I'll manage with sheer willpower. The bigger problem is the witchbeasts chasing us from above…"

As he discussed what to do, he tightened his grip on his right arm, which supported both of them.

He leaned his weight against the diagonally impaled sword, trying to ease his posture.

"—Ah."

"—Ah."

Their voices overlapped, and simultaneously, a high-pitched clang of shattering steel echoed.

The blade of the single-edged sword, plunged into the cliff, snapped, leaving about a third of its tip embedded in the slope. He frantically tried to stab the bent blade into the ground, but with its tip flattened, its penetration was weak. Simply put—

"—Is there a chance the witchbeasts below will break our fall?"

"It's more likely that we'll be cushions for the witchbeasts that fall after us."

To Subaru's words, uttered as if praying to divine providence, Ram replied with resignation. At that instant, the weakly embedded blade dislodged from the slope, and their fall resumed.

Subaru pressed his entire right side against the slope, bracing himself to be scraped raw, but the friction wasn't enough to support their combined weight, and their bodies were helplessly flung down the cliff.

"Aaaah, damn it—!!"

"—This is going to cost you, Barusu!!"

The sensation of falling headfirst brought back memories of a past suicide attempt, and Subaru's entire body bristled with cold sweat. Yet, instinctively clutching Ram in his arms to protect her from the impact of the fall, he hadn't stopped being a man, it seemed.

Receiving the sensation of that forceful embrace, Ram stirred and extended her arm towards the ground.

"—El Fula!!"

Along with her shout, mana surged, and the ground at their projected landing spot erupted in a blast of wind.

The upward pressure from directly below caught Subaru's body mid-fall, causing it to reverse its headfirst descent and considerably slowing their impact velocity.

This will work, he thought, his vision half-spinning in the swirling world, and he poured all his strength into both legs, enduring the coming impact by clenching his teeth hard enough to crack them.

"Nguooooohhh, aaahhhh—I made itttttt!!"

—He endured.

He bounced on the spot, massaging his protesting legs, and then looked up at the cliff they had fallen from, stunned by its height.

Over ten meters high, roughly equivalent to the fourth floor of a school building. To be thrown from that height onto solid ground and somehow survive was truly a miracle.

“Seriously, Ram-sama, you’re like a Buddha. If it weren’t for that wind magic, right now…”

As he was about to express his gratitude for surviving, Subaru noticed that Ram in his arms wasn’t stirring at all. A thin trail of blood ran from her nose, and her closed eyes were shallowly breathing, only letting out pained groans.

“Huh, hey, Ram? Crap, this is, hey.”

He gently shook her and called out, but there was no response from Ram.

She was already exhausted from the battle with the witchbeasts. The magic used to soften their fall had pushed her past her limit, probably wearing down her spirit.

“Ah, damn it, my timing is the worst.”

Cursing his own carelessness, Subaru held Ram in his arms even more carefully. The half-broken sword was awkwardly sheathed, and he looked up.

Above the cliff, the pursuing witchbeasts seemed to have detoured, now searching for another route to track down Subaru and Ram, who had taken a shortcut.

He wanted to put as much distance between them and the beasts as possible right now, but—

“We don’t have time to waste—?!”

Running would lead to a loss of time, and that loss directly impacted their lives. Still, Subaru suppressed the urge to click his tongue at the fact that fleeing was their only option. However, that sentiment was immediately overridden by a violent noise echoing from above the cliff.

“Whoa, no way.”

Looking up, a massive mudslide was cascading down the very slope Subaru had just slid from—carrying with it the witchbeast pup and over a dozen other witchbeasts.

He instinctively jumped back, at least avoiding being caught in the mudslide.

However, when the witchbeasts, along with the earth and debris, landed on the same level ground, the advantage Subaru and Ram had risked their lives to create instantly vanished.

As an added bonus, Ram's consciousness had sunk to the bottom from creating that opportunity, and Subaru's unreliable armament had become even more unreliable.

"Damn it, Witch… your perfume is waay too strong."

When things went according to plan, he was grateful, but realizing it led to his current failure, he immediately flipped his opinion.

"Dirty, as expected of Subaru, dirty," he critiqued his own small-mindedness, yet prepared for another escape, knowing it would only delay the inevitable.

He planned to get out of here, hoping the witchbeasts still underestimated them and wouldn't immediately attack—

"Wait, what?"

Just as he was about to run, Subaru sensed the oddity and tilted his head.

The witchbeasts that had fallen were acting strangely. He had assumed they would crouch on the mudslide, then leap at them as soon as they landed, but—

"Hey, wait, I'm over here, you know?"

As Subaru's dumbfounded voice indicated, the moment they landed, the witchbeasts scattered in every direction, running down the cliff.

Their frantic scattering, like spiderlings, was so undignified it reminded him of his own desperate flight earlier.

“What’s wrong with you guys—”

The tension of being attacked briefly eased, and such questions filled his chest.

Immediately after, the answer exploded above the cliff and rained down on Subaru.

“Huh?”

Again, looking up, Subaru’s eyes widened in confusion at the change on the cliff—and then he understood as he witnessed reddish-black chunks of flesh scattering before his eyes.

—High above on the cliff, a single human figure appeared.

A young girl in a maid’s uniform, wildly swinging a blood-soaked iron ball, glaring down at the cliff bottom with deranged eyes.

The moment their murderous gazes met, Subaru felt his back drench in cold sweat, overcome by the worst possible premonition.

Immediately after, with a powerful leap from the high cliff, the ‘Oni’ descended effortlessly to their level.

Surrounded by witchbeasts in the deep forest, confronting the ‘Oni,’ holding the girl he had to protect, with a broken sword in hand, Subaru took a breath, realizing he had reached the final stage.

“Don’t you think I’m a bit too pathetic for that?”

His appeal reached no one, silenced by the wind sweeping through the forest.

Now, this is what you call the moment of truth—

Reflected in the blade of his drawn single-edged sword, his distorted profile looked terribly weak to Subaru.

Chapter 46:
Oni-like Flash

1

Though they only faced each other for a few seconds, to Subaru, those silent moments felt like hours.

Rem's eyes, which had seemed devoid of reason, regained their emotion after a sudden blink.

"—Sister, and Subaru?"

Subaru breathed a sigh of relief at her surprised voice. Ram, who had been stirring in his arms, fluttered her eyes open.

"Oh, Rem, I was so worried about you. Running off like that, isn't good you know."

"I'm sorry, Sister. Rem was desperate to try and fix things…"

"You don't have to push yourself so hard, Rem. We found a way to make it work. If we use Barusu here as bait, it'll be perfect!"

"Ah! I see! That's brilliant! Rem is so moved!"

The twins rushed to each other, clasping hands. Their synchronization was unprecedented as they communicated, and Subaru, met with their expectant gazes, thumped his chest.

"Well, leave it to me. I'll show you the greatest bait performance of this century!"

""Kyaa, amazing! So manly, truly fitting for Lady Emilia!""

Cheered on by the two, Subaru proudly responded.

With this, the long, arduous loop of suffering was over. Natsuki Subaru would seize the light he saw and walk the path to glory.

2

“…That’s what I wished would happen.”

Subaru muttered this in a pathetic voice, cutting off his fantastical delusion as he slowly backed away.

Rem’s eyes, fixed on him, showed no hint of the emotions that had returned in his fantasy. There was only pure, jet-black killing intent. She certainly didn’t seem to be in a state of mind where a conversation was possible.

Each drop of sweat felt as heavy as lead. The weight of the sweat on his eyelids threatened to obstruct his vision, and Subaru tried to blink one eye at a time to cope. He’d learned his lesson about blinking both eyes simultaneously and creating an opening from his fight with the witchbeast.

“Hey, Rem-rin! It’s your friend, Suba-ru!”

To snap himself out of his growing wariness and to break the tense silence, Subaru deliberately tried to sound cheerful as he called out. Rem’s reaction to his friendly greeting was:

“Don’t give me such a heated stare, I’ll get burned.”

With a sharp, almost audible movement, she swiveled her head and locked onto him. Until then, she had been surveying her surroundings, but now her focus was entirely on him. He might have made a mistake.

The demonic aura emanating from Rem was terrifying. Her familiar maid uniform was drenched in blood—a gruesome two-tone of dark red and fresh, vivid red, smeared over already dried blood.

Perhaps due to her oni transformation, green-blue veins writhed beneath the skin exposed by torn sleeves, and her fingernails had grown as sharp as any witchbeast’s claws. The “self-defense” flail she carried on her right arm was still there, untouched, and seemed to have seen as much action as she had. Caked with blood and various other substances, it looked even more menacing.

He could say with certainty: though he maintained some semblance of composure because he had somewhat braced himself for Rem's appearance, if he were to encounter her like this unexpectedly on a dark path, he would without a doubt wet himself.

Despite being enveloped in such madness, the single white horn extending from her forehead remained pristine, as if oblivious to the carnage. It was the most symbolic part of her transformation into a malevolent "oni," yet that horn alone created a stark, incongruous impression on Subaru.

However, the situation wasn't about to accommodate Subaru's feelings. He noticed the scattered witchbeasts that had fallen into the ravine were maintaining a distance, observing them from behind rocks and deep within the forest. They were likely assessing the movements of Subaru, and especially Rem. If they judged her to be vulnerable, it was easy to imagine them rejoining the fight.

For Subaru, who was at the very bottom of the power balance, their intervention would be nothing short of absolute desperation. Rem's next move, then, was literally a matter of life and death.

He held his breath, closed his eyes once, and then met Rem's gaze head-on. He focused all his being into his stare, trying not to miss even the slightest flicker of emotion in her glaring eyes.

And then,

"Sister…"

It was a faint, exhausted voice. But it was a definite sound that vibrated in Subaru's eardrums.

Rem's lips trembled, and her eyes, bewildered, stared intently at Ram's profile. There, unmistakably, was a positive emotion, and Subaru was impressed by it. Even in the throes of madness, completely surrendered to her fighting instinct, her consciousness still clearly perceived her other half, her beloved sister.

"You're truly the epitome of a siscon. I'm glad we could reunite. From now on…"

His words were cut off as the flail, gathering a fierce wind, flew towards him.

It was almost a miracle he managed to tilt his body to the right in time. The laceration on his right calf, which had slightly destabilized his stance as he tried to step forward, turned out to be a stroke of luck. The thorns of the passing flail grazed his left shoulder, and the intense pain of torn flesh made his brain boil. His throat rattled with the pain, but he had no time to lose focus. He stepped diagonally forward.

“Ow, that hurt!”

Turning away from his gouged and bleeding shoulder, Subaru sidestepped under the chain of the overshooting flail. Immediately after, the sweeping chain violently struck the spot where Subaru had been, deeply imprinting the pattern of an iron snake into the earth. It wasn’t hard to imagine that if he had been even a moment slower in his evasion, the flesh on Subaru’s back would have exploded in the same fashion.

A shiver ran down Subaru’s spine at the thought of the skin-tearing pain, and he looked at Rem, almost pleadingly. But her posture, as she looked at him, hadn’t changed. Her eyes, still wet with hostility, remained vacant, confirming her complete loss of sanity.

“So she transformed into an oni, but can’t control it, huh…”

Subaru made a rough guess about her current state based on her behavior. The problem then was to figure out the difference from last night. Rem had also transformed into an oni last night, but she seemed to have regained her sanity immediately then. Was it the elapsed time, or was it the shocking sight that caused this? If Subaru being seriously injured protecting her had affected her mind that much—

“Should I try taking a hit from the flail? I’d be minced meat instantly, though…”

If the conditions from last night were all it took, he thought she would surely come back to her senses. But in return, Subaru would be ground meat.

“The next best option is… getting super mauled by the dogs.”

If he prostrated himself, throwing himself to them, the ones hiding behind the rocks would surely welcome him with open jaws, thinking, “What kind of beast in the wild doesn’t eat a ready-made meal?!” He felt like it might work, but there was no guarantee Rem would let him go if he threw himself out there, and it would likely lead to a catastrophic re-application of the curse. At worst, Rem might abandon him completely, leading to a “dog’s death” scenario.

Following this pessimistic line of thought, he was truly out of options. Ram’s consciousness, which might understand the situation, was still far away. He’d been shaking her, trying to bring her back, but it seemed it would take time. And neither Rem in front of him nor the surrounding Ulgarms seemed willing to wait.

Subaru licked the sweat trickling down his cheek, moistening his lips, and let his words slip out. If he couldn’t think of any moves, he’d try to cover all the common patterns of interacting with someone who’d lost their sanity. After all, a full-on trial and error was his only breakthrough. That was the Subaru way—

“Hey, Rem. You don’t quite remember who I am, do you? Listen to me, you heartless person. I will reminisce a sweet, embarrassing, and treasured time so you can remember who I am. It was three days ago, if you recall. I was washing clothes in a strange mood, and in front of the laundry basket I was told to use, I couldn’t help but get excited… Whoa!”

He tried to turn the tide with an emotional appeal to their bond and her memories, but it was immediately cut short by Rem’s impatience. He barely avoided the spinning flail, which smashed and shattered the trees in its path, sending wood splinters flying. He then masterfully dodged the subsequent chain attacks with a hop, step, and jump, all while struggling not to drop Ram. Turning around,

“It’s bad manners to try and bludgeon someone to death in the middle of their story! I’d like to see your family’s face… Oh, here it is!”

“Give back Sister…!”

Subaru shouted, looking down at Ram in his arms, as Rem leaned forward and muttered. But then, with a sudden swing of her arm, she reeled in the thrown flail, and with the momentum of that swing, she sharply spun around,

“—!”

Rem’s spinning back kick connected directly with the torso of a witchbeast leaping from behind—a thunderous explosion erupted, and even from a distance, it was clear that the Ulgarm’s insides had been utterly pulverized.

This was what happened when you tried to take advantage of the situation. The witchbeasts, who had been planning a wave attack in conjunction with the vanguard’s approach, stopped dead in their tracks at the sight of such a gruesome death.

It was akin to a foolish act of exposing one’s belly while lying on their back before a hunter.

A horizontal blow shattered the bellies and heads of two beasts lined up together. Without even a glance at the scattered flesh, Rem took a step forward, propelled by the force of that strike. She crushed the front paw of a cowering witchbeast with her stomp, then kicked its stopped snout with her other foot—a light sound rang out, and the witchbeast’s cervical vertebrae snapped and twisted at an impossible angle. Rem then leapt directly in front of the last beast in the wave attack, grabbed its scruff, and with no further action, simply hurled it straight up into the sky.

Tracing an arc, the faint howl of the witchbeast, now a fastball, echoed, trailing off into the distance. It faded, then grew closer, closer, and finally, it abruptly ceased with a sound like a fruit being smashed against hard ground.

Slaughter after slaughter. Massacre for the sake of massacre. Carnage within carnage. No other thoughts came to mind for the actions unfolding before him.

It was an overwhelming difference in power, like a child's game. Their very existence was on different levels. When it came to dread, "Oni" and "Witchbeast" could compete, but in terms of absolute power, they could never contend.

Yet, Subaru utterly failed to comprehend the witchbeasts who still challenged an "Oni" they couldn't defeat. They trembled in terror, let out desperate howls in the face of death, and even felt grief over the discarded corpses of their comrades—yet they absolutely refused to flee the conflict.

Perhaps that was the very core that made them "Witchbeasts"—creatures born of the Witch's hand, referred to as external threats harmful to humanity.

Witnessing this reckless charge—in a sense, an active suicide—Subaru furrowed his brow, a sudden doubt surfacing.

Rem, crushing the witchbeast horde with overwhelming brutality. The doubt was that her incredible combat power, witnessed from the sidelines, hadn't been fully unleashed in the two previous attacks aimed at him.

It was nothing to boast about, but Subaru had a certain level of confidence in his physical abilities. In gymnastics, there were almost no techniques he couldn't perform, like backflips and aerials, and he also had records of significantly exceeding the national average in agility.

However, when comparing Subaru's physical capabilities to those of witchbeasts living in the wild, he couldn't possibly believe he was superior in agility, explosiveness, or stamina. At best, he might win a test of strength, but even that couldn't be definitively confirmed, recalling his past experience of being temporarily pulled down by brute force.

For Subaru, who harbored such a somewhat disappointing self-assessment, Rem's rampage unfolding before his eyes was utterly beyond the realm of evasion. An attack that could turn a witchbeast into mincemeat would naturally strike Subaru as well. Yet, the contradiction was that he had already survived twice—delving deeper, Subaru found yet another thread, too thin to cling to.

“Even if she’s lost her sanity, she’s still aware of Ram’s presence.”

He looked down at the girl exhaling tormented breaths in his arms, gently brushing the bangs from her forehead with his finger. All the incoming flails targeted his head and neck—an instant death blow. From another perspective, it indicated an intent not to eliminate anyone but Subaru.

Subaru was holding Ram, so Rem’s attacks were softened. Therefore, the mercilessness shown towards the witchbeasts and the attacks directed at Subaru were disproportionate in their intensity.

Subaru gasped, formulating this hypothesis. If his conjecture was correct, he might be able to get through this. This seemingly desperate situation, though by a precarious method like crossing a flimsy bridge about to collapse, he might be able to traverse it.

“For that, I need to—”

He looked around. The current layout of the ravine had Subaru in the center. Rem stood to the north, with her back to the cliff, and the Ulgarm’s have formed a large encirclement to the east and west. From the witchbeasts’ perspective, both Subaru and Rem should be equally prey, but currently, they seemed to be prioritizing Rem due to the danger she posed. Rem, while paying some attention to Subaru, was preoccupied with dealing with the attacking witchbeasts and wasn’t going on the offensive against him. However, if the number of witchbeasts interfering with her actions decreased, it was easy to imagine Rem turning her attention to Subaru to reclaim her sister.

Considering all this, Subaru had only one course of action. He braced himself, spread his legs, took a breath, and stared at Rem.

—Go for it, me. Men need guts, women need charm.

“So don’t make that scary face, smile, Rem! —I’m about to ‘Return by…'"

Today's second cessation of the world, followed by a banquet of screams caused by black mist. Even anticipating the intense pain, it was unbearable. Especially when it wasn't just one hand, but the appearance of his left hand as well.

Perhaps having savored the completion of his right arm, the sensation of something passing through his sternum and caressing his internal organs, as Subaru opened his unmoving eyelids, had now transformed into two palms. One held his heart, and the other gently touched Subaru's cheek, as if with affection. —A shiver ran through him, and immediately afterward, pain consumed his nerves.

Intense pain, intense pain, intense pain—! The world turned upside down, and at the same time, a tremendous discomfort as if everything inside his stomach was being churned. He was no longer himself. A strange feeling as if every part of him, from head to toe, was being replaced. A numbness that made his nerves unable to recognize themselves as nerves boiled his brain, and his consciousness gradually blurred. Yet, only the gentle touch of the palm on his cheek was warm, and centered there was a feeling of relief as if his mind and body were melting away, but Subaru knew a sensation that surpassed it without relying on it—

"I'm… back."

His vision blurred. His soul was worn thin. The pain and suffering, in reality, nothing had been brought back. Time had not passed. Before his eyes, the witchbeasts and Rem were still locked in a desperate standoff, a chaotic battle—but the moment Subaru returned, a significant change occurred in that confrontation.

As if something massive and unignorable had appeared in the area, the attention of both Rem and the Ulgarm pack turned towards him. This was likely due to the witch's presence enveloping Subaru intensifying even further, just as he intended.

—Rem roared. To reclaim her beloved sister from the hostile entity emitting the tremendous lingering scent of the Witch.

—The Ulgarm horde began to howl in unison. To gather every member of their pack in the forest, their instincts drawn by the familiar scent.

—Subaru also roared. Barely dodging the claws of the leaping witchbeasts and the flails being hurled, as if demanding to ignite his own life and soul.

3

A chaotic battle begins.

Amidst the frenzy, a mismatched struggle between an Oni, witchbeasts, and ordinary people, Subaru continues to dance with utmost caution in the center of the fray.

He maintains a safe distance from the intensifying battle, putting all his effort into dodging any direct attacks—nothing more.

In front of him, a witchbeast is struck by an iron ball and quickly splatters against the rock wall.

Yet, unfazed by their comrade’s demise, three beasts coordinate an attack, aiming to gravely wound Rem. Their shallow cunning proves futile; a dismissive sweep of her hand intercepts their leap, and one by one, the beasts, halted in their tracks, fall victim to her merciless weapon.

Watching this unfold, Subaru readjusts his grip on Ram, who is about to slip, and leaps backward. He narrowly evades a pouncing magical beast and lunges into Rem’s attack range.

Just then, Rem, sharply aware of his approach, retaliates. He abruptly stops, dodging a thrusting iron handle, then ducks under a trailing chain. The iron ball, passing over his head, blossoms into a crimson flower on the skull of a magical beast that had been closing in from behind.

Having confirmed that, he discards all shame and propriety, scuttling away like a cockroach crawling on the ground. Magical beasts block Rem, allowing him to successfully escape.

Maintaining a set distance, he exhales a sigh of relief, praising his own judgment for saving his life.

"—Hah! Turns out, I can do this, can't I?"

He desperately bounced to avoid being bitten by a dog, then shoved the chasing dog onto the maid girl, and when the angry girl threw a tantrum, he scurried away like a cockroach.

Simply put, that's all there is to it, which makes him want to die a little, but he rationalizes that he's doing this to survive, and in his mind, he even beautifies his own disgraceful actions.

Currently, Subaru's plan is working well. It's a decent development, both in terms of buying time and reducing the total number of Ulgarms.

Glimpsing up, he senses hordes of magical beasts gathering towards them from several directions leading into the valley.

Subaru's scent, which has spread over a considerable area of the forest, continues to instinctively draw the Ulgarms. It was a sinful situation.

Thus, he began to see a chance to live.

Even though the situation hadn't actually changed, he found himself experiencing premature joy.

"—Huh?"

Suddenly, it happened.

A new horde of Ulgarms entered the valley, throwing themselves into a deadly struggle with Rem. As he witnessed this, he slightly shifted his body, preparing to dodge, when a dizzying sensation drastically unbalanced Subaru.

His knees buckled, and he nearly toppled forward. Instinctively, he twisted to shield Ram, whom he was holding, and fell to the ground on his injured left shoulder. A pained groan, as if his throat were constricted by sharp pain, escaped him, but even more dominant in

Subaru's consciousness was,

"This chill—"

It was a familiar, extraordinary chill that froze him to the bone.

After all the intense movement, using his life as a shield, and burning his soul in the midst of a fierce battle, this sudden coldness felt like a bucket of icy water thrown onto his burning passion.

In response, Subaru once again regretted his miscalculation.

The more he gathered them, the more dangerous it became. The entity before him was so powerful that if he judged he needed even a little more strength, resuming the suspended curse would seem like the very first course of action to consider.

He scanned his surroundings.

One of the Ulgarms participating in this battle had activated the curse on Subaru and was siphoning his mana. However, even after looking around, he couldn't see any such witchbeast.

Furthermore, he had no idea what state a witchbeast would be in when activating a curse.

With his body now too sluggish to even lift a finger, even if he could pinpoint the source of the curse, he wouldn't be able to stop it, even by sacrificing himself.

"…Is this the end?"

After coming this far, would everything be in vain?

Subaru's consciousness began to fade as the chill intensified. He tried desperately to cling to it, reaching out, but no matter how much he reached, it was only a futile grasp at air—

Suddenly, the chill vanished, and blood rushed back into his palm.

—A roar, Subaru's recovery, and the sound reverberated simultaneously.

Pushing through his blurring vision, Subaru's gaze darted around, searching for the source of the sound. Then, deep in the forest, he saw Rem, stomping heavily on the ground and slamming her iron ball against a rock face. Beneath the iron ball, a witchbeast lay, its carcass burst open.

Understanding the causal link between his remarkable recovery and the situation, Subaru stood up.

The witchbeast Rem had just crushed was the one that had been cursing Subaru. Its demise must have interrupted the curse's activation.

What a terrifying coincidence, he thought, admiring his own extraordinary bad luck.

"No, that's not it."

Rem was now a considerable distance from where she had been standing moments before.

There was only one reason she would ignore the scattered witchbeasts on the way and target only that one.

Casting everything aside, Rem had sprinted, sustaining claw wounds along the way, to pinpoint and strike down the one activating the curse.

Subaru wasn't so obtuse as to not understand what that meant.

Even if she had lost her sanity, even if she was in a mental state where she didn't recognize Subaru.

Rem wouldn't mistake her beloved sister, nor had she forgotten her initial purpose for leaping into the forest.

Then, he thought.

Subaru rubbed his eyelids, consciously focusing on what he had to do.

He decided that instead of exploiting her in such a deceitful way, he should stick to his original objective. In short,

“My initial ideal. A thrilling joint curse-exorcism operation with the maid sisters, Ram and Rem.”

Only by achieving that, Subaru believed, could he hope to survive this cursed situation. Therefore, he had to bring Rem back to her senses. Subaru needed her—the impudent, rash, quick-to-judge, troublesome girl—not the ‘Oni’.”

“—Horn.”

Suddenly, that voice vibrated Subaru’s eardrum from right beside him.

Looking down, he saw Ram, still cradled in his arms, her eyes barely open, her lips moving even in her hazy consciousness.

“You’re awake?”

“I thought this was the most opportune moment, you see…”

“Ah, you’ve got good instincts, big sis. —You said ‘horn’?”

Subaru returned Ram’s faint smile with a half-bluffing, half-resigned grin and asked. She pulled her chin back, seemingly tired.

“What makes Rem an oni is that horn… if you land one strong hit… she’ll come back…”

“Are you sure?”

“Should be. Probably. I hope so.”

“You’re pretty vague about that, aren’t you?! Either way, I’m gonna trust you.”

He declared, then looked at Rem.

The white horn extending from her forehead was about ten centimeters long. If you imagined a small packet sticking out of her forehead, that would be roughly the size.

—A single blow, right there.

“Doesn’t that sound impossible?”

“Gather every last bit of your wisdom and courage and just make it happen.”

Ram raised an eyebrow, surprised by Subaru’s reply.

Subaru gave her a wry smile, twisting his lips as if it were difficult to say,

“You’ll probably get angry.”

“If it brings my sister back to her senses, Ram won’t be angry.”

“Really?”

“Really, really.”

“Swear on Roswaal?”

“…You’re brave to pick that name. Yes, I swear on Lord Roswaal.”

Ram’s utterly manly declaration convinced Subaru to respect her opinion.

In front, Rem slowly turned to face them.

Her core awareness was still directed toward them, and her expanded alert network encompassed the surrounding Ulgarms.

Against Rem in her full-perimeter alert stance, Subaru initiated his move to strike the horn.

It was—

“Ooooh, ace!”

“—Huh?”

He twisted his body, adopting a low stance, and with the recoil, swung his arms while rotating his entire body—he threw Ram, whom he had been holding in both arms, forcefully towards Rem.

She probably hadn't expected to be thrown.

Ram's stunned face, soaring through the air, receded and was drawn towards Rem. Even the oni-like Rem seemed momentarily dumbfounded by this, but as soon as she realized it was her defenseless sister flying towards her, she immediately let go of her iron ball and stretched out her arms to catch her.

"…Is this the end?"

Skillfully moving her clawed fingers, Rem cradled her sister in her bloodstained arms. In that instant, a gentle expression swiftly appeared on her face, which had been drenched only in killing intent.

—Subaru's body was launched, ensuring he wouldn't be late to witness that moment.

Simultaneously with throwing Ram, Subaru's body surged forward in the same direction. While Rem's gaze was fixed on Ram above, he crouched, darting through her blind spot and closing the distance.

He stepped in, drew his sword from his waist with his right hand, and with that momentum, aimed for the horn on her head. Cutting through the wind, the timing was perfectly unexpected.

Even Rem, formidable as she was, couldn't react to this audacious tactic—but,

"—Ahf"

The tip of the swung blade was chipped, his powerful step was a single flinch of hesitation, and under the absolute most critical circumstances, he just barely failed to strike the horn.

Subaru was stunned as a once-in-a-lifetime chance slipped through his fingers.

"I chickened out! I was just one step short of courage!"

He swung and missed, his body spinning from the momentum.

Just before he turned his back, he saw Rem's left hand poised in a piercing strike at the edge of his vision. A direct thrust from that would neatly pierce his torso.

Again, by Rem's hand—he bit his lip, determined to avoid that, just as,

"Ooohh—?!"

His body struck by a barrage of stones, skin tearing and bleeding, Subaru, still airborne, saw the cause of his current plight below.

The ground had erupted south of Subaru's position, the cause being a puppy-sized witchbeast lying low there. The creature, which he had thought was gone since falling into the valley, must have been waiting for the moment when Subaru and Rem aligned in its line of fire.

The instant it believed it could eliminate both of them at once, it unleashed its magic in a surprise attack, creating a spectacular diversion with a torrent of earth and debris.

However, its plan was—

"—!!"

Rem roared, stomping once on the exploding ground.

The nascent earth current was canceled out by her power, merely causing her blue bangs to ripple a bit more intensely.

Neutralizing magic with brute force—it probably wasn't that simple, but it was a method of magic suppression close to it.

Rem carefully held her sister, whom she had caught, and stepped sideways to escape the magical aftershock. —She had completely forgotten about Subaru, who was falling from above.

The world spinning in a vertical tumble could not be grasped normally.

However, his right hand still firmly gripped the one-handed sword, and fortunately, his landing spot was not the rock face but solid earth.

Directly below him was Rem, oblivious to his presence, her head exposed.

There would be no better chance, no later chance, no further hope.

He drew back, gripping the one-handed sword with both hands, and prepared for a full-power strike.

By sheer happenstance, layered upon happenstance, upon happenstance, this might just barely reach.

Hooray for plot convenience. Miracles are the best. Even God's whims work sometimes.

—If only it had worked during that earlier flash, it would have been so much cooler.

He grimaced. There was no time. Just ahead, in a world that had become slow and sluggish, there was Rem.

He saw the horn. He flipped the sword over, reversed the blade, and released his accumulated power.

"Smile, Rem. —Today, I'm more fanatic than even an oni could be!"

The blade was unleashed, a straight sword flash streaking towards the white horn—

A high-pitched clang of steel sharply echoed through the witchbeast forest.

Immediately followed by Subaru's ungraceful cry, due to a failed landing.

Chapter 47:
Rem

1

The vividly emotions felt at that time are still fresh.

Swords swung, fresh blood splattered.

Familiar landscapes were scorched by flames, and Familiar people transformed into silent corpses.

A world ending. A world that had been closed off. A world unrewarded.

A world that was simply harsh, simply unreasonable, simply hurtful.

Rem reaching out, her fingers twitched, her lips trembled, yet she still pleaded.

Even in such a hopeless world, it was the only one she knew.

A world Rem had only ever peeked at from behind the back that always shielded her view.

Then, that wall was suddenly torn down, and Rem squinted at the dazzling expanse of the world. The burning heat and color of the flames scorching her skin, the scent and color of searing flesh, the beautiful color of the “horns” dancing in the air—Rem imprinted everything into my eyes, into a vision that had never been fully open—

What was Rem thinking in a world that might already be ending?

Rem still remembers the emotions she gained at that time.

From then on, her every day was solely an atonement for those feelings.

For a young girl named Rem, being compared to her sister was a harsh daily reality.

Among the demi-human races, the Oni possess exceptionally high physical strength and mana.

Their unparalleled combat prowess and the racial trait of being “Kings of the Forest” further amplify their dominance in nature, demonstrating power sufficient to be acknowledged as one of the strongest among demi-humans.

No other race is as reliable in combat, given their physical resilience and the quality of mana they can wield. The only weakness the Oni possess, if any, is their critically low population.

A race specialized in producing powerful individuals, the Oni haven’t managed to foster a large population. Contrary to their immense power, they were forced to live in small settlements deep in the mountains. However, unlike their toughness, their temperament was often gentle, and few harbored dissatisfaction with this way of life.

Precisely because they were a race living in secluded lands, several strict rules existed. Breaking a rule would result in punishment, and in the worst cases, even exile. For them, clinging together due to their small numbers, exile meant lifelong solitude. Therefore, the rules had to be upheld no matter what.

For the Oni, twins were considered “abominations.” This was one of the strict rules established among the few Oni remaining.

Originally, Oni are born with two horns on their heads. Normally, these horns are hidden within the skull, but if circumstances change and stir their Oni instincts, the horns emerge from their heads, devouring surrounding mana. They subjugate and command the mana in the atmosphere, significantly boosting their combat power. Horns are organs for this purpose, and for the Oni, they are the very pride of their race.

Yet, twins are born sharing those two horns.

Among the Oni, those who lose a horn are called “hornless” and forfeit their standing within the race. Even the loss of a single horn doesn’t spare them from scorn. Despite this, twins are born lacking these vital horns from the start. What else could this be but an abomination?

Hence, twins were deemed abominations, and it was customary for them to be disposed of immediately after birth. Their fate, too, should have ended then.

If not for the immense magical power emitted by one of the twins at the moment the patriarch, having made a painful decision, was about to carry out the execution—if that natural talent hadn’t been discovered.

The twins were named Ram for the elder sister and Rem for the younger, thus securing their place, however humble, among the Oni.

Their lives, however, were far from smooth sailing. Although their lives were spared, the fact that they were twins could not be erased. Labeled “hornless” from the start, they were raised with cold indifference from everyone in the clan, including their own parents. Their parents maintained an aloof attitude despite being blood relatives, and other clan members openly displayed disgust and contempt for the “abominable” twins. For them, still unable to walk or understand words and malice, it was arguably the worst possible environment for their upbringing.

However, how long did this harsh environment last? It continued until they became aware of themselves—more precisely, until the elder twin sister established her own consciousness.

The simplest way to describe Ram in her infancy would be “prodigy.” Her talent was unmatched among all past Oni. Even as a child, her mana reserves were extraordinarily high, and above all, the beauty of her horn captivated all Oni.

Without succumbing to her own talent or power, she presented herself as straightforward as the single pure white horn on her forehead, causing everyone in the clan to naturally bow their heads before her. For a girl not yet ten, this was truly exceptional treatment.

Her aloof parents, the clan members who couldn't hide their scorn, and even the patriarch who had intended to kill them immediately after birth, were speechless before her aura. She was a being born to stand at the pinnacle of the Oni, a chosen race among the powerful demi-humans.

They revered powerful individuals, they never failed to show respect to those who possessed great strength. Being such a race, their devotion to Ram was utterly devoid of ulterior motives.

Rem's daily life was simply following her sister's glorious path with unsteady steps.

She possessed no outstanding talents. Her mana reserves were ordinary. Her power as an Oni was average for someone with a single horn. Unlike her sister, she lacked a shred of confidence, shrinking behind her sister's back, acting like a shadow to avoid being noticed or talked about. That was her coping mechanism as a child, a defense mechanism to protect her undeveloped heart.

It wasn't that she was jealous of her sister. It wasn't that she hated her parents. It wasn't that she disliked her clan members.

Her sister, always walking ahead, was always kind, often looking back and offering a hand to her slower younger sister. As their parents learned of her sister's natural gifts, they began to show the same affection to Rem. Many villagers, too, looked at her, diligently following her exceptionally talented sister, with eyes full of expectation and envy.

Her sister, kinder than anyone. Her parents, who had expectations for her. All the clan members who cheered her on to become as splendid as her sister—all of it was an ordeal for Rem, like being cut to pieces.

Perhaps the fact that she looked so much like her sister also had no small impact. Her height, facial features—her entire appearance was similar, yet the quality of the “Oni” she harbored within her differed greatly.

Of course, Rem also tried to change this situation. Though it was merely the shallow and clumsy trial and error of a young child, Rem tried every means to get even one step closer to her sister, to surpass her in even one thing.

However, her sister was superior in everything. Rem realized, even in her infancy, that there was an unreachable realm, and that this realm belonged to the closest, most beloved person to her.

She could not stand alongside her sister. Her sister always stood in front, bathed first in the light that illuminated the world. Her own place was to timidly peek out from behind her sister’s back, shrinking her body in the dazzling glow. If she gave up in such a way, she could accept all the daily hardships, like plants gracefully yielding to the wind.

How long did such days of accepting resignation continue?

3

One night, Rem awoke, restless from the heat.

She lay on the wooden bed, pulling the sweat-soaked covers off her body. Looking around, she suddenly noticed that her sister, who should have been sleeping in the adjacent bed, wasn’t there.

Immediately, she felt she had to go find her sister. If her sister was awake, Rem had to follow majestically behind her. Even if it was just a momentary awakening for a small errand, a compulsion to never neglect this duty dominated Rem at that time.

As she thought about stepping out of the room, she belatedly, finally, realized.

The source of the heat was their familiar home, engulfed in flames. Pulling her hand away from the scorching doorknob, Rem grasped the truth. Her dormant sense of smell awoke, detecting the acrid scent of burning, and an itching sensation ran across her forehead as her horn emerged.

Immediately, she used her enhanced body to break through the door and sprint through the house, which was covered in raging fire. She didn't know why, but she followed her instincts: out, out.

With a single kick, she shattered the brittle wall and burst out of the house. Even at that moment, her mind was dominated by a kind of fanatical thought: "I must get out of the house and ask for Sister's instructions." That thought was instantly overwritten by the scene she witnessed outside the house.

In the center of the settlement, a towering pile of charred corpses. Burning houses, trees burned to ashes—her familiar world had transformed into a red hell overnight.

Seeing familiar faces among the twisted bodies, singed by the flames, Rem immediately gave up thinking and collapsed on the spot. Slowly, shadowy figures in black robes surrounded her. Their faces, deeply hidden by hoods, were not visible until they were close, and even then, she didn't recognize them. However, she felt no friendly light from them, and a smile unfitting for Rem surfaced on her cheeks.

It was a face too world-weary for a young girl, a face that had bitten back resignation many times over.

The shadows paid no mind to her sorrowful expression. They raised their hands, and a gleaming silver blade in their palm swung down towards the girl—immediately after, the shadows' necks were simultaneously severed.

Fresh blood; four lives were taken at once, and the severed heads were handled with such swiftness that they didn't even realize their own demise; no screams were uttered. She felt a familiar surge of mana, sensing it directly on her skin, and Rem was certain it was her sister's doing.

The moment she perceived this, Rem stood up. If her sister was somewhere, she had to follow behind her.

She didn’t need to look far; she found her sister immediately. Her sister, whose face was identical to her own, was now distorted with sorrow. She rushed to her sister and embraced her. Checking that Rem’s body in her arms was unharmed, her sister’s body relaxed in relief. Embracing her sister back, Rem savored an overwhelming mix of happiness and sorrow.

—She didn’t remember much after that.

She thought she had left everything to her sister. That was for the best, and above all, it was right. Her sister’s actions were always the most revered among all possibilities.

Yet, when she realized it, she was surrounded. The number of figures was enough to obscure her vision, and vaguely watching them, Rem still completely believed her sister would somehow manage.

The back in front of her was desperately shouting something. Crying, shrinking, desperately pleading for something.

If her sister were to fall to the ground, Rem would be troubled. Looking down on her sister was something that should never happen in Rem’s way of life. Behind her sister, smaller than her sister—that was her reason for being.

Her sister screamed. Standing up, spreading both hands in front of her. Mana surged. Her sister’s insane power unfolded, and invisible blades, dissecting everything around them, ravaged the world.

Before they could strike, her sister turned back, embraced Rem—and then, an impact.

Rem saw it. She saw that white brilliance, her sister’s horn, dancing in the red sky, struck sideways by steel.

Round and round it spun, the broken horn. A horn broken at its base, gushing fresh blood, and someone’s shrill scream.

She still vividly remembered what she thought when she saw it.

While listening to her beloved sister’s scream, who had been brutalized and had her horn broken while protecting her, and while watching the beautiful white horn she had always envied dance in the air,

—“Ah, it finally broke,” she thought.

4

When Rem regained consciousness, her feet weren’t touching the ground.

A sturdy arm was wrapped around her stomach; someone was carrying her. The rough, clumsy handling suggested no regard for touching a woman. It was true: the arm’s owner was desperately focused on running, with not an ounce of room left to pay attention to anything else.

“—Barusu, to the right of the broken tree ahead! You’re too slow!”

“Don’t be unreasonable…! Haah, I’m already at full, sprint… dammit!”

A familiar voice and a voice that had grown familiar were shouting at each other nearby. Violently jolted up and down, Rem shook her head, trying to clear her hazy mind. Then, her lips trembling, she said,

“…Subaru. What are you…?”

“—! Rem, you’re awake!”

Subaru’s face looked down at her, a cry of joy escaping him as he ran. With vacant eyes, Rem looked up at him, her throat constricting at how terrible his condition was.

His forehead seemed to have split open, blood dripping down, vertically streaking his face with crimson. All over his body, white scars from last night remained, and numerous new wounds bled on top of them. This was the result of pushing himself recklessly, already in a state of exhaustion.

“…Goodness, Rem. You truly are a troublesome child.”

Ram, her pink hair swaying, smiled faintly as she ran alongside them. She curved her lips just slightly, enough for only those who knew her well to recognize it as a smile, and gently stroked Rem’s blue hair with an outstretched hand. Immediately after,

“Fula!”

A wind blade spell was cast, and the swirling wind blades sliced through the forest—sectioning the body of a magical beast that stood in their path, turning its lunging form into fertilizer.

Suddenly, as if struck by dizziness, Ram stumbled, lightly colliding with Subaru.

“—Ow, ow, ow! Ram, you—hey… you know my right shoulder is dislocated, right…!”

“…Quiet. If Ram didn’t push herself, the curse would’ve simply layered on. Enjoy being a wall to lean on for a little while.”

“At least the other shoulder… Ow, ow, ow, ow, ow!!”

Subaru screamed, half-crying in agony. Ram, her body leaning against his, bled from the “trace of her lost horn.”

Watching them, Rem suddenly grasped the current situation. Why she was in such a place, and why she was being carried by the two of them. It was—

“Why…?”

“Huh?”

“Why didn’t you just leave Rem alone?”

The question tumbled from her lips as she was jostled. Subaru looked down at her with a dubious expression, and Rem’s lips trembled continuously.

“It’s meaningless if Sister and Subaru came. Rem… Rem has to do it alone… It’s enough for only Rem to get hurt…”

“Well, it’s too late for that, me and Ram are already ragged! We might be in worse shape than you!”

Subaru roared, stating it as a fact, not an exaggeration. Ram, perhaps lost in thought, did not participate in the conversation. Rem felt as though her sister's attitude had pushed her away, and she desperately clung to her, uttering broken words.

"It's Rem's… it's Rem's fault. Rem hesitated last night… so Rem has to take responsibility… Otherwise, Rem will be like this to Sister, to Subaru…"

"I'm really struggling right now, can you try to sum things up nicely?! Being distracted, I'm seriously getting chomped all over again like last night's replay…"

"Subaru wouldn't have been bitten—"

Even to Subaru, who wasn't in a state to listen, her voice seemed to have reached him clearly. His face stiffened, and as he looked at her, Rem confessed her sin.

During the back-and-forth battle in the forest last night, Rem had unleashed the "Oni" within her and confronted the witchbeasts. Her consciousness at that time was a coexistence of the part that surrendered to her "Oni" instincts and the half that maintained her own awareness. Her injuries were severe, but if she completely entrusted herself to instinct, withdrawal would become difficult. It was a limited use of "Demonfication" based on that judgment. However, it exposed her immature combat skills and, moreover, forced Subaru, whom she was supposed to protect, to throw himself into harm's way.

However, what Rem truly needed to apologize for was not creating that situation.

At the moment Subaru shielded Rem and his entire body was devoured by the witchbeast's fangs—Rem, in truth, could have protected Subaru.

Even though he was pushed away, the physical strength of "Demonfied" Rem and Subaru's own were not even comparable. The impact of merely stumbling forward slightly had not even shifted him from a position within arm's reach if she had turned around and extended her arm. Yet, Rem hesitated to reach out, inflicting a near-fatal injury on Subaru. It was all because of the strong scent emanating from his body, the scent of the day everything was burned to ashes.

"It's because Rem hesitated to reach out to Subaru, Subaru almost died, and he took on too many curses. That's why—"

"So, you were planning to take care of it all by yourself as atonement?"

At Rem's confession, Subaru nodded in understanding, albeit with ragged breaths. Affirming his understanding, Rem also lowered her chin, gazing at her own sin.

She was prepared to be cursed and despised. Words that should have been hurled at her by him before she even entered the forest. Was she postponing it because she felt she had to save him as quickly as possible, or was it because she wasn't prepared to face her own weakness? Rem thought, self-deprecatingly, that it was surely the latter.

"Rem."

"Yes."

Called by name, she looked up, bracing herself. No matter how harsh the words thrown at her, she had to accept them meekly. This was the sin she had committed, and the punishment she deserved.

To her, he said,

"Stupid."

"—?!"

There was a dull thud, the sound of bone hitting bone, and sparks flew in Rem's vision. A sharp pain made her vision flicker for a moment, and Rem, bewildered, pressed her forehead. Her current body, not "Demonfied," was not much different in strength from a human's. The forehead she had hit was slightly swollen and would likely be red on the outside. Looking down at Rem, who was blinking in confusion at this incomprehensible situation, he said,

“First of all, are you an idiot? No, you are an idiot.”

“Barusu. Your split forehead is bleeding again.”

“I’m an idiot too, I know that! But your sister is an even bigger idiot!”

Saying that to Ram, who interjected, Subaru shook his bleeding head. Seeing this, Rem realized that Subaru had headbutted her. She didn’t understand.

“You’re an idiot in many ways, but there are three particularly idiotic things about you. Do you know what they are?”

“What are you saying…?”

“First, you idiot! You’re saying you couldn’t save me!”

Spitting as he interrupted Rem, Subaru lifted the still-held Rem, brought his face close to hers, and, his black eyes wide at breathing distance, said,

“Open your eyes wide and look carefully. Can you see how vigorously manly I am? I’ve got a few white scars here and there, but scars are a man’s badges of honor, so no problem. Therefore, your sense of guilt is wrong to begin with, you idiot!”

“But… that’s why, if Rem hadn’t hesitated, if she had just reached out immediately, you wouldn’t have gotten those injuries…”

“Alright, don’t talk in ‘if only’s! And the second idiotic thing! You tried to shoulder everything and do it all by yourself!”

Forcibly silenced, she had no choice but to meekly accept Subaru’s rant. She looked at her sister for help, but Ram showed no movement, seemingly intending to observe the situation. Subaru moved his face in the direction of Rem’s face and, sticking out his tongue, said,

“Listen, in my hometown, there’s a saying, ‘Three women together make a noisy crowd.' That's irrelevant, but there's also 'Three heads are better than one'."

As he said this, Subaru muttered softly, "What's Monju…?" and tilted his head before dismissively saying, "Ah, never mind!"

"Anyway, it's like a story about how arrows are harder to break when there are three of them rather than one person thinking alone."

"I imagine that's not its original meaning, though…"

"ANYWAY! Don't think alone; rely on those around you! You're not mute, are you? It's not like someone's got your heart in their—"

He stopped mid-sentence, his expression suddenly turning bitter. Naturally bending forward, Subaru struggled to catch his breath, saying,

"To say no to that… isn't that a harsh judgment?"

"What are you talking about…? No, Subaru. Suddenly, the witch's… scent is strong…"

Pinching her nose, Rem squirmed at the dreadful sensation her sense of smell detected. Right nearby, right next to them, the disgusting stench—the lingering scent that had caused her to hesitate reaching out—was heavily concentrated. Why had it suddenly appeared—

"Well, about that, just change your mindset. I will too."

However, Rem's question was dismissed by Subaru's nonchalant remark. Astounded, Rem looked at Subaru with her mouth agape. No emotion beyond his words was visible on his profile, conveying that he was truly postponing the issue.

"And now for the third idiotic thing… Dammit, no time!"

Subaru looked ahead as he ran, his gaze narrowed in intense tension. At the same time, Ram, running beside him, also began to unleash mana, pressing a hand to her aching head.

"Ram, the direction of the village… no, at this point, the barrier is fine. Which way should we run to get through?"

"If we just get past the group in front, then it's a full sprint to the left, but what are you planning?"

Subaru let out a long groan in response to Ram's question.

"How about a scenario where I push Rem to you, and I heartlessly flee alone beyond the barrier—?"

"So you'll be a decoy, attracting the Ulgarms with the witch's scent, while Rem and I escape. Understood."

"Don't expose my tsundere so easily, please?!"

Subaru and Ram exchanged these words without slowing their pace. Hearing their conversation, Rem uttered in despair, "That's…"

"There's no way we'll be saved. …Stop, please stop. If you do that, then what was Rem for…?"

"One more idiot point, Rem-rin. This is the best plan for everyone to survive, you know? If we can somehow meet up after getting through the barrier, I've got a brilliant idea to hunt down all the Ulgarms using a method Rem-rin doesn't know about. With that approach, it's a grand finale, an easy win, right?"

Rem didn't know what kind of brilliant idea Subaru had in mind. Honestly, she even suspected it might just be a temporary improvisation, its existence doubtful. Because even before that, Subaru escaping the encirclement alone seemed like an impossible feat to Rem.

"You don't have to do that… Rem can just scatter those witchbeasts…"

Determined not to let such recklessness happen, Rem tensed her entire body. But her limp limbs obeyed none of her will. Her fighting spirit didn't transmit, and she couldn't find any part of her body that would listen to her.

Her fingertips trembled. Her facial muscles were barely able to move. Her familiar weapon was nowhere to be found in her hands, and she asked,

“Rem’s… weapon…?”

“I dropped that heavy thing! You can’t expect a student with a dislocated arm to carry you and that, really!”

With the explicit declaration that she had no weapon, Rem finally knew despair. Rem was then helplessly passed to her sister, slowly,

“Don’t drop her.”

“I intend to have more strength than Barusu with one arm.”

“Then why was I carrying Rem?!”

“Because Barusu insisted on carrying her himself, wouldn’t he?”

“Seriously, a genuine comeback!”

Subaru covered his face with his palm, trying to retract his statement. Rem looked up at Subaru, gazing at him as if seeing something unbelievable. Even though she had just admitted to despising him so much, why would he go so far?

“Subaru, why would you…?”

“—Right.”

Subaru closed his eyes for a moment in response to her question, then held up a finger and smiled,

“You’re the partner for my first ever date. I can’t be so heartless as to abandon you.”

Saying that, he gently stroked Rem’s hair with the hand that had held up his finger.

“Well then, I’m off to give it a shot. —I’m counting on you with Rem, Big sis.”

“Barusu, I pray you can rejoin us safely.”

Leaving such a brief exchange behind, Subaru and Ram’s running directions rapidly diverged.

Four days and another four days weren’t enough to hope for much more improvement.

Ram to the right, Subaru to the left. The group in front hesitated for a fleeting moment, uncertain which scattered prey to pursue—and immediately, they chased Subaru to the left.

“—Sister!”

“This is time Barusu bought with his life. Let’s make good use of it.”

For her sister, who had lost her demon power, the physical strength to support Rem’s body could only be her body’s natural strength. Therefore, her running speed was never fast.

Feeling this, Rem bit her lip, ashamed of her own helplessness.

If only she could “Demonfy,” she could easily protect Subaru, or carry her sister instead and run. She could do everything. Yet, at the crucial moment, the “Demon” within her wouldn’t even show its face.

Ram’s priority in this situation was definitively “Rem > Subaru.” So when Subaru proposed sacrificing himself as a decoy, if she judged that it would even slightly increase their survival rate, she could decide without hesitation.

While respecting her sister’s decisiveness, Rem couldn’t help but plead through her tears. Why wouldn’t she challenge them more boldly? Why wouldn’t she show her something more incredible?

With such unreasonableness, as if entrusting her complete trust from her childhood, Rem sobbed,

“Subaru… Subaru…!”

“Don’t look back, Rem. It will leave a scar.”

Words from her respected sister. Words from her sister, who was always right. If she followed them, her heart would surely be protected. Because her sister was always right.

—If so, then what was the value of being right?

"—Sister!!"

"—!!"

A shock ran through Ram's expression at the scream that came from her heart. Ram's feet stopped, her lips pressed together, her eyes wide open. Twisting her body instinctively, Rem escaped from her sister's arms, fell to the ground, rolled, and looked back.

Far away, a sprint too slow to be called a sprint. Black hair, tattered clothes, a limp, powerless right arm swinging, and Subaru's face, a contortion of various emotions swallowed whole.

In front of him stood a Ulgarm, forming a wall with its massive body. That body, conspicuously larger than others of its kind, might perhaps be the alpha of the pack.

With such a being in front, and surrounded by countless witchbeasts behind and to his sides, Subaru continued to run fiercely. His hand couldn't reach his back. Even if she extended her fingers, even if her heart trembled, she couldn't reach him.

Yet, Rem simply screamed, as if to make it reach him. Wishing and praying that the fingertips that couldn't reach that night, the feelings that couldn't reach that night, would reach him this time.

"—Subaru!!"

She didn't know if her voice reached him.

Only, as if responding to that voice—she barely saw Subaru, running, draw a dull gleaming sword with his left hand.

The roar of the witchbeasts shook the forest. And, as if to drown it out, Subaru's throat also let out a mighty roar.

Chapter 48:
All In

1

The moment they exchanged harsh words and went their separate ways, Subaru's bravado crumbled.

He couldn't understand himself.

He'd spent countless hours on self-analysis during his free time, meticulously examining his own character. If he looked back at the results of those diagnoses, he should have known what kind of insignificant person he was, and what choices he'd make in a situation like this.

Yet, he couldn't comprehend why he was running now.

When did he become such an idiot, such a stubborn man?

To endure agonizing pain and force a smile just to avoid making those sisters feel indebted to him—that was completely unlike him.

The sound of their footsteps told him they had turned their backs and put distance between them. At that instant, Subaru's composure shattered.

Both sharp and dull, extreme pains assailed him relentlessly. He contorted his face, baring his teeth and sticking out his tongue, crying,

"It hurts, it hurts so much! It hurts, Mom, Dad, Emilia-tan…!"

He called out the names of the three most important people in his life, then glanced sideways at his dangling right arm.

The pain had been intermittently throbbing for a while now. He couldn't put any strength into it, yet every time it swayed, a jolt like an electrode to the brain shot through him. He wanted to believe it was just a dislocated shoulder.

It was an injury sustained after striking Rem's horn, a consequence of a botched landing. He was lucky the landing spot was soft earth, and even luckier he instinctively fell onto his right side. He should consider himself fortunate that it was just this.

If he had landed poorly, he could have fallen on his head and had it cracked open.

He was spinning vertically, yet he always seemed to land headfirst. He was incredibly curious what his luck stat looked like.

"This phenomenon of always landing on my head when falling from a height—I'll call it 'True Murphy's Law,' out of respect for Murphy's Law."

So, it was the unseen Mr. Murphy's fault that Subaru always landed on his head.

Thinking such foolish thoughts like, "Damn you, Murphy," seemed to distract him from the pain. It would be perfect if it also made the fear of the obstacle in front of him disappear.

Before him, blocking Subaru's path as he ran, was the dog-like witchbeast—he'd lost count of how many times they'd met; it was too bothersome to tally.

Its persistence went beyond being unrepentant; it was so tenacious it made him wonder if it held a grudge against Subaru.

"I wish this would be the last time we meet…"

As he ran, Subaru braced himself for the mudslide the witchbeast would likely unleash.

He shook his head to clear away the unpleasant thoughts, simulating his footing on the animal trail and the movements to dodge sideways. The moment the mudslide started, he would sprint sideways without hesitation.

"Bring it on," he muttered, half-recklessly, turning back towards the Ulgarm.

"Huh?"

A foolish, airy sound escaped him involuntarily.

For good reason, a sight that made Subaru doubt his own eyes unfolded before him.

The puppy witchbeast growled softly, its small body contracting even further. It was as if it was coiling all its power. Subaru narrowed his eyes, wondering what it would do next, when,

"—!"

The furball rapidly swelled with explosive force.

The house pet, originally small enough to fit in his hands, transformed in the blink of an eye into a size that could only be described as "ultra-super-sized" dog head. His mouth hung open.

"This is a common trope in manga, but where does all that extra mass come from?"

The answer to his question was a roar that shook the forest.

It pushed off the ground with explosive force, supporting its body as it levitated on two hind legs. Then, the Ulgarm clacked its two free front claws together, displaying talons that looked like they could strip bone with a single swipe.

It seemed that its repeated evasion of his magic's fatal blows had gotten on its nerves, and the beast's chosen final confrontation with Subaru was to tear out his throat directly.

But,

"I have no reason to go along with that!"

If his memory served him right, that puppy—the former puppy's—fangs shouldn't have been able to reach Subaru's body. In other words, there was no reason for the beast to risk getting cursed.

With that, he immediately changed his path, shifting to avoid contact with it. But then,

"—Ugh."

Subaru tried to break away from the front line by veering sideways. Blocking his escape route, a shadowy witchbeast with bared fangs pursued him, running alongside.

He instinctively looked in the opposite direction, but there were multiple identical shadows there as well. And from behind, he could hear the relentless, innumerable footsteps treading on grass.

"Are you all head over heels for my pheromones, you damn bastards—damn it!"

His role as a decoy was perfect. For the first time since being summoned to this other world, Subaru had found a true calling, one only he could fulfill. It was an honorable position he'd spit on and immediately give up, though.

Once he realized it, an aura so overwhelming it almost made his legs falter surrounded him. It seemed all the Ulgarm in the forest had gathered here at once.

The thought that the sole objective of all these witchbeasts was to rip out Subaru's throat made his heart tremble.

Oh, truly, honestly.

"You're after me instead of the beautiful sisters? Your taste is demonic, you guys."

"Why must Betty apologize, I suppose? First, if I don't correct that, I can't leave, in fact."

He was too terrified and trembling to even piss himself.

His escape routes blocked, the surrounding horde of witchbeasts silently forced Subaru to run straight ahead. That meant a one-on-one battle with that massive witchbeast.

In front of him, the Ulgarm's ferocious expression twisted into a malevolent grin.

Subaru resignedly concluded that a one-on-one fight, with the implicit understanding of being ganged up on later, was unavoidable.

—The moment he reached that conclusion, Subaru decided to play his trump card.

He reached into his pocket, fumbling around. The feel of a stone. The texture of crushed sweets.

The unpleasant stickiness of some fabric. And then,

“All that’s left is to trust Puck…!”

He pulled out what he had, tossed it into his mouth, and offered a desperate prayer to the small gray cat.

He held the round object in his mouth with his molars, then opened his eyes wide and looked ahead.

The distance between Subaru and the witchbeast was almost gone.

In less than ten seconds, they would be within striking distance of each other.

That’s when it happened.

“—Subaru!!”

He heard it.

A voice call his name just now.

The voice was terribly sorrowful, filled with an unavoidable sense of despair, as weak as if witnessing the end of the world, and he knew how much she cared about his life and death—he couldn’t help but feel a misguided sense of happiness.

He was truly awful. A pervert. A turncoat.

He wasn’t incapable of imagining how the girl who screamed his name felt right now, yet he could still laugh, which meant he was completely insane.

He acknowledged his abnormal thoughts and laughed, and then, his smile vanished.

With his left hand, he gripped the sword at his hip—a broken one-handed sword—and held it in a low guard.

The witchbeast's roar came from directly ahead.

As if to chase it away, Subaru roared back, refusing to be outdone.

His voice cracked, and an unpleasant scream rose. One filled with fighting spirit. They glared at each other, clashing soul to soul.

Just moments before contact, Subaru took a deep breath.

He imagined the very center of his body.

Between his chest and waist, in a region like the “tanden,” he focused on a “gate” connecting the inside and outside, and shouted.

“—Shamak!!”

Immediately after, a black cloud erupted as if exploding around Subaru.

With Subaru at its center, it swallowed all the witchbeasts surrounding him, plunging the decisive battle in the forest into darkness.

2

The black mist veiled a world of incomprehension.

Within it, the shape, color, and even scent of the world were utterly indiscernible.

Only the soles of his feet—where they met the ground—conveyed a firm, undeniable sensation.

Without it, he surely would have lost all sense of up and down in that darkness.

Seeing nothing. Hearing nothing. Understanding nothing.

It was as if the world had ended.

Subaru’s mind, aware that the only tangible thing was the sensation from the soles of his shoes, was desperately engaged in one task:

Remembering.

He needed to somehow reclaim the contents of his mind, which had been completely snatched away by the black mist, and execute whatever it was he had to do.

His foot lifted from the ground to step forward, and for an instant, he lost everything.

Then, understanding returned as his other foot pressed against the ground. Truth existed only in the soles of his shoes. However, he no longer knew if he was truly moving forward.

Amidst the incomprehension, clinging to the only tangible sensation, Subaru's brain fought against the desire for comfort, demanding that he struggle.

He had to retrieve something that was lost. If he didn't, something irreversible would surely happen.

Again, his foot lifted, and incomprehension descended. His other foot bit the ground, and understanding returned. But this time, it felt somehow unreliable, loose.

Something, something, something, something was missing.

Remember, remember the world of understanding before this world of incomprehension.

What happened and how? Who did what to cause this?

For what purpose, for whom, and how could he break free? Hadn't he prepared the conditions for that?

Remember, remember, remember—

As his brain commanded, sparks of thought began to fly.

They refused to connect. He just couldn't grasp it. Just one more step, something was missing.

One step, but the next foot wouldn't come. His feet had stopped. The reason they stopped? He could feel only a terribly weak, feeble power in his legs.

Why, how, had he not anticipated this?

If so, he must have prepared a means. Remember it, execute it.

If the outside of his body wouldn't work, then question what was within. Even if the outside, enveloped in incomprehension, was impossible, he had to call upon all his internal organs, which constantly worked with his unconscious mind.

Fulfill your role, move, all movable parts, fulfill it, and finally—

"—!!"

Suddenly, a burning sensation surged within his body.

A frantic passion raged through him, and an inarticulate, beast-like roar escaped Subaru's throat.

Or rather, he thought it did. He wasn't even sure.

He didn't know. He didn't know, but his feet had begun to move.

His feet had regained the strength to move again. He moved forward. He stepped in the direction he thought was forward.

Understanding, incomprehension, understanding, incomprehension, understanding, incomprehension—this cycle came and went, vanishing and returning, vanishing and returning—and then.

3

The moment he burst through the black mist and sprang out, Subaru felt an incredible impact.

The sword he gripped in his hand was nearly ripped from his grasp.

He quickly scanned his surroundings, and seeing the result of that impact, Subaru stifled a gasp of astonishment.

Deep within the black mist, the massive witchbeast, still with its head plunged inside, had Subaru's one-handed sword deeply impaled in its torso.

This unexpected strike sent a sensation through Subaru's hand unlike anything he had ever felt.

It was the feeling of a dull blade sinking into the living flesh of an animal. This brought a mental shock to Subaru that was far greater than he had imagined.

Until now, Subaru had faced many witchbeasts and, as a result, taken lives twice. Once by accident, and a second time intentionally. However, this was the first time he had used a method that left such a distinct sensation in his hand.

It filled Subaru with an unsettling discomfort, completely out of place in this moment. The feeling of killing a warm, living creature.

The witchbeast, still in its world of incomprehension, couldn't perceive the death that was coming for it.

He saw that the black cloud Subaru had rushed through spanned an enormous area, and not a single witchbeast shadow emerged from it.

Unlike Subaru, they had no mental preparation whatsoever for this.

Once submerged in the world of incomprehension, how could anyone laugh at the cowardice of stopping due to its unreliability?

Stumbling, Subaru slowly began to run, aiming to put some distance between them while he still could.

His head felt heavy, and his whole body was sluggish. This was the result of the debt incurred by Subaru's incomplete gate activation and excessive mana discharge during his magic use, as Puck had pointed out.

The execution of a magic spell that should have normally caused him to expel all the mana in his body and collapse, unable to stand—Subaru had broken through that by using his trump card.

"…I'll give you kids some credit."

He spat out the small bit of fruit peel remaining in his mouth, muttering softly.

The fruit he'd spat out—it was the third time Subaru had tasted this particular kind of fruit.

A Bokko Fruit. A doping item that vitalizes mana within the body and briefly restores strength to an exhausted physique.

It was among the useless items the children had given Subaru when he went to rescue Rem, somehow gathered from who knew where.

From the moment he confirmed its existence, this plan had been vaguely in his mind.

He thought that if he bit into the fruit the instant he cast the spell, he might be able to keep moving.

It was a gamble with his life as the stake, but which way the scales had tipped was proven by the fact that Subaru was still alive in this situation.

He headed in the direction where Ram had explicitly stated there was a barrier.

He didn't know how long Subaru's Shamak, incomplete and lacking mana, would last.

He couldn't buy any more time. He just needed to get to the barrier, even a little bit.

"—Huh?"

However Subaru's plan was—

"You…!"

—immediately thwarted by a claw strike that suddenly grazed his right side.

A sharp pain signaled bleeding, and Subaru groaned in agony, his knees buckling. The enemy that had done this wouldn't allow Subaru to kneel.

It extended a thick arm, deftly moving its arm with blade-like claws, and effortlessly lifted Subaru's body.

"Goddammit!"

A gaping maw suddenly opened before him, and blood-soaked fangs along with foul breath assailed his face.

Subaru, with a desperate, half-hearted laugh, marvelled at the colossal witchbeast's delusion.

"You're the one who's gonna die—!"

He forcefully pulled out the sword impaled in its torso and slammed it with all his might into its open mouth.

"—!!"

With the fatal blow delivered inside its mouth, the witchbeast flung Subaru's body away.

At that moment, Subaru, who hadn't let go of the sword, further ravaged the inside of its mouth with the blade. After tearing it to shreds, he was thrown to the ground, rolling, and then crouched forward, ready.

"Haha! What's wrong, huh?! Come on, you piece of trash!!"

"—!! —!"

The witchbeast shook its head wildly, turning a frenzied, enraged face towards him.

Facing it, Subaru also shook his blood-soaked body, raising his broken-bladed sword forward again and shouting vulgar taunts.

Blood rushed to their heads; they saw only each other.

Their plans had been crushed repeatedly, and Subaru had long lost his composure. At this point, he couldn't move forward without taking care of this pest.

It was the same for the beast. It too couldn't process the hideous emotions festering inside it without killing Subaru.

Both entered battle readiness, and with a single trigger, the hostilities would begin.

This confrontation between one person and one—no, two—beasts, on the verge of exploding, was—

"—El Goa."

—interrupted forever by a direct hit from a fireball raining down from the sky.

"Uwoah?!"

Subaru's body was blown backward, his face covered, engulfed by the impact.

Suddenly, the ground in front of him exploded. The impact was accompanied by intense heat, adding burn damage to his already wounded, pain-ridden body.

Cuts, bite marks, abrasions, bruises, burns, and emotional wounds—he was completely battered.

"What in the world…"

Shaking his head on the ground where he'd rolled, Subaru groaned in pain and looked up.

Seeing the sight before him, he was astonished again—he didn't know how many times it was today.

In front of Subaru, the massive witchbeast's body was ablaze.

Its black fur completely engulfed in flames, the Ulgarm writhed in agony, shaking its entire body.

The more it struggled, the more it screamed, the more the flames intensified, and eventually, the colossal body fell to the earth with a heavy thud.

It still writhed and groaned in pain for a while, but that too gradually subsided, until finally, only a blackened lump of flesh remained.

The unexpected end of the witchbeast wasn't the only thing that surprised Subaru.

The fireballs that incinerated the Ulgarm—they weren't a one-time occurrence. They continued to rain down from the sky, one after another, striking into the black mist.

The spreading darkness; it was impossible to see from the outside what power the flames unleashed upon impact within it.

But he could imagine the outcome.

Within that persistent darkness, the horde of witchbeasts, still submerged in incomprehension, was trapped.

They would die without even perceiving the falling flames, without realizing their bodies were burning, without even knowing their lives had been lost.

Whether it was an act of mercy or mercilessness, Subaru no longer knew.

However, he did know—

"No, no, but reeeeally, what a brilliant ideaaaa. To deliberately use Shamak, which is normally meant for blinding, as a beacon."

The person who brought about this situation, which was neither a comedy nor a tragedy, certainly appeared, chuckling idly.

His long indigo hair swayed in the wind, and his odd eyes were mismatched blue and yellow. His lanky, tall frame was encased in his familiar, eccentric attire, and he gracefully descended into the witchbeast forest.

The master of the mansion. The Margrave. The useless one who was never there when he was needed—Roswaal had arrived.

He brushed off the hem of his robe where his feet landed, then let his long hair fall behind him, and looked down at Subaru.

"Ahaha. You're quuuite the meeeess."

"You're unbelievably late, Roz-chi. How many times do you think I prepared to die?"

Probably more than he could count on one hand.

Subaru felt a slight dip in his mood as he recalled, but then, overcome with relief, he unconsciously sank to the ground.

"Still, how did you know that was me?"

"Lady Emilia had lectured me thoroooughly back in the villaaaage. 'Even if it's reckless or foolhardy, if he's pushed to the brink, he'll surely use magic, so don't miss him if you see him flying in the sky,' sheee said."

"Beatrice… she just spilled the beans to Emilia-tan so easily."

It seemed she wasn't quite up to the task of cleverly deceiving Emilia.

Considering Roswaal's miraculous intervention, perhaps it was all for the best in the end.

As Subaru was reflecting on the situation,

"Lord Roswaal—!"

Ram appeared, shaking the bushes as she circumvented the black mist. When she noticed Roswaal, the cool composure she had maintained instantly melted away. She was helping Rem stand, supporting her shoulder.

"I apologize for the trouble I've caused you."

"Oh, no, not at aaall. This happened on my territory, after aaall. It's my duty to resolve it. In fact, you've done quite well."

Ram blushed at the words of praise, pressing a hand to her chest as she solemnly nodded.

Subaru sighed deeply, watching their exchange from the corner of his eye.

"—Subaru!"

Suddenly, he let out a squeak as Rem lunged and hugged him.

Right in front of him, blue hair swayed next to his face. He judged it to be a hug from extremely close quarters—normally a welcome benefit, but—

"Rem, right now, my body, all over… ah, my consciousness…"

Perhaps she couldn't control her emotions, but her embrace was filled with all her strength.

His injured body screamed in pain, and Subaru desperately slapped Rem's back with his free left hand to signal his agony.

But,

"You're alive. You're alive for me. Subaru, Subaru."

Overwhelmed with emotion, Rem didn't notice Subaru's reaction.

She pressed her face into his chest, and he felt warm drops slowly dampen his shirt. A mix of ticklishness and various emotions surged, overwhelming Subaru's brain's processing capacity.

In short,

"This pattern, again…"

As he spoke, Subaru couldn't support his own neck and his head lolled forward.

His consciousness drifted away. Voices faded. Finally,

"You should sleep now. When you wake up, I shall express my gratitude for what you have dooone. At the very least, I promise to eliminate anything that threatens you."

Such a serious voice, stripped of its usual clownishness, vibrated in his eardrums.

Feeling a definite sense of relief from that, Subaru slowly let go of his consciousness.

Until the very last moment before falling asleep, he felt the warm sensation of being embraced, savoring the relief he had finally managed to grasp.

Subaru’s consciousness sank into the wellspring of unconsciousness.

Chapter 49:
Story of the Future

1

Subaru's consciousness was once again drawn into a world shrouded in black mist.

It was a world dominated by nothing but absolute, jet-black "nothingness."

Only his consciousness drifted through the void, and Subaru vaguely recognized his own existence.

No one was there. Nothing was there. Nothing happened.

A world without beginning or end, where only idleness existed.

Subaru's consciousness surrendered to a vast, boundless sensation, as if cast into a night sea, abandoning even thought as it sank into the waves of inertia.

Then, suddenly, a change occurred in that world of darkness.

Someone stood directly in front of Subaru, who was nothing but consciousness.

A shadow stretched vertically from what seemed to be the ground, taking on a humanoid form and revealing its presence.

Its face was unseen. Its form was indistinct. Yet, he vaguely thought it was the shadow of a woman.

The shadow wavered, slowly extending a hand towards him.

It was a distance where he could surely touch it if he reached out a finger. At that moment, Subaru, whose existence had until then been purely consciousness, realized he now had fingers to respond to the outstretched ones.

In a world that should have been empty, a world where only consciousness drifted, a physical body mirroring that consciousness had appeared. Though, on his side, only a right arm and a half-formed left hand had materialized.

His consciousness hesitated, looking at the fingers reaching out before him.

The fingers approached with a gentle gesture, as if cherishing him, and for some reason, he felt an uncontrollable urge to cry.

It was a mysterious sentiment, as if he had been waiting for this very touch for a long time.

The shadow stirred further, and he instinctively tried to overlap his fingers with its hand—but stopped. No, he was stopped.

A white hand, reaching from behind, enveloped Subaru's hand as he tried to extend it.

It was a soft, almost hot sensation.

He wanted to turn around and see the owner of that palm. However, unlike his arm, his vision did not obey his will, and he simply couldn't turn around.

His movements were restrained as if forbidden, and gradually the grip of the touching palm tightened, pulling Subaru's consciousness backward.

This meant separation from the shadow before him.

The outstretched fingers moved enticingly, as if pleading, as if clinging, inviting Subaru.

In contrast to his gripped right hand, he tried to touch those fingers with his free left hand, but his left hand, only half-existent, fruitlessly clawed at the darkness, unable to reach.

His heart trembled. His emotions screamed. —But there was no mouth to give them sound.

Fading, fading, disappearing, the shadow.

It extended a final finger towards a tearful Subaru,

“—love you.”

The last unheard words, even they became indistinct, and the world vanished.

2

The first thing Subaru saw when he woke up was that familiar, lavish ceiling.

In a mansion where aristocratic tastes ran rampant, even the servants’ private rooms bordered on excessive ornamentation. When it came to a guest room, intended to entertain visitors, it was almost a given that the design would be overly elaborate, serving to showcase the master’s authority and more.

Regardless of such facts, Subaru, a commoner, clearly felt out of place.

Utilizing the shorter-than-average time it took him to fully awaken, Subaru vaguely pondered such thoughts.

Then,

“—Have you woken up?”

Exactly five seconds after he opened his eyes, as Subaru’s consciousness fully awakened, a voice addressed him.

The voice came from right beside the bed, very close. Subaru tilted his head on the abnormally soft pillow and looked over,

“…Guten Morgen, Rem.”

“Guh…? Is that a greeting from Subaru’s homeland?”

“Nah, by this world’s standards, it’s more like a regional dialect, and I only know ‘Danke’ besides that. ‘Buono’ wasn’t it, right?”

Suddenly, he worried if there were different languages based on country differences in this world.

Currently, the form of Subaru's linguistic communication hadn't been sufficiently verified, so this issue would need to be handled with extreme caution.

Anyway,

"Having a maid right beside you the moment you wake up, in a way, that's every man's dream, isn't it?"

"…Given Rem's recent blunder, Rem can't atone for it with something like this."

"Ah, you're about to get negative, so let's not go there. More im—por—tant—ly!"

Sitting up and shaking his head with each syllable, Subaru slowly lifted his right hand from under the covers. His hand was firmly intertwined with the blue-haired girl's,

"Did I do this? Like, I grabbed on and wouldn't let go…? If so, that's pretty embarrassing. Like when I was a kid and wouldn't let go of my favorite towel."

"No, well, this is… um…"

In response to Subaru's question, Rem nervously moved her hand, still clasped in his, then she blushed ever so slightly and looked down,

"It was from Rem's side."

"What's wrong? Just so you know, even though I look like this, I sweat a lot in my sleep, okay? Especially my hands and around my hips. Heat rash in the summer is a serious problem."

"Subaru was…"

"Hm?"

Looking intermittently at their clasped hands, Rem mumbled incoherently. Subaru, feeling calm, waited for her answer without rushing her.

With Subaru in such a posture, Rem took a few breaths, then looked up at him,

“You seemed to be suffering… in your sleep, so I… held your hand.”

“You held my hand?”

“Rem is ignorant, untalented, and full of flaws. So, Rem don’t know what to do in times like these. Rem didn’t know, Rem wanted to do the thing that made Rem happiest.”

Perhaps it connected to an embarrassing memory, her broken words were clumsy.

Yet, seeing Rem, who had revealed her feelings, Subaru looked down at their clasped hands and a faint smile touched his lips.

Subaru, who had been trembling like a child, as if from a bad dream. Faced with such a Subaru, she chose this gentle method.

Perhaps she, too, had once had her hand held like this by someone on a night when she felt like crying. The fact that she did that for Subaru somehow made him feel ticklish and happy.

“That aside, you sure do put yourself down a lot, Rem-rin. That’s not good. It’s a negative spiral; easy to fall into, but hard to get out of.”

“Perhaps so. In Rem’s case, she has already lost sight of the exit.”

A weak smile. He subtly disliked it.

Though Subaru felt a simmering emotion within him,

“…Anyway, not an epilogue, but I’d like to hear the full story of what happened.”

“Yes. How much do you remember, Subaru?”

“Up to where Roz-chi descended, spewing fire rain and completely hyped up, and then I passed out from Rem-rin’s excited bear hug, I guess.”

“…Then, it’s what happened after that.”

Haltingly, Rem recounted the subsequent events in a businesslike manner.

After Subaru lost consciousness, Roswaal undertook the extermination of the Ulgarms in the forest. Subaru, who emitted the lingering scent of the Witch even when unconscious, apparently served as live bait, effectively removing the option for the beasts lurking in the forest to remain hidden.

The packs hidden in Shamak’s darkness were wiped out by flames, and the remnants scattered throughout the forest were incinerated along with them.

“So, about my curse then?”

“There’s no worry of it activating due to the caster’s death. Lord Roswaal, Lady Beatrice, and the Great Spirit have all confirmed that the curse’s effect has already been lost.”

“Well, if you get a third opinion, I guess it’s safe…”

He couldn’t recall the specific part where the curse had been placed, so Subaru just rubbed his chest and let out a sigh of relief.

At least, the time bomb directly implanted in his body had been disarmed. It was suffocating just remembering how many times he had almost died because of it.

“Lord Roswaal also personally calmed the village’s confusion. The children are recovering well, and the village has mostly returned to normal now.”

“I see, I see. I bet, since their beloved big brother Subaru came back all bloody and beaten up, the kids must have been pretty sad, right?

Some of them probably even cried? Oh man, nothing for it, I guess."

"—Yes, that's right."

As she spoke, Rem slowly, meaningfully pulled back Subaru's blanket. Subaru instinctively tried to curl up, saying "Oh no," but his movement was immediately interrupted.

The cause was Subaru's clothes, which had been hidden under the blanket. It was the same kind of work clothes he'd been given on his first day at Roswaal Mansion when he was brought in injured. However, there was something odd about the lower part of the work clothes. It was…

"Completely covered in graffiti… like a cast for a broken bone!"

"By Lord Roswaal's kindness, the children who were invited to the mansion left their writings."

"Good grief, those kids…"

Subaru suppressed the urge to click his tongue and looked at the numerous scribbles. From his perspective, they were upside down, and the handwriting was messy, making them very difficult to read.

Fortunately, they were all letters Subaru could read, so he took his time and read everything.

"Good grief, those kids."

The same words as before. However, the emotion contained within them was subtly different.

With the bed pillow as his backrest, Subaru gazed toward the window, wishing the time would come when he could go to the village as soon as possible.

'Thank you for bringing Rem-rin back,' 'Thank you very much,' 'You're uncool, but cool,' 'You promised to do radio calisthenics again,' 'I love you.'

"Hmph, you fools. Of course, I love you guys more."

Subaru thought, ‘They say “love” so easily, their words are so light.’

He didn’t realize that those words would boomerang back to him.

Subaru grumbled, basking in what would surely be a warm gaze. Then, Rem suddenly composed herself, her lips trembling,

“Regarding your recovery, this time, Rem has something to tell about Subaru’s body.”

“Hm, ah, right. Curse aside, my body was pretty much in an emergency state otherwise.”

As he spoke, he belatedly noticed that the shoulder of his right arm, which Rem was holding, felt fine.”

Even when he put a little force into it, there was no discomfort or pain. It must mean he had been treated, and indeed, the healing magic in this world was truly versatile.

Subaru was thinking along those lines, but then,

“I’m sorry, Subaru.”

Before Subaru, who was making an optimistic assessment, Rem bent at the waist and bowed her head.

Subaru couldn’t think of a reason for her apology, so he waved his hand at her, saying, “Whoa, whoa,”

“Lift your head, Rem-rin. My body’s not bad at all, see? My dislocated shoulder is back in place, and no other parts of my body hurt either. I’m perfectly fine, perfectly fine.”

“That’s not true. It’s true that the visible injuries have been treated, and thankfully there’s no worry of lasting after-effects that would hinder daily life. But—”

She cut her words short, and a shadow of sorrow fell across Rem’s face, “Scars will remain. On your body, of course, and in your heart too.

De to repeated treatments, the mana in Subaru's body is almost depleted."

"Ah, that's why. I did feel a little tired, though… It's not a big deal. A man's scars are badges of honor, except for those on his back, and as for emotional scars, I'm pretty tough, you know?"

Pointing to himself with his thumb, Subaru smiled, trying to alleviate her guilt.

It was no lie. If Subaru's heart were weak and overly sensitive, he wouldn't have been able to greet the morning holding her hand like this.

If they were talking about emotional scars, Subaru had experienced enough that it wouldn't be strange for him to be unable to look Rem directly in the face.

Thinking that far, Subaru stared at Rem intently.

Short blue hair. Her well-defined features were more cute than beautiful. Her expressions, which he initially thought were unchanging, now shifted fluidly. He wasn't scared. Not at all. There was the her who had made Subaru loop countless times, and there was also the her who genuinely rejoiced at Subaru's return. He felt that everything depended on fate.

It was also true that there was a Rem who would go berserk thinking of Roswaal, a Rem who would jump to conclusions thinking of Subaru, and a Rem who would enter berserker mode, losing all rationality once she determined there was no risk of friendly fire—

"You seem calm, but Rem-rin, you're actually not calm and composed at all, are you?"

Her usual demeanor in the mansion, and her work as a senior maid guiding Subaru. Judging by those, Rem seemed like a very capable and calm person.

However, when situations deviated from her domain, she seemed to possess a tendency to suddenly rush off in a completely wrong direction.

Subaru himself couldn’t criticize her tendency for immediate decisions, but in her case, it was problematic because it was accompanied by actual force and the ability to wield it.

At Subaru’s remark, Rem paused for a moment, then looked down weakly.

With her face still lowered, she said,

“I know.”

She mumbled, and then continued to spill her thoughts, little by little, as if confessing.

“Rem is powerless, untalented, and a failure among the Oni. That’s why, no matter how fast Rem run, there are many times Rem can’t reach. So, for Rem to catch up to Sister, Rem can’t think of any other way than to run faster.”

Covering her face with her hand, Rem continued her confession, as if squeezing out the words.

“Sister would have done it better. Sister wouldn’t have stumbled here. Sister would surely never hesitate. Sister would definitely do it easily. Sister would absolutely never make a mistake. Sister, Sister, Sister—”

Cutting her words short, Rem looked at Subaru, her eyes holding a faint light.

What floated in her eyes were not tears. It was merely a void, a despair filled with resignation.

“Rem is… a substitute for Sister. A much, much inferior one, a failure who can never catch up to the real sister.”

—Suddenly, faint drops welled up in her eyes.

“Why did Rem keep her horn? Why didn’t Sister keep hers? Why did Sister only have one horn from birth? Why—why were Sister and Rem twins?”

As if seeking the meaning of her own existence, Rem’s lips trembled.

The drops accumulating in her eyes traced paths down her cheeks, leaving painful glimmers on her white skin.

Subaru fell silent. Rem, unable to bear the silence, hastily wiped away her tears and, her expression crumbling, forced a clumsy smile,

“Rem is sorry. She said something strange. Please forget it. This is the first time Rem ever talked about something like this to anyone, and it’s strange…”

“Hey, Rem.”

Rem spoke quickly, trying to dismiss her earlier words.

Interrupting her, Subaru called her name. Breaking the silence, what words would Subaru form?

Rem looked up, afraid of the answer, yet she raised her face.

To her, Subaru said,

“What’s the punchline?”

“—Huh?”

“I said, the punchline, the punchline. The crucial part that makes the whole room erupt in laughter. There must be something, you talked that much.”

Unsure of what Subaru was saying, Rem blinked in confusion,

“What in the world…”

“I’m saying it was such a laugh-free story. —Rem, let’s continue the conversation we paused. Remember?”

Rem’s eyes clouded at his question. Seeing her reaction, Subaru chuckled, “Can’t be helped, can it?” and raised his left hand, holding up one finger in front of Rem’s eyes.

“Alright, let’s recap. First, you’re an idiot for saying you couldn’t save me. Can you see me, perfectly fine right in front of you? I’ve got my feet firmly on the ground too.”

He wiggled his feet as an action. Rem seemed to have grasped the topic Subaru brought up, but she still shook her head weakly,

“That’s just hindsight…”

“People used to say, ‘All’s well that ends well.’ Honestly, if we scored along the way, I’d be in a worse state than you. That aside, the second idiot thing is trying to shoulder everything and do it all by yourself.”

Winking, Subaru held up a second finger,

“Well, I’m glad you went wild for my sake, but that depends on the time and situation, doesn’t it? More importantly, good solutions tend to appear if you talk things over, right?”

Regarding the beast hunt, it was self-evident that Subaru’s words had a point. Rem’s lips trembled as if she was ashamed of her impulsiveness, and she swallowed her objections.

However, this was a hindsight bias that could only be said after seeing the outcome—Rem, who was at her wit’s end, didn’t notice this, and Subaru secretly stuck out his tongue, apologizing for his teasing.

Then, Subaru leaned his face in under her bowed face.

He chuckled at her startled expression and held up the third finger on his left hand,

“Then, the third idiot thing you couldn’t say. No, the third one subtly came out back then, so it’s actually the fourth idiot thing. You’re full of idiocy.”

“Rem has done things that make it unavoidable to be called that.”

"Yes, that's it. That's the fourth idiot thing."

Subaru pointed a finger at Rem, who couldn't break free from her self-deprecating spiral. Then, fluttering the four fingers he held up,

"It's dwelling on the past and always looking backward—"

"…"

"Rem, you keep elevating Ram to death, saying 'If only I were like Sister, if only I were like Sister,' and putting yourself down… but I don't think Ram-chi in Rem-rin's position would have made the situation better, you know? She has less stamina than Rem-rin, she's bad at cooking, she slacks off work, she has a sharp tongue… maybe just a little more thoughtful?"

Recalling Ram's specs, Subaru thought of the disparity between them and the ideal image Rem described. A sister inferior to her younger sister in every ability. As they themselves were aware, Ram was inferior to Rem in every stat. So much so that Rem had absolutely no need to disparage herself.

Despite Subaru's thoughts, Rem shook her head as if in denial,

"No, that's not true. Sister, the real Sister, is different. If she had her horn, if Sister had her horn, then this wouldn't have…"

"But Ram doesn't have that 'if only' horn. So, I don't know any high-spec Ram with that horn."

Interrupting Rem, who tried to deny herself with a predetermined answer, Subaru touched his chin with his left hand,

"The Ram I know is just as I said. She's not as good as Rem at cooking, sewing, cleaning, manners, or even her mouth. —Well, I guess that's her charm point though."

Her way of speaking was so arrogant, it wasn't bad to clash with her sometimes.

That kind of distance in his relationship with her felt comfortable to Subaru. If he turned the problem to the presence or absence of a horn,

“You’re probably the only one who cares about that, Rem, you know?”

He recalled his short conversation with Ram in the forest.

Ram didn’t seem to hold much attachment to being an Oni. In fact, it seemed Ram even wanted to do something about Rem’s attachment to it.

Subaru didn’t presume to think he could do anything about it.

After all, he was just a young man with too little life experience, a recluse whose life density was even thinner than his peers.

How could the empty preachings of such a person resonate with anyone?

He didn’t get worked up. He didn’t even try to make it resonate.

What one had to come to terms with internally, in the end, wasn’t something to cling to others for; one had to deal with it oneself.

So, what Subaru told Rem was simply a blunt imposition of his own feelings.

“If you weren’t here, I’d probably be dog food by now. I was saved because you were here. I’m still alive like this. It’s not just thanks to Sister, it’s thanks to you too.”

“…The real Sister, if she were here, would have done better…”

“Maybe so. —But it was you who was here.”

Overlaying her weak objection, Subaru placed his left hand over his right hand, which was still clasped with hers.

To Rem, who looked up with a gasp, Subaru offered a wry smile,

“I’m glad you were here, Rem. Thank you.”

“—!”

At Subaru's words, Rem let out a choked sound, like a groan.

Then she turned her face away, not showing him her expression,

"Rem… Rem has always been a substitute for Sister…"

"Stop that lonely self-definition. First of all, the categories are completely different, Ram and Rem. After all, big sister type and little sister type—it could even start a war."

A difference in preferences that would never align. While Subaru inwardly thought that each had their own good points, Rem squeezed her eyes shut.

"Well, it's like this. From now on, try to make better use of the advantages of being twins. If Ram, who's quick-witted, can't keep up with her body, then Rem should take care of the parts she can't keep up with. Complement each other's weaknesses with beautiful sisterly love, and you'll be the strongest."

"So Rem's impulsiveness is still a flaw, isn't it…"

"Don't pick up on that when we've got a good flow going. Oh, right. I just thought of something."

Clapping his hands, Subaru's face lit up as if he had a brilliant idea.

Then he leaned closer to Rem, who was still facing away,

"Earlier, Rem-rin, you asked why Ram doesn't have a horn but you do, right?"

"…Yes."

"Well, I haven't asked deeply about why she lost her horn, and I won't, so I don't know. Since I don't know, I'll speak as if I do."

Subaru tapped his forehead with his left hand—right where Rem's horn would have been,

"You just need to be the substitute for Ram's missing horn. You two can get along and do the 'Oni' thing together. It feels heartwarming."

"—Ah."

"And besides, you say 'substitute,' but there's no substitute for Rem to Ram, you know? Can you imagine what state Ram would be in if Rem disappeared?"

Rem, who was speechless, didn't know, but Subaru knew that future.

Her screaming at her sister's death, her heartbreaking lament that sounded like the end of the world, her frenzied form trying to avenge her with all her might.

"…But."

Even so, Rem still wouldn't readily agree with Subaru's words.

It was difficult to convince people, after all. In her case, she had probably been struggling with those feelings for many years, so the knot in her heart was deeply ingrained.

To such a stubborn her, Subaru scratched his head and said, "Ah, fine, then,"

"Okay, then let's do this. Rem, you compare yourself to this ideal Ram in your head, and no matter how much you struggle, you're stuck. So, just get rid of that ideal Ram idol you keep comparing yourself to."

"Rem can't do something like that so easily. Rem has always been with Sister and…"

"So if you want an evaluation, ask me. I'll give you a more realistic evaluation than the Ram in Rem's head. Just so you know, I can't read the room, so I'll be blunt. No flattery, no mercy whatsoever. You asked for it."

Smiling, Subaru gently stroked Rem's blue hair with his left hand.

To her, who narrowed her eyes as if tickled, Subaru let out a small sigh,

“In my hometown, we say, ‘If you talk about next year, the Oni will laugh.’ So,”

To Rem, who remained silent and let him do as he pleased, Subaru tilted his head and continued,

Rem spoke quickly, trying to dismiss her earlier words.

“Laugh, Rem. Don’t look so glum, laugh. While laughing, let’s think about the future. Let’s talk about the future, making up for all the wasted time you spent looking backward. For starters, even just about tomorrow.”

“…About tomorrow?”

“Yes, about tomorrow. Anything is fine. For example, whether tomorrow’s breakfast menu will be Japanese or Western, or something silly like whether you put on your right sock or your left sock first. No matter how trivial the conversation, it’s a conversation about tomorrow because there is a tomorrow.”

Spreading his hands, Subaru concluded the conversation, then shrugged and asked Rem for her answer.

She hesitated for a moment, then lowered her eyebrows, looking troubled,

“Rem is very weak. So Rem is sure she will lean on you a lot.”

“That’s fine, isn’t it? I’m also weak, stupid, have bad eyesight, can’t read the room, and even I get depressed saying that about myself, but I live by relying on others to pick up the slack. We can just lean on each other and move forward.”

She tried to shoulder everything herself, her focus was only on the burden, and she couldn’t see the path ahead.

It was easy if one walked with both hands free, like Subaru intended to. Even then, burdens accumulated before one knew it—but if you couldn’t see ahead carrying it alone, you should share it with someone and move forward. How about that?

“Let’s laugh, link arms, and talk about the future that is tomorrow. It was my dream to talk about next year while laughing with an Oni, you know.”

“…That’s quite Oni-like.”

“Right?”

He winked and twisted the corner of his mouth, and Rem, as if drawn in, let out a small laugh. She started laughing, and from the corners of her laughing eyes, tears suddenly spilled. They flowed endlessly, torrentially, yet Rem continued to laugh.

Crying and laughing, crying and laughing, Rem pressed her face into the futon as if to suppress her sobs and laughter, yet her crying-laughing sounds quietly filled the room.

Crying and laughing, crying and laughing, Rem pressed her face into the futon as if to suppress her sobs and laughter, yet her crying-laughing sounds quietly filled the room.

Subaru continued to gently stroke her hair the entire time.

His right hand remained firmly clasped in hers until the very end.

He kept stroking, gently, gently, forever.

3

I reflect on my days at the Roswaal Mansion.

The first loop began, and I died on the fourth night—cause of death: debilitation.

The second loop started, and I died on the fourth night—cause of death: bludgeoned by Rem.

Despair set in during the third loop, and I died on the third evening—cause of death: brutally murdered by Ram.

Inspired in the fourth loop, I died on the fifth evening—cause of death: fall from suicide attempt.

Then, the fifth loop. I was bitten all over by dogs, scratched raw by claws, losing both blood and spiritual strength, leaving behind horrifying scars all over my body—but I believe I managed to salvage everything.

My relationships with Rem and Ram, my position in the mansion. The village children were saved, and the witchbeasts in the forest were eradicated, eliminating any danger. Twenty-odd days of adventure—it should have been a complete success.

Yes, it should have been a complete success.

"—I'm not angry, you know. No, truly, I'm not angry. Just because the person I was diligently nursing wasn't there when I woke up, and then when I tried to look for them, I found myself tied tightly to a chair and completely left behind, it doesn't mean I'm narrow-minded enough to get angry about something like that."

If it weren't for the girl sitting on the chair beside the bed, fiddling with her silver hair, and cornering Subaru with her ill temper.

Subaru silently listened to her resentful litany, sweating profusely.

Ten minutes had passed since she entered the room, and most of that time had been filled with complaints disguised as lectures.

However, upon first entering the room, she had genuinely worried about Subaru's condition, sighed in relief after confirming he was unharmed, and then, pulling herself together, sat in the chair and changed her mood to begin—her earnestness was evident.

Anyway,

"I'm not, angry, okay?"

"Yes, Emilia-tan, your anger is completely justified. Yes, I'm sorry."

"I said I'm not angry, honestly. If you think you're at fault, then fine. I'll accept your apology. —Just, really, don't make me worry again."

Subaru apologized, swept away by Emilia's momentum. Emilia smiled, pleased, then added that last line with a touch of affection in her smile.

That was incredibly unfair. How could he possibly refuse when she said such a thing with that expression?

After Rem, who had cried to her heart's content, left the room (she strongly emphasized that her crying was to be kept a secret, so he was currently considering how to spread the word without her finding out), Emilia visited Subaru, who was dozing off.

Her actions upon arrival were as described above. However, once all that was done, her eyes held nothing but a loving light, caring for Subaru, and it made him feel strangely ticklish.

“Even so, Subaru, you’re always getting hurt, aren’t you? You came to this mansion because of injuries, and it’s only been four days since then.”

“I don’t go around getting hurt on purpose, you know? It’s just that the world is purely a bit harsh on me, or something… So at least, Emilia-tan, you can spoil me rotten to balance it out!”

“You ran away when I tried to be sweet to you, though. I’m done with you.”

“Ngh! I blew my own chance! Damn it, Beako, you should’ve done a better job! What do you mean ‘tied up’?”

Subaru yelled the name of the vertical-rolled-haired girl whose face he hadn’t seen since waking up, venting his frustration at the absurdity of the situation.

Emilia’s eyes glazed over at the word “tied up” that Subaru had used.

“I fell asleep sitting in the chair, and when I woke up, I was stuck to the backrest. I was completely flabbergasted.”

“Flabbergasted? You don’t hear that word much these days.”

“Don’t make fun of me… Puck also tried to keep me from chasing after you guys, and what would have happened if Roswaal hadn’t come back? Do you understand?”

Emilia pouted, looking a little angry.

Subaru could only respond with utmost humility to her words.

Puck, according to his own intentions, acted to prevent Emilia from being exposed to danger, and Beatrice apparently quickly gave up on persuasion and shifted to forcibly restricting her actions.

Her state of mind, blocked by two people and unable to move forward, must have been quite miserable.

If he had been the one left behind, he couldn't help but think that.

However, he was confident that even if the same thing happened again, Subaru still wouldn't take her with him.

"You ended up helping me again, didn't you?"

"Huh?"

"I said, you ended up helping me again. I invited you to the mansion to thank you for saving my life, and here we are again. Thank you, really."

Clasping her hands together, Emilia smiled, a helpless expression on her face, and told him.

Receiving that, Subaru finally replied, "Ah,"

"Nah, it's fine, it's fine. It's just something I wanted to do, and it wasn't like it had nothing to do with me. That's right. I did it."

As he spoke, he finally felt a sense of accomplishment.

It felt as if something that had been solidifying in his chest had simply fallen into place.

The repetitive twenty-odd days he looked back on—Subaru had seen their end point.

What he had sought, even after having his heart so thoroughly scraped, broken, and crushed, had finally come within reach.

He finally felt that he had accomplished it himself.

"I thought you'd say that, Subaru, but that won't satisfy me. Roswaal, and Ram and Rem too, will surely want to thank you."

"Is that so… then, I'll gladly accept. I'll have Ros-chi revise my employment terms to be even better, and Ram and Rem will be my exclusive maids for a while, mufufu. Then!”

Cupping his hand over his mouth and laughing lustfully, Subaru swayed his body back and forth, closing in on Emilia, and poked a finger at her as she slightly recoiled,

“Emilia-tan’s also the type to give rewards?”

“…You’re so materialistic. Just so you know, only what I can do. …You asked for my name last time when I said that, didn’t you?”

“Hehe, don’t underestimate greedy me. The me now is completely unrelated to such naivete. Greed, avarice, swirling libido drive me!”

Subaru struck a wild pose, raising both hands diagonally, even though he couldn’t get out of bed.

Seeing Subaru in such high spirits, Emilia probably didn’t expect such an anticlimactic request.

She straightened her posture and turned to face Subaru.

Subaru nodded at Emilia’s attitude, which seemed to say, “Tell me your demand,” and then quickly searched his mind for his desired ‘Emilia Reward List’.

With options ranging from a small adventure to dramatically skipping up stairs, Subaru carefully considered and chose one.

Then,

“Then, let’s go on a date, Emilia-tan.”

He decided to make the promise they had exchanged twenty days ago, with her once again.

“Da-te?”

“It means we go out together, just the two of us, see the same things, eat the same things, do the same things, and share the same memories.”

“…Is that all right?”

“That’s all I want.”

The first step began there.

How much hardship Subaru had endured to have that longed-for date with her.

Along the way, various feelings accumulated, and the hurdles Subaru sought to overcome by looping kept rising, but the hurdle he ultimately wished to leap over was always there.

Therefore, that promise was a fitting conclusion to these repetitive days.

“I want to brag about Emilia-tan to the kids in the village, and there’s an amazing flower field there. Just vaguely walking around with you would be special for me.”

“Maybe your meaning of ‘greedy’ is different from the usual, Subaru?”

“Just you wait. Eventually, even that smile of yours will freeze from my brazenness. YES!”

He crossed his arms in a mysterious pose.

Watching Subaru, who couldn’t hide his excitement, Emilia let out a relaxed smile,

“Alright, I understand. I’ll go on a date with you, Subaru.”

“Yessss! That’s it! E-M-T!”

The promise was made, and Subaru triumphantly declared it with a fist pump.

Emilia let out a small sigh, and hearing it, Subaru looked out the window, his spirits high, eagerly awaiting his body’s recovery.

The direction of the village, the promised date destination.

As he thought of it, Subaru suddenly thought of the witchbeast forest.

The curse on Subaru's body, they said, had completely lost its effect.

That meant the eradication of the Ulgarms in that forest. This whole ordeal had started with one of them slipping through a crack in the broken barrier.

In the end, everything had been resolved by the complete annihilation of one side.

There was an inexplicable bad taste left in his mouth.

He simply couldn't wholeheartedly rejoice that the harmful beasts were gone.

Suddenly, he remembered.

The sensation of plunging his sword into the witchbeast's body, in the forest, completely engrossed.

The feeling of steel striking flesh was unique, and the sensation lingering in his palm was still fresh in his memory.

The sensation of taking a life.

He supposed that sensation would eventually fade.

With the passage of time, he thought, the inexplicable things now swirling in his chest would surely disappear.

A sensation he hadn't known until he came to this other world.

What could he do until the day came when he forgot it—?

"Subaru."

"Hm?"

He turned around at the call.

How did she interpret the meaning of Subaru’s distant, vague gaze?

Emilia swept back her silver hair, walked over to the window, and opened the curtains.

The blocked sunlight flooded into the room, engulfing her silver hair in a dance of light, gently drawing Subaru’s eyes to the scene.

Then, to a silent Subaru, Emilia smiled softly,

“On our date, let’s bring flowers.”

“—Yeah.”

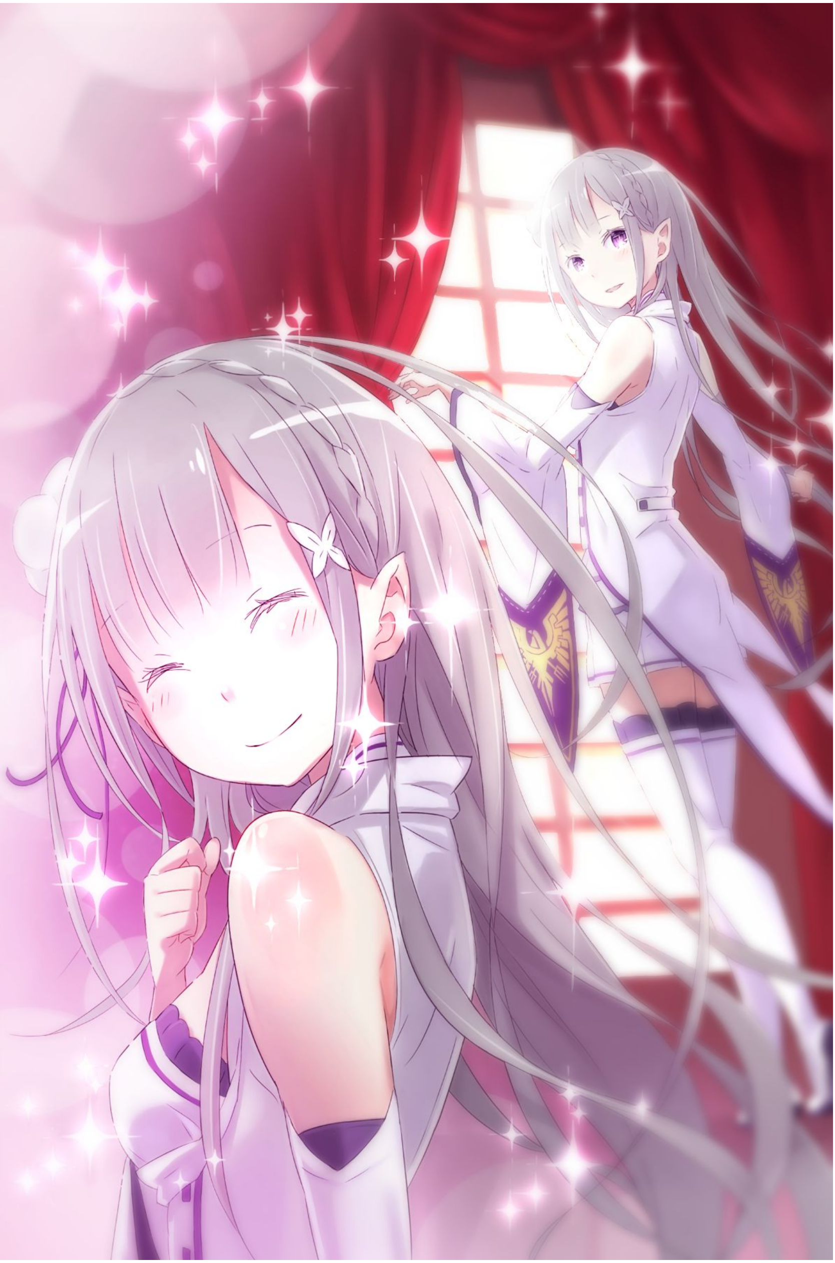
Receiving that smile, Subaru covered his face with his hand, thinking, ‘She’s too much’.

It might be hypocrisy, and an overly sentimental imposition, but he didn’t think it was wrong.

Emilia’s smile made him feel like it was right.

Time passed, with Emilia and him laughing together.

—The morning sun of the fifth day, finally arrived, continued to gently illuminate the two of them.



Interlude:
A Secret Talk under the Moonlight

The morning after Subaru and Emilia made their promise—about half a day had passed.

The setting was the Lord's central room on the top floor of Roswaal Manor.

When a secret meeting was held there at night, the participants were always the same two.

"First, let's acknowledge your efforts during my absence, shall we? You've done well in bringing the situation under control. Thanks to you, the damage was kept to a minimum."

The soft voice carried a unique masculine charm, yet his tone was utterly nonchalant, the kind that brought confusion to those who heard it.

Roswaal, the master of the room, spoke these words. However, the maid facing him, perhaps accustomed to it, didn't seem to mind and bowed low,

"You are too kind. Besides, in the end, I caused you trouble, Lord Roswaal…"

"Oho, thaaat's fine, don't worry about such things. Disposing of forest pests by incineration is haaardly any trouble or effort at all."

Waving his hand, Roswaal spoke as if it were nothing.

The girl—Ram—knew that his words were neither an exaggeration, a show of bravado, nor a sign of humility, but simply an undeniable fact. Thus, she said nothing.

"Pursuing responsibility will only lead to gloom. Let's talk about something more coooonstructive. —For example, how's Subaru doing?"

Roswaal posed the question to the silent Ram.

Ram shook her head slightly in response.

“His body has almost completely healed. Even Lady Beatrice, despite complaining, dedicated all her efforts to his treatment.”

“My, I wonder what’s gotten into her. That’s unusual. I’ve known her for a long time, but I’ve never seen her show such favoritism toward anyone. Was it love at first sight?”

“From Ram’s perspective, it didn’t seem like that kind of emotion…”

Ram replied, recalling Beatrice’s treatment, then pulled herself together and said, “However,” holding her hand out.

“Thanks to Lady Beatrice’s treatment, he was saved. If she hadn’t been there, I wonder if Barusu would still be alive.”

“Well, let’s just chalk that up to Subaru’s increeedible luck. In truth, there aren’t many healing maaagic users as skilled as Beatrice. Both I and Ram are quite clueless in that area. —We’re only good at causing harm, it’s quite vexing.”

Shaking his head, Roswaal’s expression subtly dimmed.

Anyone would think the content of his words bordered on self-loathing, and his downcast face would likely reflect that.

In reality, however, his expression wasn’t contorted into one of sorrow or self-loathing; he merely wore a transparent smile.

Then, Roswaal prefaced with “However,” and looked up at Ram.

“Starting with a shake of the head implies that simply being alive isn’t something to be happy about, iiis it?”

“Yes. There are a few issues.”

Nodding in response to the question, Ram paused for a beat before continuing. After organizing the information she needed to convey, she began again.

“Barusu forcibly activated his gate twice in a short period, from a depleted state. On top of that, life-threatening injuries were healed with magic… Due to overusing and straining his gate, we don’t know how long it will take for it to function properly.”

“Is that the Great Spirit and Beatrice’s assessment?”

“Yes.”

Roswaal clasped his hands and closed his eyes, mulling over the information.

Gate damage—in this world, where life cannot be separated from mana, it’s equivalent to suffering an extremely troublesome disability.

As a Margrave, and someone who dealt with mana more intimately than others, Roswaal keenly understood the inconvenience of Subaru’s current situation.

He hoped for recovery as soon as possible, but—

“Even with individual differences in gate repair, it could take years. It seems we’ve forced a cruel choice upon him.”

Ram nodded in agreement with Roswaal’s grave words and continued.

“There’s also the problem of the curse.”

“—The danger of it activating should have passed, right?”

“The casters—in this case, the Ulgarms—have been purged, so the casters are absent. Therefore, the curse will not activate… but the spell remains within Barusu’s body.”

“As for its removal, I’d like to heeear an expert’s opinion, though.”

In this case, an expert referred to Beatrice, who was proficient in curses. When asked for her opinion, Ram shook her head.

"Lady Beatrice said it would be difficult to untangle such a complex web of threads."

The cursed magical grip that gnawed at Subaru's body was deeply rooted, far more than imagined.

The spell bound his body so tightly that even Beatrice hesitated to attempt its dismantling.

However, the spell itself, having lost its caster, posed no significant threat.

Normally, a cast spell cannot activate without the caster's conscious recognition, and this particular curse was the type that transferred mana from the target to the caster. Since the recipient no longer existed, the conditions for the curse's activation were not met.

Therefore, the spell remaining in Subaru's body was not an issue if left alone.

However,

"If that's the problem, then it means we've confirmed what I asked you to check."

To Roswaal's subject-less question, Ram nodded without hesitation. As he awaited her reply, Ram touched her forehead.

"Limited to the corpses that were confirmed, all discovered Ulgarms had their 'horns broken off'," Ram reported calmly to Roswaal, ignoring a faint ache in an old wound beneath her headdress.

Roswaal sighed at her demeanor, then his chair creaked.

"That's what I saaaw too. It's likely the entire pack was like that."

"Is that even possible? Breaking the horns of so many witchbeasts…"

"Nooonsense. Either break them when they're young, or break ten or so first, and then order those ten to attack and break the horns of a smaller number. If you repeat the same thing, the rest of the pack will naturally lose their horns. Isn't that hooow it goes?"

Ram nodded in understanding to Roswaal's explanation. Watching her, Roswaal closed one eye and looked at her. His heterochromatic yellow eye closed, and his clear blue eye fixed on Ram.

"Hooowever, if that's the case, then circumstances change. Especially since Subaru is our benefactor twice over."

"Witchbeasts with broken horns obey those who broke them. — That means someone foolishly and intentionally ravaged the mansion, or Lord Roswaal's territory."

"Will this tuuurn into another Royal Selection issuuue, I wonder? First, luring Garfiel away, and now this… It seems we are quite the nuisance."

"Garfiel… what about him?"

Raising an eyebrow at the familiar name, Ram asked hesitantly. Roswaal smiled wryly and shrugged.

"Of course, he flatly denied ever calling for me. We'll have to change our codes and methods of contact. Weeell, whether we could reeely on their help was always a rather delicate maaatter anyway."

Roswaal mused, touching his chin.

He spoke of it airily, but Ram knew full well it wasn't something to be dismissed lightly. From the start, this was a battle with clearly slim chances of victory. To improve those odds, it was certainly better to have as many cards as possible.

Ram, aware that she herself was one of those cards, was frustrated by her inability to do anything but watch Roswaal's distress.

However, her thoughts were interrupted by Roswaal waving his hand, saying, "No, no."

"Let's get back to the topic. What about the 'parent' of those witchbeasts? Any leads?"

"Tentatively. However, their tracks have completely disappeared."

"Did they escape… or were they eliminated?"

"I cannot say either way. All we know is that the child that Barusu and Rem supposedly brought back from the forest disappeared the very next day."

Regarding the "braided girl" that Rem and Subaru had brought back from the forest, the villagers unanimously stated that they had never seen her before. The children who had accompanied her also testified that she had simply joined their group.

The adults had deemed her a stranger, like Subaru, and the children had not thought to question her background in the first place. Due to these two psychological blind spots, they were late to notice her existence and were left playing catch-up.

Thus, the primary suspect was the girl who had vanished.

In this case, her youthful appearance was no counter-evidence whatsoever. There were countless beings who could only have grown up in such a world.

After listening to Ram's report, Roswaal ruffled his hair and said, "This is troublesome."

"In the capital, it's the Bowel Hunter, and in the territory, it's a Witchbeast Master. It seems like I've gotten tangled up in a strange repertoire."

"No matter how many oddities gather, Lord Roswaal is not one to be disheartened by them, are you?"

"Oh my~, you're becoming quuite impudent. That makes me happy."

Roswaal smiled and beckoned Ram. Following his gesture, Ram moved from the center of the room to the back—past the ebony desk, directly to Roswaal's side.

Then, Roswaal extended an arm, pulled her small body close, and sat her on his lap.

Then,

“I couldn’t give you my attention last night due to my own circumstances, you see. I muuust have put you through quite a bit, didn’t I?”

“I understand that Lord Roswaal is busy. You can put Ram last, it’s quite alright…”

“Ram, haven’t I aaalways told you?”

Tracing a finger along Ram’s chin, Roswaal tilted her face up slightly and smiled.

“You and Rem are among the most important beings to me, you know? So much so that if something were to happen to you both in this incident, I’m not sure I could control myself.”

Extending his free hand to the ceiling, Roswaal spoke with a theatrical gesture. Ram looked at him with an enraptured expression, as if in a fever.

“Ram and Rem are important to Lord Roswaal—”

“That’s right, you and Rem are important to me, precious, and above all, crucial.”

He layered his words, building up the sentiment, and after a beat, Roswaal smiled radiantly.

“—Indispensable pawns, that is.”

Roswaal spoke these words to Ram with complete composure.

There was no hint of guilt or any other negative emotion; only the pure echo of a simple statement of fact within himself.

So, Ram, having been explicitly told that her existence was merely that of a pawn, accepted it.

"—Yes," she replied, her cheeks flushed, nodding ecstatically.

Roswaal nodded contentedly at her submissive, almost adoring, demeanor.

He pulled Ram, who was on his lap, even closer, enveloping her small body completely in his arms.

"Noow then, shaaall we begin? You must have pushed yourself quite a bit, Ram, didn't you? I told you to hold back, but you've let out quite a lot of mana, haven't you?"

"I apologize… Please."

Receiving Roswaal's words, Ram removed the white headdress adorning her pink hair.

Beneath the ornament, as Roswaal's fingers parted her pink hair, a faint white scar was visible just above her forehead.

—It was a remnant of the era when she was an Oni, a prodigy.

The scar showed damage from the exertion of mana, with faint traces of blood still seeping.

Roswaal traced the wound tenderly with his finger.

"—May the stars grant their blessing."

Four colors of light traveled up Roswaal's arm, transforming into a pure white light as they converged at his fingertip—then, the light flowed from his fingertip, pouring into Ram's scar where he touched.

—Directly transferring mana to another person is an art that requires extremely advanced handling.

Unless the mana of each attribute is perfectly balanced, the mana will be converted into force and damage the target's body. This "healing act" is only possible for Roswaal, who is compatible with all four colors of mana and can wield them at a high level.

For an Oni, the horn on their forehead represents the line through which mana flows in and out.

While similar in function to a gate, its physical nature allows it to perform this function more intensely, and the body is similarly adapted.

However, Ram lost her horn due to an external factor, and neither the amount of mana she can absorb nor the amount she can release is sufficient to satisfy her body.

If left unchecked, her body would simply waste away—to maintain it, these nightly secret meetings with Roswaal were a daily routine.

As mana was poured into the scar on her horn, Ram's shoulders trembled slightly.

"Ah, mmh."

"No matter how many times I hear it, it's a sight and sound that poooisons both the eyes and ears."

Ram, breathing heavily and her cheeks flushed with allure, received a wry smile from Roswaal.

Ram cast him a sidelong glance.

"If you find it so poisonous, you may as well dispose of me."

"My own daughter, in all but name? Oh, that would certainly live up to the reputation of a peeerverted, corrupt noble, wouldn't it? Hooow exciting!"

Roswaal smoothly deflected Ram's temptation and continued to pour mana.

As vitality filled her body and her gate swelled with warmth, Ram, entrusting herself to the sweet sensation, suddenly remembered something.

"Oh, I have something to report to Lord Roswaal…"

"What is it?"

"It's about Rem."

"There's no particular reprimand, you know? Ooof course, there will be a little scolding, but I have no intention of punishing her otherwise."

Roswaal interrupted, anticipating her words. But Ram subtly denied him, "No," then hesitated with her lips, seemingly wondering how to convey it.

"Rem has become attached to Barusu."

"Hmm?"

"Something about Barusu seems to have touched Rem's vulnerable side."

It was about her twin sister.

Ram, as the elder sister, understood Rem's psychological state all too well. And she knew that her thoughtless younger sister could never do the opposite.

Initially, Roswaal looked puzzled, but as Ram explained, he gradually showed an expression of understanding, and muttered thoughtfully, "Hmm."

"Rem, you say? Weeell, I suppose it's not surprising. Unlike Ram, she doesn't serve me out of loooyalty, after all."

To her master's rather blunt assessment of her sister, Ram responded with silence, offering no rebuttal whatsoever. This was, in essence, unspoken affirmation.

Unlike Ram, who devoted herself to Roswaal with selfless loyalty, Rem's devotion was largely driven by a sense of self-preservation.

For Rem, Roswaal largely represented "the one who protects her older sister, Ram." This way of thinking stemmed from Rem's deep-seated dependency, where her sister's existence was intertwined with her own sense of purpose. As a result, Rem's actions to protect her community tended to be rash and premature. If left unchecked, she might even take it upon herself to dispose of anyone she deemed harmful.

In that sense, Ram's honest assessment was that Subaru had been lucky to earn her trust before being attacked.

Of course, even with such an assessment, Rem was still the cutest sister in the world to Ram, and her priority was still higher than Ram's own.

—However, if asked if she was the absolute highest priority, Ram couldn't honestly nod at the moment.

"Regardless of Rem's feelings, Ram will continue to remain in my hands. Theeerefore, she will inevitably have no choice but to do the same. Seeeee, it's the same as always, nothing has changed."

"I'll set some expectations in advance. This is an important task for tomorrow, you know."

As he said this jokingly, the light in Roswaal's palm faded.

The treatment was over. Feeling the vitality within her, Ram reluctantly slid from Roswaal's lap to the floor.

She turned and faced him as Roswaal rose from his chair, his tall figure towering over her.

"In aaany case, things are going to get busy again. It will be a hardship, but I'm counting on boooth Ram and Rem."

"As you command. This body has been yours since that night of fire."

She pinched the hem of her skirt and curtsied low.

Receiving her loyalty, Roswaal clasped his hands behind his back and walked to the window. With Ram accompanying him, he opened the curtains.

Looking up at the sky—where a plump, full moon floated—Roswaal narrowed his heterochromatic eyes slightly.

“This Royal Selection, we absolutely must win. For my purpose.”

He murmured, and his outstretched arm pulled Ram closer by the shoulder.

Feeling the warmth of his tall body near her once more, Ram quietly closed her eyes and looked down.

Listening to the voice of the man beside her, her master, the one to whom she entrusted her soul,

“—For the day we kill the Dragon.”

—The night quietly deepened.

Sweeping away the tumultuous days, cleansing everything, as if welcoming a new world.

Bonus Short Stories

Emilia's First Date

1

The day of their promised date began with a morning blessed with a clear, cloudless sky.

"I feel like a braid definitely looks best on you these days, but it's regrettable that I have to show it to Subaru. As for your clothes, I suppose it would be best to stick with the white theme. We'll add a highlight with your hair accessories, and then, after that…"

Floating around in a hurry before the silver-haired girl sitting on the bed—Before Emilia was the cat spirit she had formed a contract with, Puck.

As she watched the gray furball stress himself out, Emilia placed a finger on her cheek.

"I don't think you have to worry about it that much, it'd probably be fine if we just went with the usual…"

"No way! Forget about your partner, this is your first date. You absolutely have to be the cutest in the world!"

"Gosh, you're making such a big deal of it."

Puck's fighting spirit seemed to be blazing for some reason, Emilia stealthily sighed so he wouldn't see it.

Acting as her foster parent, the cat spirit who was essentially her family had been in this state since last night. At this rate, the preparations alone would exhaust her before she even took a step outside. —Even though she was supposed to go on a 'date' with Subaru today.

"Listen closely, Lia. On today's outing, Subaru might try to approach you to hold your hand or something of the sort, but you definitely must not allow that. Don't get caught up in the flow of things, no matter what. The most important traits in a woman are modesty, shyness, and just a little bit of submissiveness. I'm always telling you this, so I'm sure you understand."

"Okay, I get it already, jeez. If you're that worried, you might as well come along."

"I want to respect his courage as a man. There's no way I could do something so tactless."

"But then your words and actions are completely contradicting each other…"

"My feelings as a male wanting to support him and my feelings as a parent wanting to forbid this are battling it out within me… Hngh, Lia, you'd better go while I can still hold myself back…!"

"Right, right."

Puck's theatrics as he made his jokes were probably due to Subaru's bad influence.

She certainly felt like he was already this way to begin with, but she also thought he had gotten even worse about it now.

Quickly finishing up her personal grooming, Emilia beckoned Puck over to her with her hand. Puck readily responded to her call and perched on her shoulder, after which he started massaging her cheek with his paws in a fancy manner.

"Alright then, Lia. I'll be sleeping in my Yorishiro, but if Subaru tries to do anything that strays from the path of decency, be sure to call me out."

"Come on, you don't have to worry about that sort of thing. Alright, nighty night. Take it easy."

As Puck saw a giggling Emilia off, his body dissolved into particles of light. The faint light was then absorbed into the crystal on her chest, and the noisy cat watching over her fell silent.

Therefore, Emilia flicked the crystal with her finger after which she jauntily walked out of the room.

Even Emilia understood that her heart somehow felt stimulated as if it was expecting something.

2

“Did I keep you waiting?”

“No, I’ve only just gotten here myself.”

Standing before the tree they had decided to meet at, Subaru responded like so to Emilia who had just linked up with him.

Emilia nodded at his response, and then turned back to the mansion as she continued,

“You said you wanted to meet outside the mansion, and say that stuff we just said… Can I ask if there was any particular meaning to that?”

“They both seem rather fitting for a date, don’t you think! Leaving the mansion together wouldn’t feel very much like a date, and when you meet outside the sort of conversation we just had is an absolute necessity.”

It seemed like he had arrived much earlier than her, and used a twig or something to draw several pictures of Puck in order to kill time under this tree.

Seeing this, it seemed to her that at the very least his statement that he had only just gotten here himself was a complete lie.

“Hmm, so that’s how it is. I really don’t know anything about this sort of thing.”

“By the way, I would still reply ‘I’ve only just gotten here myself’ even if you were super late, it’s a sign of my noble manly heart.”

“But wouldn’t that mean you were reeeeally late too…”

“There’s certain things you shouldn’t point out even if you notice, aren’t there?!”

This seemed to be an obligatory exchange. Subaru lectured her about its importance as she accompanied him, and when he was done he placed his hand on his jaw and started staring at her intently.

“Eh, what’s wrong? Do I look weird somehow?”

“The characters for weird and romance look quite similar, huh, but setting that aside, there’s only a tiny bit that’s weird about you, and that tiny bit is also charming in itself so it’s all good. More importantly, you’re looking extraordinarily cute today as well! … Have you dressed up a little more than usual today?”

Subaru, alert as he was, noticed the subtle changes in her hair, accessories, and so on. He accurately guessed where Puck had spent his efforts, surprising Emilia.

“You noticed? Puck was a lot more enthusiastic than usual today.”

“Ooh, great job! Not bad, Puck. And here I thought for sure that his feelings as a father would make him put up some resistance when it came to his daughter’s first date.”

“Yeah, he was reeeeally conflicted about it, but he’s sleeping in my crystal right now so you can relax.”

Emilia showed him the crystal on her chest with a faint smile, causing Subaru to don an expression of relief, “I see.” He then cleared his throat, and humbly bowed before her.

“Well then, I suppose this is the beginning of our first date. I consider it a great honor that you would allow me to escort you.”

His butler outfit was completely flawless from head to toe. Subaru didn’t really have much choice since he did not possess any other formal clothing, but to Emilia it truly seemed to fit this gesture.

Consequently, she obediently stood next to Subaru who was holding his elbow out to her, intending to link arms with her.

“Umm, is this okay?”

Her fingers grasped his cuff ever so slightly as she looked to him with upturned eyes and asked this. Puck had told her not to take his hand, so she was rather anxious wondering if this was okay. But in response, Subaru,

“This isn’t what I was hoping for, but that’s a performance beyond my expectations! Your loveliness truly is demonically inspired…”

Subaru covered his face with his palms and writhed around, it didn’t look like he was angry. Relieved by this, Emilia pulled on his cuff as she started walking.

“So, what exactly do you do on a ‘date’?”

“First of all, we’ll head to the village. After that, we’ll pay our respects to the dead… And then, how about going to see some flowers. Slowly, calmly, there’s no rush.”

Bathed in the warmth of his gaze, Emilia looked at his profile as he said this with a smile, after which she responded “That sounds nice” with a smile so lovely it was enchanting.

3

“Thank goodness the children seem alright. You seemed reeeeeally popular too, Subaru.”

“I wonder if that’s something to be so happy about, it’s actually pretty problematic in its own way, Emilia-tan.”

Subaru who muttered this with a grave expression was currently dusting off his butler outfit which was covered in dust and dirt.

When they first arrived in the village, the two set went to receive some flowers for their visit to the grave. Subaru had already asked the children to prepare a bouquet in advance.

There were no problems thus far, their troubles started after they had obtained the flowers.

Even the fact that he was on an important date had no meaning to these innocent children. Regrettably, Subaru ended up getting surrounded just like he usually did and was ultimately reduced to this wretched state that he always ended up in.

“Even with this, they were probably holding back because you were there. If it weren’t for that, I’d be going through something even more horrible right about now.”

“Come on, you’re exaggerating. Those kids just like you, isn’t that right.”

“If this were any other day, I would have snot spread all over my back right now. Fortunately, I was able to avoid that fate today.”

“That’s what usually happens?!”

Emilia suddenly started to gaze upon him with pity.

Forming a complicated expression in response to her sympathetic gaze, Subaru turned around somewhat exhausted and, “Ah.”

This caused Emilia to turn around as well, and there she found the children from the village who had been following them.

“Come on, you guys can’t tag along this time. I told you that Emilia and I were going to be having a thrilling, lascivious tryst, didn’t I? Get outta here, scram!”

“Ehh, what a tyrant.”

“Ehh, what a rude guy.”

“Ehh, what an unruly kid.”

“I’m no unruly brat. Also, we’re getting close to the barrier which if you remember you were forbidden from approaching. Unless you want to hear Muraosa’s long, boring, droning lectures, you’d better head back right now. Head back, and have fun playing that frozen demon game I taught you or something.”

[T/N: Frozen Demon = Freeze Tag]

Subaru waved his hand as if shooing away insects, causing the children to mutter complaints as they retreated.

Emilia watched this exchange as if she found it charming, but she suddenly realized that among the children, there was a cute girl staring directly at her.

She was a lovely girl with reddish brown hair and red cheeks like an appa. When her eyes met Emilia's, she stuck her tongue out with a noise before she ran off.

"That Petra, what's with that attitude of hers. I'll be sure to give her a good talking to tomorrow. Are you alright, Emilia-tan? If the shock has rendered you unable to walk, I'm more than willing to princess carry you in my arms."

"No, I'm used to it, so it's fine. Something of that level isn't anything worth making a fuss over."

"Making a fuss, not something you hear very often these days… And I'm the one hurt by the statement that you're used to this…"

"It's fine. Come on, our 'date' isn't over just yet. Let's go."

Emilia said this to Subaru whose face looked like he wasn't telling her something, after which she immediately started walking. Subaru seemed a little troubled, but he ultimately ended up walking over to Emilia's side without saying anything.

Emilia felt somewhat disgusted at herself for relying on his consideration like this

"—Alright, we're here, we're here.".

After they walked a bit further, Subaru stopped and pointed at the trees.

At first glance they appeared to be a perfectly normal cluster of trees, but there were blue crystals embedded high up in their trunks, and the evenly spaced trees formed a barrier that responded to evil mana in the atmosphere—Miasma.

The witchbeasts known as Ulgarm which had been inhabiting the forest were all wiped out, but it was very likely that a different type of witchbeast would soon take over the now empty territory. The barrier had not yet outlived its usefulness, and thus it was once again restored.

"We can't enter, so sorry, but this is as far as we go."

Standing right before the barrier, Subaru found a spot people weren't likely to frequent and placed the bouquet there. Having done this, Subaru joined his hands and closed his eyes while still on his knees, and then lowered his head as if in prayer.

It was an unusual method of praying, it was her first time seeing such a thing. Perhaps it was a custom from his home town which he would not speak to her in detail about. Seeing this from the side, Emilia too placed her hand on her chest and prayed for them to rest in peace

She had heard that all living things, even witchbeasts, would have their souls cleansed when they returned to the Od upon death. She hoped they could get along when they once again incarnated into this world in a new form.

That was a life lesson Emilia had picked up—Someone had probably taught it to her.

"Sorry to make you play along with my self-satisfaction. It's alright now, everything's OK."

Dusting off his knees, Subaru stood up and smiled at Emilia. Coming to her senses, Emilia confirmed that Subaru wasn't forcing himself to smile after which she nodded, "Yeah."

"So, what we're doing next is… Visiting a field of flowers, is that right?"

Drawing up their 'date's' itinerary in her mind, Emilia asked about their next destination. To confirm this, Subaru snapped his fingers in satisfaction,

"That's right, a flower field. This is a pretty big deal in itself, you know?"

Saying this, he smiled with a playful expression that fanned the flames of her expectations even further.

4

Having left the forest, with her bangs dancing in the wind, Emilia could not suppress her voice of admiration.

“W-W… Wow!”

She advanced through the forest with Subaru leading her, and the greenery that had been blocking her view thus far cleared away in an instant. The vivid scenery filled her vision with endless, beautiful colors.

“How about it?! I was rather surprised myself when I first saw this, but… It really is pretty grand after all, isn’t it?”

She couldn’t even respond to Subaru who was boasting right beside her, her gaze was fixed on the scenery before her.

Red and yellow, white and blue, flowers were blooming all over the place, and none of them overwhelmed the others, the field of flowers was in complete harmony. The fact that a flower garden like this was formed naturally could only be called a miracle.

“This seems to be some sort of secret garden to those brats, I really had to work hard to get them to talk about it.”

“A wonderful place like this… How did you get them to tell you about it?”

“Hehe, it was all for my date with you. I suppose you could say it was a bit of compensation for letting them violate my rights as a human being for days on end.”

The conditions of this exchange probably resulted in Subaru getting covered in unfathomable amounts of dirt and snot.

While she certainly found this pitiable, she definitely could not forget about how deeply the scene before her eyes moved her.

Perhaps she was once again being spoiled by him. To have her chest filled with such pleasant emotions.

"—Also, this too is a present from me to you, Emilia-tan."

And thus, Subaru said this to Emilia whose hand was against her chest as he extended his hands toward her. "Eh?", Emilia was late to react as Subaru touched her silver hair,

"This is… An ornament, made of flowers?"

"It's a crown of flowers, so to speak. Perhaps it's not much compared to the real thing, but you could think of it as a rehearsal for when you one day ascend the throne? I definitely want to give you one adorned with the finest jewels by my own hand some day, but… For now, this is the best I can do."

Subaru said this in a rather pompous tone as he winked at Emilia.

His actions caused Emilia to feel a slight throb in her chest. For some reason, her heart suddenly turned lively for a moment. She wondered what exactly that sensation was, strangely enough it did not occur again.

But she did know that it made her feel terribly warm, and it naturally brought a smile to her face.

"Thank you, Subaru."

On that day, Emilia gave him her finest smile, and Subaru was so entranced he could not even speak.

Emilia felt immense gratitude toward Subaru and continued.

"If possible, I'd like to go on another 'date' with you sometime."

This killer line of hers pierced his heart magnificently.

Felt Saw!

1

…I'll get it this time, I thought, as I leaped over the redhead with clenched fists.

I kicked off the wall and jumped towards the ceiling where I grabbed onto the hanging lights and swung forward like a pendulum; and as I had intended, the moment my feet hit the carpet, I was able to accelerate.

"Yes! Gotcha this time. Serves ya- gyah?!"

During my escape's parting shot, I was caught by the neck and my legs were left kicking the air.

"Ugeh," I cried, as my nape was squeezed and I dangled like a cat.

"Felt-sama, it is not proper for a girl to say 'ugeh.'"

"That so? Ugeh, ugeh, ugeeehh."

Hearing that, I repeated it as harassment towards the guy I should have been able to leave behind.

Continuing to hold me like a cat by its scruff, he stared at the ceiling.

"Still, in just a few days you were able to leave my side once… that's quite an accomplishment."

"Don't pretend ta praise me ta brag about it! And I'm not a stray cat, lemme go!"

"Well then, may we consider today as my win again?"

While I was thrashing my legs about, Reinhard directed a smile at me.

“Fuck!” I spat, as I threw all my feelings of anger, worthlessness, and other various emotions towards his smile.

2

Ten days had passed since I was confined by that bastard, Reinhard.

“Feel free to try if you think you can escape from me,” he had proposed, as if to mock me after trapping me. Regrettably, for the past ten days, all of my dozen or so escape plans have failed. I was still unable to get out of this abduction situation.

It was as if he had eyes across the entire mansion, immediately appearing wherever I tried to flee. With that said, I should use this time while he’s not here to escape…

“Here, Felt-sama. It’s such a waste for you to ruin your cute face by being miffed all the time.”

A plate of sweets was offered towards the dissatisfied me, and my stomach rumbled as I smelled its fragrance. Seeing my instinct to touch my abdomen, the old lady that provided the sweets smiled.

She was called “nanny” by Reinhard, and is the wife of the couple that works at the mansion. Her work seems to involve stuff like cooking and cleaning.

She looked to be over 60, and was someone had trouble dealing with, albeit in a different sense from that of Reinhard.

It might be because she was always smiling, which made me feel uncomfortable, as if I was being cursed at.

“Today’s snacks are baked confectionaries. Felt-sama, would these fit your taste?”

As I looked back and forth between the confectionary and the old lady, her already wrinkled face creased further as she encouraged me to try it.

I guess I gotta do it.

I picked up a piping hot confectionary and stuffed it in my mouth. Its sweetness quickly enveloped my mouth.

“Mmm!”

I couldn’t stop myself from smiling.

Even though I was unwillingly captured into this mansion, and I hated their pretty clothes and soft beds, their food was just something else. You couldn’t compare it to that of the slums.

“Is it no good after all? Ta bring Granny along when I escape.”

“Fufu, it makes me happy to be invited, but… if I were to leave, Gramps would starve to death. Though, Young Master can handle everything on his own.”

“Aww, guess it was no good.” I pouted after being rejected by Granny.

By the way, Gramps—Granny’s husband—is an extremely reticent worker. That’s how I saw it when he took care of the garden, went shopping, and such. After all, I found it difficult to even talk when I went shopping with him before.

“Besides, even if I snuck out ta escape, I’ll be found no matter where I go and then ma tired body would be dragged back to the mansion by ma legs…”

“It’s not good to trouble your two elders. Sigh. My, oh my, how troubling.”

“Well, Granny, you also don’t hold back punishments each time I run away…”

Even without Reinhard here, I still couldn’t leave because Granny and Gramps were in the way. Their movements made it clear they were no ordinary elders. Perhaps it was because they were acquainted with Reinhard, or perhaps everyone with connections to nobles were like this.

“In that case, it’s money, huh… By the way, I haven’t seen Reinhard around, he ain't here?"

"Indeed, Young Master is at the Royal Castle because of some matters he must take care of. However, he should be returning shortly. I understand Felt-sama is feeling lonely, but please bear with it as Granny shall accompany you."

"I ain't feeling lonely. I'm done eating, so I'm leaving."

I licked the cream stuck on my hands as I got up from my seat.

To be honest, I wanted to lick the plate as well, but the last time I did that, Granny got so furious it felt like the world was about to end.

"I have to tidy up and clean the residence, hence I cannot attend to you… so please be careful not to do something dangerous. I don't know what Young Master would do after all."

"I'm not a kid, ya don't hafta worry. Thanks for the food."

Swinging my arms, I left the dining room to leisurely walk about the mansion. With that said, because I was here for ten days, I had explored most of the mansion.

Basically, the doors to the outside were locked, and since I had jumped out of the windows on the first day, the windows were modified to no longer open. At worst, I could break the windows to escape, but the moment I tried that, three people rushed over and caught me.

"Even so, I'll definitely get outta here…"

It's true that it wouldn't be bad to wallow in such comfort, but there was a reason I had to go back no matter what.

"Rom-jii… wonder if he's doing alright…"

That was the name of my only family member, whom I had left behind in the slums.

Ten days ago, because of a blunder I made, he got involved and ended up getting hurt. I was captured by Reinhard soon after, so I wasn't able to confirm Rom-jii's safety.

It's not a wound he would die from, but if asked about, it wasn't something even he could avoid answering easily.

"That's why I hafta go back no matter what, but what can I do to escape…?"

As I finished my thought, I halted—at the end of the hallway I was walking down was a door that led to a room.

"This room… was usually closed ta prevent anyone from entering, right?"

The door had a large, rugged bell on it, and I clearly remember being warned about not entering it.

Right now, there was no key on it, but twisting the doorknob easily opened it.

I checked my surroundings to confirm there was no one nearby before slipping into the room.

The air was chilly, and my initial thoughts were that it was a dimly lit room.

Even though it was daytime, the windows were blocked by thick curtains, preventing any sunlight from coming in. The interior was quite dreary, with nothing that stood out aside from the bed at the center.

A candlestick lay beside the bed, with its faint light providing the only illumination in this room.

"What, how boring. I honestly thought they would be hiding some treasure or somethi-?!"

Initially finding the room to be a letdown, I noticed something that left me speechless. It was so shocking, I thought my heart was going to explode.

…On the bed laid a sleeping woman.

It wasn't the fact that a woman was sleeping there that startled me, but rather the fact that she didn't breathe like someone who was asleep. I didn't get that impression from her.

Even after confirming it with my eyes, it didn't seem like that was the case.

"What… is this? She's…"

I couldn't feel the presence of a living person from her even as I moved closer.

You would think that would mean she was a corpse or a doll, but that was not the case. Her cheeks and lips indicated that her blood was still flowing, and if you looked closely, her chest did rise and fall from breathing.

Although she was alive, there were no signs of her life.

"I can't understand. In fact, who is she? …Don't tell me that bastard Reinhard imprisoned other women as well?"

"…That is a terrible misunderstanding. I cannot help but say your assessment was very unexpected."

"Gyaaah!"

Hearing a voice from behind made me lose my wits. I screamed and leaped across the other side of the bed with my hands.

I glanced at the entrance, and there stood Reinhard.

He was leaning against the door, and had a rare, troubled look on his face as he pushed aside his forelock.

“It seems I had slackened just a bit… I have made an oversight, it seems.”

“This isn’t like ya. By the way, mind letting loose who she is? If ya keep quiet, I’ll see ya as criminal who abducts a bunch of women. “

“She is my mother.” Reinhard readily replied towards my question.

His answer only made me respond with “What?” as I looked at the woman on the bed.

She had long golden hair, and was beautiful enough to make your eyes pop. At most, she seemed to be twenty years old. I would have believed it if Reinhard said it was his older sister instead. He sure sucks at lying.

“In ma mind, yer a criminal who abducts people and lies about it…”

“I don’t blame you for finding this hard to believe, but my mother—Luanna Astrea—suffers from the Sleeping Beauty sickness, and her appearance remains unchanged as she remains asleep. It’s already been seventeen years.”

“Sevent—?!”

Hearing him say “seventeen years” made my jaws drop. If that was true, then she has been sleeping before I, who was fourteen, was even born. No, wait…

“Reinhard, how old are ya?”

“I will be nineteen this year… I only have memories of my mother up until I was two years old.” He shrugged with a wry smile as he talked about his mother.

For some reason, his matter-of-fact reaction rubbed me the wrong way, and I pursed my lips.

“So ya locked yer sick mom in the corner of the mansion and left her there to sleep, did ya?”

“…Those words are quite hurtful. Sadly, the cause of this sickness is unknown. At the very least, should a treatment be discovered, we will act to ensure she will recuperate at a separate residence in the capital. “

“…Don’t say something like this so matter-of-factly.”

His response was something he must have said enough times to forget what it even means. It was like a prepared answer, and it irritated me even more.

“This is family yer talking about! Even though yer not doing anything, you dare talk big about it ta me. You piss me off!”

“But facts remain facts. Felt-sama’s words are justified, but I believe we should leave it at that for now.”

“Huh, that so!”

If I talked with this bigot any more, I felt I would go crazy from anger.

Reinhard’s mother really didn’t wake up, even after those loud voices. Her face was into my memories through the corner of my eyes, and I got off the bed to leave the room.

“Felt-sama.”

However, Reinhard grabbed my arm and stopped me.

I looked back at him with a face that said I would bite him, but he didn’t seem to mind as he said “I would appreciate it if you do not disclose to anyone else about my mother’s situation. I also want you to never enter this room again.”

“You…!”

“Also, I am grateful for your concerns earlier.”

For a moment, my mind went blank at his words. Once I understood what he meant, blood rushed to my head in anger as I realized just how utterly disgusting this bastard is.

He knew just why I was angry, and the reason behind what made me angry.

“Reinhard! Yer a seriously disgusting guy!”

Pulling back the arm that was gripped, I dashed out the room.

Behind me, Reinhard closed and locked the door before walking next to me. I was annoyed enough that I didn’t have to look to know he had an unpleasant smile on his face.

“By the way, Felt-sama, I went to the imperial capital’s guardhouse this morning.”

“…What.”

“It’s about the old man that was with you. Apparently, after the uproar the other day, he ran away from the guardhouse during his treatment. I do not know where he went after that.”

Hearing that, I inadvertently stopped.

Reinhard was saying something along the lines of “I am very sorry,” but I wasn’t listening to him.

If Rom-jii escaped from the guardhouse, that means…

“Fer now, it’s safe ta say he’s fine…”

“I would have preferred to secure the person in question before reporting his safety to you, but…”

“Sigh, ya don’t need ta. Ma family is not something ya need ta concern yerself too much about. Besides, fer someone like ya, ya can’t understand the dirtiness of living in the slums.”

I poked at Reinhard’s chest, and then continued walking happily with a grin. He also showed a bit of relief on his face as he walked alongside me.

Suddenly, something came up in my mind about his face.

“It looks like ya really do look like that mother of yers, Reinhard.”

“…Really?”

Immediately after I said that, Reinhard suddenly looked happy. His reaction surprised me a little, and I replied with “Y-Yeah” while nodding.

“The shape of yer eyes and nose are exactly the same. Putting aside her being yer mother, I believe that she’s yer family.”

“Do you still view me as a criminal who abducts and confines young girls?”

“Multiple kidnappings aside, the fact that yer keeping me trapped here is the truth!”

… But before long, I’ll be sure ta escape ta Rom-jii’s place.

Thinking that, I decided against spitting on the annoying Reinhard.

Walking down the corridor, I was drawing up my next plan of action for escaping.

Felt Rises to Center Stage

1

Feeling the vehicle sway on my ass, I scowled at the damn redhead who sat in front of me.

“Do not keep looking that discouraged forever,” Reinhard said.

As always, he had the usual unpleasant smile, from someone who doesn’t believe that malice existed in the world, which came to seem like he was provoking me, playing in my face that I am a loser.

“You recognized my victory, remember?”

“Tch, are you happy to have beaten me on a bet?”

I practically threw myself on the seat and with my arms crossed because I knew that Reinhard didn’t like it when I didn’t behave like a “lady”. Only the bastard continued to look sleepy without caring, as if I were just like a tantrum child.

“Sucker.”

“Oops.”

That was me trying to put the sole of my shoe in Reinhard’s white pants, but the guy wasn’t even caught off guard and managed to move his leg off to avoid my foot. So, I tried a second time, then he kicked his foot on mine to get him out of the way. If I looked uncomfortable, he went on with a teasing smile.

“Take it, take it, take it, take it, take it.”

“Oh, ops, hm, no, ah.”

“Each “take it” was a kick, but they were all defended. So, I thought there was no point in just trying to face it and that I would need a more elaborate plan, so…”

“…Gentleman, please.”

But before I put my plan into practice, the grandma who saw us from the front seat told us to stop. She looked at me and Reinhard and said:

“Don’t make a mess in here, behave yourself, both behave.”

Her voice was not that of someone who was angry, it was more of someone who made a dear request. So, I lowered my foot and Reinhard also shrugged. It seems that he hinted that it was my fault and I got more angry.

“TAKE IT!”

“Oh.”

Too bad that not even that last kick hit, so I had to settle for stamping my feet on the floor.

2

The vehicle we used to call, “Dragon Carriage”, is nothing more than a carriage that has earth dragons in place of horses. I don’t even need to say that it is something that has nothing to do with me, and that was the first time I traveled on it inside the passenger wagon without being hidden among merchants’ goods. In fact, unlike the merchants’ drakes, this one was all chic.

“And so? After all, where are we going? isn’t it time for you to tell me?” I threw the question to Reinhard without being able to stand the silence.

The guy then opened his blue eyes, looked me in the face and said.

“Well… what if I say it’s a surprise?”

“Do you want to be hit? No matter how good you are at dodging, if I decide I’m going to hit you, I’ll hit you. Better not even think about sleeping until then.”

“There is no need to threaten me, as we are already arriving. As grandpa and his earth dragon are calm, we ended up taking a little longer trip."

Reinhard's answer was about the grandpa who drove the vehicle, but I didn't ask him why we were late and he didn't even explain what I wanted to know. To start with, all of this was just happening because I was muggle to fall for the bastard's trick. But in my defense, I was starting to get a little anxious about not being able to get away from that house and that made me nervous.

The bid went something like this:

"Miss Felt, what about making a bet with me? We will throw a coin and, if you hit the side that falls, you will be free to leave."

"Are you serious?! I'm in! But I'm going to throw the coin!"

And I lost. Worse than I was the one who threw the coin and I was the one who chose which side was going to fall, so Reinhard couldn't have cheated. That, without even checking what he would want from me first if he won. You know, I never really thought about it until that moment, but things that happened to me made me think that maybe I was a little dumb. This gambling story was another example.

"…Miss Felt, our destiny is in sight," informed Grandma.

Since I was kidnapped by Reinhard, I found myself reflecting on my actions more often, but being interrupted by Grandma's voice, I looked out the window. It was a landscape of the capital that seems familiar, except that I had never seen it myself. After all, it was the Noble District, the area of the city that has less to do with me. I showed my tongue to the tasteless mansions lined up with them and the only thing that mattered was showing who had the most money. Then, I looked in the direction we were going and… I regretted it. I really hoped that that way ahead, at the end of that straight street and that there was no way out, was not our destination.

"This is where we are going, the center of the kingdom, the Castle of Lugunica."

Unfortunately, this is what Reinhard told me, as if he had read my thoughts. Facing his profile, I realized that my shoulders were shaking a little.

“There is no use turning the face that I know you’re laughing, you bastards!”

3

It didn’t matter how much I cried or kicked, those people didn’t have a drop of mercy. Apparently, they wanted to squeeze me like a floor cloth.

“Ouch, ouch, ouch, ouch! It hurts! I already said it hurts!”

“Please hold on just a little bit longer, this is necessary for any lady.”

“I don’t remember becoming a lady and I don’t even plan to be!”, But I wanted to shout it, but I saw that it wasn’t going to happen.

Around me, there were six girls trying to tighten my body with a thing they called a corset. It looked like they were companions of the castle, and in the corner of the room was Grandma with a smile watching over me.

If not, even grandma I could win, I had no chance being in enemy territory. So, I just let it be brought up to that room and I was since being treated like a toy by the six girls, who put on and took off a lot of dresses on me.

The instant I entered the castle, I lost any chance of escaping the dragon carriage and I was locked in this room. Reinhard left saying that he had something to do, but at least I didn’t need to change in front of him. In the end, the chosen outfit was a yellow dress similar to the one I had to wear at Reinhard’s house, but I could feel it by the fabric texture that was of a better quality.

“This is suffocating me and the fabric bothers me… What does that bastard want from me, huh…?”

“If you intend to complain to the young master, let it be only after being properly presentable. Rest assured, that dress looked great on you," said Grandma.

"Damn it if it was good! What anger to have to do everything the way that bastard wants…"

Anyway, for the peace of mind of the chaperones, I stopped struggling and let them squeeze me. Even after the corset, there was still a lot of place in the dress that I needed to adjust and my suffering continued. I swore I would fly kick Reinhard later.

And it was at such an hour that the door was suddenly opened and a hoarse voice invaded the room.

"…cense. Is Sword Saint here?"

As the girls had not finished dressing yet, they were petrified without knowing what to do. I just looked at the guy who came in and did a quick analysis. He was a not-very-old uncle with a slightly flushed face and a badly shaved beard. He staggered a little bit as if he were the drunks in the slum, and it would be perfect if he had a belly out with a bottle of drink in his hand, but that was not the case. Surprisingly, he wore the crumpled Royal Knights' uniform and carried a sword at his waist. Incredible as it seemed, he was a knight.

Then the uncle searched the room with his eyes and let out a breath bad smell of alcohol.

"Whaaat? They told me that the Astreas would be here, hey…"

"…How dare you enter the room where a lady is dressing?!"

Whoever shouted at the man scratching his head was Grandma. I could see on her face that she was angrier than when I licked her plate, only her exaggeration seemed a little strange.

The answer came with the man's reaction to her:

"Ah, is it you, grandma? I thought it was an old vase that scared me."

“Frankly, unbelievable that you prefer to offend me before apologizing for entering without knocking. If I no longer have the minimum dignity as a knight, how about leaving the sword on your waist hanging on the wall?”

“Sharp as always… But I’ll tell you, Grandma. I think you are the one who should be careful how you address me, huh?”

“…Master Heinkel…”

I could hear Grandma say the guy’s name very quietly, which made him smile a little disgusting. And my patience was almost at the limit.

“Hey, uncle, you’re too loose for those who were invading the place where a girl is changing. Which is? Didn’t you realize it’s already time for you to apologize to me?”

“Hã?”

With that, the man looked at me for the first time, and when his blue eyes reflected me, he put a hand on his forehead and said:

“Ah, right, it was bad there, young lady. I didn’t think I was going to disturb a child by changing, nor did I care about you.”

“Do you want me to leave an unforgettable impression on your face?”

Seeing that uncle tease me, I already lift the skirt of my dress and get ready to give him a nice kick. Only, before the shock happened…

“Vice-captain Heinkel, you must know the reason for the meeting… From that, can’t you really deduce who this lady might be?”

…Grandma entered our midst. I didn’t understand anything about what she said and apparently neither the guy.

“It was bad, but I don’t know anything, no… For a change, I’ll have to be locked up quietly in my room, Marcos didn’t tell me anything.”

“…The royal selection.”

“…!”

When uncle heard Grandma’s whisper, his expression changed instantly. If before he seemed to be making fun of the whole world, now he was looking at me with a serious face, from head to tiptoe. So…

“Há… Há, há, há… há, há, há, há, há!” He laughed. “Understand. Now I understand! Then that’s it?! You mean that kid chose a child of that size as a sacrifice this time?! What a joke, huh?! It can only be a joke! How not to laugh at that.”

“…!”

He had kicked one of the bookshelves and spread a lot of stuff on the floor as he burst out laughing. While the girls were intimidated by this, I took a step forward and got closer to him. I didn’t understand anything about their conversation, but I’m sure the guy was making a fool of me. And of all things, what I hate the most is that they make a fool of me.

“He’s laughing now looking up, and since he’s drunk, it’s just me giving a good kick that he will fall to the floor. Easy.”

“…Hold the emotion there, young lady. I’m drunk, but you won’t be able to touch a finger on me.”

The problem was that even before I gave the kick, the guy came out of nowhere in front of me releasing the breath of alcohol, making me take a few steps back.

“In a little while, you will also understand that you and I, we are in the same situation. At that time, if you want, I can comfort you.”

Saying that, the uncle just laughed and left the room without fixing anything. When the door closed, Grandma came to my side and wiped my face with a tissue.

“Is everything okay, Miss Felt? I’m sorry, if I had managed to react in time, you wouldn’t have had to go through this discomfort…”

“Relax, I was just annoyed, but he didn’t do anything. Do you know that uncle, grandma?”

“…Yes. He has an intrinsic relationship not only with me, but with my husband and the young master… So I apologize sincerely.”

Grandma showed a pained face that made me feel sorry for her. In the same way, the other girls were also all upset and the atmosphere in the room was very heavy in a very unpleasant way.

“Well, I almost didn’t understand what that guy came to do, but it’s over. Forget it.”

“But, miss…”

“We better pack up the things on the shelf he kicked and finish dressing me, right? I don’t think you’re going to like me walking like that.”

I held out my arms to the ladies waiting to show that there were still things to do, like closing a bunch of buttons and covering the corset. I didn’t need to be an expert to know that I wasn’t ready yet. At first, the girls were a little confused, but soon four of them came to dress me and the other two started to arrange things sprawled on the floor.

“Aaagh… What a paaaaaaaaaaain… Grandma? Why are you making that face?”

As I suffered from the tightness of the dress, I noticed that she was looking at me with her eyes wide open, as if she was frightened by something.

“Nothing, miss. I was just thinking that, like always, the young master got it right again.”

“Tsc, how about we don’t talk about him? I don’t want to remember that annoying face.”

Against my will, I ended up remembering the face of that bastard and, at the same time, I realized something: the drunk uncle who came to make a mess in the room also had bright red hair, the same tone as Reinhard.

“Yeah, at least now I know people with red hair suck,” as I came to the conclusion of the day, next to me, Grandma, looked at me with a satisfied face and someone who knew everything. She stayed like that until a knight appeared in the room and took me outside.

Ram’s Older Sister Heart is Complicated

1

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. Please listen to this. Today, Subaru-kun was able to get out of bed.”

“Hmm, yes.”

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. I’ve promised to cut Subaru-kun’s hair. What kind of haircut do you think would look good on him? He looks wonderful no matter what, but…”

“Ah, hmm, yes.”

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. Just now, Subaru-kun was able to go to the bathroom by himself. Please compliment him!”

“Hmm…?”

2

Sitting and holding her head in her hands, Ram let out a sigh with a weary expression on her face.

Day by day, her usual routine was one taking care of trifling odd jobs while following her younger sister around as she handled the heavy work. However, her drive had now withered to the point where even those odd jobs were bothersome.

“That, too, is entirely Barusu’s fault.”

“What kind of baseless rumors are you making up about me on my first day back on the job? More importantly, how bold do you have to be to let me do all the work when I’m just recovering my health?!”

Where Ram’s gaze lingered woefully, Subaru wiped a shelf with a rag held in one hand, and howled.

Currently, Subaru and Ram were together in one of the guest rooms in the Roswaal manor’s east wing. Visitors to the mansion were rare, but cleaning the guest rooms and maintaining the furnishings was nonetheless a required daily labor.

On this day, the two of them were seeing to the airing out of one of those guest rooms. As a work assignment, It was almost too light, but it was necessary to let Subaru get used to it gradually after returning from medical treatment.

There was no way for Subaru to know that Rem had spent her entire saved-up salary on the brand-new butler uniform he was wearing on his return to work.

His lack of awareness of that fact became yet another seed of dissatisfaction to Ram.

“It’s likely pointless to expect that sort of thing from Barusu, though. Honestly, what does Rem see in a man like this? It hurts to think about it.”

“Won’t you please quit muttering to yourself and lend a hand, senpai? I’m doin’ the best I can here!”

“You likely returned to work early to put a stop to Rem’s worries. If you really have that sort of resolve, then you shouldn’t be whining no matter what kind of difficulties you encounter. …It’s not manly at all.”

“Neither my resolve nor my manliness are excuses for you to be slacking off on the job!”

Subaru was going on about something or other, but Ram covered her ears and pretended not to hear. Having said that, it was obvious to see that while Subaru was making a fuss, he was moving stiffly and being cautious about spots here and there on his body.

Roughly a week since the witchbeast commotion—thanks to Rem’s devoted nursing, and the healing spells that Beatrice regularly cast on him due to some whim, he was in more or less perfect condition.

It’s just that, that was speaking of nothing more than surface appearances. Ram, who had heard Roswaal and Beatrice’s assessments, knew how serious the remaining injuries on the inside were.

And despite that, how infuriating was the sight of him refusing to let the pain show on his face. Did he think that Rem would feel responsible if he kept on staying in bed?

In truth, that was correct if one considered Rem’s feelings. Ram’s cute little sister was clumsy with her own heart, and pushed herself to the breaking point shouldering this burden and that. She was a worrier down to her very core.

“So, although it’s true that Ram had hoped that someone would bring that under control…”

“What’s that?”

“Your face is dull. You get ahead of yourself easily. You have no learning or strength worth mentioning, and not only are you penniless, you’re reckless… Finding someone who brings together so many unfortunate attributes is actually fairly difficult, indeed.”

“Just so you know, even I can tell that you’re making fun of me, y’know?”

For him not to express anger at that point made her think that he lacked spirit as a man. Truthfully, it was exactly because she was aware of this that she was willing to speak so impolitely.

Having thought that far, Ram was suddenly stunned.

…The way that thought just now made it seem as if she was depending on Subaru’s good nature was quite disagreeable, wasn’t it?

“…”

Standing up without allowing her irritation to show on her face, Ram casually ran a finger along the edge of the room’s window frame. Seeing that there was white dust on her fingertip, Ram turned back to Subaru.

“Barusu, what’s this?”

“You’re supposed to be taking care of that part, you know?!”

She’d intended to point out poor results in his cleaning, but Ram was miffed to have her own deficiency pointed out instead. Her already-scarce drive to work diminished further, and Ram wanted to go lie down in her room soon.

“But really, you’re even more listless than usual. I’m just guessing, but are you actually not feeling well?”

Resting his weight lightly on the table, Subaru said that while gazing in her direction.

At his glance and question, Ram drew her eyebrows together in displeasure.

His worry was off the mark. It was true that in the last few days, she’d exceeded her limits in utilizing mana due to the witchbeast commotion, and her gate’s condition wasn’t good. As part of settling matters afterwards, she’d travelled between the mansion and the village time after time, and she’d been tasked with a daily survey of the boundary in the forest to ensure there were no failings in it. As well, her nights were spent assisting Roswaal, who was as busy as ever, by handling paperwork in his place, and this morning, too, she’d slept little more than an hour.

Her body felt heavy, it was difficult to think, and just keeping her eyes open was tiring. Her limbs moved sluggishly as though filled with lead, and, perhaps due to her poor circulation, her entire body seemed to be creaking.

“But, that’s entirely normal.”

“I’m not sure what that ‘but’ is talking about; just don’t push yourself, alright?”

As she rubbed between her eyes after realizing how heavy they were, Subaru walked right next to her and, with a ‘Let me see’, placed his palm against Ram's forehead. Ram stiffened as she realized her carelessness.

"Fever…doesn't seem quite right, maybe just a mild fever? If you've gotten worn down, it wouldn't hurt to take a break just for today… owowow!"

"Who gave… you permission to… go ahead and touch Ram? One really can't let down their guard around you. Filthy."

Pinching the back of the hand that had touched her forehead, Ram sniffed dismissively as she made Subaru cry out. Rubbing his hand as he jumped back, Subaru glared at Ram as he went teary-eyed.

"You little… I'm trying to show some concern here, you could be nicer about it."

"Ram doesn't need your sympathy. More to the point, how can you be concerned about Ram's problems on top of everything else? If you've got time to worry about her, worry more about Rem…"

While saying that, Ram moved away from the side of the resentful-looking Subaru. Continuing like that, as she went to move on to cleaning the next guest room…

"…ah"

Whether the hoarse, quiet voice belonged to Subaru or Ram, she couldn't tell.

Only that, immediately after the soles of her feet lost sight of the feeling of carpet, her vision went dark like a curtain coming down with a whoosh, and her body could no longer support the heaviness of her head.

3

…When she awoke from a sleep so deep that she saw no dreams, she was met by the sensation of a cold cloth on her forehead.

"…This is… Ram's… room?"

She slowly pushed her eyes open, and when her fuzzy vision cleared she was greeted by a view of a familiar private room.

It was a simple, undecorated and dreary bedroom. Only the pink curtains, along with the sheets and thick blanket on the bed, brought flowery colors to the room, to match it to Rem’s tastes.

Aside from that, leaving one with utterly no sense of her self was what made it the room of the girl known as Ram.

“Oh, you’re finally awake, are ya? Honestly, you really had me freaking out there, c’mon.”

When she raised her upper body on the bed, and turned her head to the side, Subaru appeared holding a pottery bowl filled with water. Looking over her memories of just before losing consciousness, and her current condition, Ram understood.

“Barusu, you pervert…”

“That’s the first thing you say after suddenly collapsing?!”

“Ram’s clothing has been changed. The sweat has been cleaned from her back as well; how meticulously you must have licked all over her body. Filthy.”

“You think up some really scary stuff, y’know?! It was Emilia-tan that changed your clothes and wiped the sweat off! There’s no way I could do that, and licking? What do you think I am, some kind of boogeyman?!”

From Subaru’s explanation as he claimed false accusations, it seemed that immediately after she’d gone unconscious in the guest room, Subaru had made sure it was nothing serious, and called for help right away. As Rem was away from the mansion for shopping, he’d called Emilia, and asked her to take care of Ram.

“Is that so. It’s not that you caused trouble for Emilia-sama without any thought at all, then.”

“No matter how much I’ll jump at any chance to have contact with Emilia-tan, when it’s time to do what matters, I’ll do it. So, how are you feeling, actually?”

“The first face Ram saw after waking up was so evil-looking, it really soured her mood.”

“Tell me about your health! I don’t care about your mood!”

“Don’t shout at a sick person. You really are a boy incapable of consideration for others, aren’t you.”

“Ghgizagigi”

As Subaru ground his teeth in chagrin, Ram let slip several weighty sighs.

…The truth behind that was that she was berating herself for what she honestly felt were her own blunders.

That she showed weakness to Subaru, and, through her own carelessness, mistreated a part of Rem's feelings that she should have taken consideration of. That she felt just a little serenity, too.

"Well, if you can run your mouth the same as always, then you're probably fine. Here, have some water. Emilia-tan said it was probably overwork, too, so you'll get better if you just take it easy for a while."

Not noticing Ram's internal conflict, Subaru offered her a pitcher of water. Taking it, Ram sipped at it to moisten her throat. At her side, Subaru retrieved the damp towel that had fallen from her forehead, and wet it again in the room's washbasin.

Given that it was Subaru, taking that kind of care was quite out of character.

"Mm, hk"

She had been thirstier than she'd thought, and after draining the pitcher, Ram slowly lay down on the bed. Right away, Subaru placed the damp towel on her forehead; it felt nice.

"That's unusually thoughtful of you, Barusu."

"Heheh, I'm so glad to meet your approval, nee-sama."

Speaking flippantly, Subaru dragged a chair to the side of the bed and plopped down on it. Facing the opposite of the usual direction, he sat with the backrest hugged into his stomach.

Ram frowned as his attitude suggested that instead of returning to work, he was thinking of staying to tend to her.

"If it's just a matter of sleeping, even Barusu could do it. Anything Barusu can do, Ram can do as well."

"Your repertoire of abuse never runs dry. ...Don't worry about it. By now, there's no way I'd get today's jobs done anyway, so I'll just watch until you go to sleep. Want me to hold your hand?"

"Please don't say such creepy things. The thought of you watching me sleep gives me chills."

"Hmf, is that so."

Subaru frowned, and looked like he was pouting. Wondering if he was that upset simply because he'd been unable to hold her hand, Ram's gaze towards him became increasingly stern.

It was just that, a situation where she was lying in bed like this, and someone was watching over her at her side was…

"This reminds me a little of long ago."

"When you say long ago, Ram, you mean that you've experienced being tended like this? From how steady you normally are, it's tough to imagine you being frail."

"…Shortly after Ram lost her horn, it was common for her to fall ill like this. It was also partly due to being unable to control mana properly, and it ended up placing a burden on Rem."

Perhaps because he'd intended to tease her, Subaru's face fell when he realized the topic was her horn. Mildly pleased that she'd put Subaru to silence, Ram smiled faintly.

…Nine years ago, just after Ram (having lost her horn) had been taken in by Roswaal, the total amount of mana she was able to manipulate inside her body was vastly reduced, and her body, unable to withstand the alteration, fell ill many times. Each time, Rem cared for her at her bedside.

She'd overdone it for the first time in a long while. The bill for that was falling into the same sort of condition that she had back then. Perhaps the reason she couldn't laugh at it at all was because the one caring for her was no longer her little sister.

Back then, while caring for Ram when she'd fallen ill, Rem would often hold her hand.

On nights when it seemed like Rem would be crushed by needless guilt, of course Ram held her hand as well.

Perhaps it was because, thanks to Subaru's banter, she was able to remember that sort of thing.

"…Barusu."

"Hmm?"

Assaulted by a sudden sleepiness, Ram was on the edge of losing her hold on consciousness, unable to endure the weight of her eyelids.

Just before that, she spoke unexpectedly, her voice calling out to the boy beside her…

"…"

What she had said at the end, she wasn't sure.

Still unsure, Ram once again submerged into a deep, deep sleep.

4

"…Nee-sama is sleeping soundly, then?"

"Mhmm, like a log. I guess it's impressive that she kept up the verbal abuse right until she went to sleep."

As he looked down at Ram's sleeping face, Subaru responded to Rem (who had returned from shopping) with a wry smile. Insistently proving that the body and heart are separate things, Ram remained herself, even if weakened.

Removing her gaze from Subaru's pained smile, Rem's eyes went wide with a 'Hmm?'.

"Subaru-kun, are you holding nee-sama's hand for her?"

"Right at the very end, she went and called out to me with a really forlorn look on her face. Maybe not forlorn, it was more of a… dunno, it's hard to put into words."

Subaru thought to himself about what was meant by the emotion

Ram showed at the end, and her thin, soft voice. But, Rem shook her head at Subaru's troubled thoughts.

"Rem is sure it could only mean that nee-sama has finally accepted Subaru-kun. There's a part of nee-sama that's just a tiny bit more suited to being aloof than most people, after all."

"You could take that different ways, but basically you're saying she's a bit difficult to handle, then."

"No, that's not true at all. The part of her that's just a little bit stubborn is precious, that's all."

"When I hear you say that, it really does feel like you two are sisters…"

Holding a strong belief in her heart, and being unwilling to let others sway her from it. When Subaru responded with that nuance, Rem tilted her head with a "Is that so?", seemingly unaware of his meaning.

Subaru's wry smile deepened at her reaction, then he looked down at his own hands. His right hand was, even now, still grasped in Ram's palm as she lay on the bed.

Seeing her face as she slumbered, Subaru let out a little sigh.

"You'd be cute, too, nee-sama, if only you could always look as gentle as this."

That was his appraisal of Ram with a peaceful look on her sleeping face.

The Best Day of Rem's Life

1

Her body was hot, her face was red, her chest swelled with her excited breaths that wouldn't calm down.

Cooking, cleaning, laundering. Even though she found herself busy with all kinds of daily chores, she was long distracted from work. Her thoughts were already occupied by other things.

Hurrying through the corridor, half of her was wondering how to quickly finish the rest of her work, while the other half did nothing but think about the source of why her heart was pounding.

"…Ah."

Suddenly, because she saw something, the girl voiced a shy word.

Even she could hear how full of joy her inadvertent voice held. She felt her cheeks burning. Then the girl—Rem, increased her pace.

"Oh! You're almost done with your chores, Rem?"

Noticing Rem's presence as she neared him, the boy ahead turned around with a grin.

Short and black hair, sharp sanpaku eyes, a mischievous child's smile. Rather than being very manly, he's more on the cute side. No matter which trait, they all caused "The Horn" inside her to tremble excitedly. Bowing her head in front of the boy, Rem unconsciously smiled as she stopped.

"Yes… Would you like to have some tea together, Subaru-kun?"

She had the look of a girl in love that called out her beloved's name.

2

Rem, at this point, was aware of the incurable sickness that caused her flustered state.

She could not get the boy out of her mind. Rather, it would be easier to calculate how much time she spent a day without thinking about him. This was to be taken literally. Whether she was asleep or awake, she would be thinking about him.

“Rem, I didn’t know you were such a carefree person…”

Isn’t that far too much? Even she questioned how abnormal her love was.

The only other person Rem knows that is afflicted with this sickness is Ram nee-sama. Rem understood that, Ram’s admiration towards Roswaal was the same as Rem’s own feelings towards Subaru. But Rem can’t imagine being like nee-sama, where she won’t reveal those expressions uncontrollably.

…Nee-sama sure is amazing.

This was Rem’s unwavering love towards her sister. After losing her horn, many aspects of her abilities had become worse than Rem’s, but none of it has harmed Rem’s respect towards nee-sama.

Because of this, Rem wondered if her sickness was more severe than her sister’s.

“—Rem?”

A male’s voice entered her ears. It could be said to be a little childish, but it was also one that had gradually left boyhood. That was the impression the voice gave.

Her blue hair swayed as Rem tilted her head and looked at the person whose voice it came from.

“Yes, is something wrong, Subaru-kun?”

“No, there’s nothing wrong, but… aren’t you a little too close? Wouldn’t it be inconvenient when drinking tea?”

"Really? Rem doesn't find it at all inconvenient."

Close enough that they could feel each other's breath, Rem replied to Subaru's troubled smile with an endearing voice.

The two were in the living room of Roswaal's mansion, where they enjoyed their afternoon tea on the same couch.

Subaru's left arm was tightly stuck next to Rem's right arm.

Though the two had maintained some distance in the beginning, without him noticing, Rem had nestled closer bit by bit.

"Subaru-kun, would you like some more snacks?"

"Eh? There's more? This is really good, these things that Rem made are delicious!"

"Yes. That's because I was praised like this before by Subaru-kun… There's around a hundred of them, is this enough?"

"Are you planning on feeding me until I'm a pig?! Two or three is enough!"

After she received Subaru's praise on the baked cream pastry a few days ago, it was served countless times during their tea time.

Rem excitedly stood up.

"Then, I shall go prepare. If Subaru-kun disappears while I am preparing, then I'll be sad."

"I wouldn't do something that mean. How about we promise on it, a promise."

"…Okay."

Long-awaited by her, Rem stretched her pinky out, while Subaru extended his own with an "it can't be helped" smile. Their pinkies entwined each other, and shook up and down to seal the promise.

"—Hair… cut"

…Was it because of Rem's sickness that Rem was not thinking clearly? She felt as if they had made such an agreement before as she thought about what she blurted.

It was around a week ago, after the Witchbeast turmoil subsided. The morning the wounded Subaru opened his eyes, Rem apologized and requested to atone for the trouble. Instead, she received a gentle "punishment [curse]." That morning, Rem's heart was captured. Rem was captivated by the future he described in their promise.

But recently, she had become less satisfied. She wanted more precious promises about the future. Even though Subaru would give a wry smile while he agreed to the promises Rem made, he never refused her selfish desires. So, her love could only grow bigger and bigger.

"That's right, we did promise something like this."

With his warmth still left on her pinky, Rem was about to step out the room when she stopped. Subaru pointed at his hair when she turned around, and revealed his usual, mischievous smile.

"We made a promise about trimming my hair before. I think it's about time I need your help, right?"

The boy must not have known how much those words made Rem's heart beat like crazy.

3

…With Rem's skill, taking care of Subaru's hair would be straightforward.

Although it was a fairly simple promise, for Rem, it was more important than anything else. The reason why would be…

"Because this was the first promise with Subaru-kun."

"Just like you have questions about me, I have a lot to ask about you. That’s why, let’s take care of everything and then talk. We can talk until our throats are sore. Let’s make a promise.”

He firmly tugged Rem’s hand, and hooked their pinkies together.

While Rem was confused by their intertwined pinkies, Subaru already shook on it.

“We made a pinky promise.”

“Th-That was…?”

“It’s the ceremony my hometown does when making a promise. If you break it, you’re forced to swallow a thousand needles. It’s a punishment of hell.”

Subaru’s monologue had already surpassed Rem’s understanding.

Rem was confused and utterly speechless. To which Subaru snapped his finger, flashed a toothy grin, and said, “I trust Rem, so I want to do something to earn Rem’s trust. That’s why I made that kind of promise.”

“…”

“I said it before, didn’t I? I’m the kind of person that would keep his promise after making one. Plus, I have Emilia’s blessing, so I’m not concerned at all when I say ‘dun worry ‘bout it.’ “

“Hehe…”

Dumbfounded, Rem was unable to hold it in as she laughed. Seeing Rem smile, Subaru followed suit with a chuckle of his own.

“Then it’s a promise. Rem really will ask a lot of things.”

“Yeah. I also have things I must ask of you, like my hair.”

“Hair…?”

“That’s the reason why you keep staring at me all the time.”

Hearing Subaru’s words, Rem was speechless as her eyes widened.

With her blue eyes filled with guilt, she let slip, “Subaru-kun, Rem was–”

“It’s fine. You were concerned about the clumsy me, who had a pitiful haircut, so you kept looking at me… am I right?”

In his first loop, Subaru had made a promise with Rem. It was Ram’s words that started it, to help Subaru fix his shabby haircut.

Subaru finally understood Ram’s words at the time. The real meaning behind it.

It was evident in Rem’s stares that, at the time, she held a sense of distrust towards Subaru, so Ram immediately said his hair was messy to fool him.

Now he knew, the opportunity of that promise was borne from a lie.

That’s why… smiling inside, Subaru wanted to make the promise of a lie into something truthful.

“Once we safely return, I’ll leave it up to you for the style. Make it so that Emilia can’t help but snuggle up to me.”

“…But Rem can’t help when it comes to the character.”

“Please be more gentle about saying those things!”

It was a conversation of which the two did not know where it was going.

Noticing Subaru’s intentions, Rem followed with a joke, which made Subaru extremely happy.

“Once I leave the children to the villagers, I’ll regroup with you immediately. Don’t force yourself too hard.”

During the witchbeast turmoil, in order to save the children outside of the village, Subaru and Rem set foot into the forest and made this promise. And at the time, Rem’s love for Subaru had not yet blossomed.

Therefore, fulfilling this kind of promise to Rem had an extreme significance.

“It’s not that I forgot. It’s because I’ve been running around lately that I haven’t had the chance. Even if I mentioned it, once I remember there’s a guy who can’t read the mood, I could only postpone it.”

“It’s not like Subaru-kun to have worries at all. It would be better if you were more like your usual self, where you don’t think before you speak, cause a mess, then run around trying to fix it.”

“Eh?! Why do I feel nostalgic about this feeling of pain in my heart from Rem’s harsh words?!”

Pushing her chest on the back of the chair, Rem leaned forward slightly to look at Subaru, and laughed harder.

Although this kind of Rem is unbelievably cute, I definitely cannot say that out loud, Subaru secretly decided.

In order to fulfill the haircut promise, the two arrived at the mansion’s atrium. A chair was placed in the middle of the groomed lawn, and with a towel tied around Subaru’s neck, everything was ready.

“After changing hair styles, it’ll give the impression of a different person. It’s quite common in anime and manga, huh.”

“If it’s done indoors, it’ll be difficult to clean up. Whether it be preparations beforehand, or cleaning up afterwards. If it’s outside, then we just need to sweep the ground and wash your head. About how short should I cut it to?”

In Rem’s point of view, Subaru’s hair was still fairly short. There’s only a small portion that was messy, and gave a bad impression. Once that bit is trimmed, it’ll be perfect.

“Yeah… I’m not that good at specifying my hair length. Rem can just cut it to the length where it looks the coolest!”

"Subaru-kun is always at his coolest"

"The purpose of my haircut was denied?! It was over before it began?!"

The chair swayed as Subaru shook. Holding Subaru's shoulder with her hands to prevent him from struggling, Rem stared at Subaru's head carefully.

Though her answer was not a lie, she thought his hair certainly didn't look the best.

"This responsibility is quite heavy."

"Um… Rem-san? It's fine even if you don't think about it too much? Don't worry too much, just do as you said before and fix the hair ends, slightly groom it…"

While Subaru gingerly proposed a solution, that voice didn't reach Rem.

Moisturizing Subaru's hair slightly, Rem brought out a pair of silver-shining scissors and put on a determined pose.

"…"

Facing her immediate challenge, her hand stopped. Rather, it couldn't stop. Her right hand was trembling violently.

Clickity, Clackity. Rem was stunned by her own hand's trembling. Though she had kept calm, all her nervousness was redirected to her right hand.

"Subaru-kun, this is bad. My hand won't stop trembling."

"Hm? A little bit of trembling is fine… Oi, isn't this trembling too excessive?! Is this even ok?! This level of shaking would crack a skull! Don't tell me you're actually not accustomed to giving other people haircuts?!"

“Rem is responsible for nee-sama and Roswaal-sama’s haircuts… but Subaru’s is the first time…”

“There’s no way a barber would be able to make a living if he said such a thing!”

A barber that refused to serve first-time customers would no doubt go bankrupt. But that matter wasn’t important right now. Rem’s hand was still trembling fiercely because she had to give Subaru a haircut.

“Well… even though I told you ‘it’s fine if you mess up, don’t worry about it!’ I guess it’s hard to change your feelings so quickly. But to be this nervous… Even if the cut is slightly bad, after a week it’ll recover.”

“But, because of Rem, Subaru might have a endure a week of a bald state…”

“If I’m going to become hairless, then it’s probably better to stop, right?!”

She extended her hand again to stop the chair that Subaru sat on from shaking. Rem proceeded to rack her brain to stop her trembling hands. All of a sudden, she inadvertently blurted out what she was thinking. It was…

“Does Subaru-kun have any uneasiness by entrusting Rem, this kind of person, with this?”

Those were the words she had unintentionally said. But after they were spoken, they left behind a depressing and heavy pressure on Rem’s shoulders.

Yes, that must be it.

No matter how you look at it, the fact that Rem had tried to kill Subaru-kun does not change.

Rem almost executed Subaru twice at the witchbeast forest. And if one were to count Subaru’s final act of becoming bait to die, then it was thrice.

“Twice inside the forest, Subaru-kun saw Rem’s nature. Rem’s Oni personality… even before that, Rem also…”

Subaru-kun’s presence at the mansion was an unsettling factor, and Rem had questioned whether to eliminate him.

That suspicion will surely wrap itself around the fragile heart that upholds Rem, and will someday explode.

If Rem doesn’t resolve this here and now, then Rem will surely cause Subaru-kun to die.

Up to this point, this sense of guilt has plagued Rem, the perpetrator. Then, as the victim, Subaru-kun must naturally be in even more pain. Then why? Why can he show Rem this kind of smile?

Why is he able to sit in front of Rem so carelessly?

“Rem.”

A calm voice. Subaru was calling out her name. She was suddenly at a loss, and could not form a response.

Towards that self-deprecating confession, what would he say?

Scared.

Don’t want to hear it.

Don’t want to destroy this illusion of intimacy. Her heart beat furiously from fear.

“In my hometown, there’s a fairy tale called ‘The King with Donkey Ears.’”

“Yes… Eh…?”

“Once upon a time, there was a king with very long donkey ears. When the king needed a haircut, he would call a barber into the palace. But, no matter who, they would laugh out loud when they saw the king’s donkey ears. And as a result, would be beheaded by the king. Among them, there was a barber that finally managed to hold back and not laugh. But to withhold the king’s secret, the barber eventually could not take it. He ran up a mountain, dug a hole, and shouted in it.”

Subaru cupped his hands and shouted, “the king has donkey ears for ears!!! He shouted again and again. At last, even the trees around him recorded it. He then made a flute out of those trees, and blowing into it would make the sound ‘the king has donkey ears for ears.’ In the end, because all the citizens of that country used the flute, the secret now had become known to everyone.”

“Eh…?”

Although it was an interesting story, Rem was unable to understand the underlying lesson and looked at Subaru, puzzled.

At Rem’s expression, Subaru smiled.

“Rem’s forehead has an Oni’s horn!!!”

“!!!”

Subaru shouted once again, causing Rem to jump. Towards her reaction, Subaru patted his knees.

“The king was ashamed of his donkey ears, so he beheaded everyone who spilled his secret. Rem, are you ashamed of being an Oni?”

“N-No such thing. Rem being ashamed of her birth… something like that isn’t too big of a concern.”

“Would you find me telling your secret unforgivable?”

“No. Rem believes that Rem coming from the Oni tribe is something that doesn’t need to be kept hidden.”

Returning Subaru's gaze, she gave him a firm answer. Subaru sat back down.

"Then there's no problem! Since there's no possibility that Rem would harm me because of her origins, then I have no reason to be worried. Ahh… I'm relieved."

"B-But, the things Rem did to Subaru-kun—"

"If you anger a girl, you'll get an extremely scary stare. It's something that boys learn about from their fathers early on. Since it's my fault for forgetting such a thing, let's just call it even, ok?"

Such an outrageous sophistry left Rem speechless.

Subaru looked back to see Rem keeping silence, and continued, "Well… how's your trembling hand doing?"

"Ah…"

Her gaze fell on her hands after hearing those words. It was then Rem noticed her trembling had stopped. Even with the scissor's tip pointing at Subaru's head, her fingers did not have a trace of hesitation.

The kind of changes Subaru's words brought to Rem's heart were unknowable. After all, everything he'd said has had a major impact to Rem's feelings. Those unstoppable ripples stirred her heart.

But Rem knew without a doubt that her own timidness had been swallowed whole by the sickness of her heart and disappearing without a trace.

Knowing that Rem's trembling had stopped, Subaru relaxed and leaned his back on the chair, entrusting himself to Rem. He pointed at his head.

"Well, please give me a cool hairstyle. One that'll be handsome enough that Emilia-tan can't help but fawn over me."

The naive boy did not notice his words deeply stabbed into the girl's heart behind him. But even his innocence was something that she loved. Rem smiled.

“…Subaru-kun, no matter when, is always fascinating.”

One Day I

Withdrawal Symptoms

1

—Three days have passed since the Witchbeast Forest incident and Subaru's promise with Emilia. On this fateful morning,

"—No more. I'm at my limits here. I can't stand this. Send me back home!"

With a cry of pure anguish, Subaru pounds the dining table and rises from his seat. His sudden outbursts shatter the peaceful breakfast atmosphere, causing everyone to turn toward him.

With their curious gazes on him, Subaru wearily spreads his arms,

"Ahh, this is, the end."

With a frail whisper, he drops his head into his hands and crumples backwards. As he plunges, Rem, who sat to his left, skillfully catches him. With perfect timing, she pulls back his chair and stops his descent,

"Please be careful, Subaru-kun. Rem will worry if Subaru-kun pushes himself too hard while recovering."

Gently patting his slumped shoulders, Rem voices her devotion and concern. From behind, she affectionately traces a finger across his jawline. While Rem's skinship seems rather excessive, for the last few days, this has been the norm. After declaring that she would "see to Subaru-kun around the clock while he recovers," this level of intimacy was an everyday occurrence.

Despite the amorous touch of this beautiful maid, Subaru coldly unravels her finger from his chin. "No, no, no," he mutters, shaking his head weakly,

"That's not it… this is way more serious."

Subaru gravely replies as his body collapses onto the table. Of course, he shoves away any stray dishes first. A calm Emilia, used to Subaru sitting next to her and causing such scenes, looks on with little urgency.

“Are you okay? Please tell me what’s wrong. I’ll do anything I can to help—isn’t that your line, Emilia-tan?”

“I’d tire myself out if I kept going along with Subaru like that. You know, if you do this too much, people will stop hearing you out.”

“Sniff, so strict. But that cold side-face is cute too… damnnit.”

With his head still resting on the table, Subaru appeals with fluttering, upturned eyes. But Emilia ruthlessly cuts him down, casually bringing some salad-like food to her mouth mid-conversation.

Seeing Subaru openly sulk, his face wrinkled with discontent, Rem energetically raises her hand,

“Yes, yes! Rem will listen to what Subaru-kun has to say. Rem will do it. Please order her. And when she succeeds, Rem doesn’t mind having her head petted, yes?”

“Praise me, praise me,” Rem seems to say, like a puppy excitedly wagging its tail. Smothered by the maid’s excessive appeals, Subaru further collapses onto the table, devolving into a shaky, mangled mess.

“But you know, you really do look like you’re struggling this time.”

Subaru’s face grows sickly and pale, sweat dripping readily from his forehead. Seeing this, even Emilia—or rather, especially the softhearted Emilia, can’t help but show concern.

With his fingers shaking so violently atop the dining table, Subaru’s condition was clearly abnormal.

“Could it be, after-effects from the curse…”

Fearing the worst, Emilia and Rem look toward each other. Eyes clouded with concern, Emilia reaches into her silver hair, plucking out a small, grey-furred cat.

With two dainty fingers, she rests the sleepy spirit onto the table in front of Subaru. After briefly rubbing his eyes, Puck sniffs about with his small, pink nose,

“Hmm, it doesn’t seem like anything Lia needs to worry about? Subaru’s mana is exhausted, so his vitality is pretty low, but other than that it’s the same as always.”

Lightly slapping at Subaru’s face with his paws, Puck calmly reports back. Suddenly, Subaru’s shaky fingers extend toward him. With Puck trapped between the palms of Subaru’s hands, a FLUFFING session begins.

“Auauaa—” Puck cries, but Emilia ignores him. With Subaru’s Fluffist rampage and Puck’s report, she breathes a deep sigh of relief.

But now they have no way to explain Subaru’s condition—

“Trembling fingertips, shallow breathing. My, it’s aaalmost as if he’s suffering from withdrawal. Possibly from some hiiighly addictive narcotic.”

As Emilia frowns in puzzlement, Roswaal, sitting at the head of table with a hand on his chin, takes a guess.

With a quick glance at Subaru’s condition, he pulls back his chin,

“Once a user stops taaaking such highly addictive substances, these sort of symptoms tend to occur. Of course, even in the royal capital, their use is increeedibly prohibited.”

“With no background, he was already suspicious. But to use illegal narcotics, Ram misjudged you, Barusu. Rem, move aside, your sister can’t kill him.”

“So you’re immediately doubting me, huh. Then again, I guess that’s the Ram-like thing to do here.”

Taking advantage of Roswaal's deduction, Ram maliciously overreacts. Subaru smiles wryly, impressed that something drug-like exists even here. Though their treatment as taboo seems to be the same as well.

It goes without saying that, even in his own world, Subaru never lived such an underground lifestyle. At worst, he lived the underdog life of a lonely NEET.

Thus, such narcotics are unrelated to the state of Subaru's body. Unrelated—but the "withdrawal symptoms" Roswaal spoke of were an exceedingly good lead.

Truthfully, he does indeed suffer something like withdrawal.

Subaru's body, his very soul yearns eternally for-

"…aise, I need it."

Subaru mutters faintly, his right hand still skillfully fluffing Puck. Everyone's eyes fall on the collapsed heap that is Subaru's body.

The only one to barely hear him is the nearby Emilia. On his opposite side, Rem fails to hear because her head was tilted away. Dissatisfied, her lips curl into a small pout.

Oblivious to Rem's pouting, Emilia moves to catch Subaru's fleeting words. Bringing her ear towards his face, she strives to catch even the feeblest of breaths.

But, as if betraying her efforts, Subaru's eyes suddenly shine, and he flings himself up like a spring.

Shocked, a medley of different-colored eyes rise to meet him. Amongst them, Subaru screams to the heavens,

"—MAYONNAISE, I NEED IT!!"

With the appearance of this unknown word, the onlookers could only tilt their heads in confusion.

2

—Natsuki Subaru is a genuine Mayo Lover.

[Mayo Lover], a venerable title granted only to those who love mayonnaise above all else. An army of culinary heretics, topping every food imaginable with mayonnaise is their justice.

Adding mayonnaise—commonly referred to as “mayo-ing,” came to the world alongside the title of “Mayo Lover,”—is probably how it happened. By those lines, Natsuki Subaru is undoubtedly a true Mayo Lover.

His history with mayonnaise dates back as far as the lactation period. Alongside him, the entire Natsuki household is utterly enthralled by mayonnaise. To have a meal without bottles of it set aside is simply unimaginable.

Cramming the refrigerator with reserve mayonnaise was a given. Each member also marked their name on their own personal bottles. Slurping mayonnaise straight from the bottle after a bath, the so-called [Mayo-chuchu], was a daily occurrence as well.

Fried chicken with mayo. Salad with, of course, mayo. Gyoza and fries and dessert all with mayo. When you’re troubled, add mayo. If you’re bored, add mayo.

—As a proud, natural-born Mayo Lover, Natsuki Subaru lived by this code of conduct.

Subaru came to this parallel world roughly one week ago,—though in his perspective, it has been almost a month. One whole month without this essential nutrient, his veritable soulmate.

Spirit wearing away, fingers trembling, tongue begging for oil and calories, eyesight blurry and failing—these are the withdrawal symptoms of a Mayo Lover. They ruthlessly eat away at Subaru’s body, forcefully dragging him deep into a sea of agony.

“And that is the White Lover—Mayonnaise.”

So ends Subaru’s tale of his long, long relationship with his [Lover].

To everyone who listened, he gives each a curt bow, then promptly collapses back into his chair. Overpowered by his incredible passion, they struggle to digest what had just occurred. The first to snap back to reality, Emilia crosses her arms,

“So… basically, you’re quibbling over a condiment you liked?”

“Emilia-tan, you just don’t understand!!”

At her words, Subaru flies into a rage, slamming the table. Still firmly grasped in his hand, Puck lets out a shrill “munyaa—.” But with his emotions at a boil, Subaru fails to notice,

“To a Mayo Lover, even a day without mayonnaise is a glimpse of hell itself. And I’ve suffered twenty-… no, a whole week of it. A normal person would’ve gone mad by now. It’s only because of my inhuman mental fortitude that I’ve survived up until now, but… I’m at my limits.”

“Ar-, aren’t you just exaggerating? About going mad, and…”

“If I was acting, would my hands and feet be trembling like this…? Please believe me, Emilia-tan. Without mayonnaise, my body can’t survive.”

It’s commonly said that the oils in mayonnaise are akin to pure endorphins—consuming this substance channels the purest of pleasures directly to the brain, giving birth to the Mayo Lover.

Thus, Roswaal’s guess was very close to the mark. To Subaru, quitting mayonnaise causes a strain not unlike withdrawal symptoms.

Pushed back by this unfamiliar seriousness, Emilia is at a loss for words. In front of her, Subaru had always maintained a frivolous attitude. That same Subaru now faces her as if his life is on the line. His intense passion, that unrivaled obsession, for laughing and trivializing them, Emilia feels greatly ashamed. She’s fallen completely into the palm of his hand.

“Well, even without mayonnaise, food is still delicious, very delicious even. This thing that tastes like bread, and this soup-like liquid, that bowl of pseudo-salad, coupled with a dubiously water-ish beverage, it all tastes delicious, incredibly delicious—but, it isn't mayonnaise."

Pointing toward each item in their luxurious menu, an anguished Subaru cradles his head. His short hairs pierce at Puck, still trapped in his right hand. "It's all prickly—" he complains, but Subaru, lost deep in his sorrow, cannot hear him.

The greed of man knows no limits.

Since coming to this world, Subaru's only desire was for these peaceful days to continue. To stand at Emilia's side, to be surrounded by happy, smiling faces, to live each day peacefully and uneventfully. Having desperately clawed beyond times of pain and despair, Subaru's inner NEET dreamed only of peace.

But after overcoming crisis after crisis and reaching these precious days, an insatiable hunger overwhelms Subaru, screaming "it's not enough!"

Disgusting. This ruinous human greed, is utterly disgusting.

Wasn't he supposed to be satisfied with these peaceful days? Those which he so desired, and then finally grasped. Satisfied with this gift, can't he just sink back into sloth and complacency?

—no, absolutely not.

As Subaru descends into a sea of laziness, a booming voice calls out to him. He wonders whose it is, only to realize that it is his own. Within his heart, passionately, powerfully, violently, the voice echos. "Now," it cries, pushing onward the stalled Subaru,

Advance, advance, advance—toward an insatiable greed.

Onward, onward, onward—past the coveted days you strived to claim, go forth beyond and aim for more.

Thus, Natsuki Subaru's pursuit continues.

After escaping the endless loop of deaths, saving the twins and Roswaal from disaster, and reaching the promised date with Emilia.

Now is the time to dream a new dream.

“I was aimless, goalless, lacking a purpose in life. But now, this is my new dream… That is, to bring mayonnaise to this world. What’s, wrong, with, that.”

To bring the white fairy to the dinner table, that is Subaru’s new purpose. Carefully listening to his quietly burning passion, the one to rise up and meet him is,

“Understood. Subaru-kun’s request, please leave it to Rem.”

Blue hair waving about, eyes sparkling like jewels, Rem comes to his call. Lately, she carries out absolutely any request Subaru asks of her. Out of gratitude, and probably for a slew of other reasons, she simply will not abandon Subaru in his time of need.

“In the first place, the task of managing the manor’s kitchen falls to Rem. If Rem’s cooking can’t satisfy Subaru-kun, it’s Rem’s duty to take appropriate measures. —isn’t that right?”

“You… will you do this with me, Rem!”

Subaru’s wet eyes look up toward Rem. Assuring him, she spreads her arms,

“Let us do it, Subaru-kun. Now, about the recipe…”

“—eh?”

“—eh?”

Facing each other, Rem and Subaru freeze solid.

Their jaws slacked open, they stare back at each other like fools.

Between Subaru’s hand and the dining table, the squashed mass that is Puck protests,

“It’s too heavy—”

In the cold silence of the dining hall, his grumbling is the only sound to be heard.

3

"'Oh, my body can't survive without it,' he says. Such big talk without even knowing the recipe. How appalling."

"I won't deny that. But as I was saying, do you perfectly understand your favorite dish's recipe? Don't change the topic on me."

"Ram's favorites are everything Rem makes. And since Rem knows the recipes, Ram doesn't need to. It's different from Barusu and that mayo-whatever that nobody's heard of."

Shortly after breakfast, in the now empty dining hall.

While clearing the dining table, Subaru and Ram engage back and forth in something that doesn't quite amount to an argument.

Subaru retrieves the tableware, passing it to Ram who stands behind him with a cart. In contrast to his abnormally slow pace, she transfers the tableware to the cart with a trained hand. Yet, despite their difference in speed, Ram waits on him without complaint.

Objectively, their routine was terribly inefficient, but this was part of Subaru's rehabilitation. In fact, Ram herself volunteered to assist Subaru's work.

After recovering, Subaru would eventually be reinstated as a servant of the Roswaal Manor. By taking on simple chores everyday, he'd grow accustomed to the work and acclimate back to health. This was his duty for the past few days.

Originally, Rem grandly declared herself as Subaru's aide. However, since work would be delayed all throughout the manor, she was instantly rejected.

In comparison to Ram, setting Rem aside as Subaru's aide would be devastating. Considering she manages roughly 90% of the work, the loss of her fighting potential would be like running the manor at 10%. To no one's surprise, her request was immediately shot down.

“If only she was more self-aware about that. It’d definitely help her self-esteem.”

Wiping down the dining table, Subaru laments with a light sigh.

The manor depends on Rem for the majority of its chores. Though Ram doesn’t slack off either, there exists an undeniable difference in ability.

And yet, Rem’s self-deprecating nature refuses to change. In a sense, her self-worth comes not from within, but from others—with Subaru as the main provider, as of late. Though her praise-seeking behavior could be seen as a sort of progress.

“Then again, the 24/7 barrage of [How is it?], [Did Rem do well?], [It isn’t strange, is it?], [Is it tasty, Subaru-kun?], [Rem doesn’t mind being praised, yes?], [Praise me, praise me, praise me] is really wearing me out.”

Though Subaru himself allowed it, the weight with which Rem leans on him is immense and crushing.

After keeping to herself for so long, Rem was like an explosion. Subaru just hopes that, like an explosion, her extreme forwardness will be a brief phase. If this goes on for much longer, with his body still recovering, he’d stand no chance.

Be that as it may, Subaru can’t just bluntly shake Rem off, especially since his feelings for her have started to bloom.

“…That child’s stubborn inferiority complex is dyed straight into the wool. It must be from our childhood, when Ram was a bit too much of a prodigy.”

“Isn’t it a bit much to call yourself a prodigy, especially in the past tense? How big-headed does someone need to be to make a claim like that?”

“If Ram was still in her prime, everything above Barusu’s neck would be gone by now… Honestly, why does Ram have to hang her hopes on a man like Barusu.”

Ram sighs wearily. Tilting his head at her words, Subaru seeks an explanation. With a particularly disgusted look, she side-glances back,

“Up until now, all that existed in Rem’s world was Ram, Roswaal-sama, and the manor. While Emilia-sama and Beatrice-sama were in her scope as well, she probably didn’t attach much importance to them. As for anyone else, all the more.”

“Hmm, yeah, Rem does seem to have that kind of narrow-mindedness.”

This narrow-mindedness also explains why she rashly jumps to conclusions.

Secluded from the world, Rem resolves her problems internally, deciding everything by herself. As a victim of that dangerous thought process, this analysis is deeply etched in Subaru’s mind.

Looking back, he laments his poor conduct from that time.

“What are you staring at Ram for?”

“Why don’t you figure it out for yourself, Nee-sama.”

“Stop looking at Ram with those perverted eyes. We’re the same in terms of looks, so just do what you want with Rem instead.”

“That beautiful, sisterly love of yours isn’t beautiful at all, is it!”

“Well, putting that aside for now.”

Skillfully ignoring Subaru’s shouts, Ram swipes the cloth out from his hand. With a swift motion, she usurps his role and begins cleaning.

Subaru’s arm had given out from exhaustion some time ago. He tried to keep talking as an excuse for a break, but Ram saw through him. Feeling somewhat guilty, Subaru turns away from her as she works,

“So, what was that thing you were talking about?”

“Asking for an answer that you already know, Ram thinks that’s quite malicious.”

“Wouldn’t it be bad if we misunderstand each other? After all, it’s an established fact that I’m an oblivious guy who couldn’t read emotions to save his life. I’m Round Table class.

Though she doesn’t quite understand, Ram responds with a long sigh. Murmuring, she continues,

“—Rem’s small, narrow world, like a contamination, Barusu forced his way into it. If that contamination rampages enough, the walls of that child’s small world might push out just a bit. So dreams a beautiful girl named Ram.”

“Careful, that act of yours is starting to resemble me a bit too much. —Also, those dreams or whatever, don’t dump them onto me like that. I only do what I can, and sometimes I don’t even do that.”

Subaru’s motto is “To do or not to do? If you can’t decide, then don’t do anything.”

With this as his personal creed, he allowed countless potential events to slip past him. Subaru boasts his uselessness with a triumphant smirk. But with a curt “hmph,” Ram cooly scorns back,

“Unable to abandon the village children, much less leave Rem behind. And in the end, becoming a decoy to let Ram and Rem escape. Trying to act tough after all that, my, it gives Ram goosebumps.”

“Stop spelling out my deeds! Looking back, I’m so embarrassed, I could explode! Ugh, seriously, what’s wrong with me. I must’ve let the tension get to my head. That’s not me, goddamnit…”

Thinking back on his actions, a bashful Subaru crouches and furiously shakes his head. Though he managed to break out from the endless loops of death for the second time, Subaru was baffled by his various doings. Who is this crazy, hot-blooded youth, he asks, goosebumps forming all over.

“For the cool and gallant Natsuki Subaru, it’s just unbecoming. If I’d heroically taken care of everything myself, it’d be another story. But didn’t I just blow black smoke everywhere and let Ros-chi handle the rest?!”

“Well, logically speaking, that is how it was.”

“I knew it! I tried so hard too, damnit!”

After countless loops, this was the end result.

In reaching that result though, Subaru undoubtedly struggled. Yet, with no one aware of his suffering, everyone probably thinks “Oh, he just got involved by chance or something.”

Moreover, without landing a decisive blow of any sort, Subaru’s role amounts to “that guy who was just sort of there by chance.”

Most of all—

“Barusu was there. Sometimes that alone can save someone. You should know that.”

Soft, gentle words spill from Ram’s lips. Without her usual cynicism, nor any callous hatred, her words carried a genuine warmth and kindness. However-,

“Now that I think about it, that time with Reinhard, wasn’t I useless back then too?! Shielding Emilia-tan at the very end, was that all I did? Plus, that’s just being a meat tank. Even Rom-jii could’ve done that! I’m in despair—!”

Unfortunately, Ram’s words fail to reach Subaru as he grieves over his paltry achievements. Hanging his head, he sighs as if the world itself was ending. With an unpleasant scowl, Ram lets loose an explosive low kick, buckling his legs and sending him to the floor. Looking down at Subaru, Ram seems annoyed enough to spit on him,

“As expected, hanging any hope on a failure like Barusu is a lost cause.”

“So harsh! Well, I guess you’re not wrong though? But I wouldn’t mind if you had at least a little hope in me.”

Met with her hard stare, he snaps his fingers, then shapes them like pistols and playfully shoots at Ram. Blowing out the imaginary smoke wafting from his fingers,

“Expanding worlds or whatever, instead of relying on some stranger, you should do that yourself. Besides, being secluded in this cramped mansion, aren’t you the same as Rem? Boasting about your [Clairvoyance] when you don’t even know the names of the local village brats, what a joke.”

“…what are you-”

“You and Rem, your scopes are both too narrow. All you two ever do is look to each other for anything and everything. If you’ve gotta be together, instead of staring at each other, try walking alongside each other. That’s definitely more constructive and worthwhile.”

As Ram sinks into silence, Subaru snaps his fingers and flashes a bright smile. Adjusting the angle, he strikes his best pose,

“How’s that. Did my speech manage to convince you?”

“Enough that it’s unimaginable for Barusu and the person who cried over a condiment to be one and the same.”

So harsh, Subaru thinks, laughing bitterly. He takes a look around the hall,

“Well, let’s take our time with this. I’m sure Rem will eventually come around. After thinking and worrying for a while… one day, when she stops to look carefully, she’ll realize that compared to herself, Nee-sama’s totally inferior.”

“…yes. Ram hopes that day comes soon.”

With his teasing unexpectedly met with agreement, Subaru involuntarily falters. There wasn’t a hint of bluffing or falseness in her words. Ram spoke from her heart.

“What are you going to do if that day actually comes?”

“Even then, as the elder sister, Ram is to be respected. —That alone will never change.”

Hearing her refreshing declaration, Subaru decides not to press any further. Though he feels he’s been sticking his neck where it doesn’t belong since quite a while ago, he shoves the thought away.

Subaru sees that she’s finished working. He’s forced to recognize that, in the end, Ram took on the brunt of the work. Subaru’s recovery still has a ways to go. As for hiding his weakness, even more so.

“I can’t let Emilia-tan and Rem see me like this after all.”

He doesn’t want the former to see his weakness. He doesn’t want the latter to feel guilt and indebtedness. Both feelings stem from his stubbornness as a man. “To do or not to do? Stop worrying and just do it,” he decides.

“Although, as her older sister, Ram isn’t happy with Barusu’s mayo-whatever adding to Rem’s workload.”

“Right now, Rem’s goals are all fuzzy and vague, so she’s trying too hard in every direction. She’ll overwork herself and collapse at this rate. But if we give her just one clear goal, she’ll be able to focus her efforts on it. Rem’s got tunnel vision after all.”

While seemingly calm and collected, once she sets her heart on something, Rem single-mindedly pursues it.

Right now, her mind is undoubtedly stuck on completing Subaru’s fabled condiment. With a lowered focus on her other tasks, hopefully Rem will unconsciously ease up on herself.

Ram looks genuinely impressed with his answer, her eyebrows raised high,

“How surprising for Barusu to think so far. And even spout all that nonsense.”

“If you’re going to praise me, could you at least put some feeling into it?! Besides, right now, my soul yearns for the [White Lover].

—For both Rem and I, isn't this plan a Win-Win?"

"Uin-Uin?"

As Subaru twists his body about, chanting "Win-Win," a rare look of bewilderment emerges on Ram's face.

Without having to worry about indebtedness or weakness or any special care, for Subaru, talking with Ram is refreshingly easy. Enjoying their conversation amidst a comfortable weariness, Subaru pushes his weight off from the dining table,

"Okay, on to the next task. Let's see—"

With the dining hall cleaned up, for now they could go help Rem.

—At that moment, the doors to the dining hall fling open.

"Subaru-kun! Nee-sama!"

Beyond the doors, Rem's face shines with a brilliant smile.

Short of breath, her shoulders swaying, Rem looks around the clean dining hall and nods excitedly,

"It appears the dining hall is all tidied up. —In that case, we've finished our work for the morning."

Usually, their morning work would take almost two more hours. Yet Rem declares that they're already done.

Imagining her lightning-fast pace, Subaru and Ram can't help but look on in shock. In front of them, Rem smiles, arms widely stretched out,

"Well then, let us immediately start on Subaru-kun's [mayanaize]! Rem worked hard, so we can try many times before lunch!"

In high spirits, the blue-haired girl claps with delight.

Poking out above her radiant smile, beside her white headdress, lies a brilliantly pure white horn.

“To make her use her Oni transformation… weren’t you trying to stop her from overworking.”

“Hey, the way you brought her up isn’t blameless either.”

Staring each other down, Subaru and Ram maliciously point out the other’s mistakes. Watching over them, a curious Rem tilts her head.

Atop her tilted head, Rem’s white horn glistens brilliantly with the sun’s morning rays.

The First Mayonnaise Disturbance

1

“If we’re going to make the very best mayonnaise, the best there ever was, there are some ingredients we absolutely need! The first is a burning love and passion!”

“Yes, please leave it to Rem.”

“Just get to the recipe already.”

As Subaru clenches his fist dramatically, the twins sandwich him with polar opposite reactions. At the moment, Subaru stands in the kitchen, a plain apron draped over his butler’s suit. Joining him in his valiant quest for mayonnaise, Rem gazes back at Subaru with an ardent fire in her eyes (though thankfully, her horn stays hidden.) On the other hand, Ram doesn’t even bother hiding her bored, listless face (currently washing dishes.)

“My knowledge is honestly kind of shaky, but I have a feeling it only took a few ingredients to make.”

“All we need to do is mix the ingredients together, so the difficulty level should be fairly low. If the recipe had called for curing or fermenting, this whole exercise would have been hopeless though.”

“It really wasn’t that tricky of a process. Damn, if only I’d paid more attention when Mom made it at home.”

It was far too late to worry about at this point.

“It’s, mayo makin’ time!”, his enthusiastic mother suddenly spouted one day. Back then, Subaru didn’t notice her gathering any particularly special ingredients. Then again, her homemade mayonnaise was a complete failure, and his mother, sick and tired of trying, eventually settled for a store-bought brand.

“If anything, only Dad was persistent enough to have a shot. In the end, he single-handedly finished the homemade mayonnaise, but he thought it was still inferior to the store-bought kind. It never even made it to the dinner table."

Subaru's father took responsibility for the botched home cooking and personally disposed of it.

Thinking back, as a self-proclaimed Mayo Fanatic, Subaru regrets not tasting it to discover just what was so different from the store bought kind. But again, it was far too late to worry about.

To think though, that after all this time, Subaru himself would go head to head with homemade mayonnaise. —The blood of Mayo Fanatics truly runs deep.

"Alright, that's enough reminiscing. Let's go over what we'll need besides love and passion. Let's see, first and foremost we've just gotta have eggs."

When you think mayonnaise, you think eggs. To Subaru who is just as fanatical about egg dishes, the egg is a sacred ingredient, one he can't possibly live without. Amen.

"From Subaru-kun's description, it seemed like fowl eggs were most suitable, so Rem prepared them for today. They are the same ones Rem uses in her everyday cooking."

"That's probably for the best. Striking out a weird, novel path is the first step to an upset stomach. Besides, the ingredients are just a bit different here. That alone worries me."

With this world's unique ecosystem, it'd be unreasonable to prude over using the exact same ingredients. While they have similar uses, one must remember that they're not one and the same. Subaru had a feeling that even a small side trip could devolve into an epically Bizarre Adventure.

"Cooking is a science afterall. I'd rather handle this carefully like a science experiment, not a free-spirited adventure into the culinary world."

"If Subaru-kun had wished it, Rem would have brought higher quality ingredients."

"If we put any real money into a hit-or-miss operation like this, you know we'll just go bankrupt right? Also, what the heck would a 'higher quality' egg even come from? Some sort of brand name chicken?"

"Winged dragon eggs and other top class items, Rem knows a market that sometimes sell them."

"Using dragon eggs to make mayonnaise?! What the hell is that, it sounds terrifying! Besides, doesn't this country worship dragons?!"

How could a country that reveres The Dragon be gobbling up his kin, Subaru wonders. Ram sighs wearily at his ignorance,

"Does Barusu really think dragons and The Dragon are one and the same? Listen, there exists an insurmountable wall between The Dragon and some common dragon you'd find anywhere. Understand?"

"Listening to this is just making me even more confused… so basically, normal dragons and The Dragon are treated differently?"

Isn't that obvious?, Ram seems to say as she listlessly shrugs back. As Subaru glares back with a sour face, Rem pulls on his sleeve, raising her gaze up toward him.

"As Nee-san says, there is no reason to worry. If Subaru-kun wants, Rem will go procure winged dragon eggs right this second…"

"Hearing you say 'procure,' I can't tell if you'll be hunting for them in a market or a bonafide nest! For now, we should start with chicken eggs. If they turn out to be no good, then I'll ask you for the dragon eggs."

With his commoner's tongue and taste for cheaper foods, Subaru doubts they would tread such an absurdly extravagant path. But the sight of a heartbroken Rem, shrinking ever smaller in disappointment, keeps him from rejecting it outright. Hearing her proposal merely put on hold, Rem lifts her head, her face lighting right back up.

"Anyways, presenting the second sacred ingredient, cooking oil!"

"The manor keeps a sizeable stock for everyday use. It should be alright even when Barusu wastes it by the vaseful."

"Actually, now that I think about it, is it really alright to be using the manor's stock like this?"

Subaru had neglected mentioning his mission to Roswaal, but he figured it was selfless enough that the lord wouldn't mind.

At the same time, going overboard and sowing the seeds of discontent—Subaru wanted to avoid this at all costs.

"Please be at ease. Any ingredients used today, Rem will pay for them. Subaru-kun won't need to worry about anything."

"I almost went along with your kindness, but now that I think things through, doesn't this make me the epitome of human scum?!"

Hearing Rem so unhesitant to dip into her personal savings, Subaru desperately begs her to take back half the expenses once he gets his paycheck. Rem, who had planned to take the whole brunt of the costs herself, wouldn't yield any further than this.

In the face of Rem's overly selfless dedication, Subaru feels pangs of concern for her. Beyond his vision, Ram watches their conversation with suspicious eyes, her mood rapidly boiling from absolute zero to extreme danger level. With the overly-attached Rem by his side, Subaru holds back a sigh, continuing on with the mayonnaise briefing.

"Well, that should be it for the major ingredients. All that's left is, umm, well first there's salt."

"Solte, is it?"

"And then some pepper?"

"The peppa is right here."

“Sugar… I don’t remember needing any, but might as well have it out.”

“Sugar is prepared as well.”

“I wonder why sugar’s the only one that stays the same…”

With a medley of spices lined up before him, Subaru puts a hand to his chin with an enthusiastic “Alright!”

Eggs and oil, as well as a number of seasonings—Subaru feels that this was just about everything. The main problem, how should he go about mixing them, and in what amounts?

“Well, Rome wasn’t built in a day. Let’s take any mistakes in stride as we do this.”

“Yes, understood. So, if a mistake, if Rem makes one, don’t… please don’t throw Rem away…”

“Whooa! Why do you look like you’re going to cry?!”

Grasping Subaru’s sleeve with her small hands, Rem’s delicate frame silently trembles in horror. For a girl who judges herself so harshly, an exercise that guarantees failure might be too much for her.

In a sense, this trial-and-error approach is Rem’s natural enemy. Trying to comfort the rapidly shaking Rem, Subaru says with a nod,

“You know what? Accepting failure right from the start, that’s a loser’s attitude. Let’s take this on like it’ll work out in one fell swoop! Besides, I’m the type that can’t read the atmosphere and somehow succeeds the first time around. This’ll be cake.”

Subaru puts on a bold face, but his mind is drenched in a cold sweat as he turns toward the ingredients.

With a concerned Rem watching over him, he could no longer just haphazardly mix things together.

The anxiety from the last few days—all of it rushes back to Subaru, his heart pumping at an astonishing rate.

“This kitchen’s like a battlefield… Alright, let’s do this. Rem, gimme an egg.”

“Yes. Will two hundred be enough for you, Subaru-kun?”

“Do I look like I want to swim in mayonnaise?! One’s enough!”

Rem carries a basket with a bonafide mountain of eggs, conveying her brimming enthusiasm. Blinded by her brilliance, Subaru flinches back as he sheepishly retrieves a single egg. For now, he cracks its contents into a nearby bowl and begins cooking.

Subaru tosses what seems like a reasonable amount of salt and pepper into the bowl. He can’t show any hesitation. Next to him, Rem watches his performance with hopeful, expectant eyes. Wavering here and filling those eyes with tears, that would be inexcusable.

With a strange pressure on his back, Subaru has no choice but to believe in himself and his parents’ guidance. In a flurry, he starts mixing the egg and seasonings, introducing oil after they feel reasonably mixed. It’s all coming back now. Yes, when it comes down to it, you just have to keep mixing, mixing, mixing—is what his parents probably said at one point.

Adding oil, adding more oil. With a passion that could burn the contents of the bowl, Subaru single-mindedly pours oil. And, as if avenging the efforts of his fallen parents, he furiously mixes.

His breath shortens, sweat drips from forehead to jaw, his field of vision goes white. Even then, clawing desperately toward a frontier unknown, unreachable to man, Subaru pours his very soul into mixing and mixing and mixing.

Sound grows distant, color fades from the world. But in return, his senses sharpen. Subaru’s skin tingles from the slightest perturbations in the air as he stares single-mindedly at the bowl of mayonnaise. And then,

“It separated.”

Love and passion weren’t enough after all.

2

—The quest for mayonnaise feverishly continues.

Yet no matter how you’d mince it, Subaru’s efforts were met with complete and utter defeat.

How many eggs have been sacrificed toward the venerable mountain of failures emerging in this kitchen? No, rather than a mountain, it was more like a yellowish, whitish sea of blasphemy, appalling any who lay eyes on it.

Having already lost dozens of eggs to this detestable sea, Subaru could no longer bear such callous wastefulness of life.

“Damnnit! It’s not even close! How could this be! The method should be about right… What am I lacking?! Damn. In my efforts to bring mayonnaise to another world, who would have thought that the world itself would rebel against me—?!”

After being summoned to another world, using one’s knowledge to bring about a culture shock, Subaru coveted such an event.

In spite of himself, the uncultured, inexperienced Subaru did not anticipate so many pitfalls along the way.

“Damn, I underestimated the unreasonable nature of this cruel, fickle world. If just making mayonnaise strains my soul this far, anything more ambitious is just impossible.”

The encroaching despair threatens to snap his heart in half.

And yet, even after facing such crushing disappointment time and time again, Subaru’s heart has stayed strong. Even when reaching and reaching for a place his hands could not seem to grasp.

But to think that he would revisit this feeling just from making mayonnaise—

“Wow, when I think about it, I despair a lot, don’t I.”

A torrent of heart-wrenching, despair-inducing experiences come up in recent memory.

Unfortunately, no matter how many of these experiences Subaru accumulates, he won’t gain any sort of resistance to them, nor will he somehow level up. It was truly a pointless parameter to be raising so thoroughly.

Such thoughts invade Subaru’s mind as he suffers failure by the bowlful. Fearing his attitude only invites beratement from Ram and disappointment in Rem, he quickly glances towards the twins.

“The consistency and texture appear to be improving, but the taste is unacceptable. What does Nee-sama think?”

“Drizzle the cooking oil gradually over time, seasoning with solte and peppa to taste. Mixing looks to require quite a bit of patience, so Ram isn’t suitable for it.”

Rem and Ram whisk away while chatting casually. To top it off, when Subaru sneaks a peek at their bowls,

“Wait wait wait what? I’m the one with actual experience with the stuff, so why do yours actually look like mayonnaise?!”

In their bowls, a highly viscous substance emerges. Though Ram’s creation seems slightly closer to the real deal.

“Wh-, why?”

“This is the difference between those who cook and those who don’t. A trifling lack of knowledge poses no problem at all to a seasoned veteran. Know your place.”

“You say that, but have I ever seen you make anything besides steamed yams?!”

Subaru talks back like a sore loser, but Ram, with a bored expression, appears largely unfazed.

On the other hand, Subaru, seeing how far behind he is, falls ever further into despair. Rem puts on a smile and tries to cheer him up, “It’s okay. Subaru-kun should use the methods Subaru-kun believes in. Even if Rem views Subaru-kun’s technique as irrational, and it seems illogical next to basic cooking theory, and honestly Rem does think Subaru-kun’s cooking is inexcusable to the eggs. That’s just how Subaru-kun lives his life.”

“So it’s finally come, the unintended criticisms that stab like knives to the heart! And you even take a stab at my way of life?! I don’t wanna be judged like this just for trying to make goddamn mayonnaise!”

Subaru yells back at Rem who tries, and fails spectacularly, to support him. He goes back to inspecting the twins’ bowls of proto-mayo.

Eyes like saucers, Subaru watches as they mix while slowly pouring oil a little at a time.

“Ooohh, now I get it. You can’t just dump it all in at once.”

“If too much is poured at once, the mixture separates too quickly. Also, the recipe seems to call for consistent mixing. Requiring both patience and perseverance—quite a compelling dish.”

“Wow! Amazing! Rem, you’re amazing! You did a good job! You did a great job! Good girl, good girl, WONDERFUL!”

Subaru’s lighthearted compliments quickly raise Rem’s spirits. Hearing his words, her face lights up. “I-, is that so~” she asks back with an embarrassed smile.

While quite a handful, Rem’s personality is becoming noticeably easy to handle.

“Of course, the whole point of the mayonnaise was to make me look good.”

Due to his poor self-esteem, Subaru constantly looks for ways to get praise from others. And with some self-confidence, he could finally escape from ‘helpless little doggie’ status—is what Subaru saw a lot of in manga and games.

But with Rem single-handedly running the manor like clockwork, Subaru hardly ever has a chance to prove himself. And even then she probably thinks to herself, “Not yet, there’s no doubt that Rem can go further.”

For that reason, Subaru challenged mayonnaise.

But conceding guaranteed failure without Rem, Subaru enlisted her, hoping that she would gain at least a little confidence as well.

Those were Subaru’s motivations for this operation. It definitely wasn’t just for selfish, personal gain.

“But if you do even better than me, then what’s the point? Damn, you’re really messing with the wind beneath my wings.”

“If we’re talking about messing with wind, that would be Ram’s specialty. Barusu, take a look at Ram’s bowl.”

With a scornful tone, Ram arrogantly shows off its contents. Within her bowl, a small cyclone of wind spins rapidly. The torrent manipulates the whisk’s end, stirring at a truly inhuman pace.

Seeing the proto-mayo slowly transform from the fierce wind, a smiling Subaru nods,

“These skills of yours are way too enviable.”

“Physical aptitude aside, isn’t Ram’s sharp mind a given? Barusu on the other hand…”

After snidely side glancing toward Subaru, Ram turns her attention to Rem. Oblivious to her gaze, Rem continues whisking away as if her very life was on the line.

Seeing her little sister’s determined face, Ram’s lips form a slight smile.

“When depended on, one wants to show an impressive side of themselves. Ram’s tiny pride as an older sister—does Barusu have anything that even comes close to matching it?”

While inferior to Rem in terms of ability, Ram still carries herself as her older sister.

In her own way, Ram still takes the lead and guides Rem. Of course, her only superior quality is her excessive rudeness.

“In the end, if you finish this off, it won’t do any good for Rem’s self-esteem. Like this, it’ll just be an endless loop of ‘As expected, Onee-sama is amazing. In comparison, Rem is just…’ And I doubt you want her clinging to me either.”

Subaru can’t afford to let Rem’s attachment get any more extreme. If her praise-seeking escalates any further, one day he’ll be going to the toilet, and Rem will follow after him, offering to wipe his butt. Nightmare fuel.

As Subaru desperately pushes away his fears, Ram mutters “How would that ever happen” with a sigh.

“Ram can’t spare any more mana. Anyway, if a path is shown to Rem, she can walk it on her own. Having discovered that path, Ram’s pride is preserved as well. Will that be enough of a compromise, Barusu?”

“Definitely not a cute way to put it, nee-sama. —Wait, have you actually been pushing yourself?”

Back in the forest, Ram used wind magic to the point where she couldn’t even move.

If this operation put a burden on her again, then it would partly be Subaru’s fault. However, Ram shakes her head at Subaru’s concern.

“Ram honestly sees no benefit in going further. Even if Ram finishes the mayonnaise, it would only make Barusu happy. Ughhh, the very thought is sickening. Ram will stop this very second.”

Ram carelessly tosses her bowl into the sink, yielding with a rather refreshing sportsmanship. Yet, no matter what her true intentions are, she still manages to enrage Subaru.

“Nee-sama?”

“Rem. Your sister is tired and will be dropping out. Ram will be drinking tea in the dining hall. Just keep Barusu company until lunchtime.”

Ram leaves the rest to her hard working sister as she leaves the galley. Shocked by her audacity, a sighing Subaru retrieves her bowl.

“What a waste. She didn’t have to throw it out. How many baby chicks does she think I’ve sacrificed without even getting this far?”

Subaru’s failure streak is beginning to look pitiful. Upset, he sticks a finger into the bowl and brings some yellowish proto-mayo to his mouth.

“The texture’s just about there, but… bleh, something’s just not right with it.”

Rich in oiliness, similar in appearance, the contents seem very close to true mayonnaise. And yet, with this taste, it might as well be a different food altogether.

It lacks something, but not additional salt and pepper.

They required more than just seasoning—something fundamental is missing.

“It needs something. What is it, I don’t have a clue… sweetness, spiciness, saltiness, it doesn’t feel like any of those.”

Subaru tastes the mix over and over but can only cock his head in puzzlement. The proto-mayo’s incomplete flavor, the more he tries it, the more disgusting its oiliness seems to become.

At his side, Rem joins his taste-testing. Eyes closed, she scrutinizes the flavor spreading in her mouth. Deep in thought, she mutters a simple “hmmm.”

Appearance-wise, it’s really close. The problem is this very last step, deciphering the final ingredient. Subaru’s thoughts are interrupted when Rem, eyes popped open, utters a single word.

"—sourness."

"Hwa?"

"Judging by this taste, adding a little sourness should greatly enhance the flavor."

Blinking at Rem's proposal, Subaru suffers another mouthful of proto-mayo to check.

Alongside its rich oiliness, a purely disgusting feeling spreads in his mouth. But what if a tongue-numbing sourness was introduced? From this holy marriage, a pair of angel's wings emerge, and the proto-mayo takes flight toward a bright blue sky. He can finally see the answer.

"Sourness! Of course, sourness! We need sourness! What, what should we add?! Sour things, sour things… like oranges?!"

"Lemomu fruits or vinegie, Rem thinks these would work best."

"Lemon juice or vinegar! I think so too! If this works, it'll be like a dream!"

Trusting Rem's judgement, Subaru pulls out a number of seasonings. And after crushing and juicing several lemon-like fruits, a relentlessly insipid smell surges through the galley.

With both sources of sourness prepared, he nods to Rem. Subaru takes the lemomu juice and the bowl Ram threw out. Meanwhile, Rem adds the vinegie to her own bowl.

"All that's left is to stir like maniacs! Until our very souls wear down to nothing…!"

In contrast to his feverish excitement, Subaru introduces the lemon juice slowly and delicately.

Adding to the proto-mayo little by little, Subaru desperately holds back his fiery passion. The dish is taking shape.

As he pours in his time, pours in his veritable love, before Subaru's eyes, the proto-mayo assumes its final form.

He nervously takes a breath, a sharp pain ringing in his dry throat.

And yet, Subaru seeks not water, but the viscous substance before him.

He turns back. Rem is with him. She gives him a nod, her trust and support in him unwavering.

Nodding back, Subaru turns toward the bowl. This strong oily smell, this sour aroma that lightly tickles his nose—there's no mistake. This is it! Subaru's inner Mayo Fanatic screams.

At this moment, Subaru cuts open an entirely new path—.

With a single finger, he scoops a sample.

Subaru stares lovingly at the thick, viscous substance that paints his finger a rich white, slowly bringing it to his mouth. Captivated, he sucks at his finger almost erotically. Thoroughly lapping up every drop, his lips smack spectacularly as they part from his finger.

An intoxicated look appears on his face. Finally, Subaru turns back toward Rem,

"—GROOOSSS!! It's a failure! This wasn't it at all! BLEH!!"

"Su-, Subaru-kun, are you okay?! Did you add too much lemomu juice?"

"Nononono, this was just fundamentally wrong! It's like how wasabi and mustard and habanero peppers all have different types of spiciness! This was the wrong sourness, a total Category Error!"

The sourness of lemomu juice yielded a catastrophic failure.

Desperately wiping the remaining proto-mayo from his tongue, Subaru lays his tear-filled eyes on Rem.

This final bowl contains the last of their hopes and dreams. But behind it, a crushing anxiety threatens eternal despair.

If Rem too fails, that would truly be the end. But after all they've been through, there was no turning back.

In Subaru's gaze, a glimmering, fleeting hope and a fearful defeatism swirl about in endless combat. Rem handles her bowl, fully aware of the sheer weight it carries.

Yet within her, a resolution to face the truth head on is born.

Taking a breath, the girl's face no longer shows hesitation. Her weak, dependent persona strips away. All that remains is a seeker of truth, a figure singlemindedly pursuing her objective.

"—Rem."

At Subaru's beckon, Rem slightly nods.

Between the two, words are no longer necessary.

Subaru's trust pushing her on, Rem slowly dips a finger into her bowl.

For a few seconds, she stares at the white fluid adhering to her fingertip, the world at a standstill. What ran through this girl's head in those few seconds—nobody knows.

Time moves forth and, without further hesitation, Rem consumes the proto-mayo. Her red tongue traverses her white finger seductively. A pink sigh shrouds her fingertip. Rem closes her eyes to experience the flavor.

A brief span of time, a fleeting encounter—yet an eternity seems to pass between them. And then, the girl opens her eyes. With an expressionless face, Subaru asks her.

And her answer—

"This new flavor born here today—we name thee Mayonnaise."

Scholars tell of this moment as the first step in the spread of Mayo Fanatics throughout the world.

3

By the time Subaru and Rem complete the mayonnaise, it is well past the point when they start preparing for lunch.

After briefly celebrating, their neglected obligations put a damper on their spirits. At that moment, a certain figure comes to their aide.

“Ram thought this would happen. Don’t worry, preparations have been made.”

Ram proudly stands before them with a plate of her specialty, steamed yams.

While her steamed yams honestly taste delicious, the thought of offering it as lunchtime cuisine, to an esteemed noble no less, seems somewhat questionable.

However! Mayonnaise, the root of this predicament, could very well be the solution.

“And so, this is the ultimate flavor, handed down by my people, called mayonnaise. Put it on the steamed yams, and you’ll experience its taste to the fullest. Give it a try!”

See, there’s a legitimate reason for this shabby-looking meal, Subaru’s conduct seems to say.

Atop the luxurious table, cradled by gorgeous tableware, lies a plain display of steamed yams topped with mayonnaise.

“Once agaaaain, this is quite a dish you’ve cooked up.”

“I wanted you all to understand the greatness of mayonnaise. To accentuate its flavor, I even forced Rem and Ram to serve only the bare essentials. If you’ve got any complaints, I’ll take full responsibility. And then-”

“And then?”

“My efforts from the majuu incident and today’s lunch, they’ll cancel out, and we'll call it even…!"

"It was the same when you saved Emilia-sama, but Subaru-kun sure is aaaawful at spending his rewards wisely."

Roswaal accepts Subaru's arrangement with a wry smile.

He easily saw through Subaru's half-decent explanation. Especially since behind Subaru, an apologetic-looking Rem squirms restlessly.

Beside her, Ram, who has absolutely no qualms with serving steamed yams, sticks her chest out in pride. Such courage.

As the conversation unfolds, Roswaal is not the only one to express reluctance. Subaru looks toward the person whose reaction most matters to him, only to find Emilia eyeing her plate cautiously.

"How is it Emilia-tan? Feel like eating?"

"It's my first time seeing something like this, so it's honestly a bit scary. But Rem guarantees its taste, and Subaru's so passionate about it, so I want to believe it's good."

Admittedly, it didn't have the kind of appearance that invites first-timers to try it without hesitation.

If it's come to this, let's just force someone who won't hold it against me too much, Subaru decides as he looks around the table.

"Hm? Where's Beako?"

"Beatrice-sama came in a while ago, but she turned around and left after seeing today's menu."

"That damn loli, I'll remember this…"

Leftovers are unacceptable, Subaru thinks, silently deciding to bring some mayo-yam to the library later.

In the end, without a vanguard to bravely lead the way, Subaru sighs, “Alright, there’s just no choice. Puck, you’re up.”

“What, me?”

Shaking his head bitterly, Subaru bestows the honor of vanguard to the small cat-like spirit.

Rem plates a smallish yam next to Emilia, Puck sitting cozily in front of it. He looks like he wants to rub his face with his paws and groom himself with his tail as usual, but resists while indoors.

Subaru’s intense gaze fixed on him, a troubled Puck looks to Emilia for help. However, Emilia can only look back with an apologetic face,

“Puck, please.”

“…I’m really weak to Lia’s requests. Guess I’ve got no choice.”

Puck reluctantly gives his head a light slap and turns to his yam.

He takes one last look with his beady, black eyes, his pink nose twitching as he casually mentions,

“By the way, if I were to die, then everything but Lia will be frozen in a violent maelstrom, as sworn in our contract… don’t forget okay?”

“Don’t reveal something that scary so casually. You won’t die, so stop worrying!”

Subaru yells back after what sounds like Puck’s final farewell. Puck leans his body toward the steamed yam and clings to it. Then, with his small mouth, he bites off a chunk,

“Nom nom, pretty tasty.”

“Hey, don’t just go for the yam, taste the mayonnaise too.”

“Saw through me eh? Well, here goes. Aah—n.”

His plan to eat just the yam portion revealed, Puck laughs nervously as he laps up the mayonnaise. As he chews at the mayo-yam, all eyes are on Puck.

While Subaru had a chance to approve the finished product, he had no idea how others would react to it. An overwhelming feeling of tension fills the air as everyone awaits Puck's reaction. And then, the grey, cat-like spirit slowly raises his face,

"—Hey, this actually tastes good."

Puck remarks as he lightly paws at his steamed yam, his print like a personal stamp of approval.

With that, lunchtime truly begins.

Emilia, who previously glared ever vigilantly at the steamed yam, gives in and stuffs a piece into her mouth. As she chews, the mayonnaise's rich, creamy texture envelopes her tongue,

"Oh, it's delicious. Wait, oh no, I can't stop myself."

As if enraptured by its taste, a troubled Emilia involuntarily shovels away at her yam.

With Roswaal also remarking "My, hoooow delicious," his royal tastes also seem satisfied. As a mayonnaise evangelist, Subaru could not hope for a better result.

"Alright, success! Rem, you did really great."

Overjoyed with the unexpectedly high rating, Subaru pats Rem's back. Still feeling troubled, Rem shakes her head at his praise,

"No no, Rem didn't do much of anything. These results are the fruits of Subaru-kun's efforts. Rem was even careless enough to forget about preparing lunch… without Nee-sama and Subaru-kun, Roswaal-sama would have surely scolded Rem."

"You don't need to always think so negatively. Ram and I can be at fault too, so why don't you look at yourself in a more positive light?"

Subaru can only shrug at Rem's poor evaluation of herself. In reality, Ram and Subaru's actions are the ones really worth reprimanding.

If anything, for convincing Rem to help with the mayonnaise and causing her such distress, Subaru feels that he should be the one apologizing.

"You know, it's all thanks to Rem that we finished the mayonnaise. With this, it's like a flower bloomed in a place called the dinner table. I'm honestly really grateful."

Subaru says, fully aware that this may devolve into a perpetual battle of praising and rebuking. Subaru decides to forcefully push an onslaught of compliments until she has no choice but to accept.

"—it's all, it's all thanks to Rem?"

Miraculously falling for his praise, Rem's face lights right back up.

In his mind, Subaru smiles wryly at her simple personality, but he accepts it as one of her cuter points.

"Yeah, that's right. Without Rem, it would've been flat out impossible. Take pride in yourself."

"Was Rem useful to Subaru-kun?"

"Oh, absolutely. As a true blue mayo-addict, you saved my life. I was seriously at critical danger level, you know?"

"Critical danger level…"

"It was at the point where I'd have died if I didn't practically swim in the stuff. But thanks to you, my life goes on. Thank you God, Buddha, Rem-sama, Emilia-tan."

The ridiculousness of Subaru's praise seems to know no bounds.

But Rem gazes at him with a serious face and nods energetically,

"Understood. Please leave it to Rem."

"—Hm? Alright. I'll leave it all to you!"

Subaru doesn't quite know what she means, but he's onboard for anything that helps her self-esteem.

He gives her a thumbs up as he heads toward the spot next to Emilia, coveting more praise for the meal.

Unbeknownst to Subaru, Rem quietly concocts her plan as she makes a guts pose behind him.

4

—Early next morning

The daily life of a servant starts exceptionally early. Subaru fights back a yawn as he gets out of bed and makes his way down the hall.

While yesterday was tough, bringing mayonnaise into this world was a small miracle.

From now on, Subaru's meals will be replete with the viscous, oily nectar. It's all thanks to Rem.

"Oh hey, speak of the devil. Mornin' Rem-rin."

"—ah, Subaru-kun. Good morning to you."

Apparently having woken up before Subaru, Rem excitedly hops towards him from the other end of the hall.

Face brimming with light, she looks expectantly at Subaru as if waiting for his response.

"Oh yeah, thanks a lot for yesterday. It's thanks to you that I got to re-experience a flavor from my hometown."

"No, it wasn't much. If Rem was able to be of use to Subaru-kun, then that makes Rem happy beyond words. —It's okay to praise Rem though?"

An imaginary tail wags happily behind her. Softly plopping a hand on Rem's blue hair, Subaru gently strokes her head. Eyes closed and cooing softly, Rem looks to be in pure bliss.

Subaru suddenly feels like he's doing something incredibly lewd.

What in the world am I doing so early in the morning… he asks himself.

"Oh yes, Subaru-kun. Did Subaru-kun sweat a little while sleeping last night?"

"Huh, no way, do I smell? Yesterday was pretty hot, now that I think about it."

Subaru did indeed have some trouble sleeping last night. Shocked by Rem's discovery, he quickly raises an arm to his face.

Yet no matter how much he sniffs, he can't seem to notice any particularly strong stench. Subaru tilts his head in confusion.

But for Rem to point it out, it must be quite something.

"It'd be pretty embarrassing if Emilia-tan noticed too. I'll go wash up a bit."

"In that case, please make use of the bathhouse. If it's one of the smaller baths, using it in the morning should be no problem. —Rem will even wash Subaru-kun's back."

"Nah, that's alright. Girls should be more reserved about this sort of thing, okay?"

"How disappointing."

Passing it off as a joke, Rem withdraws. However, Subaru decides that accepting might actually be for the best. After all, if Rem goes so far as to suggest a bath, then perhaps the Smell radiating from his body is more akin to an unfathomable stench.

Because of Rem's fondness for him, this encounter wasn't so much an issue. If it had been Ram or Beatrice though… the very thought threatens to snap Subaru's delicate spirit in two.

“You know what, I’ll take you up on your offer.”

“Yes. —Please enjoy.”

A hidden intention lies in Rem’s reply. But Subaru, desperate to rid himself of his stench, doesn’t notice.

Parting with Rem, he quickly makes his way to the baths.

Taking a bath first thing in the morning, in a world where showers didn’t exist, it was quite the refreshing experience.

The life of a shut-in entails the very reversal of night and day. As a result, Subaru would always arrive at the bathhouse at unusual times, only able to take a quick shower.

In this world, taking a shower isn’t even possible. Moreover, with girls nearby, he couldn’t afford to look shabby and unkempt.

As a result, Subaru puts a little more effort into his grooming.

“But man, having the bathhouse all to myself, it’s oddly satisfying.”

Laying his eyes on the wide bathhouse, a nude Subaru pointlessly sticks his chest out in pride.

An enormous bath rivaling that of a public bathhouse’s fills the center of the room. Formed from a marble-like stone, it currently lies empty, awaiting its daily scrubbing. Subaru’s aim isn’t this massive tub but rather, a smaller one sitting in the corner of the bathhouse.

An economical bath, used in Roswaal’s absence. More than large enough for a single person, it also comes equipped with magic crystals to adjust the water temperature with ease.

Laying his eyes on the tub,

“A comfortably rising steam… Looks like Rem set it up just right for me.”

Subaru arrived at the baths after quickly heading to his room for a change of clothes. He supposes that during that time, Rem had quietly adjusted the water for him.

It would've been a light task considering her usual workload.

Alone in the baths and completely nude—with no one's eyes on him, an overwhelming excitement builds in Subaru's heart.

The result,

"First into the baths, it's Natsuki Subaru—This bath is all mine!"

Exhilarated, Subaru dashes through the bathhouse with a Hop, Step, Jump! Unafraid of slipping on the wet floor, his First Rate Specimen dangles and whips as he leaps gallantly—his body twirling in midair, Subaru dives straight into the bath.

And then,

"—BLUH?!"

Pluuooo, a viscous, almost alien sound is made as his body sinks into the bath.

Shocked by the unexpected feeling and warmth, Subaru's body writhes against the slimy liquid. He tries desperately to bring his face to the surface—His eyes refuse to open.

"What, what the hell?! What is this sensation, what is this situation?! Everything's all slimy! Oh my god! It's even getting in my wounds! This is bad, BUT WHY! Am I going to die here!"

Throwing himself out of the bath, Subaru rolls around violently and shrieks in terror.

With a sticky, viscous substance covering his body, every attempt at standing just causes him to slip and slip. When his hands press against the floor, they too just slip and slip and slip.

An indecipherable motive. A truly unexpected situation.

His eyes still closed shut, a world of utter darkness assaults Subaru as alarms blare in his mind. This encroaching fear for one's life, to taste it again after just a few days. Subaru berates himself.

How could he have been so stupid. How could he have been so careless. He had forgotten how cruelly and mercilessly this world's God plays with his destiny.

Oh, you thought you were safe? Sorry, BAD END!

Subaru curses himself for not seeing this coming.

Struggling to breathe, Subaru gasps as his eyes bulge at the bathhouse ceiling.

Sprawled out on the floor, his body coated in the viscous goop, Subaru desperately pushes his failing five senses to their utmost limit. His brain buzzes with a torrential whir.

His voice still rings. Maybe he could call for help. But what if this was a trap? If he calls for help, he'd just be leading his savior to their grave. But if he doesn't, then the perpetrator will most certainly come to finish him off. Unable to yell out—for a moment, he thinks of blindly dashing out like a wild animal.

Thoughts flying rapidly, Subaru breaks his train of thought,

"If I die, hide my body for three days…! In that time, make preparations for… hm?"

In a panic, Subaru gives his last rites. As his face writhes and folds, a peculiar sensation takes hold of his tongue.

Viscous, oily, and above all else, a hint of sourness—this is!

"—Rem! Rem! Get in here!"

"Yes! Did you call for Rem, Subaru-kun!"

As if she was standing right outside all along, Rem's voice immediately answers back.

She comes rushing toward Subaru, wiping his face of the viscous substance with a towel.

“How is it, the feeling of swimming in mayonnaise? Rem did her best to satisfy Subaru-kun’s request. —Rem doesn’t mind being praised?”

Praise me, praise me, her smiling face seems to say.

Standing up, Subaru uses the towel to wipe off the rest of his mayonnaise-laden body. And, returning Rem’s innocent smiling face with his own smile,

“ARE YOU AN IDIOT?!”

In the early hours of the morning, Subaru’s yells boom throughout the bathhouse.

Seeing his soulmate, mayonnaise, wasted so callously, Subaru feels a rage like no other. Eventually, an oversleeping Ram awakens as well. At her elder sister’s hands, an apologetically kneeling Rem suffers a lecture of unspeakable length, unspeakable severity, and unspeakable violence.

“It’s tasty, so it’d be nice if we always had some,” Emilia says in the aftermath. So it was decided that a sizeable stock of mayonnaise would always be maintained at the Roswaal manor.

In the end, the plan to use mayonnaise to boost Rem’s self-confidence backfired spectacularly. After this incident, Rem still bears a trauma toward mayonnaise. Despite her genuine skill in making it, it ultimately fell to Ram to produce mayonnaise for the manor.

Chapters 1-Interlude

Chapter 1:
A Peaceful Early Morning

1

“Here, over here! If you don’t hurry they’ll catch us.”

“I know, I’m saying I know already, wait—timeou…!”

Pulled by the arm, the two ran through the alley with poor footing.

It’s a small back alley. Even though it’s past noon the sunlight has yet to reach this area, the dimly lit dark alleys formed a complex maze as if to reject to two.

For Subaru who had no familiarity with this area this wasn’t a very amiable situation. If only the one leading knew the way, was all he wished for.

“We sure came down a dark path, do you know where you’re going?”

“No clue!”

After a refreshing amount of back-and-forth chatter, Subaru let out a defeated sigh as he brought a hand to his brow.

It was a response to be expected, after all the person pulling Subaru by the hand was dressed in a showy manner that one couldn’t help but think unfamiliar with the hidden back alleys.

A fluttering red dress made with expensive looking materials. A glittering necklace catching the light. The skin that peaked out was an elegant white, it was impossible to think her upbringing would have been any different.

Most of all, the coloring of her vivid orange-colored hair. The nobility of it claimed her presence as being laughably far-removed from this place in the slums.

Looking at this appearance once more, Subaru was once again convinced he had picked up a troublemaker.

Hearing the the multiple footsteps following behind them, this wasn't exactly the time to stop and catch his breath.

How did things come to this… this question filled Subaru's mind. Running out of breath, he grimaced as aching filled his lungs.

Subaru's current trouble all started around two days ago.

2

For Natsuki Subaru, morning was a time for sleeping, at the very least not a time for vigorous activity.

Even if it's too much of a stretch to say that he'd melt from showering in the morning's bright light, for the DNA making up Natsuki Subaru's body it certainly felt like dying. For this Subaru to be bathing in the early morning sunlight doing radio calisthenics before a crowd, a mere month ago such a thing would have been unthinkable.

—Speaking of which, getting summoned to another world is pretty unthinkable in itself.

It's such a big transformation one would think they've hit their head or something. In fact, he did have memories of a rather strong impact to his head, such that it wouldn't be surprising if his way of thinking had changed a little. However, even taking that into account it wasn't like this was a situation he was all that opposed to.

"Ai, and for the last part stretch your arms to sky, Finishhh-! Victory-!!"

""Victory—!!""

A chorus of voices followed Subaru's instructions, stretching their arms to sky; radio-calisthenics complete. Hearing shouts of joy rise up from the crowd, Subaru lightly wiped the drops of sweat from his brow. In front, as if to surround him, was a crowd of inhabitants from the village bordering the Roswaal mansion. From the looks of it, I'd say roughly half of the villagers were gathered.

The radio-calisthenics he had started light-heartedly seemed to have unexpectedly caught the heart-strings of this world's inhabitants. In this village he had given rise to a great movement, one that had driven the non-committal Subaru into a situation where he couldn't quit even if he tried.

"Subaru—, we finished the exercises!" "Give us a stamp, give us a stamp!" "Sweet potato, sweet potato!"

"Daaaa! Stop it, stop crowding around me so early in the morning, and settle down! You guys are seriously too energetic, it must be nice to be young! You don't have to be so rushed, the stamps aren't going to run away. Line up, line up."

After coming in contact with the overly-familiar gang of children Subaru's expression carved into a bitter smile. Showing no hints of defiance, the children followed his instructions and formed a straight line in front of him. Seeing this Subaru gave a satisfied nod and turned his head.

"Well then, Emilia-tan, if you'll do the honors."

"Yes—here you go."

Emilia stood directly behind him, gripping a small sack before handing it over, her lips wavering between a bitter and happy smile. Opening the received bundle, inside were long thinly shaven raw sweet potatoes. Seeing the sweet potatoes appear the children raised excited voices, as if responding to the shrill voices Subaru took up a sweet potato.

"Alright I'm going to press it down now, take out your paper."

Taking out the container of ink from the same bag Subaru dipped the end of the sweet potato in, pressing down the inked-potato onto the paper presented by the first child. Emilia watches the children's faces turn to joy as a picture emerges onto the surface.

"Carving the flat side of a potato to make a potato-stamp. Subaru, you always come up with weird things."

"If you cut off the inked part then you can use it as emergency rations, and this picture has more sense than you'd think. By the way, I name today's masterpiece 'Monday's Puck'."

What appeared on the paper was a distorted print of a cat, bringing out a feeling of languor. It captured the key characteristics fairly well, anyone looking at it could guess the model at a glance. Well, the title itself is a dead giveaway.

"I'm really surprised, it looks just like Puck. Subaru, you're really good at art."

"Well, I've had ample time that I've wasted away practicing to draw like this. I only know the basics though, since I gave up half-way."

If you're a true Otaku then you'll have traveled down the path of drawing at least once. From there it's about establishing your own drawing style, whether you make a name for yourself is mostly up to luck. By the way, for Subaru this ended up being impossible.

"This is all I can do, carving images of cats onto potatoes in a world that doesn't even have potato-stamps; it's only good for spoiling innocent little kids."

"That's a pretty unpleasant way to phrase it… and doesn't this picture of puck somehow look like it lacks energy?"

"I told you it's called 'Monday's Puck', I wanted to try and capture that hidden negative feeling where you know that there's an entire week ahead of you. Those poorly drawn ears were on purpose."

Hearing Emilia's impression, Subaru tried to emphasize his artistic intent. All-the-while being pestered by children holding out papers to be stamped, on which the number of radio-calisthenics participation stamps was steadily accumulating.

It's like I'm re-creating one of those summer vacation stamp-rallies, Subaru thought with a bit of playfulness. Every day before sleeping Subaru carved out a new stamp, there were always a lot of kids looking forward to what kind of stamp they'd get. Entertaining children, Subaru demonstrated the nimbleness of his fingers in a rather odd way.

Subaru enjoyed chatting with the children for a while as they clamored around him, finally exchanging promises for tomorrow's radio-calisthenics exercise and bidding farewell with a wave of his hand. Subaru talked with each of the group of adult participants before accompanying Emilia back to the mansion.

Lately this had become Subaru's daily routine, leaving in the early hours to spend time in the village. This setting came about because his body hadn't quite recovered so he wasn't able to participate in the mansion's morning work, the pitifulness of this state was added onto by the fact he was also using up Emilia's relaxation time, something that bothered Subaru quite a lot.

"Aahhh, I'm worn out. Emilia-tan, I feel bad taking up your time like this every morning."

"It's fine, it's not like your conditions back to normal yet, and Ram and Rem both have their work at the mansion. And it's not like I dislike this anyway…"

"When you say you don't dislike it… could that possibly be spending time with me?!"

"Wrong—. I meant getting to know the villagers who I hadn't been involved with in the past. You know how it's been… because it was like I thought I had drawn up a line around myself."

She coldly shot down Subaru's words who was now wildly inhaling through his nose; Emilia gave a shy laugh. From under her hood, her face's white profile was interrupted by a glimpse of lovely-red lips, Subaru felt the blood rise unintentionally to his cheeks from the charmingness of it.

Emilia's current appearance is closest to what she wore when they first met in the capital. A lightweight short skirt, over the top of which was a white robe with falcon shaped embroidery, her beautiful silver hair entirely concealed under her hood. Subaru stood next to her in clear contrast, wearing a slightly dirty cheap-looking grey jersey. After coming to this world it had taken quite the beating, it was only due to Rem's handiwork that it was able to recover to this extent. The areas most frayed were the parts Subaru had attempted to mend by himself.

Comparing my clothes, appearance, and various other specs to Emilia's, in my heart I couldn't help but let out a sigh. I'm desperate over here trying to even things out. From the start our positions aren't even in the same arena.

"Anyways…"

The one to break the silence was Emilia, as Subaru was still brooding in deep thought. She was bent over in front of Subaru, looking down at him from an angle with both arms crossed.

"You've become quite familiar with the villagers haven't you, could it be that you're more of a celebrity now than Ram and Rem?"

"Well, in a certain way I'm like a hero that saves children! Kind of like a hero that goes around saving people, so maybe that's being talked about somewhat?"

Even though he dressed it up as a joke, in reality Subaru had done enough that it didn't sound entirely ridiculous, it ended up not being much of a joke.

Towards Subaru's playful words Emilia kept silent with a finger on her lips, tilting her head at Subaru.

"It's probably something a little different from a hero"

"Ah, yeah I guess they wouldn't be talking about it… but if it wasn't the forest incident then I wonder what else it'd be."

Being praised for his role in the rescue-business wasn't something that was needed or expected by Subaru. However, outside his expectations, Emilia's words continued on in this direction. Smiling with her peach-colored lips as she let out a small laugh.

"It's true that the current impression of you by the village children is a bit like a hero, but more than that the rumors are leaning more towards you being a musical ‘Scholar’ you know?”

“Musical Scholar…? I can’t lead an orchestra you know. My musical sense is zero.”

I was a proud living legend back in elementary school band class, getting the opportunity to play the big taiko drums once. Someone with zero musical sense on a big taiko drum is quite the scene. Why they had to change people midway through is still a mystery to me.

At the previous joke Emilia shakes her head sideways, “that’s not it.”

“Scholar as in an intellectual. A foolish sage himself, is what the old men in the village are saying.”

“That really doesn’t sound like praise… like someone who can study but is still an idiot. In the first place, what have I ever done that’s intellectual-like…”

“Mayonnaise”

Stabbing her finger out, Emilia blurts out a straight-forward single word. From her words Subaru could only agree. Ever since the incident a few days ago, the adoption rate for this new technology was progressing smoothly. Because it was deemed too much of a waste (mostly by Emilia) to keep such a treat to themselves, they had been spreading the production method out to the nearby villages. It’s only been a few days but it seems like it’s caused quite a stir.

As a mayonnaise lover, bringing mayonnaise to another world was truly a step to be celebrated. May mayonnaise be eternal.

However,

“It’s great that those who recognize the magnificence of mayonnaise are spreading, but for my death-defying heroics to be deemed less than a brand of mayonnaise…”

It seems rather than a hero, I’m becoming famous as a mayonnaise evangelist, in the end this is my so called value to society. With quite an overwhelmed feeling Subaru drooped his shoulders.

Seeing this reaction Emilia acted in a panic, massaging his shoulders,

“Ah, um, you know, I’m sure the children are thankful for you saving them? But the one who brought them back from the forest was Rem after all, and the rumors going around are saying that the one who finished off the witchbeast in the forest was Roswaal…”

It hurt to receive such sympathy, but he couldn’t deny anything she had said. Looking back at it again, Subaru was shocked.

When it came to rescuing the children, all Subaru managed to accomplish was to get bitten all over his body and become terribly injured. And with defeating the witchbeast, other than restoring Rem’s sanity he had left everything else to Roswaal, ran out of energy and lied down to rest. He was surprised with himself.

“I didn’t actually contribute anything, did I?!”

I was just flailing around the whole time. Subaru feeling like all his hard work was just denied from him, he felt increasingly like shrinking.

Seeing Subaru like this Emilia found it more and more difficult to find the words to call out to him, stumbling and ending with phrases like, “um,” and “you know,” “it’s not like that…”

“Geez, stop being like that, getting all caught up on small things”

“B-But, Emilia-tan…”

“The people that understand that you worked hard already know it. Roswaal, and Ram, and especially Rem are all like that.”

Emilia said with a playful tone, as she poked Subaru’s face with her finger. Feeling the pointy sensation Subaru shifted his eyes to her with a pitiful look, she let out a grumble as she trotted out in front of him. Turning around, she removed her hood with vigor, her long silver hair glistening in the morning sun as it ran down her back. Seeing such a magical figure Subaru stopped in his tracks. Standing in front of Subaru she placed her hands on her hips, with an attitude almost like scolding a younger brother,

“I know it too, you know.”

“Eeeeh?”

“That you tried hard, that’s something that I really understand. That’s why you can’t get depressed like this. Understand?”

Emilia tilted her head, “Your reply?” she asked. Hearing those words the dazed Subaru woke up in scramble, vigorously shaking his head up and down. Seeing this reaction Emilia burst into a smile.

“Geez, what is it this time? You’re moving like a broken toy. You’re always like this.”

“No, this time it wasn’t like I was doing it on purpose… and anyway Emilia-tan who does these things without trying is 100x more unfair! No matter how I struggle I fall in love again.”

“Yes, yes. And stop trying to play it up like that, I think that’s a bad —habit.”

We’re having a heart-to-heart talk here, but the smiling Emilia won’t lend her ear. As she catches her flowing hair with one hand and combs it to the back, Subaru thought once more that she was completely out of his league.

Even though walking together like this was something that they had done so countless times before, each time, every time, he felt like it was a brand new experience.

None of the Emilia’s were the same. If he let today’s get away, the chance to meet today’s Emilia would never come around again. Treating this time as precious and looking forward to tomorrow, it was unexpected that he’d be spending his daily life like this.

“Working energetically, deepening my relationship with my sweetheart—what a wholesome lifestyle. Noone can call me a shut-in anymore!”

"Even if it can't be helped that you act tough like this because you're a boy, you need to properly take care of your body you know. There's no good reason to push yourself right now you know. Just be obedient and let Rem and Ram… well mostly just Rem, take care of you."

From Subaru's energetic yell and eccentric pose, Emilia seems to have garnered quite a few misunderstandings and offered up some candid advice.

It seems in her mind Subaru had taken up a position as a well-mannered upstanding young man. One that would work themselves to death through labor and hard work. Of course, in reality Subaru was far from hardworking, his personality was one where he'd like to live his whole life eating and sleeping if he didn't have to work.

Of course he also wasn't honest enough to go out of his way to correct such a favorable misunderstanding like this though.

Meanwhile, during their extended talk you could begin to see the top of the Roswaal mansion peak out over the horizon. Like this they continued on, spending the few minutes in a pleasant morning conversation, the time of which one could see would soon end.

"We started talking and the time just flew b… hey, what's with you going so slow all of sudden?"

"This is my reluctance to part ways, behold my snail's pace tactics. Don't you just want to enjoy this refreshing morning air some more? With who? With me!"

"If we go too slow people would get upset you know… I did say that you shouldn't push yourself, but keeping promises is important. I have my contracts with the spirits I have to keep too."

"I'm weak to that kind of reasoning. …Puck's about to wake up now too, it seems like I missed my timing to have some nuisance-free love talk with Emilia."

The contract of a spirit user, he was weak to that being brought up. He hid his innermost thoughts behind his facial expression while holding back tears of blood in his heart,

“I know… let’s go back. …shit, I could have done some even better things…!”

“I don’t know what’s gotten you so vexed, but if I have some extra time I’ll hear you out so stop pouting, geez.”

Emilia who had gradually come to act more intimate towards Subaru gave a troubled smile while putting a finger to her lips. Subaru watched as she muttered softly under her breath “what’s this?”

“Hmm?”

Piqued by her murmurs he aligned his vision to where she was looking, narrowing his eyes he confirmed its existence.

In front of the Roswaal mansion’s main gate there was a single ‘horse’-drawn carriage approaching. At a glance Subaru could tell this ‘horse’-drawn carriage was different from the horse-drawn carriages he was familiar with.

After all, the animal pulling the frame wasn’t a horse but a horse-sized lizard. In that case it couldn’t truly be called a horse-drawn carriage, so he had no choice other than to refer to it as a ‘horse’-drawn carriage.

“I sort of remember these things darting around everywhere in the capital”

On the first day he was summoned, he remembered looking out from the marketplace onto the road the figure of these things running past kicking up a great amount of dust, it would be difficult to forget such a scene. From the fact that the word ‘horse-drawn’ was understood he could ascertain that there were indeed horses in this world, but from the fact that I’m observing a lizard pulling the carriage here I guess that this animal is the standard in this world’s society.

"If I'm not mistaken they were calling that a dragon-carriage?"

"…? Yeah. Because the one pulling the frame is an ground dragon calling it a dragon-carriage is only natural right? Ee, it's a lie, could it be my common sense is wrong? Does it have a proper name?"

Responding to the zero-knowledge Subaru's question was Emilia, whose own breadth of knowledge was now increasingly suspect. For the girl reading way too much into his words, Subaru shook his hands in denial,

"It's just that I'm lacking in knowledge. Emilia-tan is right about this, probably, so have some confidence."

"Really? You're not teasing me? Don't start any embarrassing rumors about me ok. If you lie I'll whack you, you know."

"Whack, that's not a word you hear nowadays…"

Like this, they came up to the carriage while talking. Looking the lizard up close it was shocking how big it really was. On the carriage it was pulling there was a stand built to seat a coachman, sitting on which was a person who fit the bill, spotting the two approaching he began to climb down to the ground.

"Welcome back. I beg your pardon for parking our vehicle in front of your gate."

With conduct fitting for an old-gentleman he greeted us while offering a bow. If the one escorting this carriage was like this then the passenger was surely a distinguished person in their own respect. Peeking inside from the coach's window there wasn't even a trace of a shadow inside carriage's room. In other words,

"Our envoy is already inside the mansion holding an audience with the count."

"My, how polite. How should I put it, I'm embarrassed to be stealing looks like this. Anway, I'm not used to things like this so I'd hope if you could overlook it."

Subaru blew it by responding in an overly honest manner, trying to cover with polite sounding language was too much to ask for. Standing next to him Emilia made a look like “you know how to speak properly” right? Subaru felt the difference in social standing between him and her keenly.

Covering for the now silent Subaru, Emilia stepped in front to face the coachman.

“You said envoy… by chance could it be?”

Facing the subjectless question the coachman gave a quick bow and demonstrated he was well informed,

“It’s exactly has Emilia-sama has guessed, this matter is related to the selection of the next Queen.”

Hearing the words ‘Royal Selection’ Subaru raised his face. Even just hearing it now, this was a far-off phrase for him.

Emilia’s face spontaneously stiffened, and Subaru frowned at this turn of events. Seeing their reactions the old gentleman held his bow and continued.

“I imagine you’ll hear this officially from the envoy. Please, if you would return to the mansion.”

“I wonder if it’s a summons?”

“For anything further I would request that you hear out the envoys message”

Facing the coachman who clearly knew his role, bowing her head Emilia replied “very well” with hardened face.

“—Let’s go”

Giving a short declaration, without turning to face Subaru she began walking. Heading towards the entrance to the mansion.

Flustered, Subaru ran off chasing her back. Turning his head once more for another look.

The coachman stood facing them with his head still lowered, seeing them off in silence.

Chapter 2:
A Servant’s Tea-time Conversation

1

Sent off by the Coachman, the two were greeted as they entered the mansions entrance lobby,

“Welcome back Miss Emilia”

Said Rem with a composed face lacking in expression, the temperature in the room dropping from her voice alone as she gave a bow.

Raising her head, that emotionless face was something he hadn’t seen in a quite a while. Recently inside the mansion, or at least wholly in front of Subaru, he often saw her going around smiling, he wondered if she was acting like this on purpose. Taking into account that the two had returned together but she had only called out to Emilia, this seemed likely.

“I’m back. I’m sorry for being out—it seems like a visitor came?”

“An envoy came from the capital to see you. Right now Lord Roswaal is receiving them, would you care to join them?”

“Of course. It’s originally something that’s my problem so I can’t very well be left out of it.”

Exchanging nods with Rem, Emilia began walking up the stairs, looking back at the bewildered Subaru.”

“Aa… Um, Subaru what are you going to do? Can you return to your room on your own?”

“What am I, a child? In the first place, it’s not like you can’t bring me with y…”

Feeling her nervousness fade a little, Emilia tilted her head towards Subaru’s proposition. But the one who interrupted those words wasn't Emilia with the troubled expression,

"Sister is already present. There is no need for another servant. You understand, yes? Subaru."

"mmu…"

Refusing to say yes or no to Rem's words, his reply got garbled in throat. Responding to Subaru who was still struggling to find an objection Emilia motioned lightly with her hands,

"Since it's like that, sorry. Rem, could you guide me there?"

"Yes. Suburu, please return to your room."

Throwing out those words of apology, Emilia had already turned away from Suburu. For the Subaru who had nothing else to do Rem came in to deliver the finishing blow, Rem leading the way Emilia's silver hair swayed as she climbed the stairs and disappeared.

"Aaa, damn, this isn't fun at all."

Seeing the figures of those two disappear, abusive words mixed with a sigh escaped out of his mouth.

I'm getting left behind. —Physically and mentally.

"Well, I guess it's true that even if I was there I wouldn't be of much use with my shabby understanding of this world"

Even though it's been two weeks since he first came to the mansion (1 ½ months from his mental perspective), when you talk about what he's learned it's limited to various basic house-chores and the reading of letters. So to speak, he's on the same level as one of the village children helping out around their homes. With that level of ability getting involved with not just some meeting of aristocrats, but the decisions of a country's very top, this was beyond ambitious. Know your place.

With that, he accepted being left behind. Not that he wasn't still unhappy about it.

“And so, I guess I’ll head back to my room and begrudgingly go to sleep—or not, I’m not that obedient.”

If he was to follow Emilia’s and Rem’s viewpoint, they probably wanted him to go back to his room, sleep, and do tonight’s practice of writing down characters. Or, going with plan B, opening up one of the doors and go complaining to the mansion’s resident hikikomori-girl, not a bad option.

Not a bad option, but… he should be able to do better.

“If this is my plan, first I’ll need to go to kitchen-kitchen.”

2

“Don’t you get tired waiting out here the whole time? How about taking a short rest?”

Hearing this the old man sitting on the driver’s platform opened his eyes in surprise, looking at Subaru and then again at the tray in Subaru’s hands.

The location is once again outside the mansion, up next to the dragon-carriage parked in front of main gate. As usual he wasn’t used to the lizard’s large size, shivering a few times, he poured tea for the old man who was looking at him with a surprised and half-smiling face.

“Thank you for the trouble. This is quite unexpected, pardon me for being situated up high here.”

No sooner than he recovered from the initial shock, the old man nimbly dropped down from the coachman’s stand. With his movements there was almost no sound as he landed, Subaru faintly held his breath. The coachman’s stand was high up enough that using the phrase “jumped off” would have been appropriate. It was even higher than Subaru’s eye-level, it didn’t seem possible to jump without support unless you we’re prepared for a little numbness in your legs.

However, flipping Subaru’s assumptions on their head the old man calmly walked on, coming up to the presented tray he gave a short bow.

“I’ll avail myself to your kind offer. My throat was indeed getting a bit dry, you see.”

“Ah, no problem. I didn’t know your preference so I just brought out the most expensive tea.”

Presented with the tray, a gentle smile carved its way onto the old man’s face. Subaru watched with particular interest as the wrinkles around his mouth rose and seemingly met halfway.

His stature was taller than Subaru, his head was dyed pure white with abundant hair that showed no sign of thinning. His attire was that of a coachman, that is a formal, extremely expensive looking, black uniform. His back was straight, the muscles under his clothes showed no sign of age and one could tell at a glance they were finely toned. In summary, the person standing in front of him was one who could make others nervous whether they intended to or not.

“My ranking of this other-world’s old people has been completely repainted. Farewell, Old Man Rom. But seriously, there hasn’t been a scene where you were ever of much help.”

For the Giant tribe with seemingly excellent settings there was relatively little to show for it. Subaru wasn’t able to confirm what had happened afterwards, Old Man Rom didn’t hit his head or something and forget everything right? That was something he was a little bit afraid of.

“I’m just an old bag of bones. There’s no reason to be on edge”

For Subaru who was absentmindedly thinking that, he was abruptly called out to by a gentle voice. Taking up the cup, the old man brought it to up to his mouth before offering some words. Noticing the indiscrete stares he was receiving, the old man smiled at the hard to punish Subaru.

“This is a good flavor. This is perhaps too good a thing…”

If a certain pink-haired maid found out I was drinking this she'd get seriously angry."

Looking at it broadly, Ram had an unexpectedly delicate tongue and was well versed in things like tea. If she knew he had taken out one of the "absolutely forbidden" highest grade tea leaves to use on his own, that in itself would was setting himself up for quite the sermon. But then in a very Subaru-like manner,

"Without the tea leaves ever leaving the kitchen, I properly prepared the tea there and brought it out… that's one of my 'ikkyusan' reasonings, I wonder if she'll buy that"

"Hmm, quite the schemer I see"

"It's unfortunate, but I'll have to leave it completely to fate whether she'll buy this kind of sophistic reasoning"

Moreover, the betting odds were set at 7 to 1 against. Challenging that was stupid in the first place. The fact that it had so much risk was what made it worth it though, this chat over tea. The old man tilted the cup back once more and let out a sigh filled with emotions,

"So, now that you've sprinkled out this tea as bait, what did you want from these old bones?"

With one eye closed, the old man began asking with a measuring look. Shrugging his shoulders towards this sharp attitude Subaru replied,

"Well. From all the people I've ever met, you're the toughest to try this on after Roswaal"

"To be treated the same as the Margrave, it's an honor"

"That's being put in the same rank as that pervert you know? That remark is one that I'm quite willing to yell out."

His refreshing expression quickly drained from him, Subaru once more felt on the defensive. A veteran, is what he should be rightfully called, that person's life experience was much deeper and thicker than the thin Subaru, this wasn't an opponent he could cross with. This wasn't a certain giant balding old man from somewhere. Thus, all Subaru could do was to raise the white flag,

"I give up. My name is Natsuki Subaru. I'm currently apprenticing as a servant at Roswaal's mansion. At least could I request your name?"

An inexperienced person should accept they are inexperienced, and try their best to cling to the benevolence of their elders. Towards the Subaru obediently lowering his head, the old man's expression softened,

"My how polite. I am called 'Wilhelm'. I am currently serving under the Crusch house, devoting myself to the job."

In front of the old man calling himself Wilhelm, Subaru tried rolling the name once off his tongue,

"Thank you very much for telling me your name. In addition to this thanks, could you tell me the reason for today's visit… err, is it acceptable for me to tread into such matters?"

"In regards to your question, the envoy is currently inside discussing just that"

"Yes that is correct, but to be honest I've been told not to participate in that you see. And having an event proceed without me being involved at all isn't very interesting, that's to say my approach is to…"

Getting this opponent to crack his lips was no easy task, from his first impression to the conversation up till now he could understand this. But, getting quickly into the hearts of others was Subaru's specialty. His ample experience being friendless due to ignoring other people's emotions wasn't just for show.

Towards Subaru's greedy attitude Wilhelm was temporarily lost for words,

"Having you expectations go awry, don't become angry, and don't celebrate before you've succeeded, that's how it goes, in't it? After being seen through, far from becoming timid you've gotten bolder. If your opponent this time was actually an opponent though your personality would be inviting loss."

At a glance they were sharp words. However, Wilhelm's expression as he spoke them was soft. From the contents of those words, he didn't appear to care much for Subaru's attitude, but it also eluded to the tolerance he had as his elder.

If that's the case, Subaru raised his head,

"Is it still no good if you only give me an outline?"

"For me who has no idea what kind of status you hold in this mansion, I can't afford to carelessly let my words slip. Please understand."

Even towards the comparatively rude, no-boundaries Subaru, Wilhelm responded with courteousness. As for a negotiation-trick to bend such an obstinate person, Subaru had no such thing on hand.

At this pace, all he's done is take out an expensive tea and fulfilled all the conditions to make Ram angry, Subaru's outlook was getting darker.

"However, I have seen earlier that you have quite a close relationship with the queen-candidate Lady Emilia."

"Oh, oh, oh, did you see? Me and Emilia-tan having our intimate, pleasant, embarrassing, red-faced talk, did you really see?"

"'tan'……?"

Frowning at this strange way of address, Wilhelm smiled bitterly at this Subaru's self-interest attitude.

"You're walking down a severe path. She might very well be the next Queen of Lugnica you realize?"

"The current state is just an extremely lovely girl, and an unskilled servant. Because the future is limitless, if we only talk about probability then you end up not being able to move when the time counts you know? Sir Wilhelm when you got married, didn't you think of your wife as the most beautiful person in the world?"

"My wife—"

Wilhelm faltered for a moment at Subaru's extreme argument. But, quickly returned to watching Subaru intently, his pupils flashing with an emotion that could probably be called admiration.

"I see, it is exactly as you say. I too thought my wife was the most beautiful in the world. I had the feeling like everyone was looking at her. Such that I felt miserable that I maybe wasn't worthy of her."

"Right? If it's something that everyone has to deal with, then even if they think I'm unfit to be her partner I'll make her mine. I'll somehow or another work to get a social position, then I'll steadily progress towards becoming suited for her, it's a win-win, or at least that's my dream."

Lately with those kinds of feelings, Subaru had been imagining the future possibilities of his love. Even now he couldn't get his true feelings across to her, he knew this wasn't something he could accomplish through hard-work alone. So I'll do it through any means possible, is what he was thinking.

"That's why when it comes to Emilia-tan's circumstances, I want to avoid ending up in a situation where I'm not involved. Even though she's walked a long ways ahead, and before you know it a jog turns into a run—in order to catch up to her of course I have to go full sprint, and if there's a shortcut or anything else my personality's one where I'll want to use."

"You have quite an amusing way of thinking there. Truly interesting. However, even if you come to me with more requests it's a little bit troubling."

As if to turn him down Wilhelm put out his palm towards Subaru, shaking his head. To the end he hadn't crumbled against that sincere attitude, but as if humoring Subaru, "In the end I am but a mere coachman, when it comes to these affairs I am not well versed. It doesn't seem like I can be of much help to you."

"Is that right. You at least already realized who the hood-wearing Emilia-tan was, don't you think using the excuse that you're a 'simple coachman' is a little bit too extreme?"

"……"

Wilhelm looked blankly and said nothing towards Subaru's objection of disbelief. While giving a sidelong look, Subaru raised one finger,

"Well, for someone heading towards the mansion you might be able to roughly guess who they were, but to say with 100% conviction? Sir Wilhelm, you knew who Emilia-tan was instantly"

"I could very well have met Lady Emilia in the past you know?"

"If that was true Emilia-tan would have greeted you at least. It's hard to imagine that the 'eager-to-teach' Emilia-tan wouldn't introduce an acquaintance to the person standing next to her—in the first place, starting from the point you recognized the hood covered Emilia as Emilia your setting as a simple coachman has been a bit forced."

Eyes searching for an explanation, he looked at Subaru silently. "Nonono" Subaru waved his hands,

"It seems there were some very complicated spell formulas sown onto the robe Emilia was wearing, supposedly ones that had an effect of blocking recognition you know? You've either received Emilia's approval, or you are a person capable of breaking through the effects, otherwise you wouldn't have been able to perceive her as Emilia"

From the time he first met her till now she had always worn that robe. This was to avoid inviting unnecessary trouble related to her blood-line, or more accurately from being a half-elf, this was something that Subaru had grasped more-or-less. For her having the appearance of a silver haired half-elf, on the surface he could tell just how much of a harsh thing that was to bear in this world.

Unexpectedly, Wilhelm shrugged his shoulders as if he was familiar with Subaru's explanation,

"Measuring me from the first time we met… you've got a bad personality"

"I'm not calculating to that extent. When I was in the mansion making tea, I just started thinking "huh, isn't this strange?" It was purely accidently."

Nonetheless, it was still thanks to Subaru's mental fortitude that he was able to capitalize on it. All to make sure no danger ever befell Emilia. Adding in the witchbeast incident, Subaru knew painfully well just how much danger this world held. In order to keep those fangs as far away from her as possible, Subaru was trying with all his might, even if it was like trying to cool a hot stone with little drops of water. That's why he'll take everything he can get, and learn everything he can find out.

Laughing frivolously and superficially, Subaru had no intention of letting Wilhelm get away. Starting from the point he accepted his invitation for tea, this gentlemanly old man had already been dragged into Subaru's dimension.

In addition to ignoring his opponent's position and circumstances, this dimension existed only to push outcomes favorable to Subaru.

"A simple coachman, I suppose that excuse isn't going to work… It's exactly as you've guessed, I am indeed someone related to the royal selection— No, I suppose it is more accurate to say someone related to someone related."

"Someone related to someone related…"

It appeared Wilhelm had lost the debate. As the loser he was fulfilling his duty, choosing his words he slowly began to speak.

Chewing the contents, Subaru digested the meaning of the words in his head, “In short, you’re basically in the same position as me?”

“I don’t see your reasoning there, the difference between you and me, huh”

“Since you’ve got your most beautiful wife in the world then you would never think of cheating right. Well, Emilia-tan is a bit cuter in my opinion though.”

“No, my wife is surely the cutest.”

He meant it as a joke but received a firm reply, Subaru unintentionally winced. He gave a sharp look as the fake smile he had been making was slapped down by Wilhelm’s declaration,

“Unexpectedly, you get stuck on some weird things, Sir Wilhelm… You’re more playful than I thought.”

“I’d be happy if you thought of me as a young spirit in an old body.”

It was an utterance that sounded unusually seriously, but if he wanted to stick his nose any further he’d have to have patience. Subaru made his head spin trying to delve into deeper topics. In some way or another he could use this, if he could play off of his human emotions he had a feeling he could make this work somehow—

—“It seems we’re out of time”

“Huh?”

Subaru let out a stupid sounding voice. Responding to him, Wilhelm pursed his lips silently, motioning towards the direction of the mansion with his hand. Subaru turned his head looking in the direction indicated, off in the distance the entrance door of the mansion began to open,

“The person who came out is Rem… and who?”

Beyond the opened doors he could see two figures, the ever familiar blue-haired maid and an unknown person accompanying her. From the attitude of Wilhelm took this person was probably the so-called envoy that had been the topic-piece for their conversation.

“How to say it, this really is a fantasy setting”

Without thinking he blurted out his impression, probably because that person’s appearance exuded an aura that was anything but appropriate for the term ‘envoy’. The envoy, noticing Subaru had been staring at them, a mischievous smile floated to their face as they rapidly approached the dragon-carriage.

“Hey! Even if I’m a beauty staring that much at me is still rude you know.”

No sooner than the moment they stood before Subaru, a white fingertip pointed straight at him. One eye closed as they made their declaration.

I’m afraid this person is likely the envoy. A cute girl with a charming face and flaxen hair evenly cut to shoulder length. Her height was rather tall for a girl, almost the same as Subaru’s. However her figure was naturally much more delicate, one-by-one her features revealed her gorgeous femininity or would it be more accurate to say girlishness. Her flaxen hair was decorated with a white ribbon, her big eyes shone with curiosity and had an almost cat-like charm to them, and currently on her head…

“Nya nya?”

The same color as her hair, a pair of animal ears claiming the top of her head trembled as if responding to his murmurs.

In this world sub-species were completely natural, aside from seeing them in the capital there hadn’t been any other opportunities to interact with them, seeing the real thing up close like this was a real treat.

After all,

“I’m an appreciator of all things fluffy, there’s no way that I can’t pursue this existence in front of my eyes… dammit, quite down, my right arm…!”

Looking at it as a spectator he could imagine the sensation of the fluffy fur covered ears, just by standing in front of him her mere existence was a deadly poison for Subaru. With a desperate look he suppressed his trembling right arm, somehow managing to pull away from the girl and create some distance. She stared blankly at Subaru’s suspicious behavior.

“Huuh, am I hated? Ferris has, failed”

‘Tehehe’, showing off her tongue, she bonked her head with a fist. Subaru’s throat froze over in fright, this was a completely different kind of horror than before.

—Not only a head bonk, but sticking out her tongue + winking?!

This was a classic rarely seen even in his own former world, the overly done legendary ‘cutesy-girl’ routine. He wanted to beat up anyone who dared attempt this overly cheeky routine in person, however—

“Now that I’m in front of the real thing the destructive energy of it… it’s too much, I can’t do a thing…!”

Faced with this overwhelming cheekiness all of his willpower was taken from him, is what that meant. Also, since the one doing it was wrapped up in it they were too cute to lay a hand against, is the second meaning that layered on top of the first. The result was that Subaru had choice other than to let this pass.

Towards the location Subaru stood shivering in a very wrong way, she gave a curtesy and turned to face Wilhelm.

“I’m back Old Man Wil, sorry for making you wait outside. Were you bored?”

“No, no. This young man over here was kind enough to keep my old bones company, it was an unexpectedly fun way to pass the time.”

“Fumyuu?”

Hearing the dressed up description Wilhelm had given of our back-and-forth argument, the girl had a perked up expression. Eyes like a cat, her pupils narrowed, and her mouth warped giving off a feeling somehow like a ω shape.

“Aaaaaaa, now I get it—. I see I see, you’re the boy Emilia was talking about. I understand I understand.”

From top to bottom she looked at Subaru as if tasting him, finally clapping her hands together as if giving approval. Feeling the gaze Subaru subconsciously moved to cover himself with his hands, twisting his body as if trying to escape.

“No, stop it~. Just because I’m a boy, if you stare at me like that I’ll get embarrassed you know”

“Don’t say that, honey. You’ve got a pretty good body there, no needless meat. So much so if you weren’t already somebody’s property I’d have a taste myself.”

Going along with Subaru’s over-the-top reaction, she hit back with an equally absurd response. Normally girls would respond with a ‘kyaa’ or a giggle, having someone play along like this was a first for Subaru.

“Somehow I’ve got a strange amount of energy. I wonder if this feeling is a physiological reaction?”

Rather than feeling disgusted, Subaru’s instincts were screaming out louder now. In front of his eyes stood a teasing-eyed girl, clearly the natural enemy of the person named Natsuki Subaru. A snake against a slug. A slug against a frog. A frog against a snake. Subaru’s compatibility with this girl, he was on the weak side and she was on the strong side—this was something he could tell instinctively.

Subaru’s usual inappropriate behavior wasn’t coming out. Facing the Subaru had by now completely lost his nerve, the girl hit the accelerator to max and stepped it up even further.

Throwing her arms out She wrapped around Subaru’s neck and snuggled up next to him.

“uh, eh, eeeh?!”

“Don’t move. I’m checking something out right now.”

Since they were about the same height, her face was now right next to Subaru’s. Her voice whispering directly into Subaru’s ear, his whole body felt like it was being tickled. His face turned red from the sensation. He looked to his surroundings for help, finding Rem loitering near the mansion’s entrance he instantly turned pale.

She had on a blank face, one could see from afar she was unconcerned with what was happening. Towards the now gasping Subaru, Rem gestured her hands in a small mincing motion. It wasn’t like this gesture had any meaning in particular, but the intent was clearly conveyed to Subaru.

“I’m going to tell Lady Emilia.”

“Nooooooo”

Making a snap judgement he moved his body, somehow managing to peel away from the clinging girl. It wasn’t like he violently flung her away, more like pushing her shoulders away. Unsteady on his feet, Subaru ended up falling on his butt. In the ten or so seconds that this all happened, various emotions processed through Subaru’s head. Sitting with his feet collapsed under him and his shirt disheveled, he cried sorrowfully

“I didn’t want to, why did you… even though I only love Emilia-tan”

While feigning big crocodile tears secretly he was disappointed. With a kind touch a hand firmly grasped his shoulder. Looking up reflexively, the one behind him was Wilhelm.

“Please take this.”

Held softly in his hand was a white handkerchief. Taking it from his hands, Subaru thanked him as he struggled to his feet. This was the compassion of an adult, experiencing it in person he fought the urge to bury himself in Wilhelm’s arms.

“Because, this person already has a wife they love more than anyone else—Subaru did a dramatic reenactment of his feelings. So, can I ask you something about what just happened?”

Returning the handkerchief unused to Wilhelm, Subaru looked to the girl for an explanation for her previous behavior. Hearing these words, she bent her lips in thought.

“It was just as I had heard, inside your body it’s like the flow of water is completely stagnant. I’d do something about it, but there’s no time right now.”

Leaving behind these words, the girl ended the conversation. Not knowing the meaning of these words, Subaru threw his arms to the sky.

“Now then, let’s hurry back to our lovely Lady Crusch, Old Man Wil. If we’re away for too long there’s no knowing what she’ll do.”

“It is as you say.”

Agreeing with her proposal, Wilhelm abided with few words. Offering Subaru one last bow, he picked up a now empty cup on the ground and returned it to the tray.

“Thank you for the treat. Subaru-dono, may you be in good health.”

Climbing up to the coachman’s stand in a flash, Wilhelm held the lizard’s reigns in his hand. Towards Subaru, who was staring speechlessly at this feat, the girl held her hands together as if praying.

“So then, we haven’t really time for introductions but we’re busy so sorry.

Leaving behind a wink, she turned her body towards the dragon-carriage. Reaching his hand out towards her back, he put a voice to the numerous unresolved questions racing through his head.

“Please wait. I have so many questions to ask you…”

“I think it’s fine if you go ask Emilia honestly. Well then, may our fates meet again. Byyye.”

Cutting down his question in a single chop, she disappeared into the carriage with a smile. Understanding he’d been completely swept up by their pace, Subaru’s hand dropped in frustration. Wilhelm said his goodbyes and the carriage set off along with the lizard’s neigh.

The frame creaked as the wheels began to turn. Every time the lizard stepped forward powerful marks remained in the ground, gaining speed quickly.

With the wheels moving forward, the frame began to move. The carriage picked up speed quickly as it traveled over the road, kicking up a cloud of dust it faded into the distance.

In the end all that was left was the completely defeated Subaru, and the lingering scent of the high-class tea.

3

Off in the distance, in the carriage heading out from the Roswaal mansion.

“Were you able to fulfill your duty as an envoy?”

“Of course. It was something that Lady Crusch asked Ferris to do, it’s impossible that I’d fail. Old Man Wil you’re such a worry-wart.”

The two exchanged conversation between the carriage and coachman’s stand. Sitting on the stand, Wilhelm handled the Lizard easily. Behind him, the flaxen-haired girl hung her head out from the private room’s window. Although they were going very fast, having the divine protection of wind there was not even a hint of wind and they could continue their conversation like this without interruption. In a certain sense there was no better situation than this to hold a private conversation.

Wilhelm smiled bitterly at her reply,

“an unnecessary concern is it?”

“Leaving that aside”, she added.

“I’m was sure surprised to see you talking with that boy when I came out, you hate talking with others right?”

“That’s a horrible misunderstanding.”

Having her words denied immediately, “aaa, that’s not what I meant” she waived her hands.

“That’s right, sorry sorry. It wasn’t that you didn’t like talking, it was that you liked killing more.”

“…That’s another horrible misunderstanding.”

Towards the girls banter, Wilhelm used the same words. Seeing such a flat response to her provocations, the girl’s mouth tapered into a displeased expression.

“Soo boring. Is talking with Ferris so much more boring than with that boy? Did he catch your eye?”

Her voice was like a child pouting when their parent won’t give them attention. Trying to draw out something more than muddled reaction from Wilhelm, she climbed further out the window towards him.

“I didn’t feel anything special about him, did something about him resonate with Old Man Wil? Like maybe unlike his looks he’s actually incredibly strong, or maybe he’s got some incredible talent?”

“No. My evaluation of him is not so different from yours. He’s an amateur, an amateur who hasn’t even starting to grow hair yet. He has no special talents either. It’s undeniable that he is an average existence.”

“Then why? Trash like that, wasn’t that what you hated the most in this world?”

The girl dressed Subaru up as an unredeemable person. Without even making a frown, Wilhelm quietly lifted his hand and pointed to his eye.

“His eyes”

“—eyes?”

Hearing her voice he sat in a pondering looking, pulling on his chin.

“That boy’s eyes, they caught my interest is all. They were the eyes of someone who’s faced near-death many times. There are many who have returned from the brink of death. However…”

Cutting off his words, Wilhelm closed his eyes.

“Coming back from the brink of death, not just once, but multiple times. I don’t know of any existence like that. It’s for that reason, that he’s caught my attention.”

“Hmmmph, I don’t get it”

Wilhelm’s words mixed with admiration were easily cut in half. Wilhelm was frowning for real this time as she continued on.

“Aside from what you just said Old Man Wil, that boy won’t be walking an easy road.”

Her eyes narrowed as if she had thought of something again, staring at the broad back sitting on the coachman’s stand.

“Catching the interest of the ‘Sword-Devil’ Wilhelm van Astrea, that’s as misfortunate as being obsessed over by the witch.”

Chapter 3:
Planning a Trip to the Capital

1

“You’re going to the capital right? Let me! I want to go too!!”

After the guests left, those in the parlor room all let out a collective sigh, the room slowly settling into a relaxed mood—with a single statement it was brilliantly smashed to pieces by Subaru.

Bursting through the door without notice, carrying a tray with tea on it over to the table. As they stared at him, mouths open, he handed the two main actors each a cup. “Hoi, Hoi”

“Everyone remember to bring some food, snacks are limited to 300 yen, and don’t stay up late even if you’re excited to leave.”

Assuming his fellow travelers were that excited, that is. Receiving a cup, Emilia and Roswaal met each other’s gaze.

“See?”

“…It appears so.”

Roswaal raising one eyebrow in a self-satisfied manner, his remark piled onto the already worn-out looking Emilia’s expression. Not pleased with only those two being in on something,

“what are you two talking about?”

Subaru twisted each syllable expressing his displeasure.

“Stop seeing eye to eye with each other, Jealousy! Please mix me in, we can sing a lullaby together”

“In the first place, about going to the capital who even told yo… it was me wasn’t it…”

As if she was embarrassed by her own words, Emilia hid her face with her palms shaking her head back and forth. Facing Subaru again, she started off lecturing with a “listen you know”,

“We’re not going there for fun. We were called out on very important business… really, very important”

“I already know that. Royal selection right? I already know that it’s a big event that’ll shake the country. Howeeever, even so please. Please take me.”

Subaru wrung his hands, on the carpet begging on his knees. Emilia had no idea how to respond to this kind of plea, her eyes scanned the room looking for help.

“What’s wrong? Ah~, please take no miiind of meee, it is fine if you chooooose as your heart wills.”

Declaring his status as a spectator Roswaal looked on with a smiling face,

“This tea’s fragrance… could it be Ram’s treasured… No, even for him that’s too… but, for Barusu that’s something he might just…”

It couldn’t be helped, this was the state they were in after realizing what type of tea had just been carried in by a certain someone. Especially so for the last person,

“It’s fine isn’t it, he’s so reared up to go that he made it and brought it up here. One of Subaru’s acquaintances is in the capital too it seems, in the first place we only carried him here because of his injuries. We should bring him along to give him some peace of mind.”

This, if it’s this… it was the most ordinary response you could expect, but from Subaru’s perspective it was the perfect follow-up.

“Yessss, Nice assist. Rem, Rem, Remmm, come here Rem.”

“Yes!”

Responding to Subaru’s beckoning with a smile she slid over next to where Subaru was sitting on the carpet, acting as if it was completely natural she presented her head, careful not mess up her blue hair he pet her head while showering her in praise.

Seeing Rem's elated reaction and demeanor Emilia's interest was piqued, "Aa, that might be kind of nice…" lifting her head a little bit in curiosity,

"Wait, in the first place Subaru if you come with us what are you even going to do? It's true that this has to do with the royal selection, this isn't really something that you have any connection with…"

"If going to cry from loneliness over here if you say something like it doesn't involve me. Emilia-tan becoming a king… queen. I'm fine if it's only a minor role, this is a critical moment that I want to be involved in. That's why I'll do anything in my capabilities to help."

"It's precisely because of that that I'm telling you, you can't come."

Scrunching her eyebrows together Emilia responded to Subaru, whose eyes were now filled to the brim with motivation. She was happy that he felt this way, but he had already done so much to help her. On top of saving her life, he had just nearly died a few days ago trying to saving a many number of people. Subaru had no idea how much gratitude she felt towards him. To ask anything further from him would be beyond spoiled.

"If I bring you along I already know you're going to do something unreasonable again. I don't want that, understand?"

"Emilia-tan's the one that doesn't understand. I hate doing unreasonable, impossible, and reckless things more than anything else, that's why I'll never do anything more than what I can handle."

Sitting on his knees, Subaru crossed his arms and puffed out his chest, suddenly taking on a much bolder attitude. "But,"

"If it's something within reach, that's a different story. Especially so when it comes to things related to Emilia. So, please understand."

"That's… I don't know."

Emilia didn't know why he was being so stubborn. Emilia wanted to let Subaru rest since he'd been through so many painful and difficult episodes recently. Why is he still pushing his body when he's not even recovered yet, doing something so unreasonable like this isn't funny. He always joking around he couldn't actually be serious about this could he?

Her thoughts sank into a sea of confusion as he looked at her with puppy-dog eyes. The parlor room falling into silence,

"Ooooookay, let's stop heeeeeere"

Clapping his hands together Roswaal shattered the mood in the room. Looking at the two's back-and-forth with some emotion,

"Siiiince you can't seem to an agreement, how about you leave settling this matter to meeeeee. Subaru you're coming with us to the capital. This is an order as your employer."

"Roswaal?!"

"Yesss! You sure know how to talk, Roz-chi!"

Roswaal ignored the reluctant Emilia's objections. While Emilia wore her surprise on her face, Subaru energetically responded with a thumbs up.

However, Roswaal seeing their reactions he continued, "Tsk Tsk Tsk" he waved his finger,

"Oooooon the contrary, Subaru coming with us to the capital is oooonly for his medical treatment. And so forth, the royal selection is a completely different matter. Are we at an agreement?"

"Medical treatment…?"

Hearing Roswaal's words he tilted his head in skepticism. Not getting his meaning, with his head still crooked he tried to stand—sitting on his legs too long they'd become numb, causing him to fall forward in a magnificent manner. Acting swiftly the nearby Rem stopped his fall, yanking him by his shirt's collar like a cat by the neck.

“Gueee! …Nice assist, Rem. But do it a little bit softer next time.”

“Umu, does this mean we’re done with the petting…”

Disheartened, Rem returned to her spot behind Subaru while he rubbed his aching throat. Turning once more towards Roswaal he questioned his last statement.

“What do you mean by ‘medical treatment’ purposes? I’m just gonna say this, but other than some leftover scars I’m completely fine you know? I’ll admit there are probably a few areas I could use some rehabilitation on though.”

Swinging his arms ‘round in a circle Subaru emphasized his body’s good health. However Emilia and everyone from the mansion knew apart from what claimed, his body was far from healed. On top of witnessing him struggle with just daily life there were a number of other points that popped up, his job, and the morning radio-calisthenics for instance. The fact that they knew the person in question was trying to hide it dug in like a spur, making them pity him even more.

Like this everyone had an unspoken agreement on the subject regarding the poor condition of Subaru’s body. Towards the totally oblivious Subaru, Roswaal shook his head. “No, no”,

“Hiding it is nooo good. Everyone is already aware that you still have after-effects. You were beat up to such an extent. Getting bitten by Juggernaut’s fangs, having a curse carved into your body —this has all caused the circulation of mana in your body to become abnormally bad. It’s completely muddled.”

“Even if you say my condition’s bad because of some invisible thing…”

“Subaru. The mana that fills your body is your very life itself. For it to stagnate means the circulation of your life energy is being impeded. I’m begging you, listen to this properly.”

Becoming obstinate after having his poor health seen through, Emilia scolded him for not taking this seriously. Her feeling conveyed, Subaru gave a small apology.

“I know my body’s in a pinch right now. But, how is going to the capital connected with getting treatment?”

“Treatment for your body requires an expert on liquid mana. Subaru, did you perhaps meet with the envoy earlier?”

“The tall cat-eared girl? To be honest I’m not good with those types.”

“That person is regarded in the capital as quite an excellent user of liquid mana.”

Subaru’s face plainly formed into a scowl at Roswaal’s words. Silently, Emilia was also in agreement that she was a tough person to deal with. How that person could see through him and had a personality like she was speaking in riddles was something he couldn’t handle well at all.

Using the pretext of passing along the invitation to the capital, he was forced into a lot of other things that he’d rather not talk about. Most of all,

“Emilia went out of her way to put her in our debt, all for the purpose of creating an opportunity for you to be healed. You should accept Emilia’s goodwill, don’t you think so?”

“Wha…?”

“Hey, Roswaal! That’s…”

Clearly displeased at Roswaal’s careless, or more-likely premeditated slip-of-the tongue, Emilia drew closer. Brushing off her angry voice Roswaal continued on with a calm face,

“Those two don’t alooong the best. Hooowever, there was still the issue with Subaru’s body. Gallantly she plead, and soooomehow or another was able to draw out an agreement for your treatment. Such a loveable person right?”

“RO—S—WA—AL!”

Having these hidden circumstances exposed, she emphasized every syllable through gritted teeth. Her silver hair swaying with anger, the blood rising to her face in anger and embarrassment. Losing herself in rage, mana gathered furiously around her, thinking she'd smash it right into his blue-haired head.

"Emilia-tan, is that really true?"

Disrupting the mood. Subaru interjected, trying to ascertain whether this was true or not. Emilia looked at him with a sorry expression.

"Because… it's my fault your body can't recover. And the reason you came to this mansion in the first place was because you tried to protect me, and with the witchbeast forest incident too, if I had acted then none of this would have happened to you. That is… this is a bit of repayment for all that you've done, it's proper compensation for what happened to you."

"Emilia-tan, your way of talking is too stiff. It feels like you're trying to run a business or something."

Subaru threw in a retort at Emilia's quick-talking self-excuse. "Anyways!" Emilia said strongly.

"You try really hard, that's why you deserve something back for it. Otherwise, how would I be able to meet you on equal ground? Every morning, whenever I look at you I feel this weird sense of guilt, if you think about it that way then this is for my sake too."

"It's been a while since I've seen this pattern, you were thinking about me every morning?!"

"I wasn't! I'm still thankful though!"

This was already getting out of hand. No matter what she did, she was bad at expressing her personal thoughts to others. Subaru was probably surprised too. Nervously, she looked at his face. Sure enough a bitter smile was floating to his face.

However, crossing his arms.

“Haha, so you were in favor of me going to the capital all along. Why didn’t you just say so in the first place?”

“Because when you think you’ve gotten everything you wanted like this, you get so full of yourself. I know you’re like a naughty brat.”

“Naughty brat… that’s not a phrase you hear much nowadays”

Subaru murmured softly, Emilia sticking her tongue out in kind. Subaru was entranced by it, even if it was done as a form of retaliation. With that exchange, any enmity there might have been was now in the past.

“Well then, let’s wrap up this conversation shaaaaaall we? Subaru will accompany us to the capital. Tomorrow we attend to the various preparations needed, depart the morning after. Is thiiis fine?”

“I understand”

“No objections.”

““Affirmative, Lord Roswaal””

Everyone in the room consented to Roswaal’s closing words. And like this, the plans for the trip to the capital were settled.

2

Planning for Subaru to accompany them to the capital, departure was decided as the day after tomorrow. Even though they had such a hurried schedule, the servants still had to go about performing the daily chores around the manor. Of course that included Subaru too, who as a servant-apprentice still in rehabilitation was assigned to simple jobs like tidying up the parlor room.

“When it comes down to it, is Ram going to be the one left to take care of the mansion?”

While straightening out his shirt Subaru addressed Ram behind him. Ram gave a nod as if it were annoying. Under the pretext of supervising Subaru’s work she was currently doing nothing.

“Yes. We can’t leave the mansion completely vacant. Normally Rem would stay behind, but this time she said she wanted to go, so I allowed it.”

Faced with her younger sister’s request she wavered slightly. I’m starting to get a grasp of Ram as someone who’s sweet to her sister. Even though she’s going to be away from her dear Roswaal, she didn’t seem too phased.

“Somehow, you look kind of happy about it.”

“Happy… that may be so. She always tries her best to fulfill requests given to her by others, I’m just happy that she has something that she wants for herself.”

The one thinking regretfully of Rem’s personality wasn’t just Subaru, her twin sister Ram who was with her since birth was the same. ‘I want to do something about it her personality’ was something Subaru had thought many times about. In that way, Ram and Subaru were of the same mind regarding Rem.

With those thoughts in mind Ram faced Subaru with a sharp look,

“That the catalyst had to be this man of all people… is the only part that bothers me.”

“I’m tired of hearing that, the fact that I’m the one that moved Rem’s heart won’t disappear! Hahaha, be vexed by it!”

“fula”

“uwaou?!”

With a single incantation a sudden gust encompassed him, pressed by wind Subaru’s body was flung to the bed. Like that the shirt he had just finished straightening out was disheveled with the landing, covered in white cloth he enjoyed the soft sensation of the bed as if he was floating.

“You! Magic is off-limits! You lose with words so you retaliate with magic, your personality is really bad.”

“That wasn’t retaliation. I was only venting the negative emotions that were building up in my stomach at Barusu.”

“That’s called retaliating against someone! An outburst of anger!”

Saying this to the shifty eyed Ram, Subaru quickly got off the bed and started tidying the sheets back up.

Even though my body’s not back to its regular condition, the nimbleness of my fingers was without change. The tidy white sheets were beautiful enough to captivate even me.

“In any case, Rem’s really multi-talented… in addition to being the coachman, handling the belongings, guard-duty, guide…… I don’t even have words to describe it.”

“You’re missing ‘Subaru’ duty, Rem named it that herself recently.”

“I don’t recognize that one by the way.”

Well, I sort have been getting taken care of a lot so I won’t deny that one too strongly. In any case, now is the all-important time for departure for four inhabitants of the Roswaal mansion. There was the main-involved party Emilia and her patron Roswaal. There was Subaru who plucked his ticket by throwing a tantrum. And the one in charge of taking care of these three was the final person, Rem.

Then there were the leftovers, Ram and Beatrice.

“Thinking about this again… those two were an extremely worrying group to be left alone house-sitting. Is this really going to be all right?”

“Relax. Oni won’t die even without food and water for three days.”

“You’re not even planning to cook for yourself?!”

Subaru was floored by the shamelessly pronounced abandonment of all cooking duties.

“Well you aside, what are you planning to do about Beako? I can already imagine her coming out of her room and making a fuss like ‘what is the meaning of this-ukiiii!’ when she sees that dinners not made.”

“I can already imagine her reaction, without a doubt she’d send me flying. If only Lady Beatrice went along with you guys…”

“You’re the caretaker, don’t suddenly expose that doing your job is a pain! At least make her a steamed potato or something! If you switch it up between salt and mayonnaise you’d be able to hold for three days at least. Probably. In the worst case scenario you could just resort to eating the mayonnaise directly.”

Looking as if he actually thought this was a better proposal, Subaru’s abnormal love for mayonnaise was clearly felt. Ram raising no particular objections, made a face like she was actually going to go through with this idea.

Unbeknownst to Beatrice, a tragic meal plan had been decided for her.

Subaru waived his hand, ‘nonono’

“If we’re having these many issues with just food, what are we going to do about the other stuff? Can you really clean the mansion properly?”

“What a foolish question Barusu. Rather than cooking, cleaning is my specialty.”

“Even with your specialty you’re worse than Rem! You really are only an older sister!”

“Oh well. Then, that’s all.”

Even though nothing in particular had been decided, Ram looked at Subaru with a face full of accomplishment. Seeing this troubling attitude, Subaru scratched his face

“So, in the end what are you going to do about work?”

“In exchange for indulging Rem’s wish to go to the capital, I laid out some conditions.”

“Let’s hear ‘em”

“They’re quite simple. Once she returns I’ll have her work for a single day for as much time as she can spare.”

Hearing Ram’s words Subaru was completely at a loss, looking at Ram with suspicious eyes. Ram responded with a shameless expression,

“They’ll all learn, this is what it means to leave the mansion in my care.”

Far beyond his expectations, such a bold abandonment of job duties was new even to Subaru.

This good-for-nothing’s refreshing declaration had forced even the hikikomori-disposed Subaru to resolve himself to help Rem out with this one.

Chapter 4:
A Trip's Departure, Many Difficulties Lay Ahead

The morning after his worrying heart-to-heart with Ram, all the members gathered in front of the Mansion's front gate, among them Subaru burst out in a loud voice irrespective of the mood.

"Hwaaa, it's this guy!"

Subaru cried out in joy. Before the energized Subaru's eyes was a majestic steed carrying an air of composure. Green hard skin, a body big enough that one had to strain their neck, a pair of sharp yellow eyes, he'd witnessed them many times but hadn't been blessed with many opportunities to come so close to them like this. Giant lizards, that is.

Magnificently enshrined in front of the Roswaal mansion gates was their guide inviting Subaru and the others down the road to the capital, a dragon-carriage pulled by an ground dragon.

"Big body! Tough skin! Scary face!"

A huge creature, or could it even limited to a creature? In front of this gigantic being he could feel his spirits rising, this is a feeling all boys would understand. Naturally Subaru as well, simply because of it being 'gigantic' he was already madly in love and his mood was set full throttle despite it being so early in the morning. Jumping all around the lizard, his excitement was plain for all to see.

"He's such a kid, fooling around like that."

Watching this scene bewildered, Emilia let out a long sigh. Shrugging her shoulders as if she was seeking some form of consent from the nearby Rem.

"Subaru… is so cute. Don't you think so as well Emilia-sama?" Rem said, trying to hold herself back.

"It's cute, yeah it's cute, I think so too… it seems like Subaru's been quite a bad influence on you Rem.”

Watching Subaru mess run around so energetically, Emilia and Rem let out a long sigh.

Ignorant of the impressions exchanged behind him, Subaru reached out and patted the ground dragon without restraint, letting out a strange voice

“Oh my god, I’m so moved! Super-fantasy! If only I had a digital camera, I so want to take a picture! How about titling it, ‘Dragon crawling around on the ground, and me’…”

Starting to lose himself in high spirits, his way of patting the lizard had quickly moved from touching to attacking, the Lizard was the one to lose its patience first.

Specifically…

“Dostoyevsky?!”

““Aaaaaaaa””

The lizard turned around roaring coiling its tail like a whip and slamming it full strength onto Subaru’s shoulder. His body was swept away in a blur, Subaru was sent flying fast enough it seemed like it would create after-images. Like a ragdoll Subaru flew off to the side of the gate, landing head first into the soft branches of a thicket. After a brief moment of silence he began working his way out somehow,

“Wh-What’s the meaning of this?”

“Subaru. Ground dragons are very smart creatures, even if they can’t understand words they can understand your intent. That’s why you have to be sure to treat them with respect.”

“Say that sooner! I saw what was on the other side and there was a mayonnaise bath waiting for me.”

After coming to this new world, the number of times I’m brought to the brink of death never ends. Just when I thought I could spend the day quietly, this had to happen.

While rotating the shoulder that got hit, Subaru struggled to pull his last foot from the thicket and return back to the gate. Glancing at the lizard nervously, its yellow eyes narrowed as if to say “this is what you get for touching me so carelessly”, exhaling strongly through its nose.

Even if he was used to the humans here treating him like this, having some animal in a backwater region show this kind of attitude was something in itself.

“From now on I’ll pay a little bit more attention to my way of speaking, and my attitude, and my actions, and my usual habits…”

“That’s a lot of things to reflect on isn’t it? But, I guess that’s something very like you Subaru.”

“Is this something, something you like Emilia-tan?”

“I think you should learn to choose the person, place, and timing better.”

“I’ll keep that in mind,” obediently raising his hand and obliging.

“Good.”

Emilia put her hands on her hips and laughed. Like this, the door to the mansion opened abruptly. Those who came out were Roswaal and Ram, who were both running a bit late from the designated meeting time. Subaru tapped his finger lightly on his wrist-watchless wrist,

“Oi oi oi, what are you doing running late? Roswaal, weren’t you the one who set a meeting time in the first place? A guy who’s loose with time is loose with a whole lot more, right, Rem?”

“That’s right, yes! Even though Subaru was oversleeping and wouldn’t have made it in time if not for Rem. I don’t mind if you praise me.”

“Alright alright alright, be quite for a bit Rem.”

Subaru brushed Rem's hair to keep her from letting out any more unnecessary words slip. Emilia's white eyes piercing through him, Subaru rushed to explain himself in a panic.

"It's not like that! I have reasons! Reasons bluer than the seas, and greener than the mountains!"

"I bet you've got some pretty green excuses too huh… let's hear it."

"I was so excited I couldn't sleep!"

"You're such a kid."

Looking like she's given up, Emilia dropped her shoulders. From her forfeiting this round, Subaru managed to get away unscathed. Hoping to avoid any further line of questioning Subaru once again pointed the conversation back at Roswaal like a spear."

"So, what do you say? Why were you two late? Weren't we all gathered like usual at breakfast? And Rem essentially dealt with all the luggage."

"Sorry, sorry, iiiisn't it fine? After all, Ram's staying to take care of the mansion so we won't be able to see her for a while right? Thaaat's why we were having a bit of a thorough farewell."

Waving his finger, Roswaal straightened his collar while trying to explain himself. Next to him, Ram was hurriedly trying to fix her hair. Just from looking at this a fresh new meaning could be understood.

"OK, I take that back! Let's pretend I didn't ask, and we'll look the other way. 1st, me. 2nd, Emilia-tan. 3rd, Rem. …And also Roz-chi."

"How am I an 'also'? The dragon-carriage is my perrrrsonal property you know."

Laughing softly, Roswaal reached out his hand and touched the chin of the hard-to-please lizard. Subaru shrugged his shoulders instinctively, imagining Roswaal get sent flying he found was extremely funny, but his faint hopes were soon dashed. Far from flinging Roswaal, it snuggled its snout up next to him. Almost like a horse and owner, it showed an expression of deep affection.

“Somehow, I can’t really accept this.”

“That’s because it’s a dragon Lord Roswaal raised, being held by him is only natural right? You were wrong for thoughtlessly and recklessly provoking it.”

“Keeping a dragon, that’s an amazing impression… wait, where were you even watching from to see my embarrassing display?”

“Ah, did it actually happen?”

Ram confessed she was just speaking randomly, Subaru felt embarrassed. Pointing a finger at his face, she let out a disagreeable snort from her nose.

“You have leaves stuck to you all over your head and body. What’s worse, you have dirt marks too… I don’t want you getting the inside of the carriage dirty.”

“Even though you aren’t the one that cleans it…”

“You’ll be riding together with Lord Roswaal. Preventing nuisances is a servant’s job isn’t it? Speaking of nuisances, where Barusu is concerned it’s only… natural, it’s Barusu after all.”

“Don’t use my name like I’m some bad word, I’m seriously gonna cry.”

In an embarrassing display Subaru flailed his arms and legs about, rolling around on the ground like a spoiled kid. Of course, when it comes to Ram this had the chance of backfiring and incurring even more scorn and ridicule.

In the time they had spoken, Rem had rapidly piled up the luggage onto the dragon-carriage. Reaching the end of their friendly chat, the mood shifted towards setting up for departure. Among the various voices calling out to the left-behind Ram, a single thought popped into Subaru’s mind.

“Speaking of it, I guess Beako won’t come to see us off.”

‘A heartless loli-character’, was what Subaru thought of the cream-haired girl. Of course he had expected that something like this would happen, they had made fun of her so much yesterday. It was just a little bit lonely for her to not be there at the scene of their departure. Now would be a good time to make an appearance, Subaru’s expression soured as he glared at the mansion.

“Oooooooo”

The door was opened just barely, just a smidge, in the shadow a dress wearing character peeked out glancing stealthily over in this direction, their gazes meeting briefly.

Realizing she had been spotted she faltered for a moment before resolving herself boldly. Nevertheless, still hiding in the shadow of the door, she resumed her sneaking mission. Towards this obstinate girl Subaru smiled bitterly, putting his hand in the air,

“If I return safely, I have something I definitely want to tell you”

Or so, that was the kind of thought he put into the gesture. Facing this the girl wore an apathetic expression, sluggishly waving her hand in a shooing motion as if to drive him away. With that, she closed the door as if she had completed her task of seeing them off.

“Subaru? What’s wrong?”

Turning around, Emilia was leaning out from the dragon-carriage’s guest room. Without him noticing it seems they had already started to board, Subaru was the only one left still standing on the ground. Panicked, he reached out for the guest room door.

“Here.”

Before he could touch the handle, white fingertips reached out towards his. He hesitated for only a moment, taking the hand. With a strength not matching with the slenderness of the wrist, Subaru was pulled up to guest room.

Confirming that Subaru had boarded, Rem gave a single nod to the left-behind Ram. Words weren’t necessary between twins, with just that action their thoughts had been conveyed. Rem pulled the reigns and the earth dragon complied, pulling its feet forward.

As the frame creaked and Subaru could feel it move he turned to the window. Sticking only his head out, he turned to Ram who was facing them.

“W-Well, see you later! Take care you two!”

“Barusu too, if anything happens try to become a meat shield at least. You have talent as a decoy, ehe, that’s the only recognition I’ll give you.”

“Surely I have some better parts?!”

Before she completely disappeared into the distance Ram pinched the edge of her skirt, giving a small curtsy. Entirely silent, she lowered her head. Just like an exemplary maid she saw Subaru and the others off.

“If only she was as proficient at doing her job she’d be perfect.”

As they reached the slightly beveled main road Ram’s figure completely disappeared. Confirming this, Subaru lowered himself into one of the guest room’s seats with a great sigh. And, somehow or another the feeling of his first carriage ride stirred in him. The feel of the seats in the guest room had some good and bad parts, but as for the overall feeling of traveling in a carriage it was a rather pleasant.

As for his true thoughts, this highway couldn’t have been particularly well maintained. His former world hadn’t developed the type of wheels used on the dragon-carriage, the tremors that he had expected to be present in the carriage were far weaker than he expected. So much so that honestly, the feel of riding in a vehicles from his former world wasn’t any better.

“You seem quite currrrious about the dragon-carriage.”

“Should I call it unusual, or should I say fresh astonishment, everything’s a first so it’s like this. I’ll be a little noisy but cut me some slack.”

He responded to Roswaal's question while his seat jarred, he could feel the vibrations from the bottom of the frame travel up his legs. He couldn't tell if the carriage was going at a leisure pace, but looking out from the window the speed at which scenery passed by was anything but relaxed. Measuring it by eye the carriage had to be going close to 100 km/hr, that it could match up cars to this extent was shocking.

If it's like this… Rem being outside alone on the coachman's stand worried him.

"Hey, we're going so fast yet the coachman's stand is completely exposed to the wind, is this really OK? Like getting thrown off or something, well, it's Rem so I don't think we have to worry about that in particular… but won't her hair and clothes be a mess by the time we get to the capital?"

"You don't need worry, the dragon-carriage has a Divine Protection."

Responding to Subaru's overly dull question, Emilia responded with an inquisitive look.

"Divine protection?", Subaru tilted his head at her reply.

"Somehow that's a word that's been buzzing around lately. It hasn't come up as often as stuff like mana so I never got the chance to ask. So, what's this divine protection thing anyway?"

"Divine protection is divine protection. It's something you're blessed with when you're born, wait… do you really not know this?"

Pointing both hands towards Emilia, Subaru rocked his body back and forth. "Nope," Subaru declared his ignorance with a bright smile.

Emilia massaged her brow lightly with her fingers,

"Divine protection is like I said, a blessing brought about by this world. There are a lot of different divine protections so I can't say this definitively, but there are species that have specific divine protections given to them. The Ground dragon's 'protection from wind' is one of those."

"When you say 'protection from wind'…"

"When ground dragons run across the ground they don't get affected by the wind. On top of that, the blessings' effect is also passed on to the carriage they are pulling. That's why this guest room isn't getting affected at all by the wind."

"Then it's the same for Rem outside too, huh"

Subaru nodded in consent, digesting the information Emilia had just told him. Towards Emilia who was smiling as if to say, "very good!" he sent a wink as thanks. Mulling over everything he had just learned about divine protections.

Felt was abnormally quick on her feet so she must have the divine protection from wind. And Reinhard who demonstrated his offensive and defensive powers at the loot house had divine protection from arrows. I see, so there are a whole bunch of ones.

Which means…

"What about me, what about me? Heey, Emilia-tan. Do I have something like divine protection?"

Divine protection bestowed upon them by birth, this was it, this was the moment Subaru had been waiting for since he had been summoned to this world. It couldn't be a cheat ability could it? The activation conditions for Reinheard's and the ground-dragons' divine protection was rather limited. If so, there was a possibility that his own blessing had its own conditions and just hadn't been activated yet. His expectations boiled up, as he looked at her with expecting eyes.

"It's hard to tell, the number of people born without divine blessings is way higher than those with it though. And for people who do have them, it doesn't matter who it is, they should all be aware if they have it…"

Her words fading out… she looked at him apologetically.

Unexpectedly though, Subaru understood what she meant from that, the tower of hope he had just built came crashing down. It was a dim hope, his face bent in self-derision.

“Yeah, it’s fine. It was too much of a luxury to ask for. After all, I’ve gotten something even more valuable from this place. The miracle of meeting you Emilia-tan, that’s more of a blessing than any sort of divine protection.”

“Yes yes. We’ll get to the capital in another four hours, so just behave yourself till then.”

“Emilia-tan, so cold! But, I’m slightly mortified that even this type of response makes me happy…”

From spending time with Emilia-tan like this, Subaru was in the process of acquiring some pretty strange preferences. Sitting to the side, Roswaal and Emilia were now discussing their plans once they arrived in the capital, Subaru sat quietly and observed, behaving himself like he had been told.

In contrast to its showy appearance, the inside of the carriage was rather small. It was like what you’d see in a movie, something like what a rich person would ride in, a snug compartment that seated four people. The seats were made of quite the high class materials gathered from exotic lands, so his butt getting sore from sitting a few hours wasn’t a worry. On the other hand, the inside was quite cramped, the composure that Subaru had just established was starting to wear.

“Emilia-tan, Emilia-tan, can I sit near the window?”

“What’s wrong? Ah, did you get sick from the vibrations? It happens a lot to people who aren’t used to riding in carriages. I’ve got, I’ll lend you Puck.”

“The thought makes me happy, but it’s a little different. And wait a minute, how is giving me Puck even related with me getting sick? Would I use him as a vomit bag?”

“If you did that to him even Puck would get angry…”

The time was still early morning, raising this type of topic before the cat-type spirit had even woken up, Subaru felt shivers down his spine imagining such a laid-back character like Puck get angry.

After that Emilia sighed, looking at Subaru again.

“If it’s not that then what is it?”

“Because~, Emilia-tan and Roz-chi are so busy talking with each other. I’m lonely from not being talked to, and going back to sleep a second time is annoying, so I wanted to pass the time looking at the scenery or something.”

“Aa, sorry. I didn’t notice. Then, here.”

Emilia started moving to his request, in the small carriage the two changed seats. Since she was sitting next to him in the first place, when she started to change seats he felt contact all over his body, with a smug face he enjoyed this side-benefit. With this they successfully changed seats.

“Alright then, properly behave yourself this time. Understand?”

“Mm. I’ll be enjoying this indirect warmth from where you were sitting.”

“I don’t really know what you mean but it sounds reeeally disgusting, so keep it in moderation.”

Saying this, she looked several times worriedly at Subaru wiggling his butt in the seat, finally resuming her discussion with Roswaal. Seeing her smiles and gestures, Subaru turned his gaze out the window he had secured for himself. From the small window affixed above the exit/entrance door he could see they were still going extremely fast, the scenery streaming by. From the angle he was looking out from a large portion of the view was blue-sky, he couldn’t see any tall trees anymore so it seems they’ve already left the forest around the Roswaal mansion, he thought to himself.

“Now that you mention it, I don’t really know how far it is between the mansion and the capital…”

Emilia had said it'd be around four hours, considering it for a bit, without knowing exactly how fast this dragon-carriage was traveling there were too many unknowns, he could only make guesses. Lifting his waist from the seat, he pressed his face to the window. Seeing the scenery zoom by they could be going faster than he had initially thought. Irrespective of them flying down a poorly maintained highway, no tremors were transmitted up inside the carriage, it was a puzzle among puzzles.

"Attributing this to 'divine protection is amazing' he was able to accept it absentmindedly… a speed worthy of a lizard. From the feel of it, it's probably around 100 km/hr?"

The speed of the passing scenery, it certainly didn't seem inferior to what he remembered passing by from inside a car on the freeway. If it could keep up this speed continuously, it's no wonder the dragon-carriages were in such wide use. Each lizard probably differed a bit based on its care and food, a metal car was mostly the same in that regard. Whichever one was more convenient would be up to personal taste.

"As for me, I'm not much of a fan of machines, I'm a pitiful boy who gets revved up when I see giant animals."

He wanted to declare the dragon-carriage the winner based on personal preference. After weighing the merits of the dragon-carriage and automobile Subaru glanced around, "well then." Even if I stay here the carriage won't get any faster so it's a waste of time. Putting his hand out onto the door, he knocked. The two stopped their conversation and looked at him.

"I want to go where Rem is, I get the feeling that it's OK to open this door?"

"You sure say some interesssssting things, Subaru. Because of the blessing, everything connected to the carriage won't be affected by the wind. It's notttt a difficult thing to climb up the frame of the wagon to get to where Rem is, but if you fall you'll die you know?"

"Oi oi, Roz-chi, don't underestimate my athleticism. If you put together all the high-schoolers from the go-home-club and tested them I'm pretty confident I'd be in the top ranks. Other than long-distance running, that is."

"Attttt least do it after we call out to Rem."

His teeth shining Roswaal gave Subaru a thumbs up. Looking like he'd bought the idea, he knocked on the window connected to the coachman's stand. It was a window large enough that you'd be able to pass small luggage through. Separated by the small window, only Rem's voice came through.

"Yes, is something the matter?"

"Aa, Subaru says he's bored and wants to be near Rem. How wonderful a thing, you sure a loooved."

"Subaru is it? What should we do, do you want me to stop the carriage? If we take it to a stop, it will take a bit of time to get the ground dragon to start running again."

"Nn?"

Subaru tilted his head at Rem's words, looking to Roswaal who was now holding his chin with this hand.

"The thing called divine protection isn't all powerful. In the case of ground dragons, once they activate their protection from wind once, they need a littttle bit of time before they can use it again. We could take an early lunch though if you wanted?"

Listening to his explanation Subaru nodded, but shook his head no at the proposal.

"Nah, it's fine it's fine. I'll be up there in a flash, so just be good and wait for me Rem. Ah, be careful not to cause the lizard to drift or something, or else I'd get sent flying from inertia."

I'd hope she'd refrain from pulling off any moves like drifting or triple-acceleration. Since he didn't know to what extent the protection from wind would apply, wanting to avoid any tricky moves was his sincere thoughts.

“Rem understand and is waiting. The spot next to Rem is open. Hurry, hurry.”

From the other side of the window Rem called out impatiently, trying to feign indifference. Smiling bitterly, Subaru gestured with his hand to Roswaal.

“Nn-well, I’ll get going then.”

“Oh myyy, you sure seem to have won over Rem. You’ll get burned you know.”

“Roz-chi, getting burned by you is… if it was Emilia-tan I’d welcome it though!”

Giving Roswaal a light-hearted reply, he turned to Emilia with vigor. But it seems she wasn’t paying attention to what he’d said, mumbling to herself near the interior wall like she was looking for something. And, “here” she said, taking out something and putting it in Subaru’s hand.

“This isn’t something that’s all that dangerous so I won’t stop you, but make sure to keep hold of this.”

“A cord extending out from the interior wall… something like a seatbelt?”

“There are times when the carriage will sometimes flip over, that’s why they have these belts. I gave you the long end, so use it as a lifeline. After you get to the coachman’s stand you can let it go and it will retract.”

Gladly taking Emilia’s consideration, he took the belt he’d been handed and wrapped it around his wrist. While finishing the business of creating his lifeline, he started to realize that he probably should have sat up on the coachman’s stand in the first place. If that’s the case he probably should have just behaved himself and stayed put in his seat, but clearly not pleased with this option he displayed his selfishness in a big way.

Seen off by Emilia who had an extremely worried look in her eyes, Subaru opened the guest room door and climbed out onto the carriage. The dragon-carriage was moving fast as ever. Occasionally the speed slackened a little, probably a result of Rem's concern. Despite confirming with his eyes that they were moving at such a fast speed it was strange he couldn't feel any wind resistance at all. It was almost like some illusion where they were encased in a transparent box as they traveled along. Swallowing his saliva and still grasping the cord tightly, Subaru put his hand on the frame and proceeded cautiously out around to the coachman's stand.

Because there wasn't even a hint of wind, the short trip went exceedingly smooth. Subaru felt like he was proceeding down a road with bad footing, it was only an inconvenience to that level.

"This really is a weird feeling. With the divine blessing it was only a little difficult."

Experiencing this world's strange phenomenon with his own body, Subaru thought as he looked at the scenery streaming by.

'80 km/h'. While he was standing isolated, this was the thought that seized his brain. In his former world he remembered hearing this one particular urban legend. That is,

"Wind resistance when going 80 km/h feels exactly like touching breasts…!"

It was a regrettable thing, due to the divine protection's effects he wasn't able to confirm this. If the myth was indeed true, and he was in a world without divine protection, then he would have been able to experience the sensation of having his whole body enveloped in a woman's breasts.

"To add to it, if I look to the side a little there's Emilia-tan inside the carriage. Could this be, looking at Emilia-tan while fantasizing about air-boobs, a win through imagination?!"

With this strange revelation Subaru's mouth warped into an even more disgusting smile. Not giving up on his lingering regrets, he reached his hand out to the sky, fruitlessly trying to scratch the blue sky with his fingertips.

“By the way, Subaru. Rem forgot to mention this but, don’t stick your body too far out from the carriage. You’ll be cut-off from the divine protection.”

It was the moment she said that.

“No way…”

Immediately following his fingertips grasping the empty air, his fingers were assaulted by a blast of wind almost as if trying to carry them away. With a force far above what he was expecting his hand on the frame of the carriage was dislodged, losing his only support his body was sent flying horizontally, expelled off the side of the carriage.

What was happening was exactly what Rem had warned him about. ‘This flag was triggered way too fast’, is what he wanted to say but he had no time for such leisure.

Enveloped by wind, he couldn’t tell up from down with his body thrown about in a windstorm.

“Abababababaaaa?! This is bad, really bad, could this be… Descartes?!”

Like that, in the instant he thought he’d impact the ground he was pulled by his right arm towards the carriage. Pain shot through his right arm like it was tearing off, looking he saw the lifeline that Emilia had fastened for him, true to its name it served its purpose. Just as the light that was his life was about to be extinguished, it narrowly protected him.

However, during this time Subaru’s right arm screamed, from his wrist up it was beginning to turn purplish-blue.

“Pull! Can you pull me up?! The vibrations are getting a bit too much for me… ga! My tongu… I bit my tongue.”

Through his own thoughts of greed Subaru had caused a major disaster. His right wrist was signaling it had gone beyond its limits, he felt like his insides would leap out as a dark feeling started to take over his chest. Then, as Subaru gave in to resignation a high-pitched sound repeatedly entered his eardrum.

Lifting his head. Directly in front of him, he saw a wiggling silver snake. The end of the snake’s body was large and round, with lots of spikes growing from it.

“—My trauma’s coming back”

Emitting a shrill sound, the wriggling snake wrapped around and entangled Subaru’s body. Letting out a pained gasp as the snake constricted him harder than he imagine, but in exchange it held onto him tightly. His body floating in the air was dragged up all at once, flying over the carriage and releasing him just above the lizard. His body falling through the air once more, he caught glimpse of Rem with his vision spinning. Gripping the reigns like iron with one hand, she stuck the other out to towards where he was landing to support the falling Subaru.

It seems somehow or another my life was spared, he confirmed

“I’m going to live more obediently from now on…”

He was told those words by many people, now for the first time he took it to heart. One step before he could even confirm he had landed he had already ‘gone back to sleep’.

Chapter 5:
Time to Fulfill a Promise

1

Natsuki Subaru's heart was now beating like it had never done before.

The speed of it, the pain it caused was only an illusion. The sound of its beat growing louder without end. If one didn't listen closely there was only a bustle of noise, but among that bustle a certain sound stood out, resonating louder.
